But at what cost? They are very careful not to enter on that field further than to make the naked statement that there is a ravine. Those photographs indicate that it might be dredged out; but in the case of Racine they go further and say that with a slight expense it might be made a commodious and safe inland harbor.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I did not observe whether the Senator read what was said in that paragraph with reference to the harbor at Michigan City.

Mr. QUARLES. I did not. I will, however, if the Senator desires.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. The Senator will notice that the board says:

The harbor at Michigan City would offer convenient protection.

Mr. QUARLES. That is right; and they rank that harbor above Lake Bluff in their report, as they should.

Now, Mr. President, having taken up the principal facts as this board find them, I want now to turn to the tabulation that this board assumed to make, and the conclusions they have assumed to draw from those facts. That is found on page 10:

First choice as to population, Lake Bluff.

Second choice, Racine.

As to physical characteristics, Lake Bluff first, Racine second, although, by the facts that they found, they gave Racine far higher commendation than they gave Lake Bluff; but they arbitrarily put Lake Bluff in here as being more advantageous than Racine. When it comes to harbor facilities, Muskegon stands first, Racine second, and Lake Bluff third. In cost of land, Muskegon first, Muskegon City second, Racine third, Milwaukee fourth, and Lake Bluff fifth.

Now, Mr. President, that table is absolutely erroneous on their own finding and is impeached by their own showing. There is only one respect under the findings of this board wherein the Lake Bluff site is entitled to stand in the first class, and that is what they call "population." On the facts, the verdict should have gone in favor of Racine.

I wish to speak right in this connection of the matter of population, and I want to say that the technical, learned discussion that this board indulges in over the matter of population is a mere bit of special pleading that fails to illumine the subject.

The strip of territory we are considering starts with Chicago on the south, a city of 2,000,000 people, and it ends at Milwaukee on the north, a city of 325,000 people. Twenty miles south of Milwaukee is Racine, with 25,000 people; 10 miles below that, Kenosha, with 15,000 people; 15 miles below that, Waukegan, with ten or twelve thousand people, and so on.

Now, through that region runs the Northwestern system of railway, and no other. The genius that can devise a theory by which a given point in that continuous railroad line can be designated as more accessible than any other point in that same line, is certainly something surprising.

These two sites, Lake Bluff and Racine, are only 27 miles apart. Right in this densely settled region and right on the same railway and at either one of those points a school of this kind would be in touch with 4,000,000 people.

Now, that board lost sight of a very important fact when they were treating of population or accessibility of population to the school. What is it? At Lake Bluff there is only the one system of railway, the Northwestern Railway. At Racine there are two great systems, the Northwestern and the St. Paul systems, the latter having 6,000 miles of line that gridirons the whole Northwest. So there are two great trunk lines available there instead of one.

Not only that, sir, but at Racine there are two lines of steamboats that run out of that harbor every day in the year. The ice is broken, the harbor is kept open, so that there is access by those steamboat lines all the time. And yet this board assumes to put its finger down on that one little smoky spot down there called Lake Bluff and say that it has a material advantage in point of accessibility.

I say it is absurd, Mr. President. Any point along that line is equally situated, so far as accessibility is concerned, with Lake Bluff, and Racine is very much more accessible. At Racine they have a natural harbor made by a river that runs up many miles, which is decked, a harbor that has 21 feet of water, with all modern facilities, while 14 miles from Lake Bluff there is an artificial harbor made at Waukegan, where they have no stream whatever. They simply ran out into the open lake—a system of breakwater—and call that a harbor. And still this board has found that Lake Bluff ought to be preferred in point of accessibility to the site that we have offered them in Racine.

Mr. President, it might seem to an unprejudiced Senator that this was a very remarkable report for this board to have made, considering all the facts and circumstances of the case, but our people in Wisconsin are impressed that, as there is a reason for everything, there is a reason for this. Lake Bluff happens to be within the Congressional district of Mr. Foss, who is an able Representative in Congress. He holds a very honorable and high position at the head of the great Committee on Naval Affairs in the House. I want to say that he not only holds that place, but he fills it with eminent ability. He is a gentleman against whom I would not say one word and of whom I would speak only words of commendation. I can understand that it would be the most natural thing that this board of naval officers, or the Navy Department, might feel inclined to defer to his wishes in regard to the selection of a site.

But, Mr. President, it ought not to enter as a potent factor into this selection. My good friend, Mr. Foss, accompanied this board when they went up to examine these sites. He was in the special train. I do not think he went over to examine the Racine site; but he had sufficient interest in it, so that he was there presiding, if you please, with his superior influence, holding the purse strings of the Navy, as he does, while that board was proceeding to make these examinations; and the people whom I have the honor in part to represent here are convinced that this selection has been made not wholly upon the merits of the case, but that it would not have been located at Lake Bluff if it had not been within the Congressional district of my distinguished friend, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House.

Right in that connection I think this suspicion is fortified, Mr. President, by some correspondence that I hold in my hand. On the 4th day of August this board came to the city of Racine and went within a mile and a half of this beautiful site, looked across this bay, and got, of course, a general idea of the lay of the country; but yet they were pressed for time and did not go and make a personal examination such as was desired by the people who were advocating this site.

No member of that board came back until the 31st day of October, when the two junior members of the board came, Admiral Taylor not honoring the occasion with his presence. They then made a mere perfunctory examination.

The lights had been lighted in the farmhouses before they arrived, and they did make a cursory examination; but I want to call attention to the fact that on the 29th day of October—I want the Senate to keep the date in mind—the examination of the Racine site by the two junior members having been made on the 31st of October, on the 29th of October an order was given by the Navy Department to the Geological Survey to prepare a topographical map of this Lake Bluff site. Why? What was needed with a topographical map of the Lake Bluff site if the question of site selection had not been settled? The correspondence shows that the direction given to the topographer of the Geological Survey was as follows:

OCTOBER 31, 1902.

Mr. D. L. REABURN, Topographer.

DEAR SIR: You will proceed to Waukegan, Ill., and make a topographical map of the land [illegible] known as the Lake Bluff site, with a contour interval of a foot and the [illegible] of Lake Michigan and the harbor. [illegible] Lake Michigan and the harbor. A permanent bench mark will be established near the center of the site.

They were locating permanent marks there.

From this bench mark sufficient elevations will be determined [illegible] which will be determined.

Now, notice:

The object of the survey is to determine the adaptability of the property for a naval training station [illegible] the resulting map will form a basis [illegible]

They were not going to make improvements there before the site was selected—

[illegible] of the main stream or ravine which debouches into Lake Michigan from the tract of land.

[illegible] expense, including your salary, will be paid by the Navy Department.

I have here the remainder of the correspondence which resulted in that letter, but I shall not take time to read it. I may, however, ask to insert it as a part of my remarks.

Mr. President, I do not feel justified in detaining the Senate longer with these details, for I fear I have already wearied your patience. I have only to say that what we want, and all we want, is a fair, impartial determination of two questions: First, the selection by a suitable board, to be appointed by the President, of a site—my amendment says the most available site—together with definite information as to its cost and the cost of harbor improvements. We do not think that we are asking for anything unreasonable. If Lake Bluff is the better site, it can certainly stand another test of competition, and if Racine is not the best site, we have certainly no desire to press it upon the attention of Congress or upon this board.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I think the Senate is indebted to the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] to an unusual degree for a discussion of this question in the elaborate and detailed manner in which he has presented it. It has been to me, ever since this report was made, inexplicable how the board which acted in this matter could have reached the conclusion the board did reach, but it has never occurred to me—and I will not accept that suggestion now—that that board has been at fault in any sense, except only in its judgment. I have the highest respect for Rear-Admiral Taylor, the most unlimited confidence in his ability as a naval officer and in his integrity as a man. With the other officers who are associated with him I do not happen to be acquainted, and I can not, therefore, speak of them. But it is nevertheless, as I have said, inexplicable to me how they could have reached the conclusion they did reach. So much for that.

I want now to call the attention of the Senate, although the Senator from Wisconsin has done that in a very thorough way, to the instructions under which the board acted and to the rules laid down by the board for its own government in taking action, and to the departure from those instructions and those rules by the board for some reason or other, which it is not necessary for me to explain and which I am unable, as I have indicated, to explain. The first direction was given by Congress in the provision which it enacted. That provision was incorporated in the act of June 30, 1903, which has already been quoted, but I want to quote it again. It is as follows:

[illegible] Great Lakes. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby directed to appoint a board consisting of naval officers, whose duty it shall be to select a suitable site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes, and report their recommendation, together with such information as may be practicable, and the cost for which it can be purchased or acquired, and of their proceedings and actions to make full and detailed report to the Secretary, who shall transmit such report, with his recommendation, to Congress. For the purpose of carrying into effect the provisions of this paragraph, the sum of $[illegible] is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

In other words, Mr. President, this board, when appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, was to do, as the Senator from Wisconsin has pointed out, two things; but their action in that respect was not to be final, but was subject to revision by Congress. They were to take action, however; they were to make investigation; they were to ascertain all the facts; they were to determine in their own minds upon a site for this naval station, and they were to make report of that to Congress, together with the cost of the same, and, in other words, enough to enable Congress to intelligently act. Then it would be for Congress to say whether or not we approved the action of that board so appointed and so acting.

Now, in a certain sense and to a certain extent they have undertaken to follow those directions of the law. But, before I point out to what extent they have followed those directions of the law and to what extent they have departed from them, I want to call the attention of the Senate to the instructions given to this board by the Secretary of the Navy when he pointed out and directed them to discharge this duty. He was governed by the statute which I have read. When he had selected his board, he issued to them a letter of instructions, the substance of which letter is quoted at page 3 of the report of the board, which we have before us as Senate Document No. 45, second session Fifty-seventh Congress, in this language:

5. The Department's orders, based on the act of Congress, required the board to determine a proper location for the station with regard to the following conditions—

Now, these are the conditions, if the Senate please, that were prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy when he appointed the board and indicated to them the duties they were to perform and the conditions by which they were to be governed in the discharge of them:

(a) Ease of access to the point from thickly settled portions of the United States, in order that young men desiring to enlist shall not have a great distance to travel.

There is not anything of that kind in the law. That originated with the Secretary of the Navy. But that instruction was, I think, within the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. I do not complain of it; I am only calling attention to the fact that it is the Secretary speaking in this instance, not the law, when he specifies what is meant by "ease of access" and why "ease of access" should be considered.

The first condition prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy is, therefore, that they shall consider ease of access, for the reason that he desires that young men wishing to enlist shall not have a great distance to travel in reaching that place from their homes.

Second, or "b" as they have it here—

(b) Ease of access and transportation from the point selected to the Atlantic coast, so that the facilities of the great railroad system can be transported to the great expense of the government in the [illegible] service.

(c) Convenience of harbor accommodations near the point selected.

I pass over, for the present at least, the second condition of the Secretary and call attention to the third—the convenience of harbor accommodations.

That is the third condition, one that the Secretary of the Navy expressly commanded them, in his letter of directions, to take into consideration, and which, if the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] has been heard to any purpose, it appears they absolutely disregarded, for according to my information, and according to the exhibition made by these photographs, there is no harbor facility at all at Lake Bluff, the place selected, and there is not one word that I have seen in either of the reports made by this board in approval of harbor facilities at Lake Bluff, required by the third instruction given by the Secretary.

The fourth instruction is as follows:

(d) And also by such other considerations as may suggest themselves to the board as being pertinent to the duty.

With this broad precept in mind the board has been pursuing the investigation, which has led it to the conclusion given hereinafter.

Now, Mr. President, let us see whether or not they had that broad precept in mind. The language of the statute is that a board shall be appointed by the Secretary of the Navy for the purpose of locating a suitable site on the Great Lakes. There is nothing said about any part of the country being taken especially into consideration, and the language of the directions given to that board when appointed by the Secretary of the Navy is that they shall consider the question of a suitable site on the Great Lakes. There is nothing said about the West, the East, the North, or the South, and yet, with these broad precepts in mind, as the board said, they proceeded straightway to forget apparently that the whole country was embraced within the provisions of the law and the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, and to commence to talk to us about the States of the Middle West, as though they alone were taken into the account as manifestly they alone were taken into consideration except only in the most perfunctory manner. Other States may possibly have been thought of to the extent of finding some way to exclude them.

With these precepts in mind, however, we will see what they did. They say:

The board considers that no site will be suitable as defined by Congress, unless it can be approached and possessed by the fleet of the naval militia.

Ah, I must commence back a little.

(a) The naval militia [illegible] Great Lakes possesses a great national advantage. [illegible] that no site can be considered suitable unless it can be approached and possessed by the fleet of the naval militia, [illegible] greater or lesser degree, [illegible] the naval militia [illegible] the Great Lakes [illegible] advantages that may be considered.

[illegible] a suitable site for a naval training station, therefore, consists in the determination of the location of this area of maximum desirability, and Second. The selection of the best site within such area.

Now comes what I read a moment ago:

The board considers that no site will be suitable as defined by Congress, unless it can be approached and possessed by the fleet of the naval militia. [illegible] or maximum [illegible] of the following general principles, in the order of their relative importance:

Then they lay down the rules that are to govern them in determining in what general locality this site should be located. They are as follows:

First. The [illegible] to the center of population of [illegible] Great Lakes.

Second. [illegible] the Great Lakes.

Third. The [illegible] of the Great Lakes.

And so on.

The first complaint I make, Mr. President, is that they have prescribed a rule which was not authorized by the statute and was not authorized by the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy—that [illegible] in determining the location of the general locality or the territory within which it should be located, the States of the Middle West, instead of taking into consideration the States that border on these lakes.

Proceeding in that way they laid down, which was not required by the Secretary, quite a number of conditions that have been referred to by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. I do not want to go over them in detail, but I want to point out that the first thing they did in taking the first step was to make Chicago a center of population, and then they proceeded to establish a zone, and the first zone suggested was one that included all the territory within a limited miles of Chicago.

Then they established a second zone, which included all the territory within 200 miles of Chicago, and then they looked in the census reports to ascertain what population was included, respectively, within these zones.

Then they established a second center of population at Toledo, Ohio, and then drew a like zone, including all the territory within 100 miles of Toledo, and then a second like zone, including all the territory within 200 miles of Toledo, their theory being that they were carrying out the first instruction of the Secretary of the Navy to locate it at such place as would give easy access to it for the young men who are to attend this naval training station in visiting it from their homes. In all this they treated population as the first consideration.

They came to the conclusion that only a zone at the outside 200 miles from the center of the point taken should be considered. Thereupon they proceeded to ascertain which was the preferable zone by consulting the census to see in which zone there was the greater population.

I am speaking now simply of the two zones to which I have referred—to the 200-mile zones of Chicago and Toledo. They find, and so state in the map attached to their report, that the population in the Chicago zone was 8,651,216, while the total population included in the Toledo zone was 8,296,075, a difference of about 300,000 in favor of Chicago.

Mr. President, I do not need to stand here and contend that if a slight difference of population is to cut any figure, and if a zone is to be established by this board of arbitrary character, having reference to the ease of access, there is no reason why it should stop at 200 miles instead of 210 or 225 miles. The Toledo zone would be practically equally easy of access if the zone had been so enlarged. In other words, the size of the zone is purely arbitrary.

I call attention now to the fact that Lake Erie was entirely eliminated by this resort to zones, on the theory that the population was greater in the zone established about Chicago, and that was true by reason of the fact that the zone was limited to 200 miles instead of 210, or perhaps 205 miles, which would have changed it entirely.

If Senators will look at the map attached to the report, which is on their desks, I believe, they will see that the zone in question, which Toledo includes a population, as I have already pointed out, only about 300,000 less than that included in the 200-mile zone about Chicago. But they will also see that the zone in question drawn about Toledo stops practically just at the corporation limits of the city of Pittsburg. If they had extended it so as to make it a zone of 205 or 210 miles they would have included Pittsburg, and then there would have been a far greater population in the Toledo zone than there was in the Chicago zone. I do not know of any reason for excluding Pittsburg except to keep the population of the Toledo zone below that of the Chicago zone.

At any rate, that is a mere arbitrary regulation of this board, [illegible] by the prescribing of a zone, [illegible] that had been called to their attention as located on Lake Erie.

[illegible] that it got rid entirely of the consideration of Put in Bay. [illegible] the first rules they laid down, [illegible] of sites to the Chicago zone. The Secretary of the Navy did not [illegible] Congress did not [illegible] a zone; the Congress said: "Ascertain a suitable place." [illegible] and the report came back to us [illegible] said nothing about population, except only as that [illegible] in the population that there should be a [illegible] of the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] a zone just big enough for Chicago [illegible] Congress [illegible] if that had been [illegible] would have included Pittsburg, and that would [illegible] general to make a mistake. I have been [illegible] so complained that the Toledo zone would have had [illegible] in the first of these considerations.

The second consideration that the Secretary of the Navy directed that they should take into account was [illegible] from this naval training station. [illegible] cost of transporting those young men from the naval [illegible] the Atlantic coast when they are ready for service. [illegible] point the board finds in favor of Toledo. [illegible] would take Toledo off the map or change its relation [illegible] that while in the matter of population [illegible] give the advantage to Chicago, they [illegible] two positions of the two cities, and they had [illegible] quite a considerable difference in cost—some two or three [illegible] thousand dollars a year. I think—in favor of the [illegible] the naval training station were located in the Toledo zone [illegible] against the Chicago zone. The cost of transporting those young students to the Atlantic coast would be [illegible] there.

The next thing, Mr. President, to which the attention of the Navy called their attention, was harbor facilities. [illegible] by that? There is not a word of proof in either one of these reports, which I have been able to find, from these three naval officers about the harbor facilities at Lake Bluff. At Put in Bay, which is included within the Toledo zone, and for which I speak to the extent of securing a consideration by some fair and impartial tribunal, there is one of the finest harbors to be found anywhere on the Lakes. Fifteen feet out from the shore the water is 35 feet deep. It is only required to be some 15 or 18 by the rules and regulations which the board prescribes for its own government. There does not have to be any dredging there at all. The harbor is there, and it is not only capable to shelter all the navy we will ever have on the Lakes, but it needs no improvement, no dredging, no extension, no work upon it of any character whatsoever.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Ohio allow me for a moment?

Mr. FORAKER. With pleasure.

Mr. SPOONER. If he will turn to page 9 of Document No. 45 he will note that the inaccessibility to a harbor on Lake Erie, because of the ice——

Mr. FORAKER. Because of the ice?

Mr. SPOONER. Because of the ice.

Mr. FORAKER. I was coming to that in a moment.

Mr. SPOONER. Has much to do with the exclusion of that area.

Mr. FORAKER. And so they go farther north into Lake Michigan to get rid of the ice!

Mr. SPOONER. Where there is no harbor at all to be obstructed by ice.

Mr. FORAKER. There is no trouble about ice in any harbors around Lake Bluff, because, as the Senator suggests, they have no harbor.

Here [exhibiting] is a picture of it. I heard only yesterday that there was no harbor at Lake Bluff. I [illegible] was a sort of bluff, but I am informed now that that information was reliable. Here we have, as was said by the Senator from Wisconsin, who put these photographs in evidence, the painting of the sun, which is as accurate in this case as in any other. It gives us an unexaggerated representation of what there is there. I see plenty of bluff; I see plenty of rocks; I see plenty of trees, and I see some brookwaters. Two or three of these photographs are misleading. You would probably also see plenty of water if we had them as I believe we.

[illegible] I do not see any harbor, and it is admitted, I think, that there is no harbor at Lake Bluff; and the reason why they say they selected Lake Bluff, although it has no harbor, is that no harbor is necessary, because [illegible] they are to be towed into the lake. We don't want [illegible] be towed. We are [illegible] I do not know [illegible] and such as have ever to work on a railroad will know [illegible] on the sea, by [illegible] harbor or the absence [illegible] for [illegible] There is none.

Now, what [illegible] that? I asked my informant if they would put small [illegible] in a harbor. [illegible] they not follow it? [illegible] said in the b[illegible] I do know, as I [illegible] they are to go to [illegible] n with [illegible] g. To [illegible] was needed when he [illegible] and I told the Senate what it [illegible] make a harbor there for $250,000. I am not an engineer, and my estimate is not worth anything, but as a [illegible] it. I venture the proposition that if you take Lake Bluff you will have a harbor of adequate facilities there at a cost of less than [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator [illegible] to forget that in this [illegible] Lake Bluff is nearer Chicago than any of the other places, harbor facilities are entirely unnecessary.

Mr. FORAKER. That seems to have been a sufficient explanation for the board, but I have not heard of anybody else being satisfied with it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to say that Lake Bluff has as good harbor facilities as Racine.

Mr. SPOONER. Have you ever been at Racine?

Mr. HOPKINS. Many times.

Mr. FORAKER. How does it compare with Put in Bay?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will discuss that later, but Put in Bay has been put out of the question by the report made eighteen months ago.

Mr. FORAKER. Ah Mr. President, Put in Bay was put out of the question because they drew a zone, having reference to population, which stopped at the outskirts of Pittsburg, and thus excluded what would have put Put in Bay in the front. I suppose there are many in Pittsburg who would like to go to the naval school, and that that city will contribute students as liberally as Chicago, in proportion to her population. I have no doubt of it. Then why arbitrarily exclude that city?

I call attention to that because manifestly the zone thus established was an arbitrary one. I do not attribute it to any improper bias of judgment and a desire to get away from the consideration of all the sites on Lake Erie and confine consideration to Lake Michigan. Certainly from every other point of view that we have discussed, Put in Bay is as good a place as, and a better place than, many of the others, and certainly a great deal better than Lake Bluff. Put in Bay has no more than Lake Bluff has. Put in Bay has a harbor, and Lake Bluff has none. Put in Bay has a harbor that does not need any dredging, that does not need any improving, any extending, any expenditure, with [illegible] of water 15 feet [illegible] the shore line. It is a [illegible] harbor, [illegible] location. There are [illegible] to dig away, no [illegible] to do. The natural conditions are not excelled by any place that has been suggested, and there is no comparison between the natural conditions at Put in Bay, so far as the topography of the surface is concerned, and the condition we find at Lake Bluff.

Now, the board [illegible] considered rainfall. That is practically the same in the two places. They considered temperature. That is practically the same at the two places, only in so far as there is a difference it is in favor of Put in Bay. So it was on everything else. The only thing as to which Lake Bluff has any advantage over Put in Bay is that it is nearer to Chicago, and it is on Lake Michigan, and they wanted to locate it on Lake Michigan, according to their report, because of strategic reasons.

Now, Mr. President, what are the strategic reasons which induced this board to pass by such places as Racine and Put in Bay, leaving them entirely out of the selection—Racine being [illegible], Put in Bay cut off absolutely—the whole of Lake Erie excluded? What is the reason why they did that?

They thought Lake Michigan, inasmuch as it was surrounded on all sides by American territory, was a safer place for these naval students: that is, the station would be safer from attack in case we get into war with some foreign nation. I suppose they mean with Canada.

In the first place, I do not believe we will ever get into war with Canada or England, and if we did I do not believe the station would be in any danger, no matter where it might be along the lake shores.

Mr. ALGER. It would be near the scene of war.

Mr. FORAKER. And if it were near the scene of war, as the Senator from Michigan suggests, that is exactly where we would want it to be. So I say there is nothing that appeals to me, however much it may appeal to others, in the suggestion that Lake Michigan should be preferred because of strategic reasons.

But there is another consideration here which ought not to be overlooked. This board tells us with great particularity of the shifting sands of Lake Michigan; how the winds blow and the harbors fill up, and how there are bars of sand here and there and everywhere almost, near the shore. That is an important consideration. There is no difficulty of that kind at Racine, as I understand, and there is no difficulty of that kind at Put in Bay.

But, Mr. President, I do not care to pursue this matter further. I have said enough already, if I have spoken to any purpose, to show that this board's report should not be accepted by the Congress of the United States. We ought not to appropriate $250,000 to establish a station in accordance with their recommendation, as I understand it to be, that we shall locate this station at Lake Bluff.

I am, therefore, in favor of a new authority which shall determine this matter, or a new board who may determine it. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] in that behalf presents an amendment. It is an amendment which, as it now stands, I can not support, but I understand the Senator is willing to enlarge it so I can support it. What I call attention to is that his proposed amendment follows after the committee amendment. The committee amendment restricts the location of this site to the shore of Lake Michigan.

Mr. SPOONER. I suppose the Senator from Ohio would like to put in Put in Bay.

Mr. FORAKER. I would rather have it put in than to have it left out. But I do not expect the Senate to agree with me in naming Put in Bay at this time. But if I get a chance to present the merits of Put in Bay to some authority that will give me a fair hearing, I will give Racine a hard tussel for it at least. I think Lake Bluff will be out of it as soon as we put it out here; but I may be mistaken about that. I am speaking only from the information I gather from the report and from what has been said here by others.

I want the committee amendment so changed, therefore, as to provide that the naval training station shall be located on the Great Lakes, just as the law provided. I do not want any "Middle West," or anything else, about it, and then, with the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin following in the form in which it is now, I shall support it. But if we can not secure the adoption of that amendment, I am about ready to vote against the amendment and want it to go out of the bill altogether, for I have heard enough and I have seen enough, as a result of my investigation of what this board did, to cause me to lose confidence in their judgment.

I would not vote away [illegible] to be expected, from the report that has been made to me. I would not vote for it, because the board have evidently not heard disinterested testimony of the Secretary of the Navy, and they have given them, and they have disregarded the rules and conditions prescribed by the Congress to a certain extent and so without any satisfactory explanation [illegible] I have no confidence they would not have thought I was doing right in voting for this appropriation. I do not [illegible] I say, I will support the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, changed as I understand he is willing to change it; and if that can not be done, I want the whole thing to go out and thus leave it [illegible] amendment of any kind.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few observations [illegible] in support of the suggestions which have been made by the Secretary of the Navy. There are two questions pending before the Senate. The first is the amendment proposed by the Naval Committee, and the second is the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] to the amendment. I desire specifically to call attention to the fact that the Senator from Wisconsin desires in this amendment of his not only to do away with the report made by this board appointed by the Secretary of the Navy, but to have all this work gone over again by a new board, and instead of limiting the board to naval men who are familiar with this matter and who can exercise great intelligence upon the subject, it simply authorizes the President to appoint a board consisting of not less than three men, none of whom shall be residents, etc.

As I observed earlier in the debate, this language leaves it so that politicians may be appointed or military men, men from civil life, and of course the President would have a right to appoint a naval board. Secondly, I desire to challenge the attention of the Senators to the fact that instead of following the language of the original resolution, which directed the Secretary of the Navy to appoint a board composed of naval officers, whose duty it was to select on the Great Lakes a suitable site for an additional naval training station, etc., this provides that in addition to that they shall report the probable expenditure which will be necessary for improving the same, including lake shore protection and the construction of necessary harbor improvements.

After listening to the argument which has been made here today by the junior Senator from Wisconsin it is quite obvious that this resolution was so framed as to exclude Illinois entirely and practically to leave the site of Racine the only site that could be taken.

It is not my purpose to note all of the objections that were made by the honorable Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] and by the honorable Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES]. It is important for us to understand the object and purpose of this proposed legislation. The time was, as all Senators understand, when our sailors were taken from the Atlantic coast. Men who lived along the Atlantic coast and were familiar with the sea were the men who were selected for this duty in the Navy, but under the conditions of modern naval warfare it was found that the men who are brought from the interior make as good sailors and are better in some ways than the old time sailors who were selected from the seacoast.

It has also been found important in the development of our Navy to establish naval training stations in different sections of our country, and many years ago Congress provided that one should be located at Newport, R. I., and later that another should be located on the Pacific coast, on an island in San Francisco Bay. The naval station in San Francisco Bay is provided for largely by young men living in the section west of the Rocky Mountains, and the one at Newport largely by young men living in the New England and Eastern States. It has been found important that a statement of the Senator from Wisconsin on the question of its being a manufacturing site. I submit, if the Senate please, that that statement made by him, contradicted as it is by the report of this board, gives a clear insight to the entire statement that has been made.

[illegible] should be established along the Great Lakes, so as to reach the great Mississippi Valley, containing a population of [illegible] people.

[illegible] is not a school, as the Senator [illegible] Lake Michigan. [illegible] Lake Huron, Lake Superior, Lake Erie, Lake Ontario, Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, Lake Erie, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, Lake Erie, Lake Huron, Lake Michigan, Lake Superior, Lake Erie, Lake Huron

For some reason that is entirely unknown to me, the learned Senator seems to think that Illinois ought not to have this site, and seems to think that any argument that may be produced or any letters presented here from outside and irresponsible parties should influence the vote of the Senate as against the report of these men, selected in the careful manner I have indicated. He was good enough to say that at Waukegan there were a glucose factory and the American Steel Works, that interfere with the atmospheric conditions there.

Mr. President, that is the first time, living in Illinois, as I have for fifty years, knowing this locality as I do, being entirely familiar with it, that I ever heard that statement made. When he says that the mayor of Lake Forest is complaining of this, I want to say it is the first time that my attention, or I believe the attention of the people of that beautiful city, was ever called to such a condition.

Lake Forest is a city that is populated by millionaires. The finest homes in Illinois are located there. Do you suppose, or does anybody suppose, that if the stenches and smells from glucose factories, or the smoke and noise from the American Steel Works interfered with that locality, men worth millions of dollars would invest their money in their homes, as they have in Lake Forest?

Now, Mr. President, the location of the glucose factory at Waukegan is 4 or 5 miles away. I have some knowledge of the manner in which a glucose factory affects the general public. In the little city of Geneva, in the county in which I reside, there is one of the largest glucose factories in this country, located on Fox River, where all the refuse matter is thrown into that river, as the gentleman claims the refuse matter from this glucose factory is thrown into Lake Michigan. I live but 10 miles below, on the same river, and we have never noted any befouling of the waters of the river, and we have not noted any change in the atmospheric conditions by reason of the location of that glucose factory at Geneva.

I am sure that with such a great body of water as Lake Michigan to care for any refuse matter from this factory it is trivial to urge the argument here that the location of a glucose factory in Waukegan should be a bar to the selection of this naval training station at Lake Bluff.

Mr. President, as I have said, when you come to examine the reports that have been made here it shows the painstaking care that was indulged in by the board in collating the facts and in presenting them to the Secretary of the Navy and to Congress.

One of the great points, it is said by the board, why Lake Bluff should be selected is because of its proximity to Chicago, a great center of population. The Senator has made much of harbor facilities. Now, that is the argument of a landsman, and I say that in no offensive sense. I want to call the attention of Senators to the view of naval men as compared with the statement of my honored friend on the question of population and harbor facilities. They say on page 4 of their report:

> However important and desirable this matter of harbor facilities is, it is completely overshadowed—> completely overshadowed by the element of population, which is of the first importance, as was shown heretofore, for while the general harbor facilities add to the attractiveness and usefulness of the station and to the value of the instruction given and to the enjoyment of those undergoing training, this is a secondary matter.

Mark the language—

Now, my honored friend from Ohio, as well as the Senator from Wisconsin, has maintained here that the harbor facilities were of the first importance; but these naval men, who are the best judges upon this subject, say that the harbor facilities are of secondary importance and that proximity to population is of the first importance.

The board say that harbor facilities are secondary matters—> as compared with the controlling condition, viz, that the site should be so fixed as to secure the greatest possible number of young men for the country's service.

In connection with that I desire to call the attention of Senators to what Chicago has done in the way of furnishing sailors to man our great war ships as compared with Racine. I have a statement here showing the number of men enlisted for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, giving the names of the cities and towns where they enlisted, and also the number enlisted in each State. I find by turning to that that Chicago during that fiscal year furnished 655 men who went into the naval service.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment. I find when I turn to Wisconsin that Racine furnished 7.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HOPKINS. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. In reference to that statement, I want to call the attention of the Senator from Illinois to the fact that the recruiting station was at Chicago, and probably the boys of the country who wanted to enlist—I know it was so in my own State—were compelled to go to Chicago to enlist. When the Senator quotes the number enlisted in Chicago he evidently includes about two-thirds of those who enlisted from that section of the country, simply because they were obliged to go to the place where the recruiting station was located. I know many instances where boys wrote to me that they wanted to enlist in the Navy—there was for a short time a recruiting station in St. Paul, but it was not continued—and they had to go to Chicago.

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes; but my impression is—although I do not state as a fact—that whenever a young man enlists in the Navy, if he goes to the recruiting station in Chicago, he is not credited as a Chicago recruit, but his city and State are given the credit of that enlistment. The report I hold in my hand shows that all the various States in the Union are included, and it shows the quota as presented by each State. Chicago furnished 655 men. I find that Illinois gave to this service during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, 733 men, and that the State of Wisconsin gave only 187 men. I have inferred from that that when these young men enlisted the States and the localities from which they came received full credit.

Mr. FORAKER. If the Senator will allow me, I have before me some figures showing the enlistments, and I should like to read them if it would not interrupt the Senator.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will close shortly.

Mr. FORAKER. Very well. I will, however, avail myself of saying now that the Chicago zone has no advantage over the Toledo zone in the matter of enlistments—taking in Pittsburg.

Mr. HOPKINS. But Pittsburg is tributary to the station at Newport, and the object of locating these training schools, as I say, is to reach the greatest number. As we have one of these schools on the Pacific coast and another on the Atlantic—and Pittsburg is nearer to the Atlantic school, the one located at Newport—it is to the interest of the Government, in my judgment, that the other school should be located somewhere on Lake Michigan; if not at Chicago, then at Racine or at some other good point on Lake Michigan.

Mr. President, I have just called the attention of Senators to the fact that this naval board does not regard harbor facilities as of primary importance. That is a matter of secondary consideration. The reason for that is that these young men are only kept at the school five or six months and that the training while at the station is largely military.

The Lake Bluff Harbor is, I think, quite as good as that at Racine, and in support of the statement I make I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the statement made by this board on page 9, where it is said:

> The harbor at Michigan City would offer [illegible] protection. For small-boat protection Racine is very favorably situated with reference to the natural protection afforded under the lee of Northwest point and by possessing a ravine which, with small amount of dredging, could be converted into a thoroughly protected inland harbor. Lake Bluff is similarly situated with regard to possessing a ravine that can be dredged out for small boats.

My understanding is that all that is necessary for a harbor where one of these training schools is located is for small sailboats and rowboats. The young men are simply trained in a military way, with a small amount of exercise with rowboats and sailboats for a few months, and then are sent to the great battle ships and cruisers, where they can get the sea service.

Pettibones Creek, that runs down there, furnishes a natural harbor. My honorable friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] says it will take a million dollars to dredge it. Why, Mr. President, I am sure there is no man who regards his reputation as a civil engineer who would make a statement of that kind.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, as the Senator has announced that only rowboats will be required, I withdraw my statement. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. The amount that would be required for this purpose is small. It may be a few thousand dollars, but certainly it can never reach the amount which has been indicated by the Senator from Ohio.

In every other respect, Mr. President, Lake Bluff furnishes every condition that is required in the instructions given by the Secretary of the Navy, and every condition that has been suggested by the board itself.

The amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Wisconsin presents no light matter. The men who form this board and who have made this report took these positions not by their own seeking. They were selected by the Secretary of the Navy. They have gone on in an honest and faithful way to perform their duties; they have made a report here which, in my judgment, is entirely in harmony with the facts which have been presented by them. I see no reason why they should be disgraced; why the Secretary of the Navy should have his views and opinions disregarded by having the report set aside, this board ignored, and a new board appointed. For those reasons I am opposed to the suggestions which are made in the amendment itself.

I believe, Mr. President, that we should adopt the report that is here or direct the Secretary of the Navy by proper legislation to go on and make further investigation, that this selection of a naval school site, instead of being a great national matter, will develop into a sectional contest between States, or perhaps between political parties—a thing that is to be deplored.

I have seen some [illegible] would have raised his voice in objection, a Wisconsin site had been selected. I feel sure that the Senator from Illinois in other instances of this character would have raised his voice in objection if some site had been selected in Indiana or Michigan; and I see no reason why a matter of this kind concerning the interest of the people and somebody in [illegible] should not receive the approbation of the members of the Senate.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to put the figures I have here in the RECORD?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SPOONER. I do.

Mr. FORAKER. I will take but a moment of the Senator's time. The figures to which I refer have been taken from House Document No. 6, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, published in a speech made by Mr. [illegible] in the House of Representatives, which appears in the [illegible] February 20 last. The figures I will not stop to read, but I will ask to have them inserted in the RECORD just as they are. They show the number of naval enlistments at Chicago, Pittsburg, and the other various cities included in the respective territories that we have been talking about.

Mr. HOPKINS. During what period?

Mr. FORAKER. During last year. They show, I will tell the Senator, a decline in enlistments in the Chicago territory and an increase of enlistments in the other territory.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is an additional reason, I will say to my friend, why we should have the naval training school near Chicago as an inducement toward increasing the enlistment of the young men of the country there.

The figures referred to by Mr. FORAKER are as follows:

Naval enlistments in Lake Michigan and other Illinois and Wisconsin cities and towns for 1903.

Chicago, Ill	655
Muskegon, Mich	1
[illegible]	[illegible]
Milwaukee, Wis	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Other Wisconsin cities	[illegible]
Total Illinois, Wisconsin, and all Lake Michigan cities	1,[illegible]

A falling off of more than 25 per cent over 1902.

There is no longer a permanent naval enlisting station. There are no permanent stations at any place within the Lake Erie zone.

Naval enlistments in Lake Erie and other Ohio, eastern Michigan, and western Pennsylvania cities and towns for 1903.

Detroit, Mich	128
Saginaw, Mich	79
[illegible]	[illegible]
Toledo, Ohio	118
Sandusky, Ohio	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	251
[illegible]	[illegible]
Pittsburg, Pa	2[illegible]
Titusville, Pa	1[illegible]
Total for Lake Erie, eastern Michigan, western Pennsylvania, and Ohio cities	1,279

A gain over 1902 of more than 35 per cent.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I could not, if I would, occupy much of the attention of the Senate in discussing this question. It is but a fair concession to my colleague [Mr. QUARLES] to say of his observations that he has left nothing new to be said. I desire to reply, however, briefly to certain observations made by the Senator from Illinois. Mr. President, I am not inclined to challenge the responsibility or integrity of citizens of Racine who oppose his view as he is to land without limit the persons who sustain him.

The Senator is not unwilling to accept as a truthful representation of this business the statements which have been exploited here. He thinks that the photographers who took the Lake Bluff photographs are irresponsible and not at all to be relied upon.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not desire to interrupt the Senator; but is it not a little remarkable that they should have gone to Wisconsin to get a photographer to take a photograph of Lake Bluff?

Mr. SPOONER. It is not at all remarkable that the people of a prosperous city in Wisconsin, who felt that the examination of their site had been an unfair one, an entirely inadequate one, and that the selection of Lake Bluff was without justification from any standpoint, should have sent a photographer with his instruments to Lake Bluff to take some photographs of that point, its relations to the water, and its availability for the purpose for which it was chosen; and no one looking at these photographs can question for a moment, they having been taken from different points of view, their accuracy, or the demonstration which they afford that that is not the proper place, Mr. President, for a naval training school, in my judgment, wherever else it may be put.

The Senator from Illinois is affected by, I think, a sort of mental aberration when he comments upon this amendment. He tells the Senate in mention of consideration Lake Bluff. Wherein?

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I said it rules that out on the assumption of the correctness of the statement of the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], who made the very point against Lake Bluff that is included in the resolution.

Mr. SPOONER. Rules it out Mr. President, only if a commission appointed by the President, should this amendment be incorporated in the law, upon an examination of all the sites, reports that it is not the best. It does not exclude, upon the statement of the Senator from Illinois, Lake Bluff from the class of eligible locations. If Lake Bluff is found by the commission, if one shall be appointed, the most available site, there is no reason whatever for supposing that Lake Bluff will not be chosen.

That is not the trouble, in my judgment, with the Senator from Illinois in his criticism of this amendment, because it is my conviction that he knows, as I think I know, that on these papers as they stand and this amendment, as reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs, Lake Bluff is already selected.

Mr. MALLORY. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. MALLORY. Does the Senator know that Lake Bluff is already selected? I notice that in the recommendation of the board it is proposed that hereafter some site within the limits they prescribe must be selected by the board provided by the act of 1902.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; but the board has made its report. The board has reported five suitable sites, and it has given as its first choice Lake Bluff. If that represents the ability of the board and the judgment of the board, is there any warrant for the assumption here that the Secretary of the Navy, proceeding under this bill, amended as proposed by the committee, would overrule this board and select a site other than Lake Bluff? Upon what theory may that be said?

Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois is mistaken, so far as my colleague and I are concerned, in considering this simply a controversy between Lake Bluff and Racine. I took some interest, in the first place, in the provision for the selection of a site for a naval training station on the Great Lakes. It came to the Senate in the naval appropriation bill from the House. When that bill was reported back to the Senate that provision was omitted.

I know of no Senator here but myself who took interest enough in the matter to seek its restoration. I did not take that action, Mr. President, with reference to Racine. It is not a Wisconsin question; it is not an Illinois question; it is not a personal question. It is a question which interests the people of the country, who will bear the burden of expense, and he would be a very narrow minded legislator who would not desire that in the end the selection should be adopted which from a naval standpoint, all things considered, would best conserve the general public interest. Mr. President, that is what we hope to accomplish if the Senate will adopt this amendment.

No one need make, as the Senator did, an elaborate argument here in favor of a naval training station on the Great Lakes. That argues itself. But it is important that it should be wisely selected, and all through these proceedings, without any purpose whatever to do injustice to the Board or injustice to anyone, or without impeaching motives, it is difficult, Mr. President, to reconcile the conclusions here with wise judgment on the part of the Board, because one thing is perfectly clear: the argument does not support its conclusion, and you can explain the meanderings of the business from first to last upon no hypothesis—or I can not—which is entirely satisfactory from the public standpoint.

Congress did not submit to the Secretary of the Navy or to this board the ultimate decision as to a site for a naval training station. It did say upon the Secretary of the Navy and upon the board to be appointed by him a plain duty, which can not be read out of the law. It was a duty to appoint a board which should do what? Travel over the Great Lakes, go to Muskegon, find it healthful, find it with the very best harbor of all the sites, so far as their report goes, in every way adapted to a naval training station, but not near enough to Chicago, and therefore to be excluded?

Go through these reports and you will find from the beginning a narrowing of the sky, drawing it closer and closer and closer until it draws down around Lake Bluff substantially.

This board confirms by its judgment, as one of the necessary elements to be considered, what was embodied in their instructions from the Secretary of the Navy, to wit, harbor facilities; and yet they make an argument later, utterly inconsistent, to entirely overrule it. They first make a zone, excluding a vast number of sites for one reason and another; then they go on to Lake Michigan and they make a zone there.

They "fence in" a few sites, leaving one in Wisconsin to be considered, and one in Illinois. These are reports almost a year apart, and there was no examination of sites at all between the first report and the last one—none whatever. How do you account for the delay? The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] called attention—and he never misses anything which will sustain his proposition—to the order laid by the Secretary of the Navy upon the board as to the elements which should be considered in selecting the site. First:

Ease of access to the point from thickly settled portions of the United States.

Is not the region from Chicago to Milwaukee, from the standpoint of the West, a thickly settled portion of the United States? Was it the idea of the Secretary of the Navy that the site must be selected as near as possible to the city of Chicago, in order that the boys and young men at the naval training station for instruction and training should spend their nights and their short leaves of absence in Chicago? I fancy not. I think if you would consult the fathers and mothers of the country, whose sons are to go from the farms and out of the villages for a life upon the sea and for preliminary training at a naval training station, they would rather have it farther from the slums and temptations of a great city than nearer to them.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. If it will not interrupt the Senator, I want to suggest that Harvard, the greatest educational institution in the country, is right near Boston; and we have in Chicago the University of Chicago, with four or five thousand students, and the Northwestern University, two of the greatest universities in the West.

Mr. SPOONER. There is an esprit de corps in colleges; there are safeguards for the students in colleges. This is a band of young men who come from over the country, from Wisconsin, and other States to the naval training station—a different thing from one who goes to college.

Ease of access and transportation.

That is another thing. Third—

Convenience of harbor accommodations near the point selected.

(d) And also by such other considerations—

Among the three points "nominated in the bond" by the Secretary of the Navy," the third one was harbor facilities. Now, my friend the Senator from Illinois says that is a matter of no consequence.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, the Senator is entirely mistaken. I simply quoted a rear-admiral of the Navy, a lieutenant-commander of the Navy, and one of the brightest civil engineers of the Navy Department. I differed in my statement from the Senator in that respect. I gave my authority.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the first time it seems to have occurred to these naval officers or anybody else that it was a matter of no consequence whether a naval station was 40 miles from water or not was when they felt bound to come to that conclusion because of the proximity to Chicago of Lake Bluff, which has no harbor facilities, either present or possible, to be considered at all adequate. Did they exclude that item from their consideration? Take their major premise and their minor premise about this little matter, and, like the Kilkenny cats, put side by side, they eat each other up.

The board itself, after reciting the instructions of the Secretary of the Navy, state their own views as to the necessary elements to be considered in the location of a site; and they say about that:

There should be a good natural or artificial harbor convenient for both large and small vessels, having not less than 18 feet of water, and easy of egress and ingress.

They agree with the Secretary of the Navy, only "more so." Harbor facilities averaging 18 feet depth of water are not for skiffs or canoes.

The harbor or channel should be self-maintained and should not require continual dredging.

Look at this ravine at Lake Bluff [exhibiting photograph]—a pocket. It would hardly do for a duck pond, unless you dredge and cut through the hills back of it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. That was taken by a Wisconsin photographer.

Mr. SPOONER. I think a Wisconsin photographer would take a very handsome picture of the Senator from Illinois. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Judging from that, I would not want him to try it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. If you stood on Lake Bluff when the picture was taken, I do not think you would.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not think anybody would recognize it if that photograph is a fair sample of their work.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is looking at the picture. I will ask him what he thinks of it as to harbor facilities?

Mr. CARMACK. There is no water there.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not make any difference. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. If it was macadamized, it might do. [Laughter.]

Mr. SPOONER. It is a matter of no concern now that the naval training station should be where they can get in and out with boats, because it is a military drill they have there. Why not locate it on some beautiful plain a hundred miles or so from Lake Michigan or any other body of water?

It is only for military drill! But the officers composing this board upset that. Just think of it! I ask my friend the Senator from Maine—he need not answer me—the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, to think of a naval training school as to the location of which proximity to water is of no consequence.

"Mother, may I go out to swim?"
"Yes, yes, my dearest daughter;
Hang your clothes on a hickory limb,
But don't go near the water."

[Laughter.]

Training young men to be sailors to defend the flag on the sea, and in the preliminary training school where they get their first experience to fit them for the water, it is a matter of no consequence whether they can get in or out to the water! Of course it seems to be sufficient——

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. HOPKINS. I should like to ask the Senator if he has ever visited either of the training schools now in existence in this country?

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. HOPKINS. Does he know anything about the character of the training that is had at either of those places?

Mr. SPOONER. No, not much; except what I have read.

Mr. HOPKINS. I judged he did not from the statement he made.

Mr. SPOONER. But I think it more important that the men who are to go down to the sea in ships should be able to get from the naval training school to navigable water than that they should be able quickly to get to Chicago.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is not a question of getting to Chicago, nor is it a question of getting to the water. It is a question of disciplining and training these men for a period, as I stated, of about six months; and in this country, in both of our schools, and at Portsmouth, England, the training is on the land.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not believe you could get an English sailor to have all of his preliminary training on the land.

Mr. HOPKINS. Go to Portsmouth and see.

Mr. SPOONER. I have been to Portsmouth.

Mr. HOPKINS. They have everything so arranged there, and have the deck of a ship fixed, with the guns and everything of that kind, on the land, where the boys are trained, instead of putting them on ships. After the preliminary training, then they go to the battle ships and get all of the sea service they need.

Mr. SPOONER. Then the Senator demonstrates that the amendment which the committee reports is not adequate, and the Senator from Maine should, if this is to stand as the judgment of the committee, report an amendment making an appropriation for the construction of a battle ship in that ravine [laughter], so that the student can jump from the bank onto the battle ship and off again onto the bank and toward Chicago.

What does the commission say about this?

The matter of harbor accommodation—

Now, this is the first minimization of the element of harbor accommodations and facilities. I do not know how it happened. I would not for all the world impute an impropriety to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House. I do not for one moment doubt his word when he says that he never said a word to influence this board. That was not necessary. But the fine presence, the charming smile, the affability, and incidentally the official power in reference to naval legislation of the distinguished gentleman who was so eloquently, but unnecessarily, defended by the Senator from Illinois, carries with it a hypnotism that the average man can not resist. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. Now, if the Senator——

Mr. HOPKINS. Just a word. I wish to ask if the Senator from Wisconsin thinks Rear-Admiral Taylor, the head of the Bureau of Navigation, is a fit man for the place he holds; if he would be influenced by personal considerations in favor of the chairman of any committee of either House of Congress in the discharge of a public duty like this?

Mr. SPOONER. The gentleman from Illinois influences everybody with whom he comes in contact——

Mr. HOPKINS. Oh!

Mr. SPOONER. By that benignant smile of his, his grace of carriage, and all that. They have influenced me.

Mr. HOPKINS. I see they are doing it now.

Mr. SPOONER. I think if Lake Bluff should be selected as the place for the naval training station, there ought to be a statue of the distinguished gentleman erected there, and I know the passengers on the ships as they go up and down——

Mr. HOPKINS. Up and down the ravine?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; up and down the lake would think from his stalwart form that it was a statue of Lief Ericsson or some other distinguished navigator.

But here is what the commission say:

The matter of harbor accommodation is an important one as affording opportunity for small-boat exercises and a haven of refuge from storm and for large practice vessels if any should ever be assigned the training station.

I suppose that in the long reach of time it may be possible that a small practice vessel will be assigned to that naval station. That is, I would have supposed so had I not been officially informed here that this naval training station has no relation to the water, but is to afford simply instruction on land.

Mr. DRYDEN. Horse marines.

Mr. SPOONER. Horse marines, the Senator from New Jersey says. Think of how much of a "larger practice vessel" could you jam into that ravine. They could not get it out, although they might build it in.

However important and desirable this matter of harbor facilities is, it is completely overshadowed by the element of population, which is of the first importance, as was shown heretofore.

That flies in the face of the Secretary of the Navy, and it does not commend itself, I submit, to the judgment of any sensible man. Think of this proposition boiled down as between Muskegon, with a fine harbor, if you please, fairly accessible, in a prosperous and great State. Take Racine, where a harbor, the board reports, can be easily constructed; and the Senator from Illinois is entirely wrong when he says the possibility of harbor construction at Wind Point is the same as at Lake Bluff. At the Racine location there is a swamp 150 feet in width at the mouth of the nearest lake. It runs in a thousand feet. It is soil which could be easily dredged and is on a level with the lake. At a small cost an adequate harbor could be made for any use which could be imagined at a naval-training station. Compare that with this ravine. [Exhibiting photograph.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Do not show the Wisconsin photograph. I do not want to see it.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not wonder that the Senator dislikes it.

Mr. HOPKINS. It would make anybody.

Mr. SPOONER. Now, again:

While natural harbor facilities will add to the attractions and usefulness of the station and to the value of the instruction given—

Is it simply a land drill? Let me read that again—

While natural harbor facilities will add to the attractions and usefulness [illegible] greatest possible number of young men for the country's service.

Now, Mr. President, this is the situation as between Racine, if you please, although the question is broader than that, and Lake Bluff. The one will afford an adequate harbor. The other will not. One is near to a New England manufacturing city, long the home of my colleague. The other is 28 miles nearer the great and rapidly growing city of Chicago.

Now, as my colleague has shown, it takes only two hours to go from Milwaukee to Chicago. Racine has two lines of railway, great railways, too—the Milwaukee and St. Paul and the Chicago and Northwestern—with limited trains and fast trains going backward and forward all the day long, and during the season of navigation it is served by two lines of steamships between Chicago and Milwaukee.

But this board recommends the purchase of the Lake Bluff site for $180,000 without a harbor, as against 200 acres at Racine for $50,000. Why? For one reason only—because Lake Bluff is 28 miles nearer the city of Chicago. Is that a sensible expenditure of public money? Is it not a disregard of every element which should enter into consideration in deciding the location of this naval training station? That is all there is to it.

This board was instructed to select a site, and that site and every detail of the proceedings of the board were to be reported to the Congress for its action. It has not done so. The action of the board was not to be final. It was to be submitted to Congress for its action.

The Senator from Illinois referred to the gentlemen from whom my colleague read as irresponsible parties. Is everyone irresponsible, in the opinion of the Senator from Illinois, who lives at Racine and dares to entertain an opinion upon this subject?

One of the gentlemen from whom he read I know, and for integrity and veracity he compares favorably with any gentleman. Admiral Taylor was there but once. He was at Racine thirty minutes. He did not go within a mile and a half of the Racine location. Admiral Taylor never came again, but the other two came again. They arrived at 4.30 in the afternoon in November, and by the time they reached the site lamps were lighted in the buildings thereabouts and it was too late for them to give it a careful examination, and they never gave it a thorough examination.

Mr. HOPKINS. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOPKINS. If the Senators felt, before the amendment now proposed by the junior Senator from Wisconsin was offered, that this board did not give proper consideration to Racine, I should like to ask him why they did not challenge the attention of the board and ask them to go there again or call it to the attention of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. QUARLES. I will state to the Senator that we did do it. I have the correspondence here. I did not take the time of the Senate to read it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Very well. If that is correct, then, did not the board report that they had given sufficient examination to the Racine site so as to be able to report upon it?

Mr. QUARLES. So far as I know, there was no answer from the board. These were addressed to Admiral Taylor.

Mr. SPOONER. I have affidavits here, which I will not take the time to read, from reputable citizens of my State, for whom I can vouch anywhere; who accompanied the board, which state the facts as I state the facts; and this board, a board having taken two years to perform the duty, reaching Racine at 4.30, reaching the site about dark, could not discharge as they ought to discharge the duty of examining and investigating.

Mr. HOPKINS. Why did not the Senator call the attention of the Secretary of the Navy to it, one of the ablest and most distinguished men we have?

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator is given to-day too much to eulogy.

Mr. HOPKINS. I leave out the eulogy. Why did you not apply to the Secretary of the Navy and present your grievance?

Mr. SPOONER. I never repeat in the Senate conversations I have, either with the President or executive officers.

Mr. HOPKINS. I am not asking for conversations. I am asking why it never was presented to the Secretary.

Mr. SPOONER. The Secretary of the Navy, I think, would be disinclined to overrule the action of a board which he himself appointed. At any rate, it is so stated in the debate elsewhere.

I have as much respect for the Secretary of the Navy as the Senator from Illinois can have. He is a great lawyer and a man of consummate ability, a man of great gifts and of unimpeachable integrity, of course. But he appointed this board of experts, and I have no doubt he would feel bound, being a layman himself, largely to abide their decision. But Congress did not give the ultimate decision of that question to the board of experts or to the Secretary of the Navy, either.

That board was to report a site and they were to report in detail and fully all of their proceedings, in order that the Congress itself might make a comparison of the different sites and pass judgment as to the correctness of the conclusion reached by the board.

Here is one thing. Letters have been flying around here on the eve of the debate. I find in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a letter from Commander Winslow, of whom, of course, I make no impeachment, although, Mr. President, I intend to make a polite and, I think, a well-justified criticism.

It has been stated in another place—I might as well say in the House of Representatives, though I may be called to order for it—that the commission spent thirty minutes—and that in the dark—on the Racine site, Rear-Admiral Taylor not being present. That was attempted to be mitigated by this communication. I shall not read it all:

The board was met by a committee and driven in carriages to the hotel in Racine. After [illegible] the board and the committee composed of the mayor of Racine [illegible] proceeded in carriages to examine the site, a short distance north of the city.

The board is mistaken about that. They did not visit on their first visit at Racine any site which it ever offered. They were not within a mile and a half of any site that was ever offered. They were not out of the settled business part of the city. They went down to look at the harbor, as I could show, but I will not take up the time.

After the return of the board to Washington the subject of the site at North Point, shown in the sketch that accompanied the report as "Site No. 2," was taken up in a correspondence with the representative of interests at Racine, and the board determined on their next trip to the Great Lakes to visit that site.

The board again visited Racine in October. Rear-Admiral Taylor, the president of the board, was unable to accompany the board on this visit. The board arrived at Racine late in the afternoon. After visiting some of the wharves in the city they went out to North Point. Owing to the fact that the meetings had been arranged to suit the convenience of the board, considerable time was wasted in the journey from the railroad station to the site.

Nevertheless the board reached the site in ample time to have sufficient daylight to see the site and to determine all the points the board had in mind.

The affidavits show, as I have said—and there were several of them—that it was dark when they reached that site, and the Racine committee asked them to remain over night at the hotel, as they had come so late, and to examine the site at their leisure in the morning, which they declined to do, on the ground that they were to reach Sheboygan.

This was a board with an abundance of money at their command, charged with an important duty, and I think—I may be mistaken about it—that that board should have waited until the next day and given the site deliberate examination. But they did not.

Now, Mr. President, I do not wish to take any more time. I hope the Senate will adopt this amendment.

The station may not come to Wisconsin, and that is a matter of small consequence; it may go to Lake Bluff, which is a matter of some consequence, in my judgment, from the standpoint of popular interest; but I hope the best point on the lake, whether it be in Michigan, or Illinois, or Indiana, or Wisconsin, will be ultimately chosen by a board going deliberately about it and considering every element to proximity to Chicago. I believe that is all I said to-day.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. President, I desire to say a word, and only a word, in reply to the suggestions made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. If the suggestions made by him and his colleagues and the [illegible] and letters referred to by them are to prevail here, then the same methods would defeat any report that may be made by any committee which may be appointed under the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin or by any other Senator.

If any credit for integrity is to be given to our public officials, if any consideration is to be given to the Secretary of the Navy and to the great admiral, who is one of the most distinguished men in the Navy, and to his associates, then this amendment should be voted down. I care not who may be selected, I care not what attention they may give to the situation, if this amendment does prevail men can come in with ex parte affidavits, with photographs of the sites that have been brought here, with letters from prominent persons, to impeach it, and if that kind of argument is to prevail, then we will never have a naval station on this land board.

And I say again, it seems to me it is the duty of every Senator to consider the character of the opposition that has been presented here, and to remember that the members of the board have been selected impartially by the Secretary of the Navy, and that they are men whose characters are above reproach, and that their report should stand.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I have just come in from a conference where I have been compelled to remain almost all afternoon in order to vote, supposing this discussion was substantially over. I have felt very much embarrassed by reason of the fact that I have been so situated that I could not take part in the discussion to-day.

I will not detain the Senate further than to say that I assumed when this report was made and when the Secretary of the Navy indorsed it substantially, and when the Committee on Naval Affairs put the result of it in the bill, that it was substantially settling the question. I had no idea that there was going to be an effort to throw aside the report and the recommendation of the Naval Affairs Committee of the Senate and that Senators would come in here for the purpose of securing a new board to examine these sites again.

I supposed that any commission headed by Admiral Taylor would not make any report at all until they were satisfied what their duty was in the premises. It has been my policy always to follow upon these questions commissions composed either of army officers or of naval officers.

So without taking time further, I simply wish to say that I feel that we have a right in a degree to call upon the Senate to stand by the report—to stand by the bill as recommended by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs—and to locate the training school wherever that puts it, whether it is in Illinois or Wisconsin or any place else.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment proposed by the committee is before the Senate, I believe.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is.

Mr. FORAKER. I move to amend that amendment by striking out, in line 25, commencing with the words "shore of," down to and including the word "minutes," in line 1, page 39, and inserting "Great Lakes;" so that the amendment will read:

Naval training station, Great Lakes: The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, $250,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is already an amendment pending which has precedence over that offered by the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. FORAKER. By whom offered?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES].

Mr. NELSON. I suggest that the Senator from Wisconsin withdraw his amendment until the amendment of the Senator can be perfected, and that he then renew his amendment.

Mr. FORAKER. The amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is an amendment that is to be added to this one.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that, but it is an amendment to the amendment, nevertheless, that is pending now. It does not strike out a provision inserted by the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Wisconsin can withdraw his amendment for the moment and let a vote be taken on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio, which is simply perfecting the original proposition. Then the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin would be in order, I think.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be then in order.

Mr. QUARLES. Very well; for the purpose stated, I temporarily withdraw my amendment so as to allow the pending amendment to be perfected, and I will then immediately renew it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 38, line 25, after the words "shore of"——

Mr. FORAKER. Including the words "shore of." I am trying to make the provision read in the exact language of the statute.

Mr. NELSON. After the word "the."

Mr. FORAKER. Yes; strike out all after the word "the."

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the following words:

Shore of Lake Michigan, south of latitude 44° 30'.

Mr. FORAKER. So as to read:

The purchase of land and the establishment of a naval training station on the Great Lakes, $250,000.

That is the exact language of the statute.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. QUARLES. I renew my amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin offers an amendment to the amendment, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the committee amendment the following:

[illegible]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. SPOONER. That will not do.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to suggest an amendment, in view of the amendment just adopted, and that is to strike out the words "none of whom shall be a resident of any State adjoining Lake Michigan."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has a right to modify his amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator might put it this way. He might make the clause read: "none of whom shall be a resident of any State bordering on the Great Lakes."

Mr. QUARLES. Very well; let it be fixed that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "State," in line 8 of the amendment to the amendment, strike out "adjoining Lake Michigan" and insert "bordering on the Great Lakes."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modification is agreed to.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words in support of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin. The hour is so far advanced that I shall undertake to do little more than express my entire concurrence in the proposition embodied in the amendment now before the Senate.

The report of the board appointed by the authority of Congress which is before the Senate is, it seems to me, entirely inadequate.

Its shortcomings have been sufficiently pointed out by others who have spoken, and I shall not dwell at length upon them.

I have some personal knowledge of several of the sites that are mentioned in the report. The one that is given fifth place—Michigan City, Ind.—is entitled, in my judgment, to a much better consideration. I know the place very well, and it is, in my opinion, entitled to very much more favorable consideration than it has received; in fact, it should be given preference.

Mr. HOPKINS. Over Racine?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I am not mentioning particularly any of the other sites, I will state to the honorable Senator. I would give it preference over all.

Mr. KEAN. How far is it from Chicago?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I think, without referring to the record, it is something like 50 miles. It is nearer the Atlantic seaboard than any of the other sites mentioned except Put in Bay. I yield first place as to accessibility to the Atlantic seaboard to my distinguished friend from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER].

I recognize, Mr. President, that the selection of a site for a naval training station upon the Great Lakes is a matter of importance. There is not, in my judgment, such a great difference between the various sites as might appear from what has been said here. They all have some points of advantage and of disadvantage when compared with each other. These are partially and in the main pretty fairly disclosed by the report of the board of naval officers appointed under the authority of Congress. The site at Michigan City, Ind., is one that is entirely adequate for the purpose desired, and it is entitled to more favorable consideration than it seems to have received at the hands of the board. It is nearer the Atlantic seaboard than any of those which have received favorable mention. Its harbor facilities are sufficient. In the language of the report, "The harbor at Michigan City would offer convenient protection." "The water front is of sufficient length." And further, according to the report, "Michigan City has the advantage of proximity to the center of population of the Great Lakes region."

The report contains this very significant statement:

While perhaps none of the sites possess all of the ideal local requirements, all of them are sufficiently suitable for the purpose.

If this statement is to be accepted as accurate the question of the cost of site becomes very material in determining the ultimate location. It will be observed by turning to the report that the cost of land at Michigan City is put at the very reasonable sum of $125 per acre. There is only one other locality where the land may be had cheaper, and that is Muskegon, Mich.

Mr. ALGER. And there it is very much better.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. "And there it is very much better," says the distinguished Senator from Michigan. While it is very good, I would not admit that it is very much better. I will say that as to land values the honors are substantially even between the two.

Now, Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, not because of any possible prejudice against other sites, for, as I have said, they all have their merits; but I am in favor of the amendment because I hope that upon a further and more careful consideration of all the facts the board to be appointed will decide that a site at Michigan City, Ind., will be found to possess all of the essential requirements of a first-class naval training school, and that the cost of acquiring and maintaining it will be less than elsewhere.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, there can be no doubt whatever that upon a careful and impartial investigation of the various sites the board will find that my colleague is right, and the superiority of the Michigan City site will, I think, be demonstrated to any impartial mind. I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, because when men are selected from States away from the Lakes there is very little doubt in my mind but that Michigan City, Ind., will be determined on.

Mr. ALGER. May I ask if we are selecting sites this afternoon?

Mr. HALE. We seem to be selecting one site.

Mr. LODGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if he desires to say a word in favor of Muskegon?

Mr. ALGER. I do not have to say a word in its favor.

Mr. HOPKINS. Muskegon speaks for herself.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not desire to take any time. I wish to heartily concur in all that the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. FAIRBANKS] said, except that I would move to amend his remarks by substituting the city of Duluth for the city of Michigan City.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words, not on this amendment, but on the bill.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator from Georgia will allow me, I know Senators desire to make some remarks on the bill, and I do not propose to ask the Senate to continue and conclude the bill to-night; but I wish to get this matter which has consumed the whole day out of the way. I shall then ask that the bill go over.

Mr. CLAY. We have nothing to discuss but this amendment.

Mr. HALE. Oh, yes; there is plenty to discuss.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. The bill will be before the Senate to discuss.

Mr. GORMAN. I understand that the Senator from Georgia prefers that his remarks shall be made on the pending amendment. It is getting late, and I trust the Senator in charge of the bill will let it go over until to-morrow.

Mr. CULLOM. So do I, but I supposed that it was the purpose to complete the bill at once. Otherwise I myself should have insisted upon an opportunity to speak a little upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HALE. The truth is there will be not the slightest limitation on any Senator who wants to discuss the bill to-morrow. But the Senator from Maryland, who is an old hand here, sees, I think, the importance of getting this matter out of the way. It is fresh in the minds of the Senate, and if we let it go over and quit we not only will not go at once to the consideration of the bill generally, but this question will be revived again and we will spend another day. The Senator knows how important it is. He himself and the Senator from Georgia lose nothing by the vote being taken on the pending amendment and then having the bill go over. There is another amendment that has been reserved.

Mr. GORMAN. There are plenty of amendments, Mr. President. I dislike very much to hesitate and to disagree with the distinguished Senator from Maine upon any suggestion he makes relating to the consideration of a bill, but I think it has been a very important and instructive discussion which we have had to-day. It shows, to my mind——

Mr. HALE. And the Senator wants to prolong it?

Mr. GORMAN. I think the time could not be better occupied than by bringing the Senator himself and Senators on the other side of the Chamber and the Senate to the consideration of the details of a great bill, which involves $125,000,000 or $130,000,000 and which should not be passed through this body without consideration.

Mr. HALE. I propose that all of that shall be left over until to-morrow.

Mr. GORMAN. The Senate has consumed an entire day in the discussion, interesting and delightful as it has been, of the selection of a site that will cost at the beginning only $250,000. No one can tell what the final expenditure will be. We passed over without debate one or more items that will involve eight or ten million dollars. I think the discussion we have had to-day is bringing us back to the proper rule, the one which this body has always observed, of not accepting the executive recommendations and the recommendations of boards, but considering these matters for ourselves. So there are other items in this bill that ought to be discussed.

I therefore trust the Senator from Maine will permit the matter to go over until to-morrow. It is only the beginning of March and the appropriation bills will not go into effect until the 1st of July. So we are not especially pressed for time. It is late in the afternoon, we are tired out, and I trust the Senator will permit the bill and the pending amendments to go over.

Mr. HALE. Of course I am at the mercy of the Senate or of any Senator who insists upon going on and debating. I wish the Senator's reasons for delay were better than they are. I take it the Senate does not of itself desire to simply prolong the consideration of the bill. I take it the Senator has no intention of that kind.

Mr. GORMAN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I said I wish the Senator's reasons for his proposition were better. Then I said I trusted and believed the Senator has no desire and there is no general desire to prolong the bill simply for the sake of prolongation.

Mr. GORMAN. No, Mr. President, absolutely none; and more than that, I want to say to the Senator, as he knows perfectly well, this bill, important as it is, has not consumed very much time—nothing compared with the time devoted to the consideration of bills of like character heretofore considered. There is no disposition on the part of anybody to go into a discussion of all the details of this bill, as we have done heretofore, and as I think we ought to continue to do hereafter. So there is no object in delay. The Senator from Maine can dispose of the bill, I have no doubt, to-morrow without any trouble. It is a little late to-night to proceed further with the bill.

Mr. HALE. My only proposition was that it would help us along. I did not propose in any way to the Senator to interfere, as I could not do if I wanted, with discussion on other matters in the bill. I thought perhaps the Senator would consent that we should take a vote now on the pending amendment, and if any one wants afterwards to move any amendment when the bill has been reported to the Senate he can do it. But still I am willing to leave that largely with the Senator, if the Senator desires that the bill shall go over now, without having time taken to dispose of the pending amendment.

Mr. GORMAN. I think it very much better.

Mr. HALE. Then, Mr. President, I wish to say that under these conditions I must ask the Senate to sustain me in the morning in taking the bill up whenever the routine morning business is called, and that we shall go on with the bill. I shall [illegible] include it some time during the day to-morrow. Some Senators desire executive session, but I give way for a moment to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE]. I withhold the motion for an executive session.

PROPOSED ALASKAN LEGISLATION.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that on next Thursday, immediately after the morning business, the Alaskan legislation——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate will be in order. The Senator from Indiana is asking unanimous consent.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. I ask that the Alaskan legislation be taken up for that day only.

Mr. GORMAN. For what day?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Thursday.

Mr. GORMAN. Immediately after the morning business?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. On Thursday, immediately after the morning business, for that day only.

Mr. LODGE. With the understanding that it shall not displace the unfinished business, if the Philippine shipping bill still occupies that place.

Mr. HALE. Or interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will see that that is taken care of. The Senator from Indiana asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next, immediately after the routine morning business, the Alaskan bills may be considered for that day only. Is there objection?

Mr. HALE and Mr. GALLINGER. Not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. Not to interfere with appropriation bills, of course; that is determined by the rule.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Do I understand my colleague to limit the request to that date?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. To that day.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. And after the close of morning business?

Mr. BEVERIDGE. After the close of the routine morning business, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask simply for the reason that I desire to move to take up Calendar Order of Business 170, Senate bill 1508, at the earliest moment possible.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. My request was for that day only, in order that it might not meet with objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will put the request for unanimous consent a little differently, if the Senate pleases. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] asks unanimous consent that on Thursday next, after the routine morning business, the Alaskan bills may receive the consideration of the Senate for that day only, not to interfere, however, with appropriation bills, and that the Senator, at 2 o'clock, will ask that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for that purpose.

Mr. BEVERIDGE. That is it.

Mr. HALE. That covers it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, just a word. I shall not object to the request made by the Senator from Indiana, but I want to say that I think we ought to be somewhat careful about giving away days a week in advance. There are, I think, eighteen bills on the Calendar reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, some of them very important. I have been extremely anxious to get to their consideration. I had intended to ask a day for that committee, which I shall do when I get an opportunity. I simply wanted to put myself on record as being diligent in this matter, thinking that the legislation proposed for this District is quite as important as a great deal of other legislation that we are dealing with. I hope the Senator's request will be granted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the order is made.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, March 5, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 4, 1904.

CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF ORDNANCE.

Capt. George A. Converse, United States Navy, to be Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear-admiral, for a term of four years from the 15th day of March, 1904.

CHIEF OF THE BUREAU OF EQUIPMENT.

Capt. Henry N. Manney, United States Navy, to be Chief of the Bureau of Equipment in the Department of the Navy, with the rank of rear-admiral, for a term of four years from the 15th day of March, 1904.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Second Asst. Engineer Charles S. Root, to be first assistant engineer, with the rank of second lieutenant, in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed J. Q. Walton, promoted.

Second Asst. Engineer Byron A. Minor, to be a first assistant engineer, with the rank of second lieutenant, in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, to succeed H. N. Wood, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 4, 1904.

POSTMASTERS.

CALIFORNIA.

Louise C. Tyler to be postmaster at Mill Valley, late Eastland, in the county of Marin and State of California.

MAINE.

Eldridge H. Bryant to be postmaster at Machias, in the county of Washington and State of Maine.

MINNESOTA.

William Cardiner to be postmaster at Princeton, in the county of Mille Lacs and State of Minnesota.

MISSOURI.

Milton J. Hudson to be postmaster at Hale, in the county of Carroll and State of Missouri.

William G. Kitchen to be postmaster at Bloomfield, in the county of Stoddard and State of Missouri.

OHIO.

Wilson A. Karns to be postmaster at New Philadelphia, in the county of Tuscarawas and State of Ohio.

Charles B. Morris to be postmaster at Columbus Grove, in the county of Putnam and State of Ohio.

J. J. Roderick to be postmaster at Canal Dover, in the county of Tuscarawas and State of Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA.

John W. Chamberlain to be postmaster at Wyalusing, in the county of Bradford and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, March 4, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—DAVIS V. SIMS.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report and resolutions for consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania, chairman of the Committee on Elections No. 2, submits the following report and resolutions, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That F. M. Davis was not elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That T. W. Sims was elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. OLMSTED. Mr. Speaker, this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Elections No. 2. For the information of some who may have expected a different result it is, perhaps, proper that a very brief statement be made. The sitting Member, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS], was returned by a majority of 976. Some trifling irregularities there were, reducing that to 970. No allegations of improper conduct were involved in this case nor made against either party, but the contestant claims that the so-called "Dortch law" in Tennessee ought to be declared unconstitutional and set aside, and that in that event 1,061 persons named but not voting ought to be treated as if they had voted and their votes had been cast for him, giving him a majority of 85, and that 1,920 more, estimated but no names given, ought also to be counted, giving him a majority of 2,005.

The contestant claims that the so-called "Dortch law" provides a form of official ballot which requires the person voting to be able to read in order to vote, and it therefore violates the provision of the constitution of that State by adding a qualification not contained therein, and also violates the provision therein contained that elections shall be free and equal, particularly as this law does not apply to the whole State, but only in certain localities. The supreme court of Tennessee has sustained the law as constitutional, but its decision is in conflict with decisions by the supreme courts of Kentucky, Virginia, Ohio, Michigan, and Pennsylvania. We are asked to follow these other decisions. We have not, however, found it necessary to attempt to decide between these conflicting rulings of State courts nor to pass upon the proposition suggested by the contestee that in any event the Legislature [illegible] the time, place, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives from the Federal Constitution and can not be controlled by the State constitution in the exercise of that power.

These important questions we have not passed upon for the reason that in the view we take of the evidence in the case the result would not be affected no matter which way we might decide them. The Dortch law applied to only 13 civil districts out of a total of 168 in the Eighth Congressional district. Should we hold the law unconstitutional and throw out the returns from the 13 districts, Mr. Sims would still have a majority. Mr. Davis says we should let the vote stand as returned, but add to his count other votes which were not cast nor offered to be cast.

The evidence shows 1,061 names of persons said to have been prevented by the Dortch law from voting for him, because, being unable to read, they could not mark their ballots. Twenty only of these were upon the witness stand. As to the other ten hundred and forty-one, we had only the evidence of third parties that they were Republicans and that they could not read, and therefore could not vote, and that in the opinion of the witnesses they would have voted for contestant. But as to most of them, at least many of them, there was no evidence of registration or of the payment or of qualification to vote under any law. We therefore declined to count such alleged votes.

Then there were nineteen hundred and twenty additional votes of persons estimated by the witnesses as having desired to vote for contestant. Their names were not given; it was not shown that they were qualified to vote at all; and we have not been willing to accept that character of testimony in this case—testimony in regard to persons who did not attempt to vote and of whom we have no very satisfactory evidence that they would have voted, or that if they had voted they would have voted for the contestant.

Therefore in the view we have taken the sitting Member is in any contingency entitled to his seat.

Unless some gentleman desires to ask some question or to make some remarks on this resolution, I will ask a vote on the resolution, first asking unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as part of my remarks the report of the committee.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. OLMSTED] asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD as part of his remarks the report of the committee. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Elections No. 2, [illegible] the contested election case of F. M. Davis [illegible] Sims from the Eighth Congressional district of Tennessee, [illegible] of ten counties, [illegible]

County.	Sims (Democrat).	Davis (Republican).
Henry	1,724	46
Benton	856	551
Perry	600	310
[illegible]	1,196	1,676
[illegible]	546	686
[illegible]	848	1,463
[illegible]	600	317
[illegible]	1,237	58
[illegible]	908	1,117
[illegible]	739	1,132
Total	9,236	8,317

Mr. Sims, having an apparent majority of 976, was awarded the certificate, duly sworn in and now occupies a seat in this House. Mr. Davis, however, contends the contestee is not entitled to be seated in the seat.

When the canvassing board met the official returns from Perry County, or at least the original poll books and tally sheets, had not been received. From such data as were in its possession the board allowed Mr. Davis 310 votes, the official returns subsequently received showed him entitled to 27. In the voting precinct known as Pickwick, in Benton County, Sherrod gives Mr. Davis 50 votes. There is some conflict in the testimony concerning this precinct, but we find that he was entitled to 40 votes, a net gain of 2.

In the two precincts of Tobosa and Walnut Grove in Henry County, the [illegible] Davis 1 vote in Tobosa and 5 in Walnut Grove. It appeared that [illegible] Walnut Grove [illegible] Davis 1 vote. We are [illegible] that these votes should be included in Sims's returns. It appeared that [illegible] Tobosa and Walnut Grove affected the result in Henry County, [illegible] Henry County were counted before the result was known in other counties. The first precinct in Henry County [illegible] Davis 46 votes, [illegible] Davis 1 vote in Tobosa and 5 in Walnut Grove affected the result in Henry County

Electors for Wharton Barker candidate for President and Ignatius Donnelly candidate for Vice President

VOTE FOR TWELVE

S. S. BOND
H. T. CHILDS
J. S. LEACH
A. L. MIMS
S. L. MOORE
E. M. NOLEN
H. G. ROBERTS
W. C. ROBINSON
C. B. SCAN
A. M. SMITH
R. M. TAYLESLEY
A. B. WHITE

Electors for William McKinley candidate for President and Theodore Roosevelt candidate for Vice-President

VOTE FOR TWELVE

E. S. ASHCRAFT
F. M. DAVIS
J. H. EAGLY
C. H. EVANS
A. A. FRANKLIN
H. L. MAXWELL
B. C. MCDONALD
J. E. RAGLAND
WILLIAM RANDOLPH
D. W. STARNES
S. L. VAUGHN
T. A. WRIGHT

Electors for John G. Woolley candidate for President and Henry B. Metcalf candidate for Vice-President

VOTE FOR TWELVE

GEORGE W. ARMISTEAD
T. P. BOLMAN
JOS. HOPEWOOD
W. B. JONES
L. B. LAMB
W. H. MCKNIGHT
A. D. REYNOLDS
J. W. SCOTT
L. B. SEARLE
J. M. STEWSON
S. TENKEL
J. F. TURNER

Electors for Eugene V. Debs candidate for President and Job Harriman candidate for Vice President

VOTE FOR TWELVE

L. H. GIBSON
J. T. HINES
H. KLEINER
W. G. MAYLAND
H. MARTIN
W. M. MCCAUL
E. D. MORGAN
R. N. MORRIS
W. G. PENNINGTON
JOHN RAY
T. J. ROWLAND
J. E. VOSS

Representative in Congress

VOTE FOR ONE

LEE BROCK
JOHN W. GAINES
JOHN HEASTON

Governor

VOTE FOR ONE

R. L. TAYLOR
JOHN E. MCCALL
BENTON McMILLIN
H. J. MCCORD
C. H. STOCKELL

Railroad Commissioner of the State of Tennessee

VOTE FOR ONE

THOMAS L. CATE
THOMAS L. WILLIAMS

State Senators

VOTE FOR TWO

JOSEPH W. BYRNS
M. M. KLEIN
JOHN THOMPSON

Representatives in General Assembly

VOTE FOR SEVEN

E. D. BRANTLEY
MILLARD F. CAMPBELL
C. C. CUNNINGHAM
JESSE W. DOZIER
M. P. ESTES
CHARLES P. FAHEY
R. C. FULLER
HARRY A. LUCK
J. R. VENABLE
W. W. WILKERSON
J. MINNICK WILLIAMS

Representative in General Assembly from Davidson Robertson and Cheatham Counties

VOTE FOR ONE

CHARLES L. COBBS

[On back of ballot.]

OFFICIAL BALLOT
12TH WARD,
NASHVILLE.
Davidson County, Tennessee.
ELECTION
Tuesday, November 8, 1900.

R. B. CARMACK,
JOS. B. BABB,
LEE BROCK.

Commissioners of Registration.

The voter having received a ballot is to go into the voting compartment and "prepare his ballot by marking in the appropriate margin or places a cross (X) opposite the name of the candidate of his choice for each office to be filled, or by filling in the name of the candidate of his choice in the blank space provided for the purpose and making a cross (X) opposite thereto."

He may not have in advance a specimen ballot, and must receive the official ballot, just before going into the booth, can not even know the order in which the respective offices will be grouped thereon. But to aid him with his ballot receive a printed card of instructions, of which the following is a sample:

"Official card of instructions prepared by commissioners of registration of election.

"This card is intended to assist and instruct voters how to prepare their ballots.

"1. Having received from the registrar at your polling place an official ballot, present it with your certificate of registration to the assistant registrar, who will number the stub of the ballot and put the same number on your certificate of registration, keeping the stub of the ballot. Fold your ballot so as to conceal the names upon it, and proceed to the booth by placing a cross mark (thus X) before or along the face in which the name of your candidate appears.

"2. You must not allow any person to see your ballot.

"3. If you cannot read or write, or be prevented by physical disability from marking your ballot, you may select any one you wish to assist you to vote, or you may have two persons of the election officers, as you prefer, to come to the booth and assist you.

"4. If you are prevented from marking your ballot by reason of blindness or other physical disability, you may select any one you wish to assist you.

"5. Before leaving the compartment for voting, fold your ballot so that the name of the registrar and the initials of the assistant registrar can be seen when you present it to the officer of election, who will then, upon your certificate of registration, your poll-tax receipt, and your ballot being found in order, deposit your ballot without undue delay in the ballot box, and you will then be given a receipt to show you have voted. Do not mark it, but if no other voters are waiting you will be allowed ten minutes.

"7. You must not allow any person to see your ballot, or to take the same from you, or remove the same from the polling place, nor to place any mark on the same other than as herein instructed, it being a misdemeanor to do so."

"If, by reason of blindness or other physical disability he is unable to mark his ballot," the voter may receive the assistance of the officer holding the election in marking the same, but unless so blind or otherwise physically disabled [illegible] mark his ballot.

"The voter [illegible] made at the time his ballot is delivered to him, and a [illegible] of the name in voting opposite of the various offices to be filled stand upon the particular [illegible]

"[illegible] that a voter who shall, except as herein otherwise [illegible] and or hinder [illegible] any other voter [illegible] shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor [illegible] to be "treated as one caught in the very act of committing a misdemeanor."

It is [illegible] provisions "[illegible] with that. This [illegible] that "no person who can not read can vote the official ballot; that [illegible] that it violates Article I of the State constitution [illegible] and the right of suffrage can not be taxed or restricted, that [illegible] a qualification by a jury of some Blackstonian provisions [illegible] ascertained by law and judgment thereon by a court of [illegible]

And [illegible] Article IV, which is as follows:

"[illegible] a citizen of the United States and a resident of this State for twelve months [illegible] shall be entitled to vote at all elections [illegible] except that any person who shall be convicted of bribery, larceny, or any infamous crime, may be disfranchised; and the qualification of electors shall be the same [illegible] shall have power to regulate by general laws the manner in which they may exercise the franchise and to secure the purity of the ballot box."

Some seventy witnesses in this case, some of whom were white and some colored, some Democrats and some Republicans and Populists, [illegible] presidential contests and to vote the official ballot. Tennessee has [illegible] that a person that can not read can and vote as well as a man who can read and write, but he can possibly vote some ballots under the law and they do it." It must be manifest to anyone that the persons, unable to read, who can successfully mark all the candidates of a particular party, especially in a Presidential year, must be very few, if any.

The supreme court of Tennessee, however, in Cook v. State (90 Tenn., 407), sustained an indictment and conviction for "aiding electors in marking their ballots [illegible] to vote, etc., and expressly declared that this law [illegible] IV of the State constitution. This ruling was [illegible] the Legislature, however, expressly declaring its [illegible]

The Tennessee court does not appear to have considered the constitutional [illegible] "[illegible] shall be secured and equal." This provision, found in [illegible] been intended to have some meaning [illegible] the Legislature has done for fifty years [illegible] or, to be more accurate, it does not find [illegible] It applies only to the whole State [illegible] It does not apply to the whole State [illegible] It applies only in spots.

In this Congressional district there are 183 civil districts. The Democratic [illegible] in one town and generally required the voter to be able to read, or other property to mark his ballot. In the other districts a voter [illegible] ballot or write his name on a sheet of wrapping paper [illegible] and carry it in his vest pocket [illegible] years, and yet [illegible] Democratic [illegible] Strong, Democrat, Governor [illegible] Kyle, unanimously declared [illegible] Mr. Chief Justice Lewis, who [illegible]

A statute requiring votes to be given by ballot need not, any more than the [illegible] anonymity or so as to deprive a [illegible] of the [illegible] of the voter, or so as to make free suffrage as to them a matter of [illegible]

[illegible] the interests and rights of many may be involved and [illegible] rights. It is, however, [illegible] to cast two ballots [illegible] of, disregard, or [illegible] conflict with the Constitution [illegible] law; and to vitiate the whole [illegible] in accordance with [illegible] immaterial to the ordinary [illegible] or [illegible] to cast their ballots understanding [illegible]

[illegible] in the constitution requiring [illegible] or [illegible] the legislature can not prescribe any qualification in addition [illegible] and any attempt to do so openly or covertly [illegible]

"Third. [illegible] prescribed by the constitution, and [illegible] no matter how [illegible] of the legislature, with respect to the exercise [illegible] to provide the mode in which those entitled to vote may [illegible] and to guard against impositions [illegible]

"Fourth. [illegible] and enforce reasonable rules [illegible] the voter.

"[illegible] the voter, [illegible] of the law [illegible] power of the legislature and its [illegible]

And [illegible]

"[illegible] at one who, either from physical or [illegible] blindness, is [illegible] wholly incapable of voting by ballot without assistance [illegible]

[illegible] sustained the statute in that case by construing the word "may" to be [illegible] "thus making it a [illegible] special [illegible] to provide [illegible] possibility that [illegible]

A Mississippi statute [illegible] and Fourteenth [illegible] or [illegible] Rights [illegible] and the supreme court of that State, after [illegible]

[illegible] the result is the same, because [illegible] to the booth to assist him. It is [illegible] the act to [illegible] is clear that [illegible] provided in the booths then some [illegible] the Fourteenth [illegible] of the law. But we do not think that the law necessarily takes that construction. There is no express prohibition against assisting such a person in the preparation of his ticket, nor against his obtaining a ticket outside the polling place for that purpose, nor against assisting to a booth or the polls one physically unable to go alone. Such a case is not within the mischief aimed at, and we hold that under this law such a voter is entitled to receive assistance in the preparation of his ticket, and to receive and have his ticket prepared outside the polling place. This, we think, is in accord with that [illegible] that a thing which is within the spirit of a statute is within the statute, although not within the letter, and a thing within the letter is not within the statute unless within the intention.

In other words, in order to construe the statute, the Mississippi court construed into it a very liberal provision [illegible] for such assistance to the voter [illegible] law, and [illegible] the voter and the person assisting him subject to fine and imprisonment.

In Capen v. Foster (12 Pick., 485) the State supreme court of Massachusetts marked the distinction [illegible] between laws which took away or abridged the right of suffrage and those which may lawfully be enacted to regulate the exercise, and avoid embarrassment. Thus, in order to belong to the latter class, such laws must be [illegible] and reasonable, and must be enacted to facilitate and secure such exercise of suffrage [illegible] of the right to vote. The [illegible] was sustained by the supreme court of Massachusetts [illegible] to which case a statute of that State was [illegible] and which [illegible] not to prescribe any [illegible] upon persons who [illegible] the right to vote.

[illegible] Kentucky, like that of Tennessee, contained a provision [illegible] in an opinion [illegible] Mitchell, as reported in the Philadelphia Press of February [illegible]

"The [illegible] of suffrage on every citizen possessing the qualifications [illegible] equal right and [illegible] to be overlooked, therefore, that the requirement of the use [illegible] in the constitution [illegible] in the constitution [illegible] has been frequently [illegible] and even [illegible] as a party. And, if they so decide, courts must recognize and treat them accordingly.

"We have stated counsel's contention very fully and the authorities bearing thereon, in conflict with the Tennessee decisions.

"But the statutes, which are contending that the Australian law is in violation of your constitution [illegible] Congress [illegible] and Representatives [illegible] Congress [illegible] Representatives [illegible] Dortch law unconstitutional [illegible] also be treated as having voted for him, thus increasing his majority to 2,046.

Just twenty persons who were actually called to the stand testified that [illegible] the other [illegible] disfranchised [illegible] Democratic law [illegible] Dortch law [illegible] district all my life.

"10. Q. How old are you?—A. I am 53 years old.

"11. Q. Have you a list of persons who did not attend the November election, when the same was held under the provisions of the Dortch law?—A. Yes, sir. I have got a list of them.

"12. Q. Please give the names of the parties contained on your list; and are they Republicans or Democrats?—A. Marion Cole, Wiley Cherry, Bud Campbell, Henry Doran, Tom Ellison, Ike Kendall, Ike Rhone, B. F. Rinks, Chis Lowry, Buck House, John White, and old man Ras White. They are all Republicans.

"13. Q. Do the above-named parties all live in the Fourth district of Hardin County?—A. Yes; every one of them.

"Cross-examined:

"1. Q. Where did you get the list of names that you have just read?—A. I got them all over there at my store.

"2. Q. When did you make up said list?—A. I do not recollect whether it was before Christmas or since Christmas.

"3. Q. How came you to make up said list? What was it made for?—A. Abernathy came to my place one day and asked me if I knowed how many around there that had not voted, and I told him there was a good many. He told me to write them down; that he would be back a certain day and I could hand them to him.

"4. Q. Did Mr. Abernathy tell you what he wanted with the names?—A. I believe he did tell me. I do not exactly remember; it was about the election some way or another.

"5. Q. How do you know that the names you have given are men who can not vote under the Dortch law?—A. I did not know. I did not ask them about that.

"6. Q. Then you just mean that they did not vote in the last November election, and do not know whether they could vote under the Dortch law or not. Is that correct?—A. I do not know whether all of them could or not. Them two old men told me they could not vote because they could not make their mark straight.

"7. Q. As a matter of fact, most of those that you have named did vote in the last August election, in 1902, did they not?—A. I do not know whether they did or not. I did not even ask them that.

"Further this deponent saith not."

The witness practically contradicted every statement he made save that the twelve were all Republicans. Not one of the twelve was called to testify whether he was or was not a Republican, or had registered and paid taxes, or had or had not voted, or was prevented by the Dortch law from voting, or wished, if able to vote, he would have voted for contestant.

The substantial part of the testimony of the next witness, L. K. Freeman, is as follows:

"5. Q. What kind of a qualification does said law put upon the voters where the same is in operation, if any?—A. It is necessary for the voter to be able to read and write, both.

"6. Q. How has this law operated upon the Republican party in the elections of the Fourth district of Hardin County, and how did it operate in the election of November 4, 1902?—A. It disfranchises a great number of the voters.

"7. Q. Give your best estimate of the number of Republicans disfranchised in the Fourth district of Hardin County in said November election, by the provisions of said law.—A. From 75 to 100 voters.

"8. Q. Have you gone over and made a list of the names of the Republicans disfranchised by the Dortch law in said election of November 4, 1902, in said district, and if so, will you give the names of those whom you know to be unable to vote under the provisions of said law?—A. Yes. I have made a list to the best of my knowledge and recollection. The names are as follows: Sam Brooks, Wes Bailey, Lute Bailey, Andy Bailey, Jack Bailey, Bill Cherry, Newt Campbell, Marion Cole, Bud Campbell, Luke Doran, Henry Doran, Mose Davis, Henry Dillahunt, A. C. Duckworth, George Graham, Noel Graham, Pete Giles, Tom Graham, Fred Grimm, Gus Houston, Pate Hopson, Jack Hunt, Bob Hunt, Bob Hardeman, Lewis Hassell, John Hassell, Ben Higgins, G. O. Hunt, Bill Hunt, Bud Hunt, Chib Hunt, Cæsar Kendall, George King, Bill Kyle, Jim Lutts, Jerry McDougal, Jim McKinney, Joan Pollard, Sol Pollard, Frank Pollard, Tom Patton, Green Patton, W. A. Palmer, Otis Painter, Jerry Setzer, Elias Stephens, Jim Stephens, Joe Sanderson, Mose Shull, Sam Tall, Dave Winters, Bishop White, Elias Williams, Joe Young, Lewis Hassell, Bob House, Buck House, John Hudson, Dog Johnson, Ernest Johnson, Ike Kendall, Bob Johnson, Ras White, Ike Lynch, Bill Wolf, Will Fitzgerald, Adam Ellison, Sam Bundy, Charlie Ermin, Press Martin, Andrew Mack, Jonas Hess.

"9. Q. Will you please file said list as Exhibit A to this, your deposition, making it a part of the same?—A. I herewith file the same, marked "Exhibit A."

"10. Q. Was the parties whose names you have given otherwise qualified voters in said November election for all state and county officers, barring the provisions of the Dortch law?—A. I think they were."

In his cross-examination this passage occurs:

"14. Q. How many of the persons named by you in answer to question 8 in chief that can not read?—A. I could not say just how many.

"15. Q. Had the persons whose names you gave in answer to question 8 in chief paid their poll taxes for the year 1901 before the November election, 1902?—A. I could not say whether all of them had or not, but I know some of them had.

"16. Q. How many of them had registered for voting?—A. I do not know."

Even among these vague statements there is a clear conviction that any one of the seventy-two persons named desired, even if qualified, to vote for contestant.

S. J. Creery produced a list of 345 names, concerning which he testified as follows:

"27. Q. I will ask you to state if you have briefly made a list of voters in this city and civil district who are unable to read?—A. Yes, sir; I made that yesterday.

"28. Q. How many names does this list prepared by you contain?—A. If I made no mistake in the count it is 345.

"29. Q. Do you think those persons appearing from this list are able to vote under what is known as the Dortch law?—A. I do not.

"30. Q. If those persons appearing upon said list could vote, what ticket would they vote?—A. My opinion is they would vote the Republican ticket."

From his cross-examination the following is taken:

"8. Q. You have stated that there were 96 Republican votes in the city of Jackson, and of this number you estimated about 345 were unable to read. Now state whether the remaining 495 votes are able to vote under the Dortch law.—A. I think they are.

"9. Q. Then how do you account for the fact that Hon. F. M. Davis, candidate for Congress, received only 23 votes in this city at the last November election?—A. I account for it by the Republican voters not having their poll taxes and by general indifference as to the result of the election.

"10. Q. What was the cause of that indifference?—A. To some extent dissatisfaction existing in the Republican party in the county, and being what we term an off year, accounts for some of it.

"11. Q. What dissatisfaction do you speak of existing in the Republican party?—A. Dissatisfaction as to the county organization, as to who would be recognized as county chairman and members of the executive committee.

"12. Q. Is it not a fact that there were two factions—one headed by H. C. Worsham and the other headed by F. R. Davis—and that the majority of the colored voters were identified with the Worsham faction?—A. I can't say as to majority. They were nearly equally divided from the strength exhibited in the convention.

"14. Q. Which faction had the larger following?—A. Both factions claimed it.

"15. Did either faction champion Mr. Davis's candidacy?—A. The Davis faction recognized Mr. Davis as the regular nominee and entitled to the Republican support.

"16. Q. What was the attitude of the Worsham faction toward Mr. Davis?—A. Apparently it was hostile.

"17. Q. Did this apparent hostility serve to keep the members of the Worsham faction from voting for Mr. Davis?—A. I am of the opinion that it did.

"18. Q. Of the 345 voters in the city of Jackson whom you say are unable to read, what per cent of these can be instructed or coached before election so as to be able to vote under the Dortch law?—A. My opinion not over 5 per cent.

"19. Q. Is it necessary to pay poll tax in order to vote in the Fifteenth civil district?—A. If you are not exempt by age or infirmity, it is.

"20. Q. Are you able to state what per cent of the persons whose names appear on Exhibit A pay their poll taxes?—A. I estimate 75 per cent of them are over age.

"21. Q. Can you say of your own knowledge what per cent of the remainder pay their poll taxes?—A. I can not.

"22. Q. From your personal knowledge, then, it may be that none or a very few of them?—A. It may be; yes, sir. I am not informed.

Upon the mere expression of opinion by the witness that "they would all vote the Republican ticket" and without considering registration or tax payments we are asked to add 345 to contestant's vote. The evidence concerning the remainder of the names named, as proved by contestant's own witnesses, shows that in some instances there was evidence tending to show registration and payment of taxes.

Upon this character of testimony we are asked to treat 1,061 named persons as if they had voted for contestant. As above shown, 20 only of them have testified. As to the other 1,041, the evidence is even less satisfactory than that which was rejected in the Forty-third Congress in Bell v. Snyder (Smith's digest, 246, in which case the committee said:

"1. Reviewer supervisor at that precinct, in his deposition, page 164, states that the 20 persons whose names are given by him had contributed to public taxation, and that he saw all of them registered except two, and that they would have voted for contestant if they had been allowed to vote; that they presented their certificates of registration and offered to vote; that they made affidavit and offered to vote. He says that he did not read all the tickets, but to the best of his knowledge the parties would have voted for Bell, as all the Reform tickets were good.

"The committee regard the fact of these 20 persons having been registered as voters as sufficiently proven, but the proof as to the fact that all of them offered to vote for contestant or that they intended to or would have voted for contestant is insufficient.

In the case in hand 1,061 of the persons named did not even offer to vote. As to many of them we have no evidence of their registration or payment of taxes and as to none of them have we any save hearsay evidence that they desired to vote at all or would in any event have voted for contestant.

The additional 1,020 claimed by contestant rest upon evidence even more flimsy—the mere estimates of witnesses of which a fair sample is found in the testimony of T. J. Sawner, here given in toto:

"1. Q. What is your age, place of business, and what position do you hold in the county?—A. I am 46 years old; reside at Savannah, Tenn., and am sheriff of Hardin County.

"2. Q. What experience have you had in the politics of Hardin County, and how many times have you canvassed the county?—A. I have had some experience in the politics of the county. I have canvassed the county something like half a dozen times, but not thoroughly through every time.

"3. Q. How many times have you been sheriff of Hardin County, and what other offices have you held?—A. I have been sheriff three times, and was county assessor of the Fourth district before I was county sheriff.

"4. Q. Are the precincts of the Fourth civil district of Hardin County laid under the provisions of the Dortch law, and what kind of an obstacle does it place upon the voters?—A. They are laid under the Dortch law, and a man is required to read and has to be a good marker.

"5. Q. Is it possible for a person who can not read to vote the Dortch ticket?—A. It is not, unless he has assistance.

"6. Q. What effect has the application of the Dortch law had upon the Republican vote of Hardin County?—A. I mean how much has it suppressed their vote?—A. I believe it has diminished their vote something like 500.

"7. Q. In your best judgment, how many Republicans are there in the Fourth civil district of Hardin County who can not vote under the Dortch law?—A. I believe there is 700.

"8. Q. What effort was there made by the leading Republicans of Hardin County in the campaign in 1902 to poll their full strength for their ticket?—A. They made as strong an effort as possible under the circumstances.

"9. Q. I will ask you if there were men selected and put into each civil district of the county several days before the election for the purpose of canvassing each Republican voter in order to get him out to the November election, 1902?—A. That is my understanding.

"10. Q. I will ask you if the Republicans felt very buoyant and hopeful of success in the Congressional contest of November, 1902?—A. They did.

"11. Q. Have you time to make a list of the Republicans who, as you know, were disfranchised under the operation of the Dortch law in the fourth civil district of Hardin County?—A. No; I have not.

"Further this deponent saith not."

Upon this it is demanded that 100 votes be added to contestant's count, and upon similar testimony a total of 1,020. No names are given, no evidence of registration or payment of taxes nor of intention or desire upon the part of the unknown persons to vote for contestant. Such evidence is wholly inadmissible for any purpose. There have been cases in which persons proved to have been qualified, desiring, intending and attempting to vote, have had their votes counted, notwithstanding that they were not recognized by the election officers; but there is no precedent for adding to the count the votes of persons not shown to have attempted or desired or been qualified to vote for any candidate under any law.

A careful study and analysis of all the evidence in this case and of the printed briefs, supplemented by exhaustive oral arguments of able counsel, convinces us that, no matter what view may be taken of the Dortch law, the result of the election is not changed. Your committee therefore recommends the adoption of the following resolutions:

"Resolved, That F. M. Davis was not elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

"Resolved, That T. W. Sims was elected to membership in the House of Representatives of the United States in the Fifty-eighth Congress, and is entitled to a seat therein."

M. E. OLMSTED, Chairman.
J. M. MILLER.
F. D. CURRIER.
JOHN W. DWIGHT.
C. L. WEEMS.
J. FIELD C. TALBOTT.
JOHN A. SULLIVAN.
A. M. BYRD.

The resolution presented by Mr. OLMSTED was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. OLMSTED, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted was laid on the table.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HITT. I now call up the conference report on the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, which, in accordance with the wish of gentlemen who objected to the consideration of the matter yesterday, has been printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman desire to have the report or the statement read?

Mr. HITT. I ask unanimous consent that the statement, instead of the report proper, be read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. [The report of the conference committee will be found on page 2760.]

The statement of the House conferees was read, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives make the following statement of the result of the conference with the managers on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 13684, making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular services for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905.

The amount appropriated by the bill as it passed the House was $1,995,890.69. The amendments added by the Senate amounted to $77,300, so that the bill as it passed the Senate appropriated $2,073,190.69.

The House receded from its disagreement to the following amendments: Salary for the minister to Roumania, Serbia, and Montenegro, restored; salary for the minister to Switzerland, for the expenses of legations at Denmark and Portugal, at $4,500 each, but an increase of $1,000 to the consul at Lourenço Marquez, Africa, to the consulate-general at Changkiang and Hankow, China, at $2,000 each, to messengers at $900 each in the consulates-general at Cairo, Egypt, Bangkok, Siam, Hongkong, China, Porto Rico, Mexico, and Kobe, Japan, to the provision fixing a salary of $[illegible] instead of $[illegible] for the same amount for the consulates at Mexico, New Brunswick; Port au Prince, Haiti, and Turks Island, West Indies.

The clerk-hire allowance at Matanzas, Mexico, was increased $600. The titles of the consular posts at Lourenço Marquez, Tientsin, Chefoo, Fuchau, and Hankow were made "consuls," instead of "consuls-general," as provided by the Senate amendments.

The net decrease in conference from the bill as it passed the Senate is $53,000, making the amount of the bill as now reported $2,020,190.69.

E. B. HITT,
R. ADAMS, JR.,
Managers on the part of the House.

DIPLOMATIC, 1905.

Amount of House bill	$1,995,890.69
Increase by Senate	77,300.00
Amount as passed Senate	2,073,190.69
Decrease in conference, namely:
Legation buildings at Seoul, Korea	30,000.00
Cost of cablegrams, etc., consular reports	2,000.00
Consuls-general (transferred to consuls' schedule)	16,000.00
Clerks (30) at principal consulates	36,000.00
Total decrease	84,000.00
Increase in conference, namely:
Consuls restored (made consuls-general by Senate)	16,000.00
Clerks at consulates	15,000.00
Total increase	31,000.00
Net decrease in conference	53,000.00
Amount as agreed to in conference	2,020,190.69

Mr. HITT. I move the adoption of the report.

The report was adopted.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BOUTELL in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] desire to occupy more time now?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I did not get through with my remarks yesterday, but owing to the fact that there is such a pressure for time on this side of the House I will ask unanimous consent to continue my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I reserve the remainder of my hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. HERMANN] one hour.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, for the first time in our history the great Pacific Northwest has aspired to inaugurate an exposition in aid of industrial progress and in commemoration of the famous journey of Lewis and Clark in 1805-6—an event great in the history of our nation and greater still to the people of that section whose liberality, public spirit, and patriotism have determined to undertake such an enterprise in the great valley of the Columbia, at Portland city, Oreg., in 1905. As an evidence of the good faith and as a guaranty of the success of such an exposition, nearly $1,000,000 is already provided by the State and city named, while in addition to this the States of California, Washington, Idaho, Utah, Montana, North Dakota, Minnesota, and Missouri, through their several legislatures, have made separate appropriations for liberal aid and encouragement. It will therefore be a success. But since the whole American people are so materially interested in the value to the nation of such an exposition of American and Oriental industries and equally sharers in the patriotic spirit which the commemoration of such a remarkable period must inspire, the nation is asked to extend its official sanction, patronage, and aid. The Senate has already acted and now we ask the consideration of this House.

We appreciate the responsibility we assume in thus inviting and soliciting Governmental recognition and have estimated the full meaning of such a course. Only because the event to be celebrated is one of the most memorable in our country's history, and because of the material benefits to follow to all our people by having such an observance at the particular time and particular place on the Pacific Ocean, fronting, as it does, America's future market, with more than one-half the world's population, do we ask the consideration of Congress. The President of the United States, in his recent message, has already recommended such aid by Congress, and, in referring to the acquisition of the Oregon country, has suggested much for American thought when he says that it made "ready the way for our ascendency in the commerce of the greatest of oceans."

THE FOUR GREATEST EVENTS.

As an illustrious event and worthy of a great nation's most liberal observance, it ranks fourth in American history among the greatest events in the territorial and industrial progress of our country. Three of these have been spendidly recognized and aided by the American Congress. Shall the fourth and last of these be not also substantially, if not so liberally, provided for? And what are these four greatest events, in their order, to which we attach importance in our country? They are the discovery of this continent, our birth as a nation, the cession of the vast empire between the Mississippi and the Rocky Mountains, and, lastly, the acquisition on the Pacific of that immense domain from the summit of the Rockies to what was then the Spanish country, on the line of the forty-second parallel of north latitude, and which made us a nation from ocean to ocean and gave us for the first time a hold on the shore line of the Pacific Ocean. It would indeed be a bold stretch of the imagination to conceive of any single result in the future ages of territorial aggrandizement surpassing in importance or more worthy of remembrance than either of those mentioned.

The World's Columbian Exposition at Chicago in 1892 was the commemoration of the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of America by Columbus. It equaled if it did not excel in magnificence, in representation of the world powers, and in its collection of exhibits of the hand and brain of man any exposition that had ever preceded it in this or any other land. It was indeed the spectacle of the nations. Our Government contributed from the National Treasury $5,384,737, while many millions were contributed by States and Territories and from other sources. This was only a fitting memorial of the great discovery of a new world, as it was also a tribute of all the nations to the memory of the daring, patient, and persevering navigator, to whose skill, confidence, and constancy the end was wrought, as it was no less a reminder of that other magnificent personage—Queen Isabella of Spain—who pledged her jewels and the revenues of the Kingdom of Castile, and thus money was raised and the ships fitted out, without which the New World perhaps had remained undiscovered for an indefinite period later.

The exposition at Philadelphia in 1876, though earlier, was another great exposition of our nation's industrial advance. It was also the centennial anniversary of the immortal Declaration of Independence and the establishment of a republic—the first Republic in the western world. It reminded us of the nation's builders—of Washington, of Hamilton, of Jefferson, and their illustrious compeers. Here, too, was an exhibit, as at the great Columbian jubilee at Chicago, of American development in the arts and sciences, and of the mines, the fisheries, the forests and fields of the nation. The Government contributed liberally in aid of this most successful undertaking, both in money, loans, and exhibits. Passing by the intervening and lesser expositions of New Orleans, Louisville, Cincinnati, Atlanta, Nashville, Omaha, Buffalo, Charleston, and the foreign expositions at London, England, Vienna in Austria, Sidney in New South Wales, Melbourne in Australia, Berlin in Germany, Barcelona and Madrid in Spain, Brussels in Belgium, Bergen in Norway, and the three great expositions in Paris, all of which our country liberally aided, to that of Paris, in 1900, with $1,725,000 alone, I reach that in our own nation which is to commemorate the grand great event in our country's advancement, and which Congress has munificently aided—the St. Louis Exposition of 1904.

The appropriation made by Congress for this equals $6,478,000. If the means of commemoration is large, so is the subject of the Louisiana purchase, which it aids to commemorate, one of large conception. No less a celebration would be commensurate with such an august event. As it lies in the past, so it will forever figure as a landmark in the progress of this nation. It may be said, too, if the appropriation is large, so is the country large which now makes it. To that purchase it is indebted for a domain whose breadth as large as the original area of our nation to which it was attached. Compared with the Old World powers, it equals in area France, Germany, France, Spain, Portugal, and Italy combined. Within that purchase there have been formed, in whole and in part, twelve States of the Union, and all of the Indian Territory, with part of Oklahoma. It gave and made safe to us the control of one of the greatest rivers of the earth.

It removed the presence of rival foreign nations whose adjacent territory occasioned constant vexation and constant menace. It gave us a standing for the first time among the great powers. Never before, since time began, was so vast an empire acquired by peaceful negotiation, and never before was such a conquest, even when contained by war, held unbroken by the conqueror that secured it. Let it also be remembered that this was the beginning of territorial expansion by this Republic under the Constitution. It was Napoleon, with his keen foresight and knowledge of events, who, when he had concluded the negotiation for the cession, said well, much for us:

This accession of territory strengthens forever the power of the United States, and I have just given to England a maritime rival that will sooner or later humble her pride.

Marbois, Napoleon's negotiator, in commenting on the magnitude of the prize, in after years, said:

Instead of the cession of a barren and inconsiderable territory, a vast portion of America was to enter into the Union. The Louisiana Bill, long and long the most replete of investigation, the lengthening and interested discussion, was about to be [illegible] in the strongest terms of the Senate.

Of the illustrious Jefferson, the master mind, and of his two diplomatic representatives at Paris, it can well be conceded that they are entitled, if not the greatest, one of the greatest of peaceful conquests in the world's history, of which an historian has said that it "ranked in historical importance next to the Declaration of Independence and to the adoption of the Constitution." Livingston, after signing his name to the precious treaty, arose, and shaking hands with Monroe and with Marbois, with marked emotion, said:

We have lived long, but this is the finest work of our lives.

Congress, too, has made in its generous appropriation for the centennial commemoration of such a glorious incident in our country's annals.

The Lewis and Clark exploration, which marks the fourth great stride in the march of American greatness, is worthy of our country's Independence celebration. The cession of which it forms a most important element of title, and which gave us our first outlet to the Pacific, has made any which has preceded it. The discovery by Captain Gray of the Columbia River in 1792 laid our original claim to the Oregon country. This claim, however, was seriously questioned. Spain asserted a right, based upon prior discovery and even upon occupancy.

CLAIMS TO OREGON COUNTRY.

The voyages of the Spanish navigator Maldonado in 1598, of San Juan de Fuca in 1592, with many others, and especially those made Galiano and Valdes as late as 1792, extended as far north as the forty-seventh degree of north latitude. One of our negotiators, Mr. Gallatin, in support of his argument with Great Britain as to our claim admitted Spain a superior right when in his famous argument he said of the Spaniards: "They discovered and explored not only the entire coast of what is now the Oregon territory, but still farther north," and he contended that these were "facts too well established to be controverted at this day." He further referred to what he insisted was the "incontestable claim to the discovery of the mouth of the river (Columbia) by Heceta," and he made a strong point against the British claim when in his reply to the English negotiator he reminded him of his own fatal admission that Heceta, the Spaniard, was the first discoverer of the Columbia as far back as August 15, 1775.

Not alone the Spanish, but the British claims troubled our early statesmen. The British put in evidence the memorable expedition of Sir Alexander MacKenzie, which came overland, starting October 10, 1792, and crossing the Rocky Mountains, following partly down the Fraser River, and thence westward to the Pacific Ocean, reaching there July 22, 1793. Evidence of Captain Cook's voyages was submitted, in which it was shown that he had proceeded as far north as Alaska in 1776. Captain Mears was not forgotten. Then was shown the explorations by sea of Vancouver, in 1790, and in that year also it was claimed that Spain, by the Nootka convention, acknowledged to Great Britain at least a right of joint occupancy.

SETTLEMENT THE BEST TITLE.

We therefore can not rely on Gray's discovery alone for our claim. It was that which followed which forms our strongest claim, for it is not the mere sailing in and out of a river for the first time which constitutes the sole basis of title. That entrance must be followed up by occupancy and possession. As a matter of fact, De Soto was the first discoverer of the Mississippi River, and after his death his party followed down the stream from the point of discovery to its entrance into the Gulf, July 18, 1543; and if this alone were sufficient, Spain and not France could have had a superior claim to the country. While La Salle's discovery was not until 1682, his act was followed promptly by French colonization and exploration, and governmental authority was extended over the country in the name of France.

The discovery of Gray was not followed up by exploration or other act on the part of our countrymen until thirteen years after, when Lewis and Clark entered the country at the headwaters of the Columbia and, like La Salle on the Mississippi, followed the river to its entrance into the ocean. This expedition was further like that of La Salle in so much as it was under governmental authority, and further, that it was followed up a few years later by the occupation of Astor, near the mouth of the river, and other American occupancy and settlement, including the relinquishment of Spain's rights in 1819 and the declaration in Congress in 1820 of our claim to the country.

THE REAL DISCOVERERS.

Had the English or the Spanish, for instance, followed Gray's discovery by occupation and settlement before Lewis and Clark, it would have defeated our claim. Therefore, it is just to say that Lewis and Clark were the greater discoverers of the country, and a better title is based on that than on Gray's mere entrance in the Columbia in 1792. They constructed habitations, lived in the country during the winter of 1805–6, pursued investigations, and procured valuable data as to the native population, the climate, the natural resources, the navigable waterways and, especially, the character of the entrance of the Columbia River into the ocean. The journey of these intrepid explorers and those who accompanied them marked an era in the long history of explorations, and they gave to the world the first authentic and detailed information as to this new world on the Pacific. Even the nations which first explored the shores of this great ocean in the northwest knew for the first time the opportunities they had neglected.

Jefferson, the originator, the patron, and adviser of the expedition, was delighted with the results achieved, although years before commencing with John Ledyard at Paris he was urgent for the same exploration, and even on a more extended scale, and which as a matter of fact was commenced but failed in its first part. His fertile brain at once exerted itself for the utilization of the advantages disclosed in Lewis and Clark's report. He was quick to perceive the future part this nation was to play in the affairs of the world, especially with the Orient, now since we were to extend our territorial limits from ocean to ocean. He also knew that we derived no claim to this country by reason of the Louisiana purchase. He instructed Mr Madison to say to Monroe and Pinckney July 30, 1807, in referring to the treaty of the Louisiana purchase, not to make this claim, as it could "have little other effect than as an offensive intimation to Spain that our claims extend to the Pacific."

Marbois, Napoleon's negotiator, in referring to the Louisiana purchase, said: "The shores of the western ocean were certainly not included in the cession, but the United States are already there."

This statement was written in his History of Louisiana after Lewis and Clark's exploration of the country. McMaster, in his History of the People of the United States, says:

Never at any time did Oregon form part of Louisiana. Marbois denied it. Jefferson denied it. There is not a fragment of evidence in its behalf.

JEFFERSON FAVORED OCCUPANCY.

Jefferson wisely reasoned that we must maintain our claim to the country by occupancy, and to this end he corresponded with

John Jacob Astor shortly after the return of Lewis and Clark, and he promised him that "every reasonable patronage and facility in the power of the Executive will be afforded." He believed that trade would invite settlement and he expressed the hope that "the whole of the Indian trade would pass into the hands of our own citizens."

He was already familiar with the large and rich traffic then carried on from southern California to Bering Sea by the ships from several nations, including our own, in the fur trade. The first actual settlement after Lewis and Clark was that in the spring of 1810, when some traders arrived in the Columbia River on the ship Albatross, Captain Smith, of Boston, and these people cleared and fenced the land on which they located, and were the first to cultivate the soil. Following Jefferson's assurances of patronage, Astor's party reached the Columbia the next year, and making a location near the mouth, named it Astoria. Their ship, the Tonquin, arrived safely around Cape Horn from New York, and though the war of 1812, the capture of Astoria, and the treachery and dissension in the Astor company destroyed that enterprise, yet the American spirit of colonization and exploitation was now awakened, and other ventures by our countrymen quickly followed after the close of the war and the relinquishment of the Astoria post.

JOINT OCCUPATION

The Northwest Fur Company, a British-Canadian association, however occupied the Astoria site, and this power continued until merged into the more famous Hudson Bay Company, in 1823. This powerful monopoly thereafter dominated the country from the Rocky Mountains to the Spanish boundary, and exerted a controlling influence on the trade with the natives until the American settlers had arrived in such numbers as to challenge and arrest this influence and control in the assertion of the superior American claim to all that country. In 1818 the British and Americans entered into a treaty of joint occupancy, whereby it was agreed "that any country that may be claimed by either on the northwest coast of America, westward of the Stony Mountains, * * * should be free and open for the term of ten years to the vessels and subjects of the two powers." This was a practical admission of both parties of the uncertain title of either to the whole country, and was an element of trouble to our country in later years, when we claimed an exclusive right as far north as 54° 40' north latitude.

The British Government, by this clever advantage on the part of its diplomats, gained more than it could have acquired under any principles of international law. It was a Representative in Congress from Virginia, Dr. Floyd, who in 1820–21 first invoked the aid of Congress for the military occupation of the country and for the establishment of civil government. He moved for the appointment of a select committee to investigate and report. He introduced later a bill having the same object in view, and in addition providing for land grants to settlers. This bill passed the House, but met with defeat in the Senate. At this early period Thomas H. Benton, of Missouri, became active in the Senate for the same recognition of our right to the Oregon country. President Monroe in his message to Congress urged the establishment of a military post at the mouth of the Columbia River, and President John Quincy Adams was earnest in his assertion of the American claim.

OUR RIGHTS ASSERTED.

How these early statesmen felt upon this question can best be gleaned from a speech delivered by a Massachusetts Representative, wherein he said:

As we reach the Rocky Mountains we would be unwise did we not pass the narrow space which separates the mountains from the ocean to secure advantages far greater than the existing advantages of all the country between the Mississippi and the mountains. Sir, our interest and destiny lie on the Pacific ocean. The surplus time of our population must and will pass over those mountains, and, in the course of ten years, with two generations, washing our shores, the commercial world of the world is ours and commanding nation can hardly conceive the greatness, the grandeur, and the power that await us.

In 1827 the treaty of joint occupancy was renewed so far that it was continued until either party should give notice to the other of its termination. Each year thereafter our people became better informed as to the value and extent of the country, but for a long interval both parties seemed to be waiting for the other to move, until in January, 1839, Senator Linn, of Missouri, presented to the United States Senate petitions from American residents in the far-off Oregon country asking for protection and also reciting the advantages of the country. In December of that year the same Senator introduced a resolution claiming an indisputable right to the whole region, declaring that it would never be abandoned, and requesting the President to notify the British Government of the termination of the joint occupancy after twelve months' notice, and further providing for 640 acres of land to each inhabitant over 18 years of age after five years' residence and cultivation. Other petitions and other bills were later introduced by this same long-tried and constant friend of the American pioneers. In 1843 he died, but not until in the same year he had the supreme satisfaction of securing the passage of his last bill through the Senate. This was at once understood by the thousands who contemplated going to the Oregon country as an assurance that legislation would soon extend the jurisdiction and laws of the United States over the entire domain in dispute.

EMIGRATION ENCOURAGED.

A widespread feeling throughout the nation expressed itself in favor of our claims, and in the mass meetings and conventions held there were heard the murmurs of the sound soon to become so general among the people of "Fifty-four forty or fight." Large bodies of emigrants, encouraged by the promising outlook, commenced their long journey to the Pacific. Six months were consumed by the weary caravans across the wide and seemingly never-ending plains and over the lofty mountain summits, until near the close of the year the march, beset with so many perils, adventures, and sufferings, ended upon the ebbing tides of the great Pacific. From Congress there came increased assurances that the nation would stand by and protect its distant home seekers. Senator Benton, in speaking to the Linn bill, said:

We must give inducements also, and our inducement must be lands and protection. * * * The Senator from Ohio was treading in the tracks of Jefferson—perhaps without having read his recommendation—when he proposed in his speech of yesterday to plant 50,000 settlers with their 50,000 rifles on the banks of the Oregon.

And he said:

Emigration is the only thing which can save the country from the British, acting through their powerful agent, the Hudson Bay Company.

President Van Buren and President Tyler both urged the policy of placing garrisons along the route for the protection of the emigration. The Wilkes expedition by sea and the Frémont expedition by land were the first effective services by governmental authority since Lewis and Clark.

The official information furnished the American people by these journeys, like that by the Virginia explorers, was specially valued because of its accuracy and detail. In 1843 there assembled at a point in the State of Missouri people from many parts of the Union—all intent upon undertaking the long journey. The assemblage started in the month of May and was the largest movement yet seen. It was in this emigration the first wagons were successfully hauled across the American continent to reach the Columbia River and the settlements, and gave proof to the world that overland emigration, with this degree of comfort, was practicable. The settlements thus far were composed of a mixed population of English, Americans, French Canadians, and half-breed Indians. There were some still living in the country who had seen Captain Gray in his ship, the Columbia, in 1792, and later Lewis and Clark and the builders of American Astoria, and some of the then settlers had been members of these last explorations. The first thought, so natural to the American element, was that of civil government.

THE PIONEER GOVERNMENT.

Repeated petitions to Congress for protection were in vain, and the necessity for some code of laws for the safety of life and property became each day more indispensable. Disappointed and discouraged with the slow action of our Government, these people at last determined to protect themselves and to provide a local government, and to this end, on May 2, 1843, a meeting of the few settlers was held pursuant to previous notice given. Here, then, was to be decided for the first time by popular vote whether civil government by the people and for the people should be secured for the great empire west of the Rocky Mountains. The British Hudson Bay Company had many adherents among the settlers, who had once been in its service and who remained friendly to its jurisdiction and control, and they opposed any authority which might conflict with it. The assemblage was held in an open field not far from the present capital city of the State, at a place known, as Champoeg—an Indian word, signifying "the place of the camp." The vote was on the adoption of the report of a committee for a temporary government of the people and was declared to be lost. This result was unexpected. Amid great excitement a division was demanded.

Upon a division those who favored the report ranged on the right, while those opposed filed to the left. The result of the count showed 52 for the motion and 50 against. A majority of 2 had won the day. A shout of triumph on the part of the Americans greeted the happy announcement, and thus was laid the primitive foundation for civil government from which three States and parts of two others have been formed. A code of laws was prepared, which, being submitted to another assemblage of the settlers on July 4 of the same year, was adopted. At the same time executive officers were elected, and on this day the first popular government for the Oregon country went into effect. In 1845 the organic law was remodeled, and George Abernethy was later on elected the executive of the provisional government.

The example of this little republic on the far-away Pacific, cut off from all the world and without the recognition or support of any other government, was a theme of wide discussion throughout the nation, and it did more to hasten the final declaration against Great Britain for a definite acknowledgment of our rights than any event which had preceded it.

Better than all, this infant confederacy of American pioneers was at once successful, harmonious, and prosperous. They were soon confronted with an Indian war, directly occasioned by the massacre of Doctor Whitman and his missionary associates. The incoming emigration was threatened with annihilation, and even a general attack on the settlements was for a while feared. Troops were raised and a disciplined body of men was immediately put in the field and marched to the enemy's country and there, at a distant point, in a winter campaign, they met the hostiles in several engagements and severely punished them. The murderous Indians, who were at the massacre, were surrendered up, tried by a jury, convicted, and by a court sentenced to death, and executed under the forms of law. This vigorous action of the new government gained for it not only the fear and respect of the Indians, but likewise a necessary regard for the settlers themselves. These stirring scenes among the pioneers only increased the popular feeling at home and accelerated action at Washington City. The Presidential campaign of 1844, in which the Oregon question was paramount, resulted in the election of President Polk. He made known his views officially in his inaugural address, wherein he said:

> It will become my duty to assert and maintain by all constitutional means the right of the United States to that portion of our territory which lies beyond the Rocky Mountains. Our title is clear and unquestionable, and already our population is fast flowing over it, and we are preparing to perfect that title by occupying it with our settlers and children.

TERRITORIAL GOVERNMENT.

At last the long-drawn struggle was ended in the treaty between the two nations by which the forty-ninth degree of north latitude was recognized as our northern boundary June 15, 1846. Territorial government was extended over the country August 14, 1848, and General Joseph Lane, of Indiana, a distinguished general of the Mexican war, became the first Territorial governor. He was six months in reaching his post of duty, and there at Oregon City on March 3, 1849, he unfurled the flag of our Union for the first time over all the domain west of the Rocky Mountains and north of the Spanish possessions, and proclaimed the authority and the protection of the laws of the United States. The little republic of the provisional government, which had so heroically, so ably, and so faithfully served its mission, gracefully and gladly yielded up its authority to the greater power and retired from a further place in history, but not from the grateful memory which will ever regard it as the "Crowning glory of the American pioneer" and as a monument of the fidelity of the true citizen to law and order.

AREA AND RESOURCES.

And what is the area of this peaceful conquest? It is four times larger than all the New England States. Greater than combined New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and Maryland. It exceeds the combined area of the German Empire, Switzerland, Denmark, Belgium, and the Netherlands. And what has been the development and industrial advancement and the productive wealth of this country, which only fifty-five years ago was in its infancy? The gold and silver alone since mined in that country aggregates the enormous sum of $125,979,918. The census of 1900 shows for that year $175,000,000 in manufactures, $84,199,000 in live stock, 41,787,668 bushels of wheat, and 15,496,132 bushels of oats, about 40,000,000 pounds of wool, and over 21,000,000 pounds of hops, with over 3,000,000 tons of hay. In hops Oregon and Washington produce more than half that of the whole nation.

There has been paid in the Treasury from that country a grand total of $34,869,057, proceeds from customs, revenue taxes, and land sales. The total of all classes of property is now approximately $3,000,000,000. Individual bank deposits in the national, foreign, and private banks in the three States of Oregon, Washington, and Idaho show about $120,000,000, the deposits for the national banks alone equaling in last year nearly $60,000,000. It has a foreign commerce equaling $60,000,000. Less than one year ago a ship cleared from Portland, Oreg., with 87,276 barrels of flour and 500 tons of wheat. This beats the record. Three years ago another ship cleared from Puget Sound carrying a single cargo of 360,000 bushels of wheat, while last year Oregon and Washington alone shipped to the world's markets about one-seventh of all the wheat of our entire nation. The trade in lumber ranks high. In a recent year there was shipped from Oregon and Washington 3,500,000,000 feet of merchantable lumber to the leading markets, one contract being for the Philippines, embracing 11,000,000 feet, and it can be said that the standing timber in these two States equals one-fourth that for the entire nation.

WITHOUT LEWIS AND CLARK NO PACIFIC COAST POSSESSIONS.

Nor do our obligations to Lewis and Clark and to the foresight of Thomas Jefferson and to our early statesmen and pioneers end with the Oregon country. Let us remember that without this there would have been no inducement for the acquisition of the Mexican possessions, embracing what is now the great State of California, with Nevada, Utah, and parts of Colorado and Wyoming, with the splendid Territories of New Mexico and Arizona. Here alone is an area of 523,803 square miles, not including the Gadsden purchase of 23,175,000 acres later. Had we not already secured the Oregon country, our nation would never have sanctioned the military operations in the Mexican territory in 1848, following the war, and these possessions would not now be ours. We can proceed still further and say that Alaska would not have been thought of for American purchase, nor would Hawaii, nor the Philippines, and the other island possessions in the Pacific. The guns of Dewey may have sounded in Manila Bay and the Spanish fleet may have been vanquished, but without the Oregon country the Paris treaty would never have included for the United States any of Spain's territory on that ocean.

Thus do we trace the territorial progress of our nation from the exploration of Lewis and Clark, with the wealth, resources, and capabilities based on their discovery, until we have become a world power and the wonder of history.

The future is already upon us, and the last wish of old Tom Benton, that he might live to behold the meeting of the Occident and the Orient at the mouth of the Columbia, has been more than realized. We have, indeed, already entered upon the prophesies of Humboldt and Seward, who both fifty years ago could foresee the Pacific Ocean as the place of battle for the commercial supremacy of the world.

PACIFIC COAST A COMMERCIAL ADVANTAGE.

That battle is now on. One of its elements of advantage is a close intimacy with the consuming or importing nations. This means an acquaintance with the varieties and the qualities and prices of the import products, as well as a close intermingling with the peoples who are chiefly consumers of the products of the selling or exporting nations. To this end an exposition is an object lesson and an introduction, and the trade which immediately follows is worth more to the nation a hundred-fold than it costs. So well attested is this that we know of single exhibitors who paid as high as $100,000 as their contribution to the Philadelphia Exposition, knowing, as they did, that this was an investment well made for their own commercial benefit.

With the United States the necessity is in increased markets for the future. We sell to the world's markets $178,398,453 more than we buy. This balance of trade, which comes to us in the gold of the world, exceeds the annual yield of all the gold and silver mines of the earth. But how long can this continue? Such a tremendous drain upon the earnings of the buying countries of the western nations has compelled them to consult their own safety while it is yet time. Germany is imitating the production of our leading exports to that country so closely as to reduce in a marked degree our sales in some commodities, while England is importing our improved machinery, laying aside and also doing as obsolete its own antiquated and costly machinery, and is even importing the skilled Americans to supervise it. More than this, that nation is now agitated as never before as to the necessity for imposing such duties upon many of our products hitherto free as will lessen our exportation. Other nations are now asking themselves: How much greater and more far-reaching shall this American invasion into our industrial field extend? As a prudent nation we may apply to our trade conditions the maxim: "In time of peace prepare for war."

THE FUTURE MARKET.

With our present productive energy, stimulated by constantly increasing facilities and with cheaper transportation, we shall increase our enormous surplus, and therefore more than ever we need ask the question, "Where shall we secure the market place?" We have expanded our area and our productive capacity, and now we must expand the market place. We must do this before our competitors shall reach that place. We should adopt every proper element conducive to this end. In our search we select Asia and Oceania as the objective points. And why? Those countries produce the articles of which we produce the least, and of which even now we import an amount equaling one-half of our imports from all the world. For all time this import must continue and increase. On the other hand, the products in which those countries produce the least and will perhaps buy the most are those in which we above all nations excel. These products form a large proportion of our surplus. Indeed, of this very surplus these nations already buy of us goods to the extent in value of $100,000,000 annually, while our purchases last year of these imported products amounted to $100,000,000, or nearly one-half our total imports from all nations. In fact, our nation consumes more of such products than any other nation. It will, therefore, be natural, as it will be to their interest, to favor a traffic with such a nation. To extend our sales to such a market the energy and the capital of our countrymen are straining at every point.

THE ORIENT AMERICA'S PRIZE.

Great ocean fleets are already engaged in the oriental trade from and to the Pacific. Cable lines communicate between the two shores and with the intermediate stations on our island possessions. Every year American enterprise and American capital show increased gains in our commerce. While in ten years past our imports from all countries increased 10 per cent, those from Asia and Oceania increased 70 per cent. Our sales increased in the ten years from $40,000,000 to $115,000,000, or an increase of 185 per cent, as against 50 per cent increase of total exports to all nations. The advantage of our position on the Pacific shows is apparent. We own a greater coast line on this ocean than any other country. Upon that shore we face more than one-half the earth's population and one-third the earth's area. We are nearer that area than are our competitors. While our European rivals have three oceans to cross to reach those countries, we have but one. In our commerce with Europe we must cross the Atlantic and then compete with our European rival in his own market, while in the Asiatic market we meet him on equal terms. To reach there we have convenient way stations in the great ocean, such as Hawaii, Wake Island, Guam, and the Philippines. To the American shipper these are of inestimable advantage in case of war, of shipwreck, of fuel or food shortage, of repair, or for communication by the cable lines. These places are like so many stepping-stones across the wide expanse.

LEWIS AND CLARK EXPOSITION AN AID.

The Lewis and Clark Exposition, when held on the same ocean facing the Orient and connected as now with a large fleet of steamers from the Pacific ports, will greatly tend to induce the Asiatics to visit us and to view our resources and productions and to introduce to us not only themselves but their own products at our exposition. I lay down the fundamental proposition that the more you introduce to these people our modern improvements, our western ideas, our tastes, and our methods, with our inducements for commercial exchange, the more they will cultivate such tastes and comforts and conveniences, and demand our products for their market places. It has another effect. It encourages industrial development, and this exercises the ability to purchase. Japan is, perhaps, the best illustration. It has done more to adopt European progress than either of the other oriental countries in the same time. Her ports are open to all the world. Her students are in our universities, in our workshops and agricultural and mechanical colleges, and in our military, naval, and scientific schools.

They are studying our professions and our arts and literature. They return and communicate their newly acquired thoughts and skill and experience to their countrymen. They invite and welcome people of the western nations to visit their country and to enter into commercial relations with them. This change has all been within fifty years past. Before that no foreigner was allowed to enter their country, and no Japanese was allowed to leave. Their foreign commerce and industrial development were at a low ebb. Since then their acquaintance and commingling with the western nations have produced a marvelous improvement in their social and political status, and especially in their commercial progress. They rank now among the nations almost seventh with their mercantile fleet, in which order also their navy ranks among the navies of the world. They produce and sell more and they consume and buy more. They have verified the truth that as a nation increases its producing capacity it increases its consuming capacity and ability. They are now for the first time buying more from us than they sell to us.

TRADE FOLLOWS CLOSER RELATIONS.

While in the ten years past the Chinese increased their imports 50 per cent, the Japanese increased theirs over 200 per cent.

To-day they stand high among commercial nations. They have been the wonder of history, and have won the title of the "Yankees of the East."

The Hawaiian Islands afford another illustration of Western contact. In 1897 we sold them our products, valued at $4,690,075. Under American control our sales increased in 1903 to $10,810,472. So great was the Western stimulus upon their producing capacity and their ability to export that their sales increased from $16,087,799 in 1897 to $26,242,869 in 1903. Their producing capacity is now twenty times greater than it was at the time of our reciprocity treaty with them in 1876.

And so, too, with the Philippine Islands, which in 1897, before American occupancy, only purchased from us $94,597 in surplus products. In 1903 they purchased of the same products over $4,000,000 in value. In 1897 we bought from them only $4,388,740 of their products, while in 1903 their sales to us had increased to $11,372,584.

WESTERN INFLUENCE UPON ASIA.

Perhaps India is the fairest sample of the effects of civilization upon increased wants, improved tastes, with increased imports. It was not until 1858 that the British Government acquired full control in India. Then post-offices, railways, wagon roads, bridges, telegraph lines, and the other advantages of a civilized and commercial age followed. The imports have since grown from about $75,000,000 to $264,000,000 at present, and the exports since then are from $133,000,000 to $403,000,000 at present. Here the population is about one-fifth that of the earth, while the area exceeds one-half that of the United States. And it is further shown to be true in this case that the nation which is closest in contact derives the greatest advantage. The British as a result have 64 per cent of the imports of India, while but 2 per cent are from the United States; and yet 50 per cent of India's foreign purchases are of articles of which we are the greatest producers on earth.

As showing the relative progress between India, which is open to the world's commerce and stimulated by western influence, compare with China, which has so long existed under a policy of exclusion with the world, even now many of her ports remaining closed to foreign commerce, and note that India is a buyer of the world's products to the extent of 80 per cent per capita of her population, while China is a buyer of but 50 per cent per capita. India has a total foreign commerce of $2 per capita, while China has a foreign commerce of but 80 cents per capita. Our increasing commerce with China, however, is one of the hopeful signs. Only recently two additional ports heretofore closed were opened to our commerce. This market should enlist our earnest and liberal attention. The Chinese are by nature among the most industrious of people. While their wage earnings are the lowest on earth, they are yet free with their earnings. If we shall infuse them with our western energy and modern methods they will increase their productive capacity and earnings and they will become generous customers of our country. Should we in time secure their trade of only $4 per capita, that would equal the combined annual sales of this nation now to all the world. Now their trade with us is but 5 cents per capita. Their trade with the British is much larger than with us. Our exports to China are but half those of the British.

EXPOSITIONS STIMULATE COMMERCE.

We sell to the people of the United Kingdom products approximating in value to $13 per capita, and may we not hope in time and with more favorable conditions in China's commerce and industries that our trade there may reach the $4 per capita? This is one of the trade problems. We have extended our territory to within 600 miles of the gates of China, and her treaty ports are not remote from our metropolis in the Orient. As Hongkong in relation to China is a commercial aid to the British, why should Manila not likewise be to our own country? This review merely reminds us of our place in the race for the commercial supremacy of the Pacific and the probability of succeeding by maintaining our high standard as a public-spirited, liberal, and progressive people. As a great and a rich nation we can afford to patronize an exposition such as that which is to celebrate the acquisition of an empire after the few people in that distant region have done so much themselves toward emphasizing an event of such far-reaching benefits for all the United States and which, at the same time, on the shores of that great ocean secured to us by the efforts of the illustrious Jefferson and the heroic men who in sacrifice and suffering explored a continent to possess, is to strengthen an influence which aids, encourages, and develops the commerce and trade of our country at home and with all the world.

To our foothold on these shores we base our start in the battle for the commercial supremacy of the Pacific and perhaps, even later, for the whole world. Without the exploration of Lewis and Clark, which gave us first the coast line on that ocean, other nations would stand to-day where we now do and other flags would float in triumph over all that domain, extending from the mountains to the sea. Is there no meaning in this?

PORTLAND THE APPROPRIATE PLACE FOR CELEBRATION.

It is proper such an event should be celebrated there in the great Columbia River Valley and at the beautiful city of Portland, on the Willamette River. There and near this favored spot were laid many of the scenes in the conquest of the Northwest, unrivaled in history, and there in full view stand out in majestic form the lofty, snow-capped Mount Hood and the companion mounts not far away, all bearing in their historic names the memories of more than a century ago. An easy conveyance soon transports us to the camp of Lewis and Clark, made famous for all time as the winter sojourn of those intrepid men, and where they laid the enduring foundation for American empire on the Pacific. Here and near here came the weary caravans, the forerunners of the peaceful conquest after the close of the long and patient overland journey by horse and by ox team of half a year in travel, and to others the end of the long sea journey around Cape Horn. At Vancouver, on the Columbia River—an hour's travel from Portland—will be seen the locality of the old fort of the Hudson Bay Company, where the benevolent and yet dignified and determined old governor, Doctor McLoughlen, ruled all that country of the old Oregon for nearly a quarter of a century.

Not far away is the memorable site where in the open field the few American pioneers established and proclaimed civil government by the people. It is right and proper, then, that such memories should excite within us emotions of the deepest character. Here, too, such an exposition will be an educator to the West and to the East—and to that farther east in the Orient. Such an exposition will come to the States of the Pacific 2,000 miles nearer than any other great exposition ever before aided by our nation. It will be an event of itself. Distance and expense prevented many of our people in the past from visiting any such an exposition before. If it be asked, "Will the exposition pay?" it can be said that no exposition was ever held in our country that did not pay back to the people a thousand times more than it ever cost. It repays its cost in money, in patriotic inspiration, in stimulus to material development, in industrial competition, in improved methods, modern ideas, and invention. The first of our great national-aided expositions was that at Philadelphia in 1876. Its effect was to change much of the taste of the American people. It revolutionized many industrial operations and created new thoughts in man.

EXPOSITIONS EDUCATE AND IMPROVE.

It put millions of our people, especially in the great labor field, on an easier road. The factories, the fields, the forests, and the mines received a stimulus. It shed a new light upon the bread-winner and the toiler. It gave to the whole nation a strong lift in its tremendous strides in the industrial march. Greater still was the effect of the Chicago Exposition in 1893. And so will the influence be which will permeate from the St. Louis Exposition every remote part of the earth. While it educates and pleases and honors and enriches our own countrymen, it also educates the foreign visitor, the exhibitor, the buyer, and the seller from the world's great market places. A nation's exposition is a nation's object lesson. It is the common meeting place for the interchange of progressive ideas and for the exhibit of the finished product of the brain and hand of man, whereby the nation and the world may improve, that the human burden may be lightened and all mankind bettered thereby. Its influence is not for to-day, nor is it confined to any one locality. It is the mission of a useful thought to have neither a boundary of time nor of place. There never was an exposition that did not leave some part of the world better and wiser than before, and there is no expenditure by a government which inures so bountifully to the people as the exposition which it aids, patronizes, and encourages. Let us then do ourselves honor and the whole country a benefit in a fitting observance by our nation of the centenary anniversary of the fourth greatest occurrence in our country's annals. [Loud applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY] one hour.

Mr. STANLEY. Mr. Chairman, statistics for the year 1902 show that twenty-six States within the United States produced in that year 821,823,903 pounds of tobacco upon a little over 1,000,000 acres of land, this product being distributed in the various States as follows:

Acreage, production, and value of tobacco in the United States in 1902.

State.	Acreage	Yield per acre.	Production.	Price per pound.	Total value.
	Acres.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Cents.
New Hampshire	131	[illegible]	[illegible]	16	$34,584
Vermont	191	1,800	[illegible]	14	48,132
Massachusetts	4,755	1,500	7,[illegible]	15	1,112,670
Connecticut	12,795	1,712	21,[illegible]	16	3,485,682
New York	8,040	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	8	884,040
Pennsylvania	17,200	1,[illegible]	24,[illegible]	6	1,321,078
Maryland	34,081	695	21,[illegible]	6	1,[illegible]
Virginia	162,359	750	122,[illegible]	7	9,[illegible]
North Carolina	219,263	650	142,[illegible]	7	9,976,466
South Carolina	34,912	734	25,[illegible]	7	1,799,779
Georgia	2,050	670	1,[illegible]	19	291,965
Florida	3,070	700	1,[illegible]	30	480,224
Alabama	648	400	[illegible]	28	82,[illegible]
Mississippi	175	500	87,500	18	15,[illegible]
Louisiana	50	375	18,375	20	3,[illegible]
Texas	269	650	174,850	22	38,[illegible]
Arkansas	1,405	640	[illegible]	12	107,904
Tennessee	59,850	650	38,[illegible]	6	2,333,[illegible]
West Virginia	4,676	625	2,[illegible]	7	207,[illegible]
Kentucky	222,194	800	257,[illegible]	6	15,465,312
Ohio	62,899	885	55,[illegible]	7	3,[illegible]
Michigan	382	765	291,[illegible]	8	18,[illegible]
Indiana	7,460	855	6,[illegible]	7	436,967
Illinois	1,311	650	852,[illegible]	7	59,650
Wisconsin	48,422	1,340	65,[illegible]	7	4,541,884
Missouri	2,140	800	1,[illegible]	11	200,060
United States	1,000,734	797.3	821,823,903	7	57,563,510

In the recent hearings before the Committee on Ways and Means it was demonstrated that the maximum amount of tobacco which can be cultivated by any one man is 3 acres. With 3 acres of tobacco to the man there are to-day as actual manual laborers, not counting the owners of land, an army of 350,000 men whose daily bread depends upon their toil in this crop.

Making the usual estimate of five persons to the adult male, we have to-day 1,700,000 men, women, and children whose lives and whose living depend upon the price of this product. To carefully consider and to more carefully act in a matter so vitally affecting an army larger than was ever assembled under any banner since the days of Xerxes is worthy the earnest attention of this the greatest deliberative body on earth.

I would that this Congress were better acquainted with this frugal and industrious master of the small domain of a cabin and 3 acres of land. You have for years and years carefully and justly guarded the homestead of the West. As old as your statutes are the provisions which exempt even from the creditor's demand that same homestead; and why? Because it is to the common interest of all that every man between the oceans, if such a thing be possible, shall be the absolute owner of his own home.

The smallest farmers in the world are the growers of tobacco. There is no other crop that requires the same amount of manual labor to the acre, the same amount of care and attention, or which, under ordinary conditions, will produce the same returns in dollars and cents per acre. Until a short time ago these men made upon this land from fifty to three hundred dollars an acre. It was the ambition of the tobacco tenant to see his little patrimony grow. Receiving one-half of his product for his toil, the other half went to the owner of the land, the man who provided him with teams and tools and barns. It was the hope of this toiler and those he loved to become the sole owner of 10 or 12 acres of land, a pair of mules, and a cabin; and it is the purpose of this Government, it is the humanity and the wisdom of the nation, that your most careful and gentle protection shall be thrown around the honest tiller of the soil, whose brightest hopes are clustered about a cottage and a few acres of land.

This was no idle life led by these humble toilers. From early in February, when he burns his beds, until the January of the next year his entire time was consumed in the cultivation of this little handful of tobacco. Your machinery has made one man capable of cultivating 50 acres in corn, a few men a domain in hay or wheat; but you have not, nor can you, advance one step in the production of tobacco by improvements in the mechanical arts. These plants must be drawn from the bed by hand, put in a hill made by hand; each leaf must be carefully guarded and protected by hand; the worms and insects that destroy it must be removed by hand; by the hand alone it is cut and garnered. That is the reason why one man can only cultivate the small amount of 3 acres.

There is another thing that is worthy of your attention, you who would alleviate the condition of the tobacco growers in twenty-six States of this Union. In the midst of labor broils, in the midst of war between employer and employee, in the midst of lockouts and of strikes, in a hundred years there has been no friction, there has been no strife, no jar between the landlord and his tenant in any of those twenty-six States. Three hundred thousand men for fifty years have tilled the soil in peace; 200,000 men have for half a century lived as neighbors and friends with those for whom they toiled, and 300,000 men have had as their sole ambition and highest desire to add to the column of home lovers and home seekers in this land.

In the hour of his affliction, in the time of want, the landlord has been the friend and the protector of his tenant. On the fertile plains of Kentucky and Tennessee during all this long era the little patches of tobacco on hill and dale have furnished to the tumultuous scenes of conflicting toil one quiet haven. Hope and peace and plenty cast their mingled delights around him. Here in the midst of confusion and lockouts on every hand was labor's very Eden.

It was at this time, Mr. Chairman, that James B. Duke, traveling from the East to his home in Virginia, looked through a car window and, seeing one of the great tanks of the Standard Oil Company, turned to a gentleman beside him in that car and said, pointing to the great tank of the Standard Oil Company, "That is what I am going to do with the tobacco business of America." Fired by the example of Rockefeller, determined to hold in his single hand a power unknown to princes or to kings, he founded what is known as the "American Tobacco Company." The history of that American Tobacco Company, of that trust, for rapid increase, for multiplied and decisive victories, has no peer or parallel in the commercial history of the world.

Let us see. You will remember that a short time ago every schoolboy had a photograph, tinted and painted, taken from packages of cigarettes. It marked the first battle of the American Tobacco Company. At that time Allen & Ginter, the McKinney Tobacco Company, Goodwin & Co., and W. S. Kimball were engaged in the business of manufacturing cigarettes. According to the sworn statement of Mr. Duke, Allen & Ginter, the McKinney Tobacco Company, Goodwin & Co., and W. S. Kimball & Co. were formed into a single gigantic combination, with a capital stock of $44,000,000. Duke's competitors received $20,000,000 in cash for their good will under the sale.

That ended competition in the making of cigarettes in the United States. Then it was this company started upon its course of worse than medieval war. It was not competition. It was uncompromising battle; it was destruction. They chose as their trade-mark a "battle-ax," a weapon which has within it all the cleaving power of the saber and all the crushing weight of the mace, and with that "battle-ax" they determined to ruthlessly destroy all the manufacturers of smoking and of plug tobacco within the confines of the United States.

Liggett & Meirer were first selected for slaughter. At that time this great firm, with a capital of over $15,000,000, with good will worth twice that sum, sold "Star" tobacco throughout the whole United States. The production of that article was simply enormous. It had been made for a generation. It was hoped by Liggett & Meirer that the quality of their goods and the character of their patronage would protect them from the onslaught of the American Tobacco Company. At it they went. Every fence, every wall, every show window, every post and telegraph pole gleamed with the insignia of war of the American Tobacco Company, and you could see the "battle-ax" wherever you might turn. Down went the cost of plug tobacco, down to the cost of production, then absolutely below the value of the simple tobacco in that plug. Down it went.

Within a few months, according to the statement of James B. Duke himself, he was out of pocket on that one deal the enormous sum of $4,[illegible] cash. Liggett & Meirer crumbled and went to the wall, and in less than twelve months on that single deal the American Tobacco Company cleared $12,000,000. Then it was that [illegible] to see the handwriting on the wall. Finzer Brothers, Louisville; Fauntleroy & Durnoffer, Louisville; Harry Weissenger, Lonisville; P. S. Sorg & Co., Middletown, Ohio; Wilson & McCanley, Middletown, Ohio; Lorillard & Co., New Jersey; Buchanan & Lyall, New Jersey; Bagley Tobacco Works, Toledo, Ohio; Daniel Scotten & Co., Detroit; Liggett & Meirer, Drummond & Co., Butler & Co., of St. Louis; and last of all, the Durham Company went to the wall or were swallowed in the insatiate maw of this all-devouring trust. And remember each one of these great companies had a capital stock of between two and fifteen million dollars. Within less than forty-eight months after that war was inaugurated they were the only makers of plug tobacco in the world this side of the Atlantic Ocean.

At that time 15,000,000 pounds of tobacco were every year being made into snuff. The snuff manufacturers of this country had a combined capital of $17,000,000. Having captured the cigar [illegible] and the plug tobacco, having captured the smoking tobacco, they turned their attention to the makers of snuff, and in the first smoke of conflict, within a few months, Ivery, Owen & Co., of Lynchburg; Gail & Ax, Baltimore; Garrett & Co., Philadelphia; Stewart, Ralph & Co., Philadelphia; Held & Co., New Jersey; Lorillard & Co., New Jersey; Bruton & Condy, Nashville, Tenn., and Blackwell & Co. were in the ruins. There were left in the United States only the manufacturers of a single kind of tobacco.

Cheap leaf and lugs were made into a long twist by taking a small hand of tobacco in this way [illustrating], just three or four leaves bound together and roughly formed in the shape of a cigar and packed [illegible] in a cask, the oil being used to keep one of these long strings from sticking to the other. It was the cheapest tobacco known to the markets. This tobacco was sold in Mexico, in Central America, and on the coasts of Africa. It was manufactured by Hernshein Brothers, New Orleans; W. S. Mathews & Sons and Dortch & Co., Louisville, Ky. They, too, met the common fate of all. This trade is entirely gone; the American Company to-day controls it absolutely. The result of this company's operations may well fill conservative men with amazement. This greedy and aspiring organization to-day is absolute master, with the partial exception of the cigar trade, of a business whose retail sales amount to the enormous sum of $500,[illegible] annually.

It deeply concerns men who are not interested in the tobacco business. It is a startling illustration of the wrecking power of such an illegal and law-defying combination. It is high time for this nation to act when in a few months one single company can capture or compel an army of independent dealers, constituting a business whose gross receipts reach the princely sum of $500,000,000 per annum.

Were they satisfied with the conquest of a continent? Were they content? Ah, no! In its inception it was intended to be the conqueror of the world. The next step taken by these people was to capture the markets of the British Government. They moved on the Old World. At that time in England the principal handlers and buyers of tobacco were composed of seventeen different firms. You will remember that in order to ship tobacco into Great Britain you must pay an initial tax of 72 cents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And you had to stem it, too, did you not?

Mr. STANLEY. And you had to stem it. It must be stemmed and a tax of 72 cents must be paid. Now, in order to handle this product, which paid an import duty of 72 cents a pound alone before landing it in your warehouse, required an enormous amount of money. These seventeen purchasers and importers of tobacco had a capital stock of $[illegible], and yet when it was known that James B. Duke & Co., commonly called the "American Tobacco Company," had invaded the territory of Great Britain, that announcement was followed first by a panic and then by rage. They carried it to the extent of a propaganda. Hostility to this American invasion was almost preached in the pulpit.

The common people took it up; no shop, no retailer who was known to handle the American Tobacco Company's products could command the trade of his friends. Their product was boycotted in every city, in every crossroad, and in every hamlet. Undismayed by the tremendous and stubborn opposition of the British Empire, they captured the great firm of Ogden & Co., perhaps the wealthiest of all the importers of tobacco in the world. The Imperial Company, to hold the ground that it had gained, actually offered to divide among the dealers not handling the American Tobacco Company's product the sum of $500,000 in six months.

They agreed to divide among these same dealers one-fifth of the entire profits of a business with a capital stock of $75,000,000. The American company, not to be outdone, offered to dealers handling their goods within the confines of Great Britain the staggering sum of $1,000,000 a year for four successive years and all the profits of the American Tobacco Company in Great Britain for the same period. That brought the Imperial company to their knees, and then they more than surrendered. They betrayed the interests of the people who had trusted them. They were conquered and then prostituted by this company. Under the terms of the agreement between the American company and the Imperial company, the Imperial company, of Great Britain, now itself a trust, was to have absolute control of the markets in Great Britain. The American company was to have absolute control of the markets of the world. Here are the terms of that abject surrender and shameless betrayal of the people's interests:

As a matter of fact, the treaty of peace was as follows: The Imperial pur- [illegible] gave them an interest in its [illegible] as the price of the peace.

Where in all this world will this tobacco thus excluded from the markets of South Africa, North and South America, and the British Isles find a market? We are doubly barred from the ports of the Continent of Europe. In 1903 we exported to Italy [illegible] 942 pounds of American tobacco; to France, 31,[illegible] pounds; to Spain, [illegible] pounds. In 1902, to the United Kingdom, 98,727,[illegible] pounds, and in 1901, to Austria, 273,937 pounds.

Notwithstanding this enormous demand, not one ounce of this tobacco was landed or received in any of the five European countries named, except Great Britain, by any private individual.

In all the countries named, save Great Britain alone, the government has an absolute monopoly of this product, and the importation of tobacco in any form, by any person or company not duly authorized by the government, is positively forbidden, and these restrictions are enforced with tireless and merciless exactness by powerful beneficiaries of this business.

In each of these countries the governments, through their agents, known as "Regie contractors," buy for their respective governments such tobacco as in their opinion will satisfy the market therein. This tobacco is the property of the government to which it is consigned, is manufactured and sold by the duly authorized agents and officials of these various governments, and all the profits derived therefrom go as revenue directly into the coffers of the state.

The enormous profits derived from the government monopolies in this product are clearly illustrated from the following table, giving the number of pounds exported from the United States and the revenues derived therefrom. The import duty of Great Britain amounts practically to a Government monopoly, and for that reason I have placed this in the category of governmental monopolies.

Country.	Exported from the United States.	Revenue from tobacco monopoly.
	Pounds.
Italy, 1903	37,[illegible],942	$40,509,256
France, 1903	31,557,215	82,[illegible],422
Spain, 1903	28,792,600	25,[illegible],800
United Kingdom, 1902	98,727,979	60,[illegible],685
Austria, 1903	273,937	44,655,490
Total	196,888,766	253,965,933

An examination of the foregoing table demonstrates that tobacco under these oppressive trade restrictions pays into the treasuries of five European countries annually the sum of $253,965,933.

The tobacco imported into these countries comes almost entirely from America, in which event we are confronted with this surpassing state of affairs: One hundred and ninety-six million eight hundred and eighty-eight thousand seven hundred and sixty-six pounds of tobacco, purchased at from 3 to 4 cents per pound, under the manipulations of monopolies and import duties in Great Britain and Europe, are made to pay into the treasuries of these governments a revenue of $253,965,933, or an average of $1.29 per pound.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Where does the gentleman take his statistics from?

Mr. STANLEY. The most of them are estimates made by the Census Department, in the Bureau of Labor and Commerce. Now, this last deal with the Imperial company encompassed the absolute dominion of the entire tobacco crop of the world. There are in this country, as you who raise tobacco know, contractors called "Regie contractors," and they are well named, with that naked Latin ablative. They are buyers from the king, commissioned by the crowned heads whom they represent. They are the only living men who can ship one ounce of tobacco into these countries. They have absolute dominion and control of that product.

Now, the American Tobacco Company and the Imperial Tobacco Company called into its councils the official buyers of France, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, and Portugal, and they said to them: "We have it within our power to say that no two men shall ever bid upon the same tobacco plant anywhere in the world." They said to the buyer from Spain, "Where have you been buying tobacco?" "Why, in Robinson County, Tenn." They said to the buyer from Italy, "Where have you been buying your tobacco?" "In Graves County, Ky." "How many acres of tobacco can your Government consume in a year?" "So many hundred acres." "We will give you dominion over that, and no other one of us will go into that territory." And so these men, these imperial agents, these buyers for kings, and still more powerful than the kings and the princes, the Imperial Tobacco and American Tobacco companies, looked out from their lofty height and parceled out your country, sir, and mine, to be henceforth the home alone for vassals and for slaves. [Applause.]

You can go anywhere to-day in Kentucky or Tennessee, and, I presume, into other States, and where you find upon a bundle of tobacco the hated seal of the Kings of Spain or Italy there is no other buyer in the world who will dare to touch that tobacco. In my town, the greatest leaf-tobacco market in the world, these buyers have commissioned one single man, one single soul—think of it!—to buy 100,000,000 pounds of tobacco, if need be. He has his instructions. A load of tobacco comes up and he says, "Send it to that warehouse over yonder." Another load drives up and he says, "Send it over yonder." There are a dozen different depositories for tobacco in my town, each one once owned and controlled by freemen, and to-day one man sorts it all. He gives to Spain her portion, to Italy her portion, to the Imperial company its portion, to the American company its portion, and the saddest thing of all is that there is no portion for the hundred thousand horny-handed wretches who brought this product to its perfect fruition.

The American tobacco is to-day burdened not only in the countries mentioned; there is in all the civilized world practically no open port for this product of the soil—produced in such quantities and at such an infinite cost of time and labor by the hardy men of Kentucky and Tennessee, since from this dark-tobacco district, lying within the boundaries of these two States, comes almost the entire supply of export tobacco.

The following letter from Mr. O. P. Austin, of the Department of Commerce and Labor, vividly and succinctly tells the status of tobacco and its multiplied burdens in the marts of the world.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR, BUREAU OF STATISTICS,
Washington, March 2, 1904.

Hon. A. O. STANLEY,
The Portland, Washington, D. C.

SIR: In further reply to the inquiries which you left with us on the 23d ultimo in regard to tobacco I give you now the following information as to duties imposed by foreign countries on leaf tobacco, monopoly revenues, etc.:

IMPORT DUTY IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES.

Austria-Hungary: Private importation forbidden.

Belgium:
Tobacco, unmanufactured—[a]
Stemmed — francs per 100 kilograms[b] ... 75
Other — do ... 55
(Franc equals $0.193.)

Denmark:
Tobacco—
Leaves and stalks — skillings per pund ... 5
Additional war centimes — do ... 2
(Crown equals 48 skillings or $0.268.)

France:
Tobacco—
Unmanufactured, in leaves or stalks—
For the Regie (monopoly) ... Free
For private account ... Prohibited
Manufactured—
For the Regie ... Free
For private account ... Prohibited.
(Franc equals $0.193.)

Germany:
Tobacco, unmanufactured — marks per 100 kilograms[b] ... 85
Manufactured, stalks and ribs — do ... 85
(Mark equals $0.238.)

Italy:
Tobacco, unmanufactured ... Prohibited

Netherlands:
Unstemmed, in leaves or rolls — florins per 100 kilograms[b] ... 0.70
Stemmed, in leaves or rolls — do ... 1.50
(Florin equals $0.402.)

Portugal:
Tobacco, unmanufactured ... Prohibited.

Russia:
Tobacco, unmanufactured — rubles per pood ... 34.65
(Ruble equals $0.515.)

Spain:
Tobacco, unmanufactured ... Prohibited.

Sweden:
Tobacco, unmanufactured — crown per kilogram[b] ... 1
(Crown equals $0.268.)

Norway:
Tobacco, unmanufactured — crown per kilogram[b] ... 2.25
(Crown equals $0.268.)

Switzerland:
Tobacco, unmanufactured — francs per 100 kilograms[b] ... 25
Waste — do ... 25
Carrots or rolls — do ... 50
(Franc equals $0.193.)

Turkey:
Tobacco ... Prohibited

United Kingdom:
Tobacco, unmanufactured—
Containing 10 per cent moisture — shillings per pound ... 3
Containing more than 10 per cent moisture — do ... 3½

South Africa:
[illegible] — do ... 2½
[illegible] — do ... 2

(Pound equals 20 shillings, or $4.8665.

MONOPOLY REVENUES.

France: Gross receipts from tobacco rates in 1903, 428,164,000 francs. Cost not published.

Italy: Gross receipts from tobacco rates in 1903, 209,892,518 francs. Cost not published.

Spain: Gross receipts from tobacco rates in 1903, 133,730,000 pesetas. Pesetas [illegible]

Portugal: Statistics not published.

Austria-Hungary: [illegible] in [illegible] therefore derived [illegible]

Turkey: Statistics not published.

United Kingdom, 1902: Duties paid on tobacco imported, £12,398,188.

Very respectfully,

O. P. AUSTIN, Chief of Bureau.

That the fall in the price of American export tobacco is due entirely to the causes stated can be more than established; it is capable of demonstration.

Even a casual examination of the condition of the export trade for the last eleven years shows that the contention of the trusts, that the disastrous conditions now prevailing in the tobacco market are due to overproduction, are entirely without foundation.

I have before me a statement of the amount and value of all tobacco shipped since the year 1892 to every country in the world. These cold figures certainly and absolutely refute this favorite sophistry of monopoly that a fair price can not be obtained because there is an overproduction of this article.

[a] Foreign unmanufactured tobacco subject to excise duty of 15 francs per 100 kilograms.
[b] 1 kilogram equals 2.2046 pounds avoirdupois.

Table showing amount of unmanufactured leaf tobacco exported from June 30, 1892, to 1903.

Countries.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.
	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.	Pounds.
Austria-Hungary			16,577		459,837	127,475		478,410	124,746	273,937	248,100
Azores, and Madeira Islands	2,773	3,600	8,877	43,582	14,735	[illegible]	4,626	7,280	1,795	43,486	2,600
Belgium	15,957,831	11,575,133	17,827,392	24,692,773	22,[illegible],548	25,[illegible],110	15,[illegible]	17,[illegible]	17,122,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	16,478,225
Denmark	[illegible]	[illegible]	276,617	242,365	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	473,593
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Germany	47,[illegible]	32,977,995	46,[illegible]	51,841,020	54,[illegible]	64,[illegible]	53,787,518	44,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	48,[illegible]
Gibraltar	[illegible]	637,896	1,082,506	1,380,140	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	1,146,267	[illegible]	[illegible]	390,145	149,435
Italy	30,096,335	27,473,115	24,484,406	24,542,652	32,218,201	27,[illegible]	23,432,941	27,397,587	38,[illegible]	42,[illegible]	29,[illegible]
Malta, Gozo, etc					45,171	[illegible]		10,625	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Netherlands	12,728,481	[illegible]	[illegible]	17,765,213	19,[illegible]	26,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	27,[illegible]	19,[illegible]	[illegible]	17,[illegible]
Portugal	290,610	2,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	5,391	274,271	[illegible]	82,135	1,238,996	288,[illegible]	[illegible]	81,[illegible]
Russia on Baltic and White Seas							980		6,800	2,200	8,720
Russia on Black Sea									7,000
Spain	22,882,976	12,611,810	30,054,113	26,362,432	21,274,165	19,964,595	6,897,068		13,772,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	14,542,362
Sweden and Norway	1,029,755	317,068	393,632	351,498	923,382	1,380,765	677,857	726,354	2,272,022	1,241,[illegible]	1,195,703
Switzerland							200			3,371
Turkey in Europe											9,659
United Kingdom	53,890,373	66,421,354	71,985,879	89,618,817	79,068,780	89,664,950	88,866,280	85,396,232	121,[illegible]	[illegible]	98,727,979
Bermuda			100						[illegible]	2,780	1,915
British Honduras	18,625	42,775	15,385	5,568	17,965	34,220	71,004	58,641	95,990	105,959	116,942
Dominion of Canada:
Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, etc	512,786	389,422	447,788	503,884	392,931	345,910	246,746	363,226	195,796	251,867	153,155
Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, etc	6,344,151	10,174,912	11,625,300	11,320,954	10,074,651	14,504,792	6,501,652	12,147,346	9,373,700	10,037,068	11,412,236
British Columbia	39,172	34,386	33,287	22,069	40,145	67,775	35,041	57,383	112,754	49,178	60,174
Newfoundland and Labrador	339,212	298,[illegible]	388,331	142,814	342,686	216,462	336,206	111,599	273,385	224,067	286,639
Central American States:
Costa Rica	25,118	51,090	56,150	135,200	145,880	82,930	131,625	90,620	138,059	162,180	88,452
Guatemala	35,520	21,200	500	500	15,642	325	6,[illegible]			3,273	1,300
Honduras	4,865	4,100	8,375	7,915	27,289	14,660	4,025	8,915	3,336	14,566	2,281
Nicaragua	16,999	32,719	38,477	35,678	9,462	6,610	4,816	26,000	17,499	39,698	14,[illegible]
[illegible]	2,750	1,000		5,750		252					1,265
Mexico	735,319	845,985	1,[illegible]	1,068,655	2,195,111	1,458,871	1,814,085	1,827,430	2,686,758	1,890,083	2,677,510
Miquelon, Langley, etc	16,720	3,900	400	1,000	1,600	1,500	2,400	1,600	2,439	1,800	1,700
West Indies:
British	908,313	1,399,015	1,278,868	1,303,910	1,433,547	1,310,541	1,424,997	1,142,954	1,233,051	1,115,622	1,182,660
Cuba	2,000						17,389	54,214	400	7,500
Danish	103,588	125,[illegible]	150,259	88,478	122,749	118,[illegible]	188,422	100,246	123,810	147,271	136,983
Dutch	49,434	48,592	54,508	35,985	179,010	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	87,022	39,094
French	653,714	706,310	447,685	476,289	528,460	[illegible]	432,[illegible]	[illegible]	494,495	420,906	376,264
Haiti	807,519	969,089	1,005,507	946,909	797,212	749,991	1,039,397	811,682	962,946	879,076	850,653
Porto Rico	14,100								2,[illegible]
Santo Domingo				2,[illegible]						250	110
Argentina	[illegible]	234,868	59,640	21,839	108,858	67,790	236,146	357,071	261,984	252,947	93,818
Brazil	9,704	82,223	69,237	3,055	55,563	18,302	44,904	41,566	22,[illegible]	44,696	17,449
Chile				1,245	[illegible]		[illegible]	350	[illegible]
Colombia	546,632	346,400	11,365	21,845	22,220	18,[illegible]	56,929	46,789	88,[illegible]	102,583	272,864
Ecuador			2,000		1,200	700
Guiana
British	785,475	598,283	561,[illegible]	587,[illegible]	697,277	485,468	621,139	517,743	483,[illegible]	565,442	591,687
Dutch	114,144	156,[illegible]	137,[illegible]	112,[illegible]	125,829	118,171	146,[illegible]	127,519	116,[illegible]	100,844	123,480
French	57,063	42,067	40,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	42,010	38,070	40,807	56,704	[illegible]	32,240	70,707
Peru									[illegible]
Uruguay	241,716	107,355	158,708	482,546	215,469	[illegible]	135,[illegible]	188,540	116,[illegible]	154,889	15,482
Venezuela	38,653	115,720	120,385	193,389	119,871	[illegible]	[illegible]	138,462	[illegible]	[illegible]	21,891
Chinese Empire		1,500	19,400	9,682	10,980	140,[illegible]	29,[illegible]	486,188	440,[illegible]	[illegible]	270,504
East Indies—British	15,495	4,500	40,849	7,931		[illegible]	9,854	32,318	120,437	17,150	66,488
[illegible]					1,686	12,[illegible]	[illegible]			12,528	58,188
Japan			11,087	73,612	237,041	84,[illegible]	2,751,246	21,198,879	3,104,472	2,249,706	4,618,433
Korea											70,846
Russia, Asiatic							1,645
[illegible]	2,170,531	1,634,399	1,352,676	1,594,715	2,095,360	1,607,831	2,246,187	2,701,384	3,705,657	4,385,441	4,949,696
[illegible]							3,080
Hawaii	11,758	976	917	546			299	1,295			299
Philippine Islands									[illegible]
British Africa	1,017,995	1,046,635	1,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	1,[illegible]	1,594,398	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	3,308,101	4,398,370
Canary Islands	473,081	517,291	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	276,022	[illegible]	[illegible]	389,213	656,729
French Africa	905,648	634,927	316,315	[illegible]	158,176	528,185	785,078	449,[illegible]	595,[illegible]	425,510	407,[illegible]
German Africa									1,940		6,730
[illegible]	26,585	17,750	48,780	3,250	5,246	4,666	5,265	3,985	11,054	15,210	60,360
Portuguese Africa	10,831	942	300	1,000	7,530	37,430	34,980	36,900	111,655	8,040	91,281
Spanish Africa							34,174			34,495
Turkish Africa—Egypt		810
All other Africa						30,220	750	1,500	17,[illegible]		9,990
All other British			2,260	21,055
Total	[illegible],150	248,867,258	268,701,312	293,805,885	287,700,301	305,978,292	252,258,902	272,421,[illegible]	344,604,210	306,900,934	291,369,700

Table showing value of unmanufactured leaf tobacco exported from June 30, 1892, to 1902.

Countries.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.
Austria-Hungary			$1,400		$40,324	$9,860		$54,[illegible]	$12,688	$25,[illegible]	$24,600
Azores and Madeira Islands	$830	$350	1,173	$4,621	613	471	$634	962	[illegible]	3,730	460
Belgium	1,588,266	1,170,999	1,686,144	2,[illegible],390	2,204,176	2,289,[illegible]	1,229,991	1,521,879	1,167,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	1,488,896
Denmark	29,470	10,565	[illegible]	[illegible]	11,669	[illegible]	20,695	26,[illegible]	11,127	1,[illegible]	48,100
France	2,681,731	2,859,549	3,024,693	2,991,098	2,[illegible]	[illegible]	1,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	2,980,118	3,092,419	2,651,984
Germany	3,897,996	4,465,886	3,[illegible]	[illegible]	3,[illegible]	4,[illegible]	4,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	4,971,582	3,[illegible]	4,[illegible]
Gibraltar	42,222	46,695	71,164	118,899	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	44,249	19,621	10,841
Italy	2,370,283	2,220,971	2,067,577	2,283,993	2,874,473	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	3,295,343	3,[illegible]	4,[illegible]	3,118,123
Malta, Gozo, etc					7,335	2,802		962	14,853	29,[illegible]	4,200
Netherlands	801,899	1,063,294	1,028,215	1,031,203	1,107,534	1,506,131	1,047,117	1,512,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	1,4[illegible]	1,[illegible]
Portugal	18,[illegible]	225,043	118,846	500	21,394	5,894	5,660	17,445	2[illegible]	[illegible]	6,965
Russia on Baltic and White Seas							96		888	200	800
Russia on Black Sea									700
Spain	1,185,700	798,800	1,634,074	1,596,018	998,140	[illegible]	[illegible]		661,842	946,167	998,062
Sweden and Norway	200,715	29,325	52,769	32,069	84,653	129,[illegible]	42,[illegible]	80,087	201,695	117,[illegible]	121,003
Switzerland							25			338
Turkey in Europe											1,500
United Kingdom	5,229,835	6,790,147	7,357,237	9,266,515	8,220,451	8,119,246	8,572,299	7,808,850	10,895,441	8,803,283	9,415,927

Table showing value of unmanufactured leaf tobacco exported from June 30, 1892, to 1902—Continued.

Countries.	1892.	1893.	1894.	1895.	1896.	1897.	1898.	1899.	1900.	1901.	1902.
Bermuda			$12						$7,[illegible]	$[illegible]	$[illegible]
British Honduras	$1,397	$1,795	1,865	$510	$1,418	$2,617	$7,[illegible]	$[illegible]	8,400	10,247	12,923
British Possessions:
Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, etc	44,120	39,761	46,867	73,802	50,488	39,538	33,367	27,[illegible]	31,639	34,[illegible]	29,[illegible]
Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba, etc	1,252,594	1,595,[illegible]	1,057,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	1,012,[illegible]	1,478,[illegible]	631,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	9[illegible]	97[illegible]	1,142,[illegible]
British Columbia	7,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Newfoundland and Labrador	31,917	17,[illegible]	43,[illegible]	19,[illegible]	29,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	24,[illegible]	[illegible]	1[illegible],818	[illegible]	19,[illegible]
Central American States:
Costa Rica	2,401	5,[illegible]	6,791	17,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	11,[illegible]	29,[illegible]	14,[illegible]	22,[illegible]	16,[illegible]	14,[illegible]
Guatemala	5,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	2,[illegible]	44	2,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Honduras	[illegible]	[illegible]	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	2,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	402	1,[illegible]	[illegible]
Nicaragua	2,[illegible]	5,[illegible]	[illegible]	3,[illegible]	1,254	[illegible]	[illegible]	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	4,[illegible]	1,[illegible]
Salvador	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Mexico	82,[illegible]	116,[illegible]	114,[illegible]	156,[illegible]	181,[illegible]	169,[illegible]	135,[illegible]	142,[illegible]	182,[illegible]	155,[illegible]	195,[illegible]
Miquelon, Langley, etc	2,[illegible]	470	48	139	132	[illegible]	269	189	[illegible]	[illegible]	252
West Indies:
Bermuda	76,[illegible]	128,422	120,[illegible]	118,156	132,[illegible]	113,[illegible]	131,[illegible]	100,[illegible]	115,[illegible]	105,[illegible]	108,[illegible]
Cuba	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1,[illegible]	7,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Danish	7,[illegible]	[illegible]	13,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	14,[illegible]	[illegible]	9,[illegible]	11,[illegible]	[illegible]
Dutch	7,[illegible]	7,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	25,[illegible]	7,[illegible]	12,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	4,[illegible]
French	56,[illegible]	56,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Haiti	95,[illegible]	120,[illegible]	112,[illegible]	120,[illegible]	82,[illegible]	88,[illegible]	120,[illegible]	85,[illegible]	85,[illegible]	85,[illegible]	75,[illegible]
Porto Rico	1,[illegible]								[illegible]
Spanish Dominions			[illegible]							[illegible]	[illegible]
Argentina	13,[illegible]	11,[illegible]	5,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	6,[illegible]	5,[illegible]	12,[illegible]	24,[illegible]	[illegible]	18,[illegible]	6,[illegible]
Brazil	[illegible]	7,[illegible]	7,[illegible]	[illegible]	6,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	5,[illegible]	[illegible]	3,[illegible]	[illegible]	2,[illegible]
Chile					[illegible]		[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Colombia	65,[illegible]	46,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	8,[illegible]	6,[illegible]	13,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	30,[illegible]
Ecuador			[illegible]		[illegible]	[illegible]
Guiana:
British	54,[illegible]	44,[illegible]	41,[illegible]	45,[illegible]	50,[illegible]	35,[illegible]	47,[illegible]	40,[illegible]	42,[illegible]	[illegible]	51,[illegible]
Dutch	9,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	10,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	11,[illegible]	10,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
French	6,421	4,[illegible]	4,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	[illegible]	4,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	6,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Peru
Uruguay	14,[illegible]	8,[illegible]	17,[illegible]	[illegible]	20,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	15,[illegible]	14,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Venezuela	[illegible]	19,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	17,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Chinese Empire		175	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	6,[illegible]	18,[illegible]	[illegible]	44,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
East Indies: British	1,[illegible]	500	4,[illegible]	1,[illegible]		[illegible]	2,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	18,[illegible]
Hongkong					[illegible]	1,[illegible]	[illegible]			[illegible]	[illegible]
Japan			820	7,340	12,[illegible]	55,[illegible]	197,[illegible]	2,414,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Korea											[illegible]
Russia, Asiatic							[illegible]
British Australasia	314,[illegible]	214,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	322,[illegible]	354,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
German Oceania								[illegible]
Hawaii	2,246	115	185	139			55	2,[illegible]
Philippine Islands									[illegible]
British Africa	[illegible]	100,[illegible]	154,[illegible]	91,[illegible]	[illegible]	148,[illegible]	128,[illegible]	[illegible]	241,[illegible]	234,[illegible]	[illegible]
Canary Islands	[illegible]	47,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	45,[illegible]	61,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
French Africa	84,210	61,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	38,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
German Africa									[illegible]
Liberia	3,[illegible]	1,625	4,119	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Portuguese Africa	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	2,[illegible]	2,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	9,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Spanish Africa							2,[illegible]			2,[illegible]
Turkish Africa—Egypt		81
Another Africa						1,[illegible]	[illegible]	240	1,[illegible]		[illegible]
All other British			175	2,[illegible]
Total	21,346,345	22,[illegible],704	22,[illegible],[illegible]	25,[illegible],790	24,405,245	21,[illegible],[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]

From the foregoing tables it will be readily seen that in the last eleven years there have been exported annually on an average 282,083,169 pounds of tobacco. In 1902 we exported 291,[illegible],711 pounds of tobacco, or only 9,338,602 more than the average for eleven years.

The smallest export in these eleven years—1892—240,716,150 pounds, brought an average of 8.4 cents per pound. We continued to export ever-increasing quantities to these countries for eight successive years, and in 1900 we exported 324,604,240 pounds of tobacco, an increase of nearly 100,000,000 over 1892, and yet this enormous increase could not keep pace with the ever-increasing demand, and in 1900 this unprecedented shipment brought an average of 8.7 cents per pound, an increase of three-tenths of a cent over the first price mentioned eight years prior.

A careful study of the British markets is still more interesting and instructive. In 1892 we shipped to Great Britain [illegible] pounds of tobacco. The demand in this market continued to grow, and in 1900 we shipped to Great Britain alone 121,798,357 pounds of tobacco.

In 1892 this tobacco averaged 9.7 cents per pound; in 1900, 8.9 cents per pound.

Here we have an increase in production of 226 per cent. and a corresponding decline in price of only eight-tenths of a cent per pound.

Nor is there now, in the good year of 1904, any such overproduction as would warrant, even in part, this destruction of prices, formerly commanded by this dark tobacco.

Mr. E. A. Jonas, a gentleman theoretically and personally thoroughly familiar with conditions in Europe and America, in a recent editorial in the Henderson (Ky.) Journal, sums up the situation as follows:

THE TOBACCO SITUATION.

It seems to be the general opinion among tobacco merchants and brokers in Great Britain that the present stagnant and depressed condition of their [illegible] tobacco in this vicinity we have collated the following sales of the probable make of stripe. We do not claim authority for it, and advance it only as tentative and as, at all events, conservative.

Henderson	8,000
Pleasantview	1,200
Madisonville	1,500
Nebo	[illegible]
Hopkinsville	[illegible]
Wickliffe	[illegible]
Sebree	1,500
Princeton and Paducah	1,000
Clarksville and district	2,000
Owensboro	7,000
Sacramentsville	[illegible]
Greenville	[illegible]
Reisorts	[illegible]
Morganfield, Niagara, Dalton, etc	750
Total	26,000

Allow, if you please, five thousand more to cover any places omitted and any increase in the output at the points named. Adjusting them a position of [illegible] of above [illegible] of western stemps and taking into account the [illegible] consumption of not less than 250,000,000 pounds for the coming year, it will be seen that [illegible] stocks will fall off from eight to ten thousand hogsheads by February 1, 1905.

We cannot there is nothing in the statistical position of the market, taken by itself, to [illegible] or even to explain the reluctance of the buyer in Great Britain. We [illegible] that the buyers in these markets would be wary and distrustful of the future, for recent experiences have been bitter enough to excuse any amount of hesitation. But the British buyer is in other cases he has been burned his own way, and he has a stock of stemmed, varied and [illegible] at prices, taking quality into consideration, that we do not remember a precedent for.

And now there is to be need more than talk, of a curtailment of the crop. Dollar wheat is an attractive, a persuasive, advocate. May not the future [illegible] the [illegible]?

Overproduction alone will never account for a decline in price. The world's power to absorb and consume has far outstripped supply in this and all other products of the soil. Were it not for this great and cheering truth, the steam thrasher, the cotton gin, and the self-binder would have been not the prime factors in the farmers' and planters' increased wealth and power, but the certain and ominous harbingers of ruined prices and desolated fields.

This ever-increasing demand of a wealthy, happier, and more civilized people for all the necessaries of life and their willingness to pay therefor a constantly increasing price, the demand and the price far outstripping the corresponding increase in production, is illustrated in almost every product of field and farm.

In 1896 there were grown in the United States 252,284,540 bushels of potatoes, and they were sold at an average of 28.6 cents per bushel. In 1902 we increased this production over 30,000,000 bushels, and yet we see 284,632,787 bushels sell at an average of 47.1 cents per bushel.

In 1895 there were grown in the United States 467,102,947 bushels of wheat, and it brought in the markets of the world an average of 50.9 cents per bushel. In 1902 the production of wheat had increased nearly 200,000,000 of bushels, reaching 670,063,800 bushels, and yet the increase in price outstripped the surprising increase of production, and it sold at 63 cents per bushel.

Corn tells the same story. In 1894, 1,212,770,052 bushels of corn brought on the average 19.4 cents per bushel. In 1902 the production of corn had more than doubled, and in the face of all the fine theories of monopolies and trusts, 2,523,648,312 bushels of corn sold for more than double the price commanded for less than half that amount in 1894; this colossal product of American soil and American energy sold for 40.8 cents per bushel.

There is another infallible test for the real cause of a decline in price. Whenever this result is brought about by overproduction and overproduction alone the effect is the same upon the raw material and the finished product. Whenever this country grows more corn than it can export or consume, the price of corn must of course decline, but with the fall in the price of corn will come a corresponding cheapening of hominy and meal. When there is too much wheat grown here for our own and foreign demand, when all the hungry mouths are fed and grain is still left in this country's garners, the price of wheat must fall, but with it infallibly must topple the price of bran and flour.

Now, the price of tobacco in the natural leaf is cut in half, but the price of plug and smoking tobacco, snuff, and cigars declines never a cent. The plain truth is, the same sinister power which has destroyed the natural leaf in the hands of the tenant and the farmer has, by its untold resources and unrestrained powers, maintained at its original cost to the consumer the finished product in all its forms. Overproduction is a blind force moving in a single direction. It never lowers the price of any staple in one form, and keeps it absolutely fixed in another.

The American Tobacco Company, and the American Tobacco Company alone, has a direct and pecuniary interest in destroying the price of the raw material and maintaining fixed and immovable the cost of the manufactured product. To this one merciless and all-powerful commercial despot these wretched producers of tobacco justly attribute all their woes.

It is heartrending to contemplate the utter want and absolute destitution to which tobacco tenants of Kentucky and Tennessee have been reduced by this ruthless combine, which to-day is the absolute and unquestioned master of the tobacco market of the world.

This is no idle dream, nor flower of rhetoric.

'Tis true, 'tis pity,
And pity 'tis, 'tis true.

I have before me letters from the most substantial and reliable business men in this section, men thoroughly and personally acquainted with this lamentable state of affairs. These men at one time were foremost among those who controlled the export tobacco market of the world, the heads of firms who at one time bought from one to ten million pounds of tobacco a year, and who paid a fair price for it.

Here are letters from Messrs. E. M. Flack and Henry Barrett; from Messrs. R. H. Soaper and James E. Rankin, the heads of the great firms of R. H. Soaper and of John H. Barrett & Co. The last two firms have been in business in the city of Henderson for more than fifty years, and until the good year 1903 they never closed their doors. Now the bats and the owls are building in their magnificent warehouses.

Let us see what they say the laborer is making to-day; who is cultivating tobacco since it is absolutely in the dominion of this merciless trust. I have not the time to read these letters in full, but I will insert their careful observations in the RECORD.

Mr. Rankin, who has been purchasing tobacco for thirty years, estimates that a man can cultivate from 3 to 4 acres. He gives us the price paid last year for this crop, and states the number of days' hard work absolutely necessary to prepare the tobacco for the market, and the price which these various tenants received for their part of the tobacco thus grown does not average $50. Mr. R. H. Soaper, with a ripe experience of over fifty years, the successor of the firm of William Soaper & Co.—these two firms together have been purchasing tobacco in Henderson and elsewhere for three-quarters of a century—thoroughly agrees with Mr. Rankin in his careful calculations.

The wage received by a hundred thousand men, according to the authentic observation of these gentlemen, is about 19 cents a day. Messrs. Henry Barrett and E. M. Flack, both men of thorough knowledge and extended experience, make it a little more; but it is a fact, taking the highest and most favorable estimates, that there are to-day not less than 90,000 men in Kentucky and Tennessee who have received, under the manipulation of this trust, for the product of their toil less than 30 cents a day. Did you ever think that is less than the meager pittance of the peons of Mexico? Talk no longer to me of China's darkness and of Japan emerging from its ignorance!

I hold in my hand estimates made by Levasseur, the greatest authority, perhaps, in the world, and there is not to-day in the jungles of India, nor in the pest-haunted, fever-cursed, poverty-ridden cities of the Orient, in China or Japan, or among the serfs of Russia, any class of wretches in the guise of man who have been reduced to the absolute level of want and ruin that to-day faces the sons of the men who have in armadined every field of battle for my country's freedom from the River Raisin to New Orleans. [Applause on the Democratic side.] In the United States in 1790 a day laborer received 43 cents a day. We thought it was strange that one hundred and twenty years ago a man should be paid only 43 cents a day. I have not the time to read all the figures, but the grower of tobacco at this good hour receives less for his toil than has ever been paid to any day laborer in one hundred and twenty years of my country's history.

What are we asking? I am ashamed to say it! Only a little relief for the wretch who has toiled through heat and cold and rain and shine to bring to its fruition a few leaves of tobacco; poor, helpless victim of James B. Duke, his minions and his dupes, all alike fired by the example of Rockefeller and inspired by the whispers of the devil. They have at last mastered the markets of the world, until to-day there is not a manufacturer of tobacco on earth save one to whom he can sell. There is not a foreign port which he may enter. Nay, more; there lies in the Queen's warehouses in Great Britain 140,000 hogsheads of tobacco, worth $3,000,000, and those companies have agreed that, since it is the property of independent buyers, they will not touch it. It will lie there for a little while longer, to be eaten up by storage charges or confiscated by those successful freebooters and bandits.

This poor man can not sell a leaf of his tobacco anywhere on the green earth, not in Germany, the Netherlands, Portugal, France, Spain, Austria, Italy, or South Africa, except it must go to one purchaser; and now we ask—what? We ask that he take with his own hard hands the stem from a few leaves of tobacco that he himself has grown, and with his own hands wind them into a small twist, and start barefooted down the road to find a purchaser for it.

That is all he asks, and will my country say that he shall not do it? And why? Because the Commissioner of Internal Revenue says it will cost this Government $550,000 a year! Seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars to save from serfdom a million of human beings! Ah, we have the cheapest slave market to-day in the United States that the world has ever seen. Mr. Yerkes, Commissioner of Internal Revenue—and this country has seldom had an abler one—says that it will cost the revenues of this country $750,000 per annum to allow the farmer to twist and sell the naked leaf. Here is a statement of February 25, 1904, before the Ways and Means Committee:

> It is very difficult, Mr. Chairman, for me to say exactly what amount of tax the Government would lose by the enactment of the second section, even after as thorough examination as I could make by correspondence with the collectors throughout the United States, and by examining all the records to which we have access and trying to reach an accurate statement as to the amount of internal revenue collected by the Government through the 6-cents-per pound tax levied on the twisted tobacco, as distinguished from other forms of manufactured tobacco. But I do not believe the Government receives to-day more than $700,000 or $750,000 per year as the result of the tax upon twisted pounds of manufactured tobacco. You have some of these twists here to-day. Mr. Flanagan has one.

This brave tenant and his hard-pressed landlord are still sternly and stubbornly battling with the trust. They stand in the midst of poverty and universal ruin and disaster, still unwilling to surrender to their merciless master. Princely fortunes, old and established firms, names almost omnipotent in the mercantile world, all have been shattered and blown to the winds. The anathema of the law, state and national, this trust successfully defies. In the face of it all these loyal, determined, patriotic farmers of Kentucky and Tennessee, in the face of pitiless penury, still stand by their ruined homes.

There is one relief and only one—the producer of tobacco must find a market not controlled by the trust. That market you can open by the repeal of this tax. The only objection which has been or can be assigned is this pitiful loss of revenue. In the face of the facts and conditions that confront you, this is no objection at all.

Make tobacco in the twist 6 cents cheaper, by the removal of this onerous tax, and it will find a market.

There are 7,000,000 negroes in the South who prefer the natural leaf to tobacco in any other form. That tobacco is given to those negroes in the form of a ration by the owners of southern plantations. Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi the other day told me that it was the custom to allow so many pounds of tobacco with every ration, so much meat and so much bacon, and so much meal and so much tobacco. Now, the southern planter and the plantation darky alike would prefer a handmade, homemade twist. I know that in the sad hours for Kentucky and Tennessee we can look to the sons of the orange and the evergreen for relief. They will not fail us in a response characteristic of that brave and generous land.

It is argued, Mr. Chairman, that if this tax should be taken from tobacco in this form that the sale of the twist would, to a certain extent, supersede the demand for tobacco in other forms, and in that way more materially decrease the revenues of the Government. I hope that this is true, and more than true. "'Tis a consummation devoutly to be wished." Have you ever considered the full meaning of this argument? It is simply this: Men making something like 30 cents for a day of thirteen hours' ceaseless toil, in the cultivation of tobacco, will after this long day is done sit in a corner of a cabin, and laboring bravely on, with the aid of wife and children, form these loose leaves of the plant into a simple twist, and then they will take it to the nearest country store and trade it for coffee or sugar or meat, and the merchant will sell it to the next customer instead of a plug made by James B. Duke & Co., and in that way the Government will lose the chance to take from this "o'er-labour'd wight" the sum of 6 cents.

Is there a man upon either side of this Chamber who will tell me in honesty and candor that he is the friend of the toiler, that he believes in the restriction of the worst trust ever formed, and then have the temerity to claim that this Government should continue this old cruel war tax, eating as it does the bread from the mouths of this overburdened and starving tenantry of the South?

Mr. Chairman, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue makes a report, and at my request he takes this increased demand for the twist under consideration, and even then says that if the tax should be taken from twisted tobacco entirely, not a vestige of it left, my estimate of $2,000,000 is absolutely too liberal; that the revenues would not be lowered even to this extent, and it is only a question of taxation. Here is his report in full on the subject:

> But leaving the question of revenue aside for the present, and I say it is only a guess, and I think Mr. STANLEY showed a great spirit of fairness before the committee in the statement that he read, when he stated that the maximum loss to the Government could not be over $2,000,000. I think he was very conservative in his statement. But I doubt if it would reach that. I do not think the difference of price would be so great as to lead every man to buy the hand-twisted article—the tobacco twisted by the farmer—as I do not think they could make it look as neat and as attractive as the manufactured twist.

If Congress refuses this relief, what is to be done with this tobacco? It is not an article of home consumption. They can not make it into clothing. It will not suffice as food. It must be sold, and it can be sold but for one purpose only.

There is only one purchaser here, and that purchaser refuses to pay one-half of what is necessary to produce it. We must find another purchaser. We propose to stand by our homes; we propose to stand by our cabins; we propose to stay in that land that we so devoutly love, and, with the just aid of Congress, to battle with this mighty combination that has destroyed the most princely fortunes in the United States.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The gentleman remembers, of course, that we are not asking that this privilege of the grower shall apply to machine twist, but simply to hand twist—finger twist, you might say. We do not ask that this privilege shall apply to tobacco prepared by machinery at all; we would simply allow these growers to employ their hands, which would otherwise be idle, in preparing this tobacco——

A MEMBER. Without licorice.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Yes; without licorice or anything else but the pure leaf tobacco.

Mr. STANLEY. All that these farmers ask, as I have said, is with their own hands to take the leaf tobacco and pull out the large stem from the center and then to take a half dozen of these leaves and with their own hands, without anything else, make it into this twist, and then take it and sell it to anybody who will buy it. That is all. At present, as I have said, they are restricted to a single purchaser; there is absolutely no competition.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Why is it necessary for them to have the privilege of putting this tobacco into the twist?

Mr. STANLEY. I am glad that my colleague has asked that question. Take a leaf of tobacco, and it is soft and pliable; it yields to the elements. In a damp day it is limp as a rag; on a dry day the force of the wind will crush it into powder. Taken at just the right stage and made by hand into a twist, this tobacco grows better with age; it can be handled in small quantities, and is not destroyed by such handling as is necessary to market it.

All that the farmer asks is the privilege of putting his product into a marketable shape. What would you think if this Government would say that after you had cut down your cornstalks you could not take the corn from the stalk in order to dispose of it without paying a tax of 6 cents a bushel? What would you think of a law which required that you must sell the wheat with the straw and chaff along with it? All that we ask is the right to put our own product with our own hands in such a shape as to market it.

If this legislation be granted, we shall find a purchaser for this product. Clark & Son, of Nashville, are among the largest tobacco dealers in the country. I have a letter from them this morning which says: "Repeal that 6-cent tax on leaf tobacco—not the twist—just make the leaf free and in a short time we shall be able to sell 10,000 hogsheads of your tobacco." And it will be remembered that the repeal of the restrictions on the leaf will not affect the revenues one cent.

This measure will help us to combat the trusts. The operation of the trusts has destroyed competition and has materially affected the value of the product. It is impossible for us to get to-day tobacco that is not filled with all kinds of foul and unwholesome ingredients. This is the natural effect of no competition. People must buy the products controlled by the trusts or not buy at all.

Let me say that to-day there is but one spot on earth where the tobacco interest is flourishing at all, and that is the State of my distinguished friend who pays me the honor of listening to me now, the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL], and the reason is they have not captured the cigar business yet. In a little while the united cigar store will do the work, and then the now prosperous growers of Sumatra leaf must join the "innumerable caravan"—the ruined victims of this giant trust—only a little while and the head of the small Connecticut farmer shall fall from the block.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman kindly state what additional value will be given to the tobacco by permitting the grower to stem it?

Mr. STANLEY. It can not be marketed unless it is stemmed.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. England buys it stemmed.

Mr. STANLEY. Allow me to say, sir, that there is no reason given why this tobacco should not be sold by the grower of it, except that to remove this tax may cut down the internal revenue. But, sir, I can not believe that a million or two million dollars of internal revenue will be taken into consideration in comparison with the justice of relieving from absolute starvation, upon a wage of less than 20 cents a day, more than a hundred thousand men. I have the facts before me to support what I say.

The negroes of the South prefer this twisted tobacco to tobacco in any other form. If we could stem and twist our own tobacco, we could effectually defy the trusts. We could go into Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, and with the twist tobacco prepared by ourselves could outsell any other form of tobacco in the world, because this is the best and purest form in which tobacco was ever made.

And who would be hurt by this change of the law? Without doing harm anywhere, this measure will be a measure of salvation to my people. I can not believe that in the face of these facts and these figures we are going to continue to refuse this much needed relief.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The white laborers on the farm chew this old long green, do they not?

Mr. STANLEY. Yes; and everbody else who can get it. Why, railroad men come through my town——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. It is not confined to the colored people at all.

Mr. STANLEY. Not at all. Railroad men come through my town, and somebody gives them a twist of this tobacco, which is against the law, and they will not chew any other. I went into the banking office of the Ohio Valley Banking and Trust Company the other day, owned by some of the wealthiest citizens in western Kentucky, and on their counter they had a box of this natural leaf tobacco cut up ready for the pipe.

It is the finest smoking tobacco in the world. The best evidence of it is this: Ninety per cent of all the tobacco that England gets comes right from Tennessee and Kentucky, and England gets 72 cents a pound duty from it, three or four thousand per cent more than the value of the tobacco. Can you import poor silks or woolen goods and pay three or four thousand per cent of their value in importation duties? Certainly not. When you pay such import duties as that, you are bound to buy the very best article you can get; and when England pays 72 cents a pound duty on her tobacco she is going to buy the best tobacco she can find, and smoking tobacco is principally in that form in Great Britain—"pipe tobacco," as they call it in the trade. This tobacco, if freed from this terrible impost duty, will in a few years become the pipe tobacco of the South, and who will be hurt?

As it is, all the profit in this business goes to a few monopolies. The repeal of this tax will, as you see, distribute some of this profit among the people.

The distribution of wealth to-day is a more serious question than the creation of wealth. This country will create wealth. Its energy, its courage, its tireless ambition, the fire and the force in the American laborer that will make him, if need be, turn day into night, make it as impossible to stop the creation of wealth as it would be to stop a pot from boiling with a hot fire under it. The thing is to distribute the wealth.

Another thing that I want to ask the American Congress is this: What is going to become of 120,000 men who last year received from 10 to 30 cents a day in a land which you say is prosperous? This business is destroyed. These men will be thrown entirely out of employment. They must leave their homes. They must become outlaws or they must become homeless tramps and vagabonds on the face of the earth. There is no work for them on the farm. If they do not cultivate tobacco, there will be five times as many men upon these farms as are necessary to cultivate them in wheat or corn or oats or hay.

Did you ever think that we are surrounded by a current moving on like time, all unconsciously to us as long as we are employed, as long as we have some fixed business to hold us? But the minute you are out of employment, the minute money is gone and friends departed, and you start down the road, there is a blind force that will carry you in a certain direction, and that force is carrying the population of the United States with tragic and terrible power toward the great cities. These men thus rendered homeless will be caught in the drift. Into the great teeming havens of the homeless, into the dives, into the cities they and those they love must go unless there is some relief.

The richest farming section—outside perhaps of Kentucky and Tennessee—in the world is Iowa, Indiana, Illinois, and Ohio. That country is fertile of field, seamed by railroads, with rural free deliveries, schools, and churches everywhere; and yet one-half of the towns and villages in those great States are to-day absolutely shrinking in population. The President of the United States wisely and well uses this language in his message:

> It is unhealthy and undesirable for the cities to grow at the expense of the country, and rural free delivery is not only a good thing in itself, but good because it is one of the causes which check this unwholesome tendency toward urban concentration of our population.

There are to-day in the United States 161 cities which have a population of nearly one-half of the entire total population of the United States. Sixty-nine out of these 161 cities in the last twenty years have increased in population from 100 to 5,000 per cent. One-third of the entire population of this country to-day is confined to seven States, and in those seven States 70 per cent of the people live in cities. The increase of urban population has been greater than the entire increase of population for the whole United States. Ah, the harm of the city is not the city itself. The harm of the city is the slum. A man of wealth can live as well and as healthily and as happily in a large city as he can in the country. It is in the alleys, into the darkened rooms, into the overcrowded tenement, where babies dwell like blind fish in caves, and ophthalmia eats out their eyes—it is there that the harm is found.

Into the great city of Chicago, that seething maelstrom of wreck and ruin for the poor and the homeless, the population of all the Middle West is irresistibly drawn. A short time ago a committee of Chicago's most conservative citizens made an investigation of the tenement conditions in that city. I read from that report, as made by Mr. Robert Hunter:

> While the last few years there have been marvelous industrial, commercial and municipal developments, immense fortunes have been redistributed upon the earth; country districts have been depopulated; small landowners have given way to large farms, country towns have commenced to lose their trade, and agriculture, after the millions have thronged into the cities, found itself in a prospected for labor condition.

Here is their report of the conditions existing in those sections of a great city from which I would save a poor, but still honest and healthy people.

Speaking of the effects of overcrowding, Mr. Hunter says:

> Keeping windows up and out of doors night and daylight in warm weather, because [illegible] atmosphere, [illegible] of horse and street manure, filling the air with [illegible] and foul odors of every kind, produces a state of nervous tension, interfering with the [illegible] of [illegible] to a point [illegible] of all and good nature to a single point, thus preventing from the business of handicraft and handiwork in the carriage of the young, and consequently to a coming gloom.

And again:

> Foul dwellings produce a great increase in infant mortality, terrible suffering among the [illegible] children, [illegible] epidemics, increase alcoholism, due to work incommodious, overcrowded homes, cause [illegible] and increase to crime, [illegible] and thus promoting [illegible] and diseases arising from general debility, were some of the evils of overcrowding.

And yet, in the face of this report, which, in its cold, calm recital of the horrors of the slums of Chicago, freezes the heart, we are face to face with this lamentable fact:

> The density of population per acre in the Polish quarter in Chicago is three times that of the most crowded portion of Tokyo, Calcutta, and many other Asiatic cities. On the other hand, Chicago's densest quarters are not as thickly populated as those of New York.

It is no wonder then that to-day in Chicago, in the West, and in New York, in the East, anarchy sits in an unwholesome dive, and whets her knife and lights her torch. There within those cities growls the coming contest when, through the red haze of universal disorder, you shall see the battle to the death between labor and capital, each at the other's throat. [Applause on the Democratic side.] The salvation of this country depends upon the humble tiller of the soil, who loves his little home, whose children are reared beneath a parent's love, among surroundings as pure as God's sunshine and His dew.

I tell you that the man behind the plow in peace is the hero behind the gun in war. [Applause.] You can not afford to drive 100,000 men into the sinks and alleys of the cities; you can not afford to take the farmer's daughter, "Sweet floweret of the rural shade," and see her "By love's simplicity betrayed, and guileless trust, until she, all soiled, is laid low in the dust." You can not afford to take the farmer's stalwart son from the cottage or the cabin. This home-loving, God-fearing, patriotic youth shall not, all ruined and desperate, be hurled into the city's slums to choose between the dive and the cell. It is for the humble homes that I appeal. I appeal not only for the tobacco growers of my country, in the name of a broader humanity I speak, in the name of the welfare of the race, the ruin and expatriation of a hundred thousand farmers is but one of a vast number of similar causes that is driving us headlong toward the shoals of anarchy and ruin. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be addressed to a resolution that I will ask the Clerk to read. The resolution has been reported favorably by the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and I expect it will be up for a vote and final passage very soon.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate the causes of the low prices of beef cattle in the United States since July 1, 1903, and the unusually large margins between the prices of beef cattle and the selling prices of fresh beef, and whether the said conditions have resulted in whole or in part from any contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy, in restraint of commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign countries; also whether the said prices have been controlled in whole or in part by any combination of beef cattle producers or owners, or any combination engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations; and if so, to investigate the organization, system, methods, practices, conduct and management of the business of such corporations, companies, and corporate combinations, and to make early report of his findings according to law.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of the resolution, as is disclosed by the reading, is to direct the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate the causes of the wide disparity between the prices of live beef cattle and dressed beef that have been prevailing now for some months; and if it shall be found upon such investigation that these causes, in whole or in part, are controlled or directed by any combination or conspiracy in restraint of commerce, to give authority to the Department to thereupon investigate thoroughly such corporation or combination, if any, engaged in such business, both as to their capitalization, their profits, and their method of doing business, and to report thereon according to law.

Mr. THAYER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will allow me——

Mr. MARTIN. If it is a brief question.

Mr. THAYER. I am fully in sympathy with the purpose, and I want to ask the gentleman this: Is it not the duty already of the Secretary to attend to it without any direction of this House?

Mr. MARTIN. The law upon the subject is embodied in the act of February, 1903, creating the Department, and it provides that either House of Congress may at its pleasure request or direct special investigations by the Secretary of Commerce and Labor upon important subjects. Undoubtedly the Secretary could proceed along any line of investigation without special instruction, but the law specifically provides for this kind of instruction. It seems to me eminently proper that Congress should put behind the Secretary, in ordering an investigation of an important matter of this kind, the power and prestige of a direct resolution.

I may say on that subject that I make no reflection upon the efficient Secretary of Commerce and Labor. I have every reason to think he is heartily in sympathy with the purpose of this resolution. The Department is new and in its organizing stage. It is very proper in the interests of the country that Congress, or either House of Congress, should anticipate the action and direct the attention of the Secretary to such matters as may seem best to be investigated.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MARTIN. If it is a very brief one, as my time is limited.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why has not the Attorney-General of the United States taken the $500,000 that Congress gave him and gone and looked into this matter, and put these people in the penitentiary already?

Mr. MARTIN. The Attorney-General of the United States has been the most efficient Attorney-General in the prosecution of our antitrust law we have ever had since its passage.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why has he been derelict in his duty in carrying out the antitrust law in this matter?

Mr. MARTIN. The Attorney-General of the United States needs no defense at my hands, nor at the hands of any Member upon the floor of this House. He is every inch a lawyer, and is most vigorous in the prosecution of these matters. He has revitalized the Sherman antitrust law. The speech of Mr. Knox at Pittsburg in 1902, and his two communications to the Houses of Congress during the Fifty-seventh Congress, when action on antitrust legislation was up for consideration, to my mind illuminates this entire subject more ably than it has been presented by any living man. He presents a most excellent illustration of the great truth, that when a citizen of this Republic is called to the service of the people, he brings and lays unstinted upon the altar of his country not only his native ability and character, but also the special skill that he may have acquired through a long professional career.

So in no sense am I reflecting upon the Attorney-General. On the other hand, I am seeking, if I can, to give into his hands an additional weapon, with which he can prosecute his most important labors. This Department of Commerce and Labor is the only Department outside of the Interstate Commerce Commission which can make original investigations upon industrial questions, and has for that purpose the power to subpœna witnesses and force the production of documentary evidence. In that way it may be able not only to enlighten this House and the Congress, but to inform the Administration and the country generally, and place in the hands of the Attorney-General effectual assistance in dealing with this important question.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MARTIN. Yes.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I will make it as brief as I can.

Mr. MARTIN. And make your questions as few as possible, because I can not yield much time.

Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts. I will ask the gentleman if he has made some preliminary investigation himself and as a result of that investigation he believes the price of cattle is so low and the price of dressed beef relatively so high as to require the Secretary of the Department of Commerce and Labor to lay aside other matters upon which he may be now investigating and make this the principal subject for investigation?

Mr. MARTIN. I have investigated the subject and I believe the reasons exist, otherwise I would not be addressing the House upon the subject. Now, I will ask gentlemen to put no further questions at present. A little later, if I find I have the time for that purpose, I will be most happy to yield.

The conditions concerning the live-beef and the fresh-beef market for 1903 have been very unusual. The years 1901, 1902, and 1903 were, perhaps, taking them all in all, the most prosperous years in the history of this country. Up until the beginning of 1903 the producers of beef cattle of all kinds generally shared liberally in the profits which have been enjoyed by every man throughout the length and breadth of the land who labors with his head or his hands in the production of anything of utility or beauty. At the beginning of 1903 there was a sudden drop in the price of beef, affecting at first both live beef cattle and dressed beef. From July 1, 1903, the period to which attention is especially directed by this resolution, the prices of live beef cattle continued to decline, but the prices of dressed beef systematically advanced, and the greatest disparity between the two existing at any time within a period of five years was reached in the month of August last, and in the month of December last the lowest price of beef cattle for more than five years prevailed throughout the markets generally. These unusual conditions I believe can not be accounted for fully or satisfactorily by natural causes.

The laboring man is as able to buy his beef to-day as a year ago or two years ago. There is as much home demand for beef as there ever was. I will say, in passing, the retail price to the consumer of beef is as high as at any time in two or three years, with perhaps a brief period about the time the beef-trust prosecution was initiated. Our export demand was the largest in 1903 ever known in our history. We exported more beef products that year than ever before. It will be difficult, therefore, to account for this decline on natural causes. Every other food product, breadstuffs, wheat, corn, and oats, have all systematically advanced right along over this period in sympathy with the general condition of prosperity in which we are living. Now, the western stockmen and stock feeders and stock growers everywhere—and it reaches all over our country—have been very solicitous to ascertain what is the real reason for this unusual condition. I have investigated far enough to satisfy myself that it is practically the unanimous conclusion of the men engaged in this business that the real seat of the difficulty is to be found in the manner in which the business is conducted in the large stock yards of the country.

In the city of Chicago is the largest meat market in the world. In Kansas City, St. Joseph, Sioux City, South Omaha, and East St. Louis are the remaining chief centers for the beef products of the Mississippi and Missouri valleys. A condition of things has come about so that all of the business in all of those markets is practically in the hands of seven great concerns. A stock grower from the West goes into one of those markets, whichever one he chooses, and practically comes before the same purchasers to be found if he went into any other market. The conclusion of the western stockman and farmer and beef producer of this country is that competition has practically disappeared from the great beef markets of the United States, and when he takes his beef cattle for sale he will encounter simply a certain definite number of bidders and perhaps many less bids than there are buyers.

The western stockman is a man very slow to think that there is anything of unfairness in the dealings of other men with him. He has been slow to come to the conclusion that he has not received a fair deal. The western stockman partakes something of that generous, wide-expanding spirit of the boundless plains and tablelands over which he moves as the undisputed autocrat of all outdoors. He is a good exemplification of the motto "Live and let live," and yet the western stockman is forced to the conclusion, which he announces unhesitatingly, that the great beef markets of the country are being manipulated against him, and that competition is no longer to be found when he takes his cattle to market.

There was a meeting of the National Live Stock Association in Portland, Oreg., last January, and Mr. Springer, president of that association, in his address, recounting the great decline in the beef-cattle trade, said:

> I regret to say that the year last past has witnessed so many failures among honest, hard-working, patient, and unassuming stockmen in this great country. Without apparent reason prices began to drop, and they have gone from bad to worse until we see the cattle kings in the Mississippi and Missouri Valleys [illegible] bankruptcy, their hard-earned bottomless purses, and their estates liquidated. Will better times kindly give us a positive reason for this loss of hundreds of millions of investment values? It must be conceded that the consumption of meat was never so great, or the retail prices lower enough. It must be admitted that we still have a growing foreign demand, rather than a closing of markets against our meat products. It is patent to all that American labor is to-day receiving the highest average wages ever received in this country.
>
> I believe it must be conceded that we have a general prosperity throughout the Union, and only the Wall Street gamblers and the army of speculative outsiders hanging on the fringe of speculation, who credit their joy over brokers that they can buy in the "bear" on the stock market, and lose, as they always do, it is only these gamblers who have necessarily "bit the dust" financially speaking, during the past year. We can account for all their bad breaks and losses. But why the producer of meat, who feeds the world, should be singled out for financial destruction is a close [illegible] another proposition. Here is where the great combine called the "packing kings" comes in.

> We all concede they have made colossal fortunes. We know they have converted [illegible] neighborhood slaughterhouse, with its odors and nuisances, into a sanitary abattoir, where the by-products are all saved and every ounce of the animal is turned into a profit. We producers have paid for the hundreds of millions they represented in the "big four," so called. We commend their success, but we protest against the monopoly they have forced on the people of this whole country—both producers and consumers. We protest against the withdrawal of open competition in each and all of the great markets of this country in the agreement made every day between the buyers of these houses.

That convention passed a unanimous resolution encouraging the establishment of independent packing houses, and members of the association, who came from almost every State in the Union, became large subscribers to a company of this character in the hope of restoring competition. I have a letter from Mr. C. F. Martin, secretary of this independent company, now being formed, which I will publish with my remarks.

Now, I have here some data I have selected, which I expect to insert in the RECORD, being in the main opinions of stockmen as published in numerous newspapers and scattered through the Middle West. They all locate the trouble in the same place. I will read only enough, in hastily passing, to show the trend of public opinion upon this subject.

The West Texas Stockman of September 1, 1903, quotes Mr. A. B. Robertson, one of the leading cattlemen of west Texas, as saying:

> I am firmly convinced that the packing interests of the country are controlling too many [illegible] in their own interest. I do not believe the packers are combinating as one big firm, but through community of interest they [illegible] are enabled to take advantage of live stockmen. When cattle are plentiful they [illegible] at a low price, and when they fall to come up in large numbers a small place is made in prices to stimulate shipments, and when they materialize there invariably follows a sharp decline.

The fuller statement of this gentleman will be published with my remarks.

The Kansas City Journal of August 12, 1903, publishes an article which I will attach, and which I now read in part:

> E. W. Wellington, a cattle raiser of Ellsworth, Kans., said yesterday at the [illegible] that there is no competition in buying cattle. No buyer can be found who will go [illegible] and bid for cattle on their hoofs. The cattle are weighed [illegible] after they have been shipped here, [illegible] and if they are [illegible] to another market they have made it the same price that he was offered at the first market. He has to take the first price. There is no difference in the markets, and the added cost of freight and yardage is a penalty for not taking [illegible] at the first offer.

Here is a clipping sent me from a Chicago paper, from a market report, as late as February 6, 1904, in which the reporter says:

> Packers were openly accused of rigging the cattle market yesterday. Suspicions [illegible] interests was rife. A sharp [illegible] "they [illegible] there are [illegible] W. Sunday [illegible] an advance was [illegible] as 4,000 cattle arrived in the [illegible] past week.
>
> [illegible] should have prompted them to pay a moderate advance [illegible] was and [illegible] market had been [illegible] by an [illegible] Instead of [illegible] they [illegible] Wednesday at a [illegible] Wednesday, by [illegible] they [illegible] W. Sunday they [illegible] $1 [illegible] nummies and some of these days the country will wake up [illegible] satisfaction.

In an interview in the Washington Times of February 1, 1904, Mr. Wilson, Secretary of Agriculture, is reported as saying:

> Either the farmer is not getting enough for his beef or the consumer is paying too much.
>
> [illegible] as they were a few years ago, and there are good reasons why they should not be. But there are no very good reasons why the consumer should pay as much for his beefsteak as he paid a few years ago. [illegible]—what the farmer receives and what the [illegible] the corn crop had been very short, and [illegible] very cheap. Now their prices are about the same, [illegible] on the hoof are perhaps $1.50 per hundred less than they were [illegible]

I have talked with the Secretary of Agriculture upon this subject. I hold in my hand a letter from him dated December 28, 1903, in which he says:

> Just what influence the packers have on the present low price I can not well say. I think they have some influence. Cattle in the market are much cheaper, while meats to the consumer are little, if any, cheaper.

In another letter from Secretary Wilson, which I shall also make a part of my remarks, referring to my resolution, he says:

> I have your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing a copy of your resolution calling upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to look into the prices of beef. It seems to cover the ground completely.

As you all know, in the month of May, 1902, the Attorney-General initiated proceedings against the so-called "beef trust." Seven corporations were made defendants in that proceeding, and some other parties. In the bill of complaint it is charged that these seven corporations control 60 per cent of the meat business of the country; that they agree in advance not to bid against each other when making purchases of live stock, and by this means compel the owners to sell the same at less prices than they would receive if such bidding were competitive; that upon certain days, when the market is dull, they run prices up inordinately in order to induce large shipments, and when the shipments arrive they lower the bids and obtain the stock at sacrifice prices. It is also alleged in this proceeding that they agree as to what prices beef should be sold at as a dressed product, and follow out that agreement. The allegations of this bill of complaint are practically that these seven packing houses have a monopoly, controlling one of the great food products of the people.

Now, these defendants demurred to that bill, which we as lawyers know is, in legal effect, at least, equivalent to a confession of the facts. My own judgment is that if the allegations were not true these great concerns would have hastened, in view of the public sentiment on the subject, to have denied the facts and shown their falsity.

That case is now upon appeal before the Supreme Court of the United States. It shows what were the conditions at that time, I think, as I proceed to develop the facts that I have found, that you will be able to agree with me that the conditions at the present time, so far as the rights of the producer and the consumer are concerned, are even worse than they were at the time the injunction was placed on the so-called "beef trust." The reason for that, in my judgment, is that these great corporations are advised that they are not technically violating the injunction by the methods they are now following.

I think there is every indication that shortly after this injunction was put on they changed their methods, and instead, from that time on, of agreeing, combining, and conspiring in advance, they actually, perhaps without any express understanding, have their representatives meet in the beef marts every day, and when one man makes a bid upon a lot of beef it seems to be tacitly, if not expressly, understood that nobody else bids against him. It is alleged also by men close in touch with this business that in addition to not bidding against one another, as a matter if fact, very often at least, at the close of the day's business they divide up the large purchases between themselves, each sharing in the result of the day's business. Now, it may be that that is or is not a violation of the particular injunction order which has been placed against these concerns. It is, in my opinion, a flagrant violation of the Sherman antitrust law, and if those facts can be shown to exist upon this thorough investigation, I think means can be devised under the law that we now have to enforce the provisions of the law that are now being violated.

I notice that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] very recently introduced a bill in the Senate proposing to remove the forfeiture clause in the Sherman antitrust law. Instead of removing it, it should be intensified, if possible. It may be that we will have to resort to more severe measures in the enforcement of the law than the Attorney-General has yet proceeded upon. [Applause.] There is a most excellent provision in this law now that will authorize the forfeiture of any property that has been taken or obtained in violation of this antitrust legislation, to take it and forfeit it to the Government as we take and forfeit the property of any man or corporation who illicitly and improperly imports goods from another country against the provisions of the law. Instead of repealing that provision, unless conditions change and right themselves along natural lines, the Administration may find it necessary to enforce most vigorously the terms of that most excellent provision.

Going home one year ago I fell in with a man engaged in the live-stock commission business in one of those large markets of the Central West. He is a gentleman with whom I am acquainted. He told me of his experience in taking some very fine cattle to South Omaha. He took first one carload. They gave him a fine price for his carload, and he made it known that he had five or six other carloads, and they induced him to send them to the market, promising they would give a good price. He sent the additional carloads there within two or three days of the time of the selling of the first. They offered him a very inconsiderable inferior price for the same grade of cattle. He put them back in his cars, shipped them to the Chicago market, selling better prices. When he reached the Chicago Union Stock Yards he found that the history of his efforts in South Omaha had preceded him. His cars were numbered and tabulated and he received when he reached the Chicago market precisely the same bid to a dollar and a cent that he received in South Omaha, and only one bid from anybody. His only alternative was to sell the cattle or lose the freight, if conditions did not change. He held on during the day, and toward night some independent buyers for export trade from the State of Indiana came upon the scene and gave him a better price for his goods.

When I commenced this investigation, I wrote him for his further knowledge of the situation. I have a letter from him here and I will publish such portion of the letter as I consider proper, without divulging his name. In that letter he definitely states that he would fear to disclose the facts with which he has become familiar in the past nine years. He says without equivocation that there is a beef trust and that they now are dividing at the close of a day's business the results of the day's purchases. His letter is dated January 20, 1904:

> The combining of packers has been of long standing. It is hard for yourself or a committee to get facts pertaining to their methods.
>
> The yards are controlled by the packers. Should I or anyone else be instrumental in exposing their methods of dividing up their purchases every evening after business hours, you can understand how easy it would be to shove and informer to a poor location in their yards and ruin his business and in many other ways handicap the firm. I have been up against these fellows and on the plank for nine years and say truthfully that I am afraid of them, knowing that they would ruin my business which I have been years building up. [Now, Mr. MARTIN, you will please excuse me for refraining to enlighten you upon anything I might know in relation to the methods of the real beef trust.

One of my constituents living in a neighboring town was here a few days ago. He told me that on his way to Washington he met a western stockman who had very recently taken an entire train load of cattle to the Chicago market. He received but one bid in all that market for his train load. He accepted the bid and sold his cattle, although very unsatisfactorily. His curiosity was aroused, and he remained to watch his cattle, and he stated that at the close of that day's business this train load of cattle was separated into seven parts and divided between seven institutions.

Mr. Chairman, I shall give the House the benefit of such data as I have been able to collect pointing toward where the difficulty is probably located in connection with this business, and I shall publish with my remarks certain tables that I have prepared. The data from which they are compiled has been furnished to me in most of its parts by the Bureau of Statistics of the Department of Commerce and Labor. Some of the data has been compiled by the Agricultural Department. The first table contains a comparison of the prices of beef steers, good to extra quality, in the Chicago market on the 1st day of each month for 1901, 1902, and 1903. A parallel column contains the prevailing prices of good to extra fresh beef in the city of Boston upon the same days for those three years. Boston is taken because statistics are more available for that market and it being the chief beef export market of the United States; but the difference between the prices in Chicago and the prices in Boston, of course, is always simply a matter of freight, so that the tables are stationary and uniform.

In other parallel columns upon the same sheet will be found the actual difference per hundred pounds between beef steers, good to extra, and fresh beef on the same day, and in corresponding columns the percentage of difference.

Table 2 contains the number of beef cattle sold in the Chicago stock yards during the same three years, 1901, 1902, and 1903, by months, and in another table on the same sheet there is shown the gross number of beef cattle sold per year during 1901, 1902, and 1903 in the Chicago market and in the other four markets of the Western states to which I have referred.

On examination of this table it will be found that there is no overproduction in these articles. The increase in the business in 1903 was very slight over the business of 1902; the business, in fact, was not so great as in 1902, and the increase was very slight over 1901. There is no overproduction to account for this condition.

Table 3 contains the number of beef cattle sold in the Chicago markets in the last six months of each year for the fourteen years—1890 to 1903. The object of this table is to show that there was no overproduction in beef cattle.

Our population constantly increases at the rate of about a million and a half per year and there is not more than a corresponding increase in the amount of beef cattle sold in the markets.

Table 4 contains the estimates of the Department of Agriculture as to the number of cattle of all kinds in the United States for the years 1901, 1902, and 1903, the production being practically stationary for those three years.

Table 5 shows in detail the beef exporting business for these same three years by months.

Table 6 is a compilation or summary showing that our export market for 1903 was the largest in those three years and, incidentally, as I have said, the largest in the history of the country.

Table 7 contains for these same months (taking the 1st day of each month) the prices for the past three years of breadstuffs in the markets of the United States—wheat, corn, and oats—and I may say during these three years, while the retail price of beef has remained practically stationary, the price of every other food product has advanced uniformly during the same period.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I will yield ten minutes more of my time to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN. Taking the fore part of 1901 and comparing it with the last six months of 1903, wheat has advanced practically 8 per cent in value in the markets, corn practically 10 per cent, oats 30 per cent. Meat alone—not dressed, but live meat—is the only important commodity of American industry that for some unaccountable reason, without reference to natural causes, has gone down seriously during this period, at the rate of about $15 per steer, considering the cattle business of the entire country.

Now, taking Table 1, some very interesting comparisons can be made. It will be found that, beginning with the 1st of July last, there was a systematic decline in the price of live meat until in December it touched the lowest point in five years. Beginning at the same time there was a rise in the price of dressed beef. And I must say in passing that the prices I quote are wholesale prices.

An investigation along the line of retail prices, in my opinion and in the opinion of the Secretary of Agriculture as expressed in some interviews, will show even a greater disparity. And I will say, too, that my tables are made up simply upon "good to extra" quality of beef. As every stockman or dealer knows, a slump in the beef market strikes most calamitously the lowest grades, while the best grades hold up their prices longer, so that my estimates, I believe frankly, are beneath the real facts in this matter. Still what do these estimates disclose? They show that on the 1st day of August, 1903, the price of "good to extra" beef steers was $5.17½ per hundred, the price of "good to extra" dressed beef $8.37½ a hundred, a difference of $3.20. Now, if you look back in these tables to a date when these concerns were selling the same quality of beef at the same price, you will find that on the 1st day of February, 1902—eighteen months previous—they were selling this same grade of dressed beef to the wholesale trade at $8.37½, the same as on the 1st day of August, 1903. At that time they were paying $6.50 for the same grade of steers. They were getting them for $5.17½ in August, 1903, making an increased profit of $1.32½ per hundred, or $13.25 per steer over the profits in February, 1902.

Two hundred and ninety-three thousand and one beef steers were sold in the Chicago market in the month of August last, and if this same ratio continued during the month it means a difference in profit for that month upon those steers of $3,882,263, or $149,317 per day increased profit for the packers in August, 1903, over February, 1902, when they were selling at practically the same price. Now, you see the magnitude of this business in Chicago alone. You see at a glance that this beef combine could afford to pay a daily fine of $[illegible] a day, or $35,000 for seven concerns, and then have [illegible] each day's business over $100,000 in increased profit by reason of manipulating the prices of that market, if they were manipulating it.

Comparing the average price of steers and fresh beef for the first six months of 1901 with the last six months of 1903, it will be seen from the table that there was an average increased profit for the latter period over the former of 64½ cents per hundred, or $3.45 per steer on "good to extra" grade. There were sold in Chicago the last six months of 1903 1,840,584 steers. Upon this basis the increased profits on these steers over the prices prevailing the first six months of 1901 would be about $12,000,000, or $2,000,000 per month and $76,000 per day.

The beef-trust prosecution was begun in May, 1902. Conditions had become intolerable at that time. And yet a comparison of the average prices for the first six months of 1902 with the last six months of 1903 will show that the latter period was even worse from the standpoint of the beef purchaser. The average margin of profit to the packing concerns was [illegible] per hundred greater for the six months ending December 31, 1903, on 1,840,584 steers. This would represent $61,111 per month, or $37,312 per day, greater profits on the business in Chicago alone than prevailed under the severe conditions that brought on the official prosecution in 1902.

Eight million two hundred and eighteen thousand seven hundred and sixty-two cattle were marketed in Chicago, Kansas City, Omaha, St. Louis, and St. Joseph in 1903. Considering our general prosperity and comparing with other years, my estimate is that they sold for $1 per hundred or $10 per steer less than they would have brought had there been free, open, and actual competition. This would make the loss to stock growers and feeders on the year's business in these markets alone $82,187,620. Men interested with the packers place the loss much higher, as will be seen by reference to articles and letters which will be published with my remarks.

The stock growers of the country are entitled to know that the cards will not be stacked against them. They ask nothing more. They will take care of themselves in an open field.

Now, gentlemen, I do not profess to be in any sense an anti-trust crank. I am not among those who go into political hysteria every time a trust is named. On the other hand, my experience of a professional kind has brought me into close touch with some of the men who are managing the great industries of this country.

They are among our most loyal, loyal, and patriotic citizens. There are good trusts and bad trusts. From the standpoint of the people, I think that the bad trust is the rule and the good trust the exception. There are good corporations and bad corporations. From the same standpoint, considering all corporations, great and small, I believe that the good corporation is the rule and the bad corporation the exception.

I realize that we are living in an industrial age. I realize that in the development of the great industries of the country it is but natural that we should have laid aside some of the old, simpler methods of commerce and of manufacture and should have taken on new and other implements. We have ceased to be afraid of anything in this country simply because it is large. In union there is strength.

The big corporation has sprung into being as inevitably and as logically as the steam engine or the cotton gin, and I believe that we are just as likely to abandon the use of corporate power and corporate methods in carrying on the machinery of industry in this country as we are to return to the old days of the stage coach and the pony express and throw aside the magnificent Pullman train and the great arteries of commerce that now carry on business across the country. The big corporation has come to stay. The practical proposition in some instances has been, and in some instances still is, will it allow the rest of us to stay also? I believe that there is practically a monopoly at the present time in one of the great food products of the country. I think it very pertinently requires the attention of this new Department and its Secretary—the Department that we have created for that special purpose.

It is not an unsolvable problem by any means. A disclosure of the facts half wins the battle. These great concerns, corporate in their character—these great companies are the creations of the law, either State or Federal. They can be controlled by law; they can be limited, if necessary, in the amount of their capital; they can be allowed to engage in interstate commerce only upon certain prescribed conditions; and every great company and every great industry now engages in interstate commerce in this day of quick rail transportation. No great concern, no great industry, now is confined in its operations to one State.

I think, gentlemen, that these questions will be solved. I believe that this question requires immediate, honest attention. The great trust, when it is doing a legitimate business, is entitled to the same consideration and protection that any individual in carrying on his business is entitled to. President Roosevelt put the question exactly right when he said in one of his speeches:

> We are not the friend of the rich man nor of the poor man as such; we are the friend of the honest man, be he rich or poor.

A race of men, Mr. Chairman, who have given the world its best and practically only example and model of constitutional government; a race of men who held together this great Union during the dismembering strife of the civil war; a race of men who have witnessed the assassination of three of their beloved Presidents without political disorder will not be baffled in their efforts to understand and regulate industrial agencies of their own creation.

I indict the beef combine, so called, of serious offenses against the order and rights of civilized society. No monarchical governments for any great length of time has permitted a monopoly to exist in any of the great staple food products of the country. This indictment is made, it is true, upon ex parte examination. Under our system of jurisprudence practically all indictments are drawn upon ex parte evidence. Fortunately, we have a means now recently created whereby an examination may be made under full power into this whole subject, and if the result of that examination shall be to disclose that our modern vernacular is entirely in error when it says so often that we have a beef combine or a beef trust, I shall be the first to acknowledge that disclosure and make it as public as I now make this indictment: but if, as I verily believe, an investigation will show the truth of this charge, then an outraged public sentiment will demand that no longer shall there be a monopoly in any of the great food staples of the people. [Applause.] And they will require such administrative and legislative measures as may be necessary to determine once and forever that no longer shall the food of the people be used as a means of feeding the insatiable greed of a few men who, while engaged in a legitimate business, are engaged in it in an illegitimate way. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield forty-five minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

Mr. MARTIN. Before my colleague proceeds, I would like the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does the gentleman desire further time? I will give the gentleman ten minutes further if he desires it.

Mr. MARTIN. If the gentleman has time, I should simply give a little data. I think, however, I have covered the subject fairly well, and I will introduce my data in the RECORD. I am obliged to the gentleman for offering me further time, but I know gentlemen on this side of the House, Mr. Chairman, are greatly driven for time, and if the gentleman has ten minutes over there that he could give I know a friend over here on this side of the House who would be glad to get it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. If the gentleman would use it along the same line of remarks as the gentleman has followed in the last thirty minutes I would be glad to yield the time.

Mr. MARTIN. I feel sure that he would use it as well or better.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman that he will get every vote on this side of the House in support of the proposition that he has been advocating.

APPENDIX.

THE NEW PACKING-HOUSE PROPOSITION.

[West Texas Stockman, September 1, 1903.]

A. B. Robertson, of this city, one of the leading cattlemen of west Texas, says: "I am firmly convinced that the packing interests of the country are controlling the markets strictly in their own interest. Range cows are selling to-day at from $4 to $5 less per head than they did one year ago, and northwestern steers are bringing from $12 to $20 less than one year ago. There has been no falling off in the consumption of beef and no reduction in the price to the consumer. Now, when there is a fluctuation of from $1 to $2 per head per week in the value of the same class of cattle, it appears to the man of average understanding that something is materially wrong. These fluctuations are occurring, and to my mind the packers are thoroughly masters of the situation.

"I do not believe the packers are operating as one big firm, but through a community of interest procedure they are enabled to take every advantage of the situation. When cattle are plentiful they agree not to be competitors when they fail to show up in large numbers a small force is made of purpose to stimulate shipments, and when they materialize there invariably follows a sharp decline.

"All this comes out of the producer and at a time when it is costing more to produce cattle than ever before.

"There is but one way to remedy the situation, and that is through the building of independent packing houses. Not packing houses formed under cooperative auspices, but backed by ample capital to meet any and all forms of competition. I think there is no relief in sight so long as we have few markets and these markets dominated by a few men."

THEY MAKE PRICES.

[Kansas City Journal, August 12, 1903.]

Alleged elimination of competition in the stock market is given as the cause of the unprecedented hard times among cattlemen which are predicted to occur before January 1 next. It is claimed by prominent cattlemen in the city yesterday that there has been for several years a combination among the packing houses of the United States to absolutely control the price of stock and keep it at a figure low enough to allow a considerable excess when compared with the cost of the packing house product to the consumer.

"Four men in Chicago every afternoon set the price of live stock and packing house products for the next day, and that price is law to the drivers in all of the stock yards of the country," said a cattle raiser from the Southwest yesterday. "This is known to all stock raisers in the country. It is a condition which they have been compelled to face and have been unable to prevent. The present year is worse if possible than any former year, for the combination of packing houses is stronger. There is no reasonable relation between the price of steers and the dressed meat. The difference is the profit of the packing houses, which is partly shared by the cattle raisers."

F. W. Washington, a cattle raiser of Ellsworth, Kans., said yesterday at the Baltimore hotel that there is no prosperity in sight for the cattle raiser.

"There is no competition in buying cattle," said he. "No buyer can be found who will go beyond the price set by any other buyer. The cattle are never lost sight of after they have once been broken upon and if they are shipped to another market they bring much the same price that was offered in the first market. We have to take the first price. There is no difference in the markets, and the added cost of freight and yardage is a penalty for not accepting the first offer."

A meeting of cattlemen is being arranged for in Kansas City for this week, at which action can be formed. The object of the assembling is to devise some way of separating accounts with the packing houses.

A BANKER'S VIEW.

From a banker at Weber City, Kans.:

"I have been watching with interest the movement on the part of the National Live Stock Association to organize an independent packing concern and believe that it is the only way to meet the combine and to force them to pay top prices and to be satisfied with reasonable profits.

"Under the present conditions the stockman is working a great hardship on a great many occasions. In fact, I believe that there is no one but who is subject to a considerable loss annually. The shipper is forced to pay exorbitant prices for transportation. The feeder is forced to handle the stock without any margin of profit and sometimes at a loss. Thus putting the whole business of feeding under the ban, and a great many feeders are dropping out of the business, saying that there is nothing in it. This in turn is working a hardship on the banks, as it cuts off their cattle loans, which has always been a profitable source of income.

STOCKMEN ARE SAID TO BE OUT MILLIONS.

[Inter Ocean, Chicago, October 16, 1903.]

Farmers and stockmen of the West have been robbed of millions of dollars within the past six weeks by the meat trust, and consumers in the East and South have been robbed of still further millions by the same hands, is the charge made by stockmen. The big packers have, they say, by their agreements to refrain from bidding against each other for stock, beaten prices down almost to the breaking point and at the same time have raised the prices on dressed meats to hungry consumers until they are far above what they were one year ago, when the meat trust is supposed to have been formed. For beef steers the packers are paying 25 per cent less than last year, while the consumers are paying for meat the same as when cattle were selling for $8.50 to $9 per hundred.

Conservative live-stock men claim the stockmen of Nebraska, Iowa, and other Western states have lost more than $100,000,000 during the past three months by the manipulation of the markets by the packers, and that hundreds of stockmen are on the verge of ruin.

"The packers' trust is overreaching itself in attempting to arbitrarily regulate the price of live stock," said one commission man to-day. "They do such things successfully for a while, but there is a general agreement that they will pay for it in the long run. When the live-stock men start their new packing company they will receive enthusiastic support from western stock raisers."

THE INDEPENDENT PACKING COMPANY,
Denver, Colo., January 27, 1904.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: Your favor of December 31, addressed to Hon. John W. Springer, has just been referred to me.

There is no question in my mind, as well as a majority of those who are interested in growing and feeding live stock, that the prices of cattle, sheep, and swine at the various markets of this country are manipulated by a combination of packers. No. 1 beef, for instance, a little over eighteen months ago was selling on the Chicago market for from eight and one-half to nine dollars per hundred pounds, and hogs and sheep in proportion. The decline during this time has amounted to more than $20 for every beef animal, wiping a thousand pounds, and sheep and swine have suffered accordingly, but the general consumer of this product has benefited the same.

There is no reasonable excuse for such a decline in the price of live stock when the home and foreign demand is as greatly in [illegible] and the laboring people are at work and are prosperous. We have [illegible] satisfaction that a representative of each of the leading packers [illegible] Chicago every afternoon and fix the price of the live stock and dressed [illegible] for the next day, and I believe that evidence of this character can be produced should it be required. One thing is certain, there is no [illegible] competition at the market between these people, each and every one of them offering for live stock the same figures and selling to the public at the same figure.

The loss to the stock growers of the country by this manipulation during the past eighteen months amounts to more than $[illegible].

I herewith enclose you copy of a prospectus which has been issued by the Independent Packing Company, an organization endeavoring to establish independent packing plants in order to overcome this evil.

Very truly yours,

C. F. MARTIN, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., December 28, 1903.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. MARTIN: Your favor regarding the price of beef received some time ago, when beef was at its highest. I think I gave an interview to somebody in which I said that the previous short corn crop was the cause of it, and also the great demand for meats on workingmen, who were all busy getting good wages and using meats freely. [illegible] corn in the corn belt was so low and prices so low that hogs were [illegible] speculators, and a great many of them [illegible] thus [illegible] with the lower prices of meats at the present time. I [illegible] finence the packers have on the market, but I do not [illegible] they have some influence. Cattle in the market are much cheaper, while meats to the consumer are higher [illegible].

I do not know whom you could find a copy of that statement I made, but I have [illegible] the substance of it.

Very respectfully,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1904.

Hon. EBEN W. MARTIN,
House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of the 5th instant, inclosing a copy of your resolution calling upon the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to look into the prices of beef. It seems to come [illegible] the proper department.

Let me call your attention to the [illegible] 1896 there has [illegible] time to (great [illegible] beef [illegible] 12 [illegible] have reason to [illegible] the [illegible] year [illegible] Average [illegible] Chicago [illegible] Average [illegible] that [illegible] with fewer price [illegible].

Very truly yours,

JAMES WILSON, Secretary.

TABLE 1.—Mean prices of good to extra steers in Chicago and good to extra fresh beef from best western steers in Boston, and the difference between these prices on the 1st of each month for the years 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Year and month.	Mean price per 100 pounds on the 1st of each month.		Difference in price per 100 pounds of steers and fresh beef.
	Good to extra steers in Chicago.	Good to extra fresh beef (western sides) in Boston.	Actual.	Per cent.
1901.
January	$5.70	$7.62½	$1.92½	33.8
February	5.65	7.75	2.10	37.2
March	5.55	7.50	1.95	35.1
April	5.65	7.62½	1.97½	35
May	5.60	8.00	2.40	42.9
June	5.75	7.75	2.00	34.8
Average for 6 months	5.65	7.71	2.06	36.4
July	6.07½	8.00	1.92½	31.7
August	5.77½	8.00	2.22½	38.5
September	5.77½	8.00	2.22½	38.5
October	5.92½	8.37½	2.45	41.4
November	6.25	8.25	2.00	32
December	6.25	8.25	2.00	32
Average for 6 months	6.01	8.15	2.14	35.7

TABLE 1.—Mean prices of good to extra steers in Chicago, etc.—Continued.

Year and month	Mean price per 100 pounds on the 1st of each month.		Difference in price per 100 pounds of steers and fresh beef.
	Good to extra steers in Chicago.	Good to extra fresh beef (western sides) in Boston.	Actual.	Per cent.
1902.
January	$8.12½	$8.25	$2.12½	34.7
February	6.50	8.37½	1.87½	28.8
March	6.50	8.75	2.25	34.6
April	6.62½	9.12½	2.50	37.7
May	6.82½	9.50	2.67½	39.2
June	7.10	10.00	2.90	40.8
Average for 6 months	6.61	9.00	2.38	33.9
July	7.65	10.50	2.85	37.3
August	7.75½	10.25	2.50½	32.7
September	7.65	10.50	2.85	37.3
October	7.67½	9.50	1.82½	23.8
November	7.37½	9.50	2.12½	28.8
December	6.40	8.50	2.10	32.8
Average for 6 months	7.41	9.79	2.38	32.1
1903.
January	5.62½	7.50	1.87½	33.3
February	5.37½	7.00	1.62½	30.2
March	5.62½	6.75	1.62½	29.2
April	5.85	6.50	1.15	21.5
May	5.37½	7.50	2.12½	39.5
June	5.62½	7.25	2.02½	38.8
Average for 6 months	5.56	7.08	1.72	32
July	5.20	7.75	2.55	49
August	5.17½	8.37½	3.20	61.8
September	5.37½	8.00	2.62½	48.8
October	5.42½	8.12½	2.70	49.8
November	5.50	7.75	2.25	40.9
December	5.05	7.75	2.70	53.5
Average for 6 months	5.29½	7.96	2.70	51.5

TABLE 2.—Number of cattle marketed in Chicago, 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Month.	1901.	1902.	1903.
January	252,445	275,189	275,388
February	205,467	291,329	256,493
March	207,411	[illegible]	[illegible]
April	202,458	[illegible]	[illegible]
May	233,257	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	285,464	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	282,784	[illegible]	[illegible]
August	275,784	[illegible]	[illegible]
September	228,016	[illegible]	[illegible]
October	207,806	[illegible]	[illegible]
November	227,367	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	249,368	[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	3,037,306	2,941,567	3,432,479

No Government [illegible] showing the number, weight, and value of cattle [illegible] Chicago [illegible] St. Louis, and St. Joseph: Cattle—1901. [illegible]

TABLE 3.—Number of cattle [illegible] during the last six months of each year, 1901 to 1903.

July to December—	Number.	July to December—	Number.
1901	1,878,722	1897	1,380,514
1902	[illegible]	1898	[illegible]
1903	1,970,362	1899	[illegible]
1900	[illegible]	1900	[illegible]
1901	[illegible]	1901	[illegible]
1902	1,498,220	1902	[illegible]
1903	1,865,560	1903	1,840,584

TABLE 4.—Number and value of milch cows and cattle in the United States in 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Year.	Milch cows.		Other cattle.		Total.
	Number.	Value.	Number.	Value.	Number.	Value.
1901	16,933,637	$505,[illegible]	47,[illegible]	$906,644,093	63,932,870	$1,411,737,080
1902	[illegible]	[illegible]	48,[illegible]	839,126,073	61,434,599	1,327,266,307
1903	17,105,227	516,711,914	44,[illegible]	824,054,902	61,704,433	1,340,766,816

The above table gives the number and value of live stock of the United States for the years 1901, 1902, and 1903, as reported by the Department of Agriculture.

TABLE 5.—Exports of cattle and beef products from the United States, by months, during the calendar years 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Article and month.	1901.		1902.		1903.
	Quantity.	Value.	Quantity.	Value.	Quantity.	Value.
CATTLE.	Number.	Dollars.	Number.	Dollars.	Number.	Dollars.
January	38,046	[illegible]	26,320	2,[illegible],147	[illegible]	2,784,[illegible]
February	33,790	[illegible]	23,520	1,[illegible],664	28,849	2,[illegible]
March	33,462	[illegible]	25,764	2,[illegible],[illegible]	25,741	2,[illegible]
April	[illegible]	[illegible]	23,295	1,748,565	36,370	2,941,[illegible]
May	44,[illegible]	[illegible]	30,815	2,119,149	51,555	3,411,[illegible]
June	41,[illegible]	[illegible]	33,179	2,114,929	61,560	3,[illegible]
July	42,[illegible]	[illegible]	28,467	1,919,397	[illegible]	2,[illegible]
August	46,[illegible]	[illegible]	32,[illegible]	[illegible]	50,184	2,[illegible]
September	35,[illegible]	[illegible]	24,[illegible]	[illegible]	41,[illegible]	[illegible]
October	41,[illegible]	[illegible]	38,[illegible]	[illegible]	48,904	[illegible]
November	34,[illegible]	[illegible]	35,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	31,254	2,693,314	23,492	2,082,320	43,389	3,843,193
Total for year	[illegible]	[illegible]	327,118	[illegible]	519,963	37,725,432
BEEF, CANNED.
January	3,795,723	370,220	6,518,887	638,561	6,823,476	688,221
February	3,048,844	[illegible]	4,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
March	6,083,704	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
April	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
May	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
August	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
September	8,778,211	876,648	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
October	6,495,244	657,104	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
November	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Total for year	53,239,582	5,233,782	81,362,681	8,384,454	66,738,931	6,850,079
BEEF, FRESH.
January	[illegible]	[illegible]	21,971,692	[illegible]	23,251,552	2,153,979
February	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	21,247,595	2,150,[illegible]
March	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
April	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
May	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
August	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
September	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
October	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
November	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	25,173,511	2,386,516	21,204,370	2,053,718	24,531,363	2,210,484
Total for year	354,421,731	32,294,877	242,015,093	25,028,304	269,401,843	26,692,858
BEEF, SALTED OR PICKLED.
January	3,599,020	212,245	3,201,893	200,461	[illegible]	[illegible]
February	3,623,262	[illegible]	2,926,046	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
March	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
April	4,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
May	5,522,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	3,527,070	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	3,554,274	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
August	3,579,949	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
September	5,132,565	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
October	5,584,249	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
November	4,773,094	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	3,821,539	247,397	3,547,892	296,314	3,694,149	216,893
Total for year	51,761,505	3,035,625	45,975,920	3,261,163	57,063,892	3,661,741
BEEF, OTHER CURED.
January	114,617	11,496	947	107	30,074	3,311
February	76,832	7,912	3,313	336	88,000	8,580
March	45,810	4,552	3,713	474	14,000	1,469
April	28,246	2,983	50,108	3,425	11	11
May	87,410	6,639	331,187	36,167	[illegible]	[illegible]
June	8,763	953	18,684	1,799	[illegible]	[illegible]
July	47,492	2,819	245,592	28,050	[illegible]	[illegible]
August	166,942	15,071	4,962	1,183	48	12
September	[illegible]	6,245	412,706	27,327	33,264	1,975
October	300	40	42,720	4,577	86,495	[illegible]
November	51,355	4,341	17,927	2,124	15,445	[illegible]
December	24,538	2,020	86,178	8,649	23,357	1,925
Total for year	767,007	64,467	1,223,067	114,238	460,654	41,436
TALLOW.
January	6,400,001	326,700	2,320,167	131,045	2,842,527	169,888
February	5,720,827	290,562	2,543,573	156,671	2,472,640	[illegible]
March	5,914,030	[illegible]	2,271,712	138,418	2,681,[illegible]	[illegible]
April	4,310,211	229,462	2,167,968	132,556	2,481,649	148,[illegible]
May	3,894,355	195,658	1,421,618	88,476	3,187,923	181,273
June	3,309,766	168,220	1,387,241	90,971	4,349,631	232,522
July	3,912,356	201,774	922,547	59,978	7,205,157	392,099

TABLE 5.—Exports of cattle and beef products, etc.—Continued.

Article and month.	1901.		1902.		1903.
	Quantity.	Value.	Quantity.	Value.	Quantity.	Value.
TALLOW—Cont'd	Number.	Dollars.	Number.	Dollars.	Number.	Dollars.
August	3,942,167	[illegible]	712,695	[illegible]	8,843,794	[illegible]
September	4,[illegible]	[illegible]	2,219,[illegible]	[illegible]	8,168,576	498,581
October	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
November	3,999,101	[illegible]	1,634,096	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
December	4,626,861	254,429	2,927,184	173,870	6,546,923	431,5[illegible]
Total for year	51,848,309	2,698,692	21,365,465	1,330,604	63,537,840	3,320,080

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE AND LABOR,
BUREAU OF STATISTICS, January 20, 1904.
O. P. AUSTIN, Chief of Bureau.

TABLE 6.—Summary of exports of cattle and beef products, 1901, 1902, and 1903.

	1901.	1902.	1903.
Cattle ..... pounds..	454,590,000	327,118,000	519,963,000
Beef, canned ..... do....	53,239,582	81,362,681	66,738,931
Beef, fresh ..... do....	354,421,731	242,[illegible]	269,401,843
Beef, salted, etc ..... do....	51,761,505	45,975,920	57,063,892
Beef, other cured ..... do....	767,007	1,[illegible]	460,654
Tallow ..... do....	51,848,309	21,365,465	63,537,840
Total for year	968,628,134	719,020,506	1,003,090,160

TABLE 7.—Wholesale monthly prices of breadstuffs in United States markets for years 1901, 1902, and 1903.

Year and month.	Wheat No. 2, red winter.	Corn No. 2, mixed.	Oats No. 2.
1901.	Cents.	Cents.	Cents.
January	80	45½	28½
February	79	48	30½
March	78½	48½	31
April	77	48	30½
May	82	56	32
June	81	49	33½
Average for 6 months	80	49½	30½
July	79	49	32½
August	74	59½	35
September	75	62½	38½
October	79	62½	43½
November	83	66	44½
December	84½	69	51½
Average for 6 months	77	61	40½
1902.
January	87½	71	52
February	89	69	49
March	86	68	50½
April	83½	65	47
May	85	70	47½
June	87½	68	49½
Average for 6 months	85	69½	48½
July	[illegible]	69	[illegible]
August	[illegible]	64	[illegible]
September	[illegible]	68	54½
October	74	66	53
November	[illegible]	65	54
December	78	64	55
Average for 6 months	78½	66	42½
1903.
January	79½	59	38½
February	88	61½	43½
March	85½	58	43½
April	80	59	42
May	81½	59½	38
June	83½	58	40
Average for 6 months	82	58	41
July	83	57	40½
August	89½	58	38
September	87½	59½	38½
October	84	59	41
November	86	59½	41½
December	90	51	40½
Average for 6 months	86	54½	40½

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, before proceeding to what I have risen to talk about, I want briefly to refer and supplement what the gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, has said with reference to the Indian appropriation bill which is now before this committee for consideration. As was stated by the chairman, the bill has had most careful consideration by the committee, every line and every item of the bill having been considered, discussed, criticised, and scrutinized by the whole committee in a series of meetings covering some two or three weeks of time.

I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, as was stated by the chairman, that the estimates made by the Department have not been exceeded except in an amount of something like $178,000, and the items making this increase were all recommended by the Department by either a special communication or by the head of the Bureau appearing before the committee in person. I also want to say that the increases over the estimates are all upon the item of schools. We have reduced the estimates of the Department in other respects, but have increased a little the appropriations for schools. I want particularly to emphasize this fact and to call attention to the item in the bill, which is $3,871,798, that we appropriate for the support of the schools and the education of the Indians. Out of $7,910,000 appropriated by the bill considerably more than half of it is for education.

I want also to say, Mr. Chairman, as was stated by the gentleman from Texas yesterday, that since the early history of this country we have appropriated and expended for the civilization, support, and education of the Indians of this country over $[illegible].

Now, Mr. Chairman, what has prompted me to ask the indulgence of this committee at this particular time grows out of the fact that recently this House passed a bill—namely, H. R. 10418—in relation to the ratification and amendment of a treaty made with the Rosebud Indians in South Dakota, by which the Indians propose to cede to the Government 416,000 acres of land. The bill I refer to was introduced in the House by myself. It was considered by the Committee on Indian Affairs, as the Indian appropriation bill was considered, in several hearings, and was considered and discussed fully in the committee, because the bill proposes what will become, if it should be enacted into law, a new policy in relation to dealing with the Indians in regard to extinguishing their title for lands which they may have in their reservations for which they have no use. In other words, if this bill should finally become a law, it will be the pioneer bill for subsequent legislation that may be proposed to be enacted upon this subject. Mr. Chairman, the bill was unanimously reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was taken up and considered in this House without any opposition appearing from any source, and passed, and went to the Senate.

In the Outlook of February 27, 1904, there appeared an article entitled "Indian lands and fair play."

It will be found on page 498 of the Outlook of Saturday, February 27, 1904. I am not going to take the time, Mr. Chairman, to read that article. It was written by a gentleman of considerable reputation, one George Kennan. I believe it is well known that something like fifteen or twenty years ago Mr. Kennan went to Russia, and that he contributed a number of articles upon the subject of "The Russian exile system" that attracted some attention, and at that time made him a reputation. I also understand, Mr. Chairman, that the nature of his writings were such that he was invited out of Russia and has not been permitted to return to that country.

Since his return to the United States he has occasionally been heard from in articles condemning some policy proposed by some Department of the Government, and has invariably taken a position "agin the Government," and I understand he has very recently departed for Japan. And if he makes good his reputation of being against the country within which he may be at the time, I presume his writings will be against Japan, and we can therefore expect his early return to the United States by the invitation of the aforesaid country, as he was invited to leave Russia.

In any event, as I have said, Mr. Kennan is a man of some reputation and may have been thoroughly posted upon the subjects that he has heretofore written upon, but any man familiar with H. R. 10418 and the Indian question generally will say that when he wrote the article published in the Outlook, to which I have alluded, he demonstrated that he did not know anything about the subject. Upon that article the Outlook comments editorially as follows:

> Mr. Kennan, on another page, gives a dispassionate and striking account of the latest attempt to rob the Indian wards of the nation. While this robbery was undoubtedly instigated and planned in South Dakota, unfortunately Congress and the Interior Department were made—although perhaps unconsciously—accomplices before the fact. We may, perhaps, venture to say that this piece of grist was taken to the Indians was brought to the attention of the President through the instrumentality of the Outlook, and owing to his personal and practical interest the mean bargain he overrode has been blocked.
>
> It is fair, on the one hand, to say that the Secretary of the Interior and the Indian Commissioner are personally not in the slightest degree responsible in the proposed corrupt sale, but that they yielded to the political pressure which is so constantly brought to bear upon administrative officials by members of the legislative branch of the Government.

Then it goes on (I will quote the whole article) and says further:

> But, on the other hand, it should be remembered that the Indian Commissioner and the Secretary of the Interior are put in their respective places to do exactly the things they have not done in this case, to advise with regard to legislation as experts and to block, in so far as they can, legislation which is either dishonorable or unwise, as it may touch their own Departments, etc.

I do not wish to comment specially upon that last paragraph which I have read, but I do not think any man in the House of Representatives will say that it is the duty or the province of any Department to interfere with legislation that Congress might conclude to enact into law simply because the Department might deem it unwise and undesirable.

The editorial concludes as follows:

> For them to plead, as in this case they have done, that they approved bills regarding the Indians which they knew not to be just or fair, but passed them otherwise because of political pressure, or, perhaps, because they had neither time nor courage to resist a strong pressure which the Lower House seemingly manufactured to resist.

Following that article the Indian Rights Association, an organization, I believe, existing in Philadelphia, a self-appointed guardian of the rights of the Indian, supported, I presume, largely by the contributions of people who may be actuated by sentimental motives, and who are ready to believe that the poor Indian is being robbed and is being outraged by the white man and by the General Government, issued a pamphlet signed by Mr. Phillip C. Garrett, president of the Indian Rights Association, dated Philadelphia, February 29, 1904, and headed "An Old Century of Dishonor." I will only read the first paragraph of this pamphlet, which is as follows:

> We appeal for justice on behalf of the Rosebud Indians of South Dakota, and plead that the Government in taking their land shall obtain their consent in the minority of instances and insist that the proceeds thereof, and similarly large proportions of the tribal funds, be so applied that the Indian owners receive reasonable compensation therefor.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word in relation to the inconsistency of this Indian Rights Association. I find that about ten years ago a treaty was entered into between the Lower Brulé Indians and the Rosebud Indians in South Dakota by which the Lower Brulé Indians, or a portion of them, were to move onto the Rosebud Reservation. It was mutually agreed to by the Indians. It was desired and recommended by the Department, but the Indian Rights Association protested and opposed that proposition on the ground that the land south of the White River, this particular reservation, was practically valueless, and yet in the pamphlet which they have now sent to many if not all the Members of the House they are trying to make it appear that this land is very valuable and that we are taking it away from the Indians at a price that is unreasonable and unfair.

Mr. Chairman, just a word as to why it was necessary to adopt a new policy in relation to extinguishing Indian title or right of occupancy in reservation lands that were no longer of any use to the Indians, and why it was that the treaty, made with the Rosebud Indians for the cession of that portion of their reservation located in Gregory County, was not ratified by Congress.

Heretofore it has been the policy to enter into a treaty with Indians, the Government stipulating and agreeing to pay in cash a certain price for the land to the Indians. Upon the ratification of a treaty, the land became a part of the public domain, and was disposed of under the homestead laws. It appeared that in many of these treaties a price was paid that was in excess of what the land was actually worth and that instead of the Indians being mistreated it was the Government that was being imposed upon, and it was declared by those in this House who are its leaders that hereafter no Indian reservations could be opened to settlement except on some plan by which the Government would not be obligated to pay the Indian for his right therein, but upon some terms by which the land would be disposed of by the Government and the proceeds paid to the Indians. In the language of our present distinguished Speaker, on the floor of the House in the Fifty-sixth Congress, "When white man pays his money, Indian gets his money."

It was for the reasons stated that it became necessary to adopt the plan proposed in House bill No. 10418, and what the Indian Rights Association is condemning, and those other theorists and doctrinaires, is that it is not good faith, first, because it violates treaty stipulations heretofore made with the Indians and, secondly, the terms of the bill are not fair and just to the Indians.

In 1901 a treaty was made with the Rosebud Indians, signed by more than three-fourths of the male adult Indians, by which they agreed to cede to the United States 416,000 acres of their reservation, being that portion located in Gregory County. The United States in that treaty stipulated to pay to the Indians $2.50 an acre for that land, or, in round numbers, $1,040,000. When that treaty came to the House of Representatives it met with the opposition which I have just stated, and it became necessary, as I say, to find some other way by which the Indians might dispose of this land and the lands could become a part of the public domain and be occupied, settled upon, cultivated, and improved and made useful instead of being there of no value to the Indians, without being used by anybody, unless it might be by some trespasser.

In the meantime the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case of Lone Wolf against Hitchcock, decided January 2, 1903, a case where the conditions, so far as the provisions of former treaties were concerned, were exactly identical. Article 12 of the treaty with the Kiowa and Comanche Indians was exactly the same as article 13 with the Sioux Indians in the treaty of 1868 and reaffirmed in the treaty of 1889, by which it was expressly provided that the Indians in the future would not be deprived of any of their reservation lands except upon the consent and approval of three-quarters of the male adults. The Supreme Court, in the case just referred to, Congress having amended a treaty which had been made with the Indians, took up that question and decided it squarely, and perhaps for the first time in the history of the Government. They decided that Congress had the absolute right to legislate with the Indians and for the Indians as the Congress in its judgment might see fit, regardless of any treaty conditions or treaty stipulations that might have been entered into in the past, and that decision became the law and furnished an opportunity to enact legislation such as the present Rosebud bill does provide, if it is enacted, and we therefore proceeded to amend that treaty so that as the lands were disposed of the money should go into the Treasury and be paid out to the Indians.

The Indian Rights Association, that are protesting against this bill, and others who have been heard from in opposition to the same, do not say or make any reference to the fact that a treaty embodying substantially the provisions of this bill as it is at present, except that the price of the land was 50 cents an acre lower, was submitted to the Rosebud Indians last August, and the price of $2.50 an acre was raised to $2.75, and that forty-eight more than a majority of the Indians consented and approved of the same. So that, while not three-quarters, as the treaty provides, forty-eight more than a majority have said that they desired and were willing to sell the land upon the terms proposed, and for $2.75 per acre, when, as the price they will receive if the bill becomes a law is $3.00 per acre.

Now, just a word as to the policy which we have been pursuing so far as the Indian is concerned and his right to the reservations which they occupy. In the Fifty-sixth Congress there was a gentleman, a Member of the House, distinguished for long years of service, a man who was in every respect a statesman, a man who had made a study of the subject of the public domain, and on February 4, 1901, he spoke the words which I will now read. I want to say that I indorse what the gentleman said, and that I believe the law absolutely sustains the theory which he there sets forth. I quote, Mr. Chairman, from Hon. Galusha A. Grow, of Pennsylvania, as follows:

> Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, I agree in part with the remarks made by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX]. But he and most others in Congress seem to have been long in journeying over ground it is understood. The general impression has been that passed Congress when that the white man could [illegible] Indian. [illegible] Indian may wander [illegible] in such land is set on it the sweat of his brow or purchased the soil he tilled. What right can these Indians or Indians any where have to hold or insist on retaining [illegible] land which a man can get at a cost of a fishing rod stone not give a man a title to [illegible] and?
>
> I am [illegible] of the Government that treats the Indian as the owner in fee of the unoccupied land. How can he have more than a possessory right [illegible] by treating the occupant treaties other of which have been made? The Indian has no more right than a white man to the soil he occupies [illegible] he claims over it. If he has the agents of the Hudson Bay Company are just as much entitled to the good will and defense of the Government. They travel [illegible] and all the implements of a hunter's life [illegible] Indian, or at the same time.
>
> What should the Government make a treaty with the Indian to buy his land to which he has only a possessory title? The old theory was to induce an arrangement for him to leave his present occupancy and to find a new home. It is well enough that the Government secured the best arrangement [illegible] for him. He leaves his old hunting ground and Redmanchor. All the other tribes necessary to the glory of his attendants. And [illegible] that a better world. The sons born in New England to-day go West and find new homes in the West, and stop only when they reach the [illegible] of the nearby seas.
>
> The Government's policy results a wrong on the Treasury of the United States in treating the Indian as owning in fee land which neither he nor the white man have ever [illegible] they never labor to [illegible]. The Government [illegible] to the old policy practical for many years, paying the Indian a bounty for leaving them and proceeding to occupy if he had a [illegible] for occupancy. No matter what the Government pays for the [illegible] it will be paid [illegible] corn by and and [illegible] to [illegible] as previously. The same a surplus created by the Authority for the support of the race, but than individual property only by the application of more labor in [illegible] on.

Mr. Chairman, the theory that the Indian absolutely owns these reservations is nothing but a theory, and the sooner that Congress appreciates that this is the case the better legislation, in my judgment, we can have for the best interests of the Indians. I find that in the earlier treaties made with the Indians it was never thought that the Indian owned the lands. He had a sort of aboriginal tenure, as it is termed—a mere right of occupancy.

I have been told that in Pennsylvania, the State where the Indian Rights Association makes its home, there was a treaty entered into with the Indians in the early history of that State by which the Indians ceded and surrendered quite a portion of lands which they occupied at a cost of $5.28, which was expended for beads.

Mr. Chairman, we are told that the Indians own the land. I shall incorporate in my speech and put in the Record several decisions from the Supreme Court of the United States, which demonstrate beyond any question that all the Indian has in the reservation is a mere right of occupancy, and that he has no title and that the fee is in the Government, and that it and it alone can extinguish the Indian right of occupancy, upon such terms as Congress may determine.

At this point I desire to refer to the case of Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, heretofore cited. A portion of said opinion I will append to my remarks and print in the Record.

I want to call particular attention to the language used in this opinion in relation to the Indian right of occupancy being as sacred as the right of the fee in the United States, and, referring to several decisions where it was so decided, the court says that in none of these cases was there a controversy between Indians and the Government, but the questions considered had relation to the nature of the property rights of the Indian, concerning the character and extent of such rights as respected States or individuals.

I desire to refer to the case of Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheaton, 543, decided in 1823; United States v. Cook, 19 Wallace, 591, decided in 1874; Beecher v. Northern Pacific Railroad, 119 U. S., 55; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S., 71, and I will append and print in the RECORD extracts from these decisions and also an extract from an opinion by Attorney-General Cushing, 8 Opinions Attorney-General, 95, and I would emphasize one portion of this opinion and commend it to some of the Eastern States that are so inclined to be sentimental on the Indian question and fearful that he will not be justly treated. The language is as follows:

> Finally, we of the older States of the Union, who had expelled or killed off most of our Indians or induced them to emigrate from the land of their birth, had now come to be extremely sensitive to the moral wrongs of the same nature that, as policy in relation to our own, we forced upon the younger States of the South were now suffering their karma.

From the opinions cited, and especially the decision in the Lone Wolf case, it is demonstrated clearly that the Indian is a ward of the nation and that the United States can legislate as the legislative branch may see fit for his best interests.

It has been claimed that this particular bill is a robbery, and it has been so denominated. I want to say that it provides that the land shall be opened to settlement and what is disposed of during the first six months shall be paid for at the rate of $3 per acre. In this tract there are 452 tracts that have already been selected by the Indians as allotments. In other words, the Indians have gone first and selected as their allotment one fifth of the tract; and the Indians are just like white men—they have naturally selected the best tracts. That would be natural. So that the 416,000 acres represents only four-fifths of the tract that is located in Gregory County, a part of this reservation. On the north the land is joined by what was formerly a part of the great Sioux Reservation, where land is now open to settlement and can be had, if a man will go there and live on it for five years, for nothing; and if he commutes, he pays only 50 cents an acre. It is joined on the south by land in Nebraska, assessed at between $1 and $1.25 an acre. On the west is an Indian reservation extending 170 miles.

And I maintain that when we put the price at $3 an acre, as we do in that bill, it is not only fair and just, but it is more, Mr. Chairman, in my judgment, than the land is worth to-day, and certainly as much as a man ought to be required to pay who goes there and is required to comply with the provisions of the homestead law, as he will have to do under the terms of this bill. I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that the only question to be determined is the price of the land, and that that is one entirely of judgment, and that in looking out for the interests of the Indians if we see to it that he gets as much as he would have gotten under the treaty which he made we certainly can not be accused of having mistreated him. It is the judgment of every man familiar with the conditions in the t section of the country that the land will be disposed of under the provisions and terms of this bill, and that it will be paid for, and that the Indians will receive as much money as they would have received under the original treaty, and probably more.

Mr. Chairman, I want to refer to a treaty made with the Sioux Indians in 1868, and I want to read some of the provisions. In article 11 of this agreement it appears that we paid the Indians a consideration, and here are some of the things that the Indians agreed to do:

They agreed to withdraw all opposition to the construction of railroads now being built on the plains. "Second, that they will permit the peaceful construction of any railroad in passing over their reservation as herein defined." "That they will not attack any persons at home or traveling, nor molest or disturb any wagon trains, coaches, mules, or cattle belonging to the people of the United States or to persons friendly therewith." "They will never capture or carry off from settlements white women or children: they will never kill or scalp white men, nor attempt to do them harm."

By article 2 of the treaty of 1877 it is provided: "They also consent and agree to the free navigation of the Missouri River."

Now, to say at this time because some years ago the United States, in order to control these then outlaws and savages—call them by any name you may—confined them within certain limits, which were called "reservations," that we gave them the lands seems to me absurd. Will anybody for a moment contend that that action was a conveyance for a consideration to the Indians of the fee in the land? I certainly think not, and, as I said before, I have cited some authorities showing that the reservation title, if you want to so term it, is of no greater value than the aboriginal tenure. Yet it is contended that these lands now belong to the Indians and that they should be disposed of not only for what they are worth in their present almost valueless, useless condition, but that they shall be sold so that the Indian will get what they are worth after they have been cultivated and improved and made valuable by the white man.

I say, Mr. Chairman, following the language of the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROW], from whom I have quoted, that the value in this land should go to the man that gives it value. The Indians of this country have never contributed or done anything that has been recognized by which they have given any value to the lands of this country. These Indians have the right to take: Heads of families, 320 acres of land; children over 18 years of age and unmarried, 160 acres of land, and children under 18 years of age, 80 acres of land.

Heads of families who desire to live on their allotments are entitled to the following: Fifty dollars in lieu of a house, two mares and one colt, two cows with calves, one farm wagon, one set double harness, one plow, one hoe, one ax.

I cite this simply to show how generously the Indian has and is being treated by the Government, and I have no hesitancy in saying that after having taken allotments as they have in the tract affected by the proposed bill, the land left, which is of no value as it is now, should be made a part of the public domain, and upon terms not only fair to the Indian, but upon terms fair and just to the man who may go there to make his home and cultivate it. The man who goes into that section of the country goes in there with a handicap of one-fifth of the land nontaxable for twenty-five years, and he has got to pay his proportionate increase of the expenses of that community for all that time.

These 452 Indian allotments are practically without value at present, whereas if the adjoining lands are settled upon and improved it will make them valuable, and they can also be rented so as to give the allottees a benefit; and this is a consideration of considerable importance to the Indians having the aforesaid allotments.

I wish to emphasize that in disposing of this land it is not proposed to sell anything more than the right to make a homestead entry, which is quite different from what it would be if a person could buy the land outright. Under the provisions of the homestead law the purchaser will be limited to 160 acres and will have to reside upon and cultivate the land, in accordance with the provisions of said law.

That the Department has always considered $2.50 an acre, or $1,040,000, a fair and just price for the land, I wish to read the following reports.

Commissioner Jones, in his report to the Secretary of the Interior on the original treaty, November 29, 1901, in which he recommended that the same be transmitted to Congress with the request for favorable action, among other things said, referring to the report of the inspector who made the agreement:

> The inspector states that the land in Gregory County is without doubt the best and most desirable portion of the Rosebud Reservation, and that although the allotments embrace much of the choicest land, yet a great deal of good land remains unallotted. The whole tract, however, is a good grazing land, and the greater portion is also good agricultural land, upon which excellent crops can be raised when there is sufficient rainfall during the growing season. He says he regards the compensation stipulated in the agreement as very reasonable and at the same time a fair and just price for the lands. * * *

In conclusion the inspector states that he regards the compensation and manner of payment provided in the agreement as just and fair, both to the Indians and to the United States; that the manner of payment was the best, both for the Indians and for the Government, that the Indians would receive that the sheep, cattle and the five annual cash payments will have great benefit to the Indians in giving them a good start toward their self-support. He heartily recommends the approval and ratification of the agreement.

The Commissioner further said:

> The compensation agreed upon for the land ceded, amounting to about $2.50 per acre, is in the judgment of this office and from the best information obtainable, fair and reasonable.

The Secretary of the Interior, under date of December 6, 1901, in transmitting the treaty to the Senate, stated:

> This agreement has been carefully considered by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and as it seems fair and reasonable and the terms the best that could be obtained I have the honor to recommend that it receive favorable action by the Congress.

A gentleman of high standing, and a man who has been among the Indians for thirty years or more, and who was at first opposed to House bill No. 10418, after having it explained wrote me a letter, from which I quote as follows:

PHILADELPHIA, PA., February 12, 1904.

> However, the material questions are: Is the proposed bill (H. R. 10418) on the whole beneficial, and are its terms the best which can be got? On the whole, I answer "Yes," changing my opinion on these points, as you will perceive. I have two reasons:
>
> First, upon the fact to which you draw my attention and which I had overlooked, that the proposed bill assures the presence on the purchased land of a white farming population under the homestead laws instead of the presence of the land in large grazing tracts by corporations; and
>
> Second, upon the fact that, upon reflection, I think the prompt sale of the land more probable than when I wrote you.
>
> I appreciate, therefore, the force of your position in favor of the bill unless new considerations present themselves to my mind and seem to demand it, in which case I shall again put myself in communication with you.

I also wish to read two letters from one Frank Mullen, who has lived upon the Rosebud Reservation for twenty-four years, and is therefore familiar with the conditions upon said reservation, and is known to be a friend of the Indians, which letters are as follows:

ROSEBUD AGENCY, S. DAK., January 23, 1904.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, Washington, D. C.

> DEAR SIR: Will you kindly send me a copy of the new bill introduced by you in the House of Representatives for the opening of the unallotted lands in Gregory County.
>
> We hope your splendid efforts for the bill will be successful this session, and that the Indians will get the money they have been expecting from the sale for the last two years, and is payable on ratification.
>
> We have noticed many inquiries in reference to the bill, and I would consider it a favor if you would keep me advised of its progress, so that I can keep my people informed through our little paper.
>
> I understand there have been some protests sent from here to the Committee on Indian Affairs. If I do so, they are not authorized by any council of Indians from which they profess to represent, and represent only a small minority of the Indians. The general sentiment is in favor of the bill, as outlined in the press dispatches, and the main question of the Indian is, "When we get the money, and how much?"
>
> Yours, truly, FRANK MULLEN.

ROSEBUD, S. DAK., February 3, 1904.

Hon. CHARLES H. BURKE, Washington, D. C.

> MY DEAR SIR: Referring to your letter of January 27, I would say that I have been perfectly familiar with the lands in Gregory County for the last twenty-five years, and have no hesitancy in saying that the proposition in your bill now before the House of Representatives is fair and reasonable, and in my judgment all that the land is worth. I wrote Inspector McLaughlin, embodying his suggestion to Council McLaughlin, which, briefly, had to do with a percentage in the proceeds of the agreement, to be paid upon the sale, so that the Indians would realize through my acquaintance of speculators as they are prone. This is my judgment, your bill more than compensates for that. I consider it the best proposition for the Indians which has come before the House.
>
> You are independent and aware of the course of opposition here, and I am free to say that, in my opinion, there would not have been any opposition to accepting the original McLaughlin agreement had the Indians not been persistently told that by holding out they would surely obtain $5 per acre.
>
> As a business proposition, I consider the Indians gain by the sale of the land, as it is of absolutely no benefit to the large majority, and that those who are allotments are in Gregory County gain more than any of the others by the increased value of their allotments.
>
> Very truly, yours, FRANK MULLEN.

As to the benefits that the Indians will receive from the sale of this land and the amount of money they will receive per capita, Inspector McLaughlin, who negotiated the treaty with these Indians, in one of the councils said to the Indians:

> The census rolls show 4,017 persons belonging to this agency, which would give an annual per capita payment of $10.20 that is, about once a year for the next twenty years, and also for a period of five years an annuity of $2.50 that is, each month, weekly, and third would receive in the five years.
>
> As the payments are five years, when the per capita payment would end, the annuity in cows would then be worth about $10 each, and would be worth more than the annuity payment, because you would have an annuity in cows, which would produce you more and more cattle, and with proper care of your cattle would insure you a regular annual income. * * * Thus the sale of cattle, which is of property gained for us, will bring about a great deal of prosperity among you people. And in the third place, the cattle are worth far more than the money, which would enable you to take care of your families without any suffering until you begin to receive returns from the increase of cattle, the increase of the cattle that will be issued to you.

The Indians will have the benefit of the roads, of the courts, and the benefits of a county and State government without contributing a cent therefor, their lands being nontaxable for twenty-five years, as before stated, while the settler who takes a homestead and acquires title to the same must do his share in paying these expenses.

Talk about robbery and that these Sioux Indians are not being fairly treated. Under the treaties of 1868, 1877, and 1889 they have drawn from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $55,265,735.84. This is the amount obtained by about 20,000 Indians. Now, if you should contribute that amount of money to a similar number of white people and let them understand that they are going to be clothed and fed and educated and that they are going to have houses provided for them, the effect would be that you would simply make paupers of them. As soon as this Government comes to a realization that this is not a question of sentiment but a question of practical business, the Indians will commence to make some progress similar to that which has already been accomplished by what I consider an advanced policy.

Under the present administration of Indian affairs the idea of self support is encouraged. If the Indian is able to work—if he is able—the Indian Office says to him: "If you want to eat you must work." They provide payment for the services of the Indian in building roads, ditches, fences, etc., and pay him money in lieu of rations. In other words, they give him to understand that he must help himself.

I want to put in the RECORD, that it may receive the special attention of the House, the gross amount of the several items to which I have referred. It will be found very interesting reading. For instance, under article 10 of the treaty of 1868 there is provided for "Indians roaming," $5,464,400.

In order that it may appear just what this item means, I will read the provision of article 10 of the treaty authorizing and requiring payments to be made. It is as follows:

> And in addition to the foregoing annuities named, the sum of $10 for each person engaged in the agricultural pursuits of the tribe shall be annually appropriated for a period of twenty years, to persons really engaged in farming, to be used by the Secretary of the Interior for the purchase of farming implements and such other articles from time to time the Commissioner of Indian Affairs may indicate to be proper.

Appropriations for Sioux under treaties of 1868, 1877, and 1889, to and including 1903.

Article 7, treaty 1868, education	$2,180,000.00
Article 10, treaty 1868, farming	4,[illegible]
Article 10, treaty 1868, roaming	5,464,400.00
Article 10, treaty 1868, mechanics	1,401,000.00
Article 10, treaty 1868, cows and oxen	126,000.00
Article 15, treaty 1868, article 5, agreement 1877, subsistence and [illegible]	39,122,500.00
Article 14, treaty 1868, presents	1,500.00
	49,500,800.00
Section 17, act 1889, permanent fund	3,[illegible]
[illegible]	45,000.00
[illegible]	1,258,935.84
Miscellaneous for thirty years	1,456,300.00
Total	55,265,735.84

MARCH 2, 1904.

Mr. Chairman, I regret very much that I have been limited in time as I have been. I wanted to bring to the attention of the House a number of matters which under the circumstances I shall be compelled to put into the RECORD. I commend them to Members of this House.

I think the time has come, as I before stated, when we should legislate not only for the purpose of taking from the Indians the lands which they do not possess, which were set aside for them originally for homes and hunting, but we are adopting a different policy [illegible], as we are actually doing to some extent, in appropriating money for the support and maintenance of the Indians.

Why, Mr. Chairman, to give the Indian all the money that can possibly be realized from some land in which he may have some interest is not for his benefit. He simply squanders the money when he thus receives it, does him no good, except in a few instances. You will generally find that the opposition displayed to legislation which is for the interest of the Indians comes from somebody interested in having the Indians obtain just as much money as possible, because the person is desirous of the Indian getting as much money as possible in order that he may get it from him.

To this bill there never would have been any opposition to speak of on the part of the Indians had it not been for the agitation of certain white men residing upon or adjacent to the reservation, who had a selfish interest in the reservation remaining in its present state, possibly to enable them to range their cattle free over the lands and be permitted to continue trespassing.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the surplus land of an Indian reservation, for which the Indian has no further use, is not the property of the Indians, at least to no greater extent than it belongs to the whole people, and I maintain that the most that the Indian has is a mere right of use originally accorded him for the purpose of hunting and fishing, and that he should be obliged, upon such terms as are just and fair, to surrender it, that it may become a part of the public domain and be converted into homes and farms and occupied by people who will contribute to the development and material advancement of the country, and I therefore submit that there is no justification for the opposition that has developed against the Rosebud bill, and that it is a measure that proposes to generously pay the Indians for their right to the lands, and I therefore hope that it may be enacted into law. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I desire to extend my remarks in the RECORD and append some authorities bearing upon the subject of Indian titles, and will ask to have the same printed.

APPENDIX

In the case of Fletcher v. Peck (6 Cranch, 87), decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in 1810, referring to the grant of lands within an Indian reservation, the court said:

> "The reservation for the use of the Indians appears to be a temporary arrangement, suspending for a time the sales, but not permanently reserved."

In the case of Johnson v. McIntosh (8 Wheaton, 543), decided in 1823, it was decided that the fee to all Indian lands is in the Government and may be granted without the treaty. The grantee has the right of the Government, and the doctrine is followed in the case of United States v. Cook (19 Wall., 591), decided in 1873, in which the question involved and disposed of certain timber on Indian reservations, it was held that the Government has the right to remove from the premises. Cook therefore argued that because the Government had granted the land to the Indians it was an act of war against the United States. The question being seriously presented as to whether the fee was in the Government, the court stated, as was done. Chief Justice Waite thus stating the question before proceeding to argument, as follows:

> The right of the Indians in the land from which the logs were taken was that of occupancy only. They had no power of alienation except to the United States. The fee was in the United States subject to the right of occupancy. This is the view by which some decisions in this court have been guided, and it is the view which we think should be adopted in this case. The authority of that case has never been denied. The rights of the Indians in their occupancy have varied, as the fee has passed from the Indians to the United States, but it has always been held that the Indians had at most only a right of occupancy. The possession, when abandoned by the Indians, has been held to be at their pleasure.
>
> In Buttz v. Northern Pacific Railroad (119 U. S., 55), the railroad company claimed under the grant covering certain lands within the limits of the proposed route, who had the interest of occupancy, which had been terminated, and the Indian title had extinguished by a treaty years before the court said:
>
> "The Indian occupancies are not to be disturbed, though it was the Northern Pacific Railroad was to be constructed, were subject to a title known as 'Indian country.' At the time the act of July 2, 1864, was passed the title of the Indian tribes was not extinguished, and that fact did not prevent the grant of Congress from operating to pass the fee to the road to the company. The Indians had merely a right of occupancy, a right to live on the land subject to the jurisdiction and control of the Government. The grant conveyed the fee subject to the right of occupancy. The railroad company took the property with this encumbrance."
>
> In the case of Beecher v. Wetherby (95 U. S., 517), the question presented was whether or not the State took title under the act of a grant for lands within an Indian reservation, or whether the title remained in the United States, subject to be otherwise disposed of by treaty or agreement with the Indians. The decision of the court was that the title of the State attached, notwithstanding the right of occupancy, and that the title remained in the United States to act as the school sections for the benefit of the Indians was void, and the court said:
>
> "The right which the Indians held was only that of occupancy. The fee was in the United States, subject to that right, and could be conveyed by them whenever they chose. The grantee, in this case, would take the granted fee, and could not disturb the occupancy of the Indians. That occupancy could only be interfered with or determined by the United States. * * *
>
> "The right of the United States to dispose of the fee of the lands occupied by them (Indians) has always been recognized in the decisions of the tribunals of the Government. It was so ruled in Johnson v. McIntosh (8 Wheaton, 543), in 1823, and in United States v. Cook (19 Wall., 591), in 1873, and between those periods have affirmed the same doctrine. Clark v. Smith (13 Peters, 195). See also Jackson v. Hudson (3 Johnson, 375); Transfer of a Company (3 Wisconsin, 67); Opinions Attorneys-General, [illegible]. In United States v. Cook (19 Wall., 591) the United States has uniformly recognized and repeatedly [illegible] that the fee was in the United States and was a right of occupancy in the Indians; that this was the rule in which other Indians had held, and that the authority of Johnson v. McIntosh was a power [illegible]. * * *
>
> "In the construction of grants of public lands [illegible] the occupation of Indians, courts have always [illegible] the rule that the fee was in the United States, but the power of the United States to make such [illegible] has been denied. In the present case there can hardly be a doubt that Congress intended to cede to the State the fee to sections in every township, subject, it is true, as to all other sections of public lands, to the existing occupancy of the Indians so long as they should continue [illegible]. The greater part of the State was at the date of the compact occupied by different tribes, and the grant of sections to other purposes would be of comparatively little value. [illegible] to be held that at the date of the State was in the section of a whole country, the same barbarous condition of the Indian tribes would give place to the higher civilization of our race, and it contemplated by its terms [illegible] that State as in other States, its ancient and sacred policy of devoting the central section in every township for the education of the people." (See also Cherokee Nation v. Roberts, 18 Ross., 128.)
>
> Attorney-General Cushing (8 Opins. Atty. Gen., 259), in the Portage City case, in reference to whether the act of Congress approved August 4, 1854, granted certain lands within an Indian reservation, used the following language:
>
> "There was a time when the true relation of the Indians to the United States was not so clearly seen as it now is. We have been accustomed to make treaties with them as if they were independent, as they were in error. We dealt with their petty tribes as nations, notions that led to strange misconceptions. We had spoken of their lands as if, forsooth, of savages who happened to be within the geographical limits of country large enough for an empire could be deemed the possessors to a national and exclusive of usufruct right or of positive law. We had respected their assumed rights, that is, had left them to their savage quasi independence, instead of at once compelling them to enter into some accommodation place in the social organization, and thus they had perished of two maxims [illegible] namely, we of the older States of the Union, who had expelled or killed off most of our Indians or reduced them to a condition of hopeless paupers, had gone on to be extremely sensitive to the alleged wrongs of the same nature, that is, jealous in imitation of ours, to which the younger States of the South were now subjecting their Indians.
>
> "The elaborate investigation of the subject which ensued cleared off all these errors, and discussion ended with the great case of the Cherokee Nation v. The State of Georgia (5 Peters, 1), and Worcester v. The State of Georgia (6 Peters, 515).
>
> "It is the universal doctrine of public law that the Indians are the domestic subjects of the particular European-American state in which they happen to be. (Cherokee Nation v. The State of Georgia, 5 Peters, 1.) It is a doctrine of our public law equally fundamental that the Indians do not hold a fee in the lands of their aboriginal occupation, but only a usufruct, the fee being in the United States or, in some cases, in the several States. (Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheaton, 543; Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cranch, [illegible]).
>
> "When the United States made this grant to the State of Wisconsin the fee of all the land was in the United States, subject, in respect of a part, to the occupancy of the Menomonees. That usufructuary occupation was capable of being extinguished by the United States, and by them alone, and until its extinguishment the entire original title remained between them and the Indians. * * *

"In the case of Mitchell v. The United States that was one of the points, and it was expressly held by the court as the established public law of America that the Government owns the original fee of the soil, and may convey the same while the lands remain in the possession of the Indians. (9 Peters, 711.)

"The same doctrine is reaffirmed in the case of The United States v. Fernandez. (10 Peters, 303.)

"There is no room whatever to question the law of these decisions. They are in strict conformity with principle and precedent."

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I want to state what I understand to be the Indian title to the lands which have been referred to, because I am fearful that an erroneous impression may have been left upon the minds of some Members by the statements of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE].

The Supreme Court more than seventy-five years ago declared that the right of the Indian was a right of occupancy, a right of use, a right which was perpetual, and could be interfered with or changed only upon the assent of the Indians. The Supreme Court recently have modified that decision to the extent of saying that the Congress of the United States occupied the position of a guardian for the Indians, a guardian that could act without asking the assent of any court, a guardian supreme in its powers, but whose powers must be exercised solely for the benefit of the ward. In other words, the Supreme Court now hold that while the title of the Indians is a title simply of use and occupancy for their benefit, Congress can dispose of that title if it sees best, if in its wisdom it thinks it is for the benefit of the Indians so do, but can do that only for the benefit of the Indians and for no other purpose.

Mr. BURKE. Will the gentleman permit one observation?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BURKE. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the case of Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock, decided January 2, 1903, after quoting article 12 of the treaty, Mr. Justice White, who delivered the opinion of the court, said in part:

The appellants base their right to relief on the proposition that by the effect of the article just quoted the confederated tribes of Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches were invested with an interest in the lands held in common within the reservation, which interest could not be divested by Congress in any other mode than that specified in the said twelfth article, and that as a result of the said stipulation the interest of the Indians in the common lands fell within the protection of the fifth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and such interest, indirectly at least, came under the control of the judicial branch of the Government. We are unable to yield our assent to this view.

The contention in effect ignores the status of the contracting Indians and the relation of dependency they bore and continue to bear toward the Government of the United States. To uphold the claim would be to adjudge that the tribal operation of the treaty was to materially limit and qualify the controlling authority of Congress in respect to the care and protection of the Indians, and to deprive Congress in a possible emergency when the necessity might be urgent for a particular exertion of power of the broad limits, of all power to do the act of the Indians' good. * * *

Now it is true that the interest of the Indians in the right of occupancy of tribal lands, whether declared in a treaty or otherwise created, has been stated to be sacred, or as sometimes expressed, as sacred as the fee of the United States in the same lands. (Johnson v. McIntosh, 8 Wheat., 543; The Cherokee Nation v. Georgia, 5 Pet., 1, 48; Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet., 515, 582; United States v. Cook, 19 Wall., 591, 592; Leavenworth, etc., R. R. Co. v. United States, 92 U. S., 733, 755; Beecher v. Wetherby, 95 U. S., 525.)

But in none of these cases was there involved a controversy between Indians and the Government respecting the power of Congress to administer the property of the Indians. The questions considered in the cases referred to which either directly or indirectly had relation to the nature of the property rights of the Indians, concerned the character and extent of such rights as respected States or individuals. In one of the cited cases it was emphatically pointed out that Congress possessed a paramount power over the property of the Indians, by reason of its exercise of guardianship over their interests, and that such authority might be implied, even through a treaty, in the absence of express words to the contrary. Thus in Beecher v. Wetherby (95 U. S., 526), discussing the extent to which treaty had vested a right in certain land by treaty, to the exclusion of Congress, it was said:

"But the right which the Indians had was subject to the sovereignty. The fee was in the United States, subject to that right, and could be conveyed by them whenever they chose. The grantee, in such a case, would take only the naked fee, and could not disturb the occupancy of the Indians. Their rights could only be interfered with or determined by the United States. It is contended that in this matter the United States would be governed by such considerations of justice as would control a Christian people in their treatment of an ignorant and dependent race. Be it so. It may be conceded that a grantee of the United States takes the title subject to the Indian right, and that questions of governmental policy, and of a moral character, are left to the consideration of the proper department of the Government. But these are matters with which the courts have nothing to do. They are political in their character, and are to be determined by the political department of the Government. Until the year 1871 the policy was pursued of dealing with the Indian tribes by treaties, and, of course, a moral obligation rested upon Congress to act in good faith in performing the stipulations entered into on its behalf. But as treaties were made with foreign nations, Chinese exclusion cases, 130 U. S., 581, the legislative power might pass laws in conflict with those treaties. (Thomas v. Gay, 169 U. S., 264, 270; Ward v. Race Horse, 163 U. S., 504, 511; Spalding v. Chandler, 160 U. S., 394, 403; Missouri, Kansas and Texas Ry. Co. v. Roberts, 152 U. S., 114, 117; The Chinese Exclusion Case, 11 Wall., 616.)

The power exists to abrogate the provisions of an Indian treaty, though presumably such power will be exercised only when circumstances arise which will not only justify the Government in disregarding the stipulations of the treaty, but may demand, in the interest of the country and the Indians themselves, that it should do so. When, therefore, treaties were entered into between the United States and a tribe of Indians, it was never doubted that the power to abrogate existed in Congress, and that in a contingency such power might be availed of from considerations of governmental policy, particularly if consistent with perfect good faith toward the Indians. In United States v. Kagama (1885) (118 U. S., 375), speaking of the Indians, the court said (p. 382):

"After an experience of a hundred years of the treaty-making system of government Congress has determined upon a new departure—to govern them by acts of Congress. This is seen in the act of March 3, 1871, embodied in section 2079 of the Revised Statutes: 'No human nation or tribe within the territory of the United States shall be acknowledged or recognized as an independent nation, tribe, or power with whom the United States may contract by treaty; but no obligation of any treaty lawfully made and ratified with any such Indian nation or tribe prior to March 3, 1871, shall be hereby invalidated or impaired.'"

In upholding the validity of an act of Congress which conferred jurisdiction upon the courts of the United States for certain crimes committed in an Indian reservation within a State, the court said (p. 383):

"It seems to us that this is a wise exercise of authority. These Indians are the wards of the nation. They are dependent. They are located on the United States; dependent largely for their food and clothing on their relations with the United States; dependent for their moral and political education upon the United States; dependent for their protection against the aggression of the surrounding communities of white men who are their neighbors, and who, from the superiority of their civilization, can take their lands and their property from them whenever they choose. The government of the United States is their guardian, and they are its wards. Because of the relation which exists between them and the United States, they are located within the territory of the United States, and are subject to its laws, and to the laws of the States within whose borders they reside, where they are found, are often the victims of violence and of cupidity, and are in a condition of weakness and helplessness, so manifest that the duty of the Government of the United States to afford them its protection has been universally recognized. It is a duty which has been recognized by the Executive and by Congress and by this court, whenever the question has arisen.

* * * * * * *

"The power of the General Government over these remnants of a race once powerful, now so weak and helpless, is supreme, and its exercise has been necessary to their protection, as well as to the safety of the States in which they reside. It must exist in the government of the United States, because there is no other government in existence to which they can be subjected. The duty of the Government to care for these people is one which it owes to the civilized portion of the inhabitants of the United States, and has never been denied, and because it alone can enforce its laws and give the protection."

The Indians were placed and kept for a long time apart from the civilized and protected by the United States government, and their lands were conveyed to them by treaties. The general jurisdiction of Congress is also declared in United States v. Kagama (118 U. S., 375) and Stephens v. Cherokee Nation (174 U. S., 445). * * *

We have proceeded at length in the foregoing review of facts in the belief that the Government of the United States, in the exercise of its plenary authority over the tribal relations of the Indians, cannot be arrested in the progress of its mission of mercy by the plea of a violation of a treaty, nor can it be prevented from the performance of its duty by the judiciary. In any event, the Congress, in the exercise of its plenary authority, can not question or inquire into the motives which prompted the enactment of this legislation.

Mr. FITZGERALD. It has never been decided that Congress could divest this title without compensating these Indians for the perpetual right of occupancy that they have.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly; and what I wish to emphasize is the fact that the Supreme Court never has so held, and that it is not the intention of Congress and it is not the intention of any Indian Committee or anybody else, so far as I know, to dispose of any right of the Indians except for their benefit.

Mr. DALZELL. Congress is the last judge of what is for their benefit.

Mr. SHERMAN. Congress is the supreme judge.

Mr. BURKE. I do not want to be misunderstood. I have maintained and do declare that in my best judgment this bill does provide what is fair and just and right as a compensation for the Indians from any standpoint.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understood the gentleman's position. How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York has nineteen minutes remaining.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield that nineteen minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEDGE] is recognized for nineteen minutes.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in a sense to a question of personal privilege. During my brief and quiet sojourn here I have been the recipient of constant favor from many Members of this House without distinction of party or religion. This kindness, so generous to my feelings, has from the first day of the extra session of this Congress presented itself in a new and interesting form. In addition to the usual inquiry after my health or the nature of the private legislation which I may be suspected of a desire to promote, these friends, assuming an air of affectionate solicitude too good to be true, have been daily insisting on my enriching their intelligence with my views of the Iowa idea, until at last I am, like the unjust judge, from pure weariness compelled, so far as in my limited measure I may, to satisfy their importunate morning thirst in this regard.

Furthermore, my sense of loyalty to my constituents and neighbors, as well as of duty to these teasing associates whose travel in their own country seems never to have extended west of the Alleghenies, who have never gazed upon the star of empire, have no notion of its present position or memory of its triumphant course, impels me to offer what help I may to their understandings by a hint or suggestion or two of the quality of the men over whose homes and fields of industry that star has so reasonably fixed its abiding place.

Of course I have been made aware of the "idea" that my inquisitors are driving at. The active and healthy minds of the people of Iowa are and always have been prolific and capacious of ideas—moral, political, social, and industrial; great ideas, vital, helpful, and inspiring to themselves, to their Commonwealth, and to their country—and it seems a strange irony of fortune that of all the ideas whose original conception might be attributed to the Iowa mind the one least fit for the prefix of the definite article should awaken the widest interest and provoke the most general animadversion, an idea which, following the dictionary, is rather "a general conception or notion formed by generalization" than "a rational conception," or "the complete conception of an object when thought of in its necessary elements or constituents."

The offspring of a confused or half-attentive mind, of headlong impulse, rather than of long-headed thinking, it has changed its shape like the cloud which, now looking like a weasel and now like a whale, perplexed the wit of old Polonius. First it expressed itself or exposed itself in a purpose to modify any schedules of the tariff which might afford a shelter to monopoly. By this protest of virtue above suspicion, we found ourselves regarded as beyond suspicion by the Iowa Democracy. Mere words of honest intent, but which meant nothing and could mean nothing, as I shall attempt to show. It was hailed by them (anything to hail is a godsend to an Iowa Democrat) as a confession that the tariff is the mother of trusts and the grandmother of monopoly. De Quincey says that the progress of the sinner in wrongdoing is inevitable: that if he commits murder, he will, if unchecked by force, necessarily proceed to robbery, forgery, and perjury, and through the catalogue of crime until at last he finds himself guilty of Sabbath breaking and disobedience to parents. [Laughter.]

This course of the sinner finds it counterpart (in reverse) in that of the reformer, or at least illustrates the course of the Iowa tariff reformer. He denounces a public policy which, working for the general advantage of all the people, does not cut off alleged evil doers from its benefits. Next, seeming not to see how to strike or when to strike, he demands general and immediate revision—a sort of daily house cleaning—ignoring the Scripture story that that day only was blessed and sanctined which let well enough alone, and now at last raises his arm to strike at the interest of his own supporters and own people in behalf of reciprocity with Canada.

I shall not deny that there are people in Iowa who regard revision, partial, total, by reciprocity with Canada, by what one of them, an editor, calls "the broadest commercial reciprocity," or by open free trade, as a veritable pillar of cloud leading to Canaan. Mr. Lincoln said you could fool all of the people part of the time, part of the people all the time, but you couldn't fool all of the people all the time. There are a few of this second class who are making some noise in Iowa. We have some of the descendants of Jeshurun there, who have waxed fat and kick. We have those who, in their fullness, deny the fountain, who deny the influence of a public policy to hinder or to advance the fortunes of the people, or, to use the language of my friend and colleague from the Second district, ascribe all their prosperity to gravitation.

Their philosophy is not so profound as that of an unsuccessful candidate for the Presidency who taught the people forty years ago. He was a Daniel too, Daniel Pratt, the Great American Traveler. I had the advantage of hearing him many times and of contributing to his campaign fund whenever the hat went round. That Daniel, with great solemnity and convincing power, maintained that the great forces of nature are gravitation and perspiration. [Laughter.]

If that Daniel had lived till now, he would have added revision and reciprocity. [Laughter.] He might not have come to judgment, but would certainly have gone to the St. Louis convention. [Laughter.]

We have certain business men governed by the same motives that actuate the millers of Minneapolis, e. g., the Tri-City Reciprocity League.

I was honored with a duplicate copy of the letter read and approved by my colleague [Mr. WADE] the other day—a league "composed of manufacturers of the city of Moline, Ill.; Rock Island, Ill., and Davenport, Iowa."

Here is a partial list of members: Barnard & Leas Manufacturing Company, Bettendorf Axle Company, Bettendorf Metal Wheel Company, H. W. Cooper, Davenport Foundry and Machine Company, Deere & Co., Deere & Mansur Company, The Fuller Manufacturing Company, S. A. Mager Manufacturing Company, Moline Elevator Company, Moline Plow Company, Moline Pump Company, Moline Scale Company, Moline Tool Company, Moline Wagon Company, Red Jacket Manufacturing Company, Rock Island Iron Works, The Root-VanDervoort Engineering Company, Sylvan Steel Works, Sternberg Manufacturing Company, Union Malleable Iron Company, Wilson-Moline Buggy Company, Williams, White & Co.

The signer, Mr. French, is a man of great intelligence and of high character—a man of affairs. The wonder that he is and always has been a Democrat disappears when we learn that in his boyhood he was at school under the influence of that leader of the minority whose personality commands the respect of the whole House, and whose seductive sophistry might deceive the very elect. It is interesting to know that the hand we see so often here raised to threaten or command did years ago bend the twig now grown into a great but twisted tree, in whose upper branches flighty things may lodge. [Laughter.]

I ought not to intimate that there is any flightiness in this advocacy of reciprocity with Canada by the league or its secretary. There is no altruistic sentimentalism in their policy. This league is not an eleemosynary institution. Canada is not a manufacturing country. Its people are a rural people, engaged in producing the same things that are produced by the farmers of Iowa, Minnesota, and Michigan. They offer no serious competition in any business or enterprise carried on by any of the members of this league. The harm or hazard of the game proposed is at the expense of the farmer of Iowa. These gentlemen propose to gamble only with his stakes.

They do not plan to strengthen the competition against themselves but to enlarge their own market, though they narrow his. The man who makes the plow proposes to reciprocate away the rights of the man who drives the plow. This, then, to borrow a phrase from the gentleman from Mississippi, is our first "object lesson in revision by reciprocity," the great damage of the most honest, legitimate, nonmonopolistic industry in the country, an industry which can by no possibility ever come under the control of any trust, legitimate or illegitimate.

I would commend to the disciples of revision in the Republican party the warning of the leader of the Democracy to his followers:

> The tariff reformer who would do things recklessly or too suddenly would run the risk of destroying the very end he had in contemplation by furnishing object lessons which would not help him, but hurt him, and in consequence of which he and those of his opinion might be hurled out of power and deprived of the power of doing anything.

While this Iowa idea, ripened or even gone beyond the state of ripeness, as it has, into reciprocity, that particular reciprocity which would directly and immediately bring damage and disaster to the chief industry of Iowa, receives the approval of every Democrat in Iowa, and of that very small number whom my colleague says have just begun to think, it does not deceive, though it may greatly disturb the serenity of that great body of the people of Iowa who began to think when they began to live, and who have by thoughtful labor built up that imperial State. Their Americanism has been of no doubtful quality and their Republicanism of no uncertain sound. They adhere to the principle inherent in the doctrine of protection, "that from time to time such changes should be made in the tariff as become advisable through the progress of our industries and their changing relations to the commerce of the world," recognizing the further fact that these changes must not be made until the need for them outweighs the disadvantages.

> We can not afford to become fossilized or to fail to recognize the fact that as the needs of the country change it may be necessary to meet these new needs by changing certain features of our tariff laws. Still, we can not afford to fail to recognize the further fact that these changes must not be made until the good to be gained outweighs the disadvantages which may result, and when it becomes necessary to make them they should be made with full recognition of the need of stability in our economic system and of keeping undisturbed the enterprise of that system, which has now become a settled policy in our national life. We have prospered marvelously at home. As a nation we stand in the very forefront in the great international industrial competition of the day. We can not afford by any freak of folly to forfeit the position to which we have thus triumphantly attained. (President Roosevelt at Minneapolis.)

Nor do they suffer confusion of mind concerning the relation of the tariff to the trusts. They are fully aware that the tariff only fixes conditions which tend to secure the rewards of intelligent industry; that while it widens the field of enterprise and multiplies the opportunities for honest endeavor, it can not grant its beneficence exclusively to the truly good and withhold it from the wicked; that no schedules, revised or otherwise, can be contrived to shut off from business and industrial activity the selfish, the greedy, the avaricious, and place them under the exclusive control of patriots, philanthropists, and pharisees.

They know that a genial climate and propitious season energizes and invigorates all vegetable vitality with generous impartiality, whether noxious or wholesome; that when corn grows weeds may grow, or, to fit the figure more closely, when we are blessed with a full crop of corn in the ear, with its ensuing honest and helpful pig, we must look also for a superfluity of corn in the jug.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HEDGE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have time to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would only be too glad to grant the request, but the time has been fixed in the House and is in the control of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SHERMAN. All of my time has beeen allotted.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have previously yielded all of my time.

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Will not the gentleman consent to yield five minutes?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. SHERMAN. I thank the gentleman very much; it is very generous of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. HEDGE. I thank the gentleman and the committee.

It is as practicable to shut off the commerce and work of the world from the hands of sinners by a reform or removal of the tariff as it would be to shut off the cherishing light of the sun from the evil and unthankful and send the rain to fall on the just alone by a reform in the Weather Bureau. The Iowa Republican notion of the relation of the tariff to the trusts and of the effectual way to handle trusts is so clearly set forth in the address of my colleague, Mr. WALTER SMITH, chairman of our State convention in 1902, that I take leave to appropriate part of that address.

I want to call attention to some of those classes of cases in which the application of the principles contended for by our Democratic friends would do the people no good and the trusts no harm, but, upon the contrary, would hurt the people and help the trusts.

If a trust buys its raw material abroad or buys it at home of producers in whom it has no interest, the removal of the tariff on such raw material would not hurt but benefit the trust. To illustrate, the removal of the tariff on cotton, if it had any effect, would help, not hurt, the beef trust by simply enabling it to buy cotton cheaper, to the detriment of the American farmer, but would not necessarily in any way relieve the people from oppression, because the chief complaint against the trust and rests upon the contention that the trust can and does by its power hold the price of what it sells out of due relation to the cost of production.

When a trust has so far destroyed its industry as to be able to compete in the market places of the world, and when its domestic competitors have not so far developed their business as to be able to so compete, a removal of the tariff would destroy not the trust, but the competitors of the trust, and thus make the monopoly complete.

Where a trust controls the production of an article here, and the foreign production of the same article is controlled by another trust, the removal of the tariff would serve not to relieve our people from the exactions of a trust, but to simply transfer them from the exactions of a domestic trust compelled by tariff law to practise its goods here with defiance aimed at the interests of a foreign trust, that would practise its goods upon us without fear or favor.

If these three propositions are correct, Democrats must go back and place on a par with the wisdom of Democratic statesmanship generally, and that the Democratic party would if it could take the power, operate perhaps exclusively in behalf of the trusts and at the same time fulminate its fulminations against the already injured people, rob the American laboring man of that work which is purely his and bring about another starving time.

The Republican policy is far different. It will, through its best thought, enact laws in the courts, and if it can not do that, then at every session of Congress seek to be informed and strengthened so far as legislation can confer the needed power to do so.

The Republican party will fearlessly use every means in its power to reach this great evil, and we are confident that the time will come when the evil, if not cured, will at least be so far lessened as to be comparatively harmless, without resorting to repeal measures. It may as well be understood, however, that the Republican party will neither pander to nor tolerate the demands of predatory wealth nor to the oppression of the people by the trusts. It will give to all the fullest industrial freedom at the expense of prosperity, but commercial freedom and prosperity.

And at Minneapolis last April President Roosevelt thus expressed his concurrence in these views:

One point we must remember in connection with any revision, speaking generally, stands out above every other from the point of view of dealing with the trusts. No change in tariff duties can have any substantial effect in solving the so-called "trust problem."

Mr. Chairman, it is only seventy years since the white man was first permitted to enter and possess the land now named the State of Iowa. One who looks back upon its origin and its history is not surprised that its pioneers, its founders, and its builders produced and developed a high type of manhood, and perhaps the finest type of American manhood. They spring from the best blood of all the older States. Their fathers had been pioneers and builders along the Atlantic coast in Maine and New Hampshire to South Carolina and Georgia. They brought with them the traditions, the habits of life, the modes of thought and of speech, the prejudices, and perhaps the bigotries of their widely separated places of nativity. Their love of their early homes was not weakened, but intensified, by their exile.

But in the intercourse which the very necessities of their new life made close and intimate, in the practice of the kindly offices of good neighborhood, they inevitably modified, instructed, enlarged, and Americanized each other. Their provincialism expanded into patriotism. They came to recognize the community of interest of the American people, to revere one flag, one Constitution, to behold one destiny. Their first title deeds to their homesteads had been signed by the President of the United States.

The silent, shining river over which they had come was not only their inviolate way of necessity to the market of the world, but the sign and promise and commandment of a perpetual union, and as reenforcements came—the Teuton, the Celt, and the Scandinavian—and the line of their composite civilization made its westward conquest of the beautiful wilderness there was no essential change in their character, for all were of the stalwart races of mankind. However various in outward appearance or different in externals, they were alike in this: They all loved liberty and honored usefulness. In their strenuous life dignity of labor was not an abstraction—a tinsel phrase to emblazon the banner of the demagogue.

To their understanding there was no dignity in life except in labor. The man who did things, who made things, who produced things, was the only man who had proved his right to be. Such a proposition as that the consumer is as justly entitled to the benefit of competition as the producer is to the aid of protection seemed of the same quality of wisdom as Sancho Panza's observation that large rivers always run by large towns. [Laughter.] For the first office of production is to supply consumption, and the only purpose of protection is to stimulate the production of supplies near to the hand of the consumer.

Usefulness—the capacity to produce over and above the needs of consumption, to amass wealth, to heap up riches, to add to the material resources of the commonwealth—was among them a true measure of merit, of worth, of dignity.

They believe that government is instituted to secure the rights of the individual, to protect him in his field of usefulness: that it has no other reason to be; that it can not offer or suffer injustice to the individual without harm or hazard to all the people and to itself; that it can not withhold protection from any American industry without harm or hazard to all American industries. I have thus only attempted to indicate the Iowa farmers' notion of domestic economy and their idea of public policy. With these views they became Republican fifty years ago, and during those fifty years they have discovered nothing in the history of their country or in their own private experience which does not justify their first decision and strengthen their attachment to the policy of protection.

The growth of their State is the sufficient vindication and splendid monument of the wisdom of that policy. Within the memory of many men still in active life the beautiful wilderness which lay solitary and silent between the two great rivers of the continent has been transformed into a hundred Canaans, a great granary and storehouse of the world.

Speech will always be free in Iowa. Sciolists, empirics, and academics may still, without let or hindrance, string out sounding words and jingling phrases and advertise them as "ideas." But the busy farmers of Iowa are not "children tossed to and fro and carried about with every wind of doctrine." Children of a commonwealth which covers one-eighteenth of the Louisiana purchase shelters and supports one sixth of the population of that magnificent empire, and has so sheltered them that they possess one-third of the taxable property of its thirteen great States and Territories, and a greater and more evenly distributed per capita wealth than is enjoyed by any other State in the Union, to these minds the State of Iowa itself is the visible, tangible, authentic presentation of the Iowa idea. [Loud applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON].

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I regard this as a fitting time and place to present to the House a plea on behalf of a people without representation on the floor. It is a case that appeals to them intimately, and should appeal to the hearts and minds of the Representatives in this House. I congratulate the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MARTIN] for introducing in the House and in securing a favorable report from the committee a resolution which will amount to a legislative direction to the Department of Commerce and Labor to investigate the subject of the extortionate prices of the beef trust. He has shown to us a case whereby by combination a central power fixes the price at which they purchase live stock, and control the market in that, and we all know the means adopted to fix the price at which they sell to the people.

We ourselves all know that this beef-trust extortion has been going on, but I congratulate the gentleman that he in this manner is able to percolate his way to the attention of the Department of Commerce and Labor, which is charged with the duty of its correction. It was heralded, at the passage of the bill creating this Bureau, on the floor of the House and Senate that the Department of Commerce and Labor was to be charged as one of its salient points of duty with the investigation of the beef and other trusts and their extortions. Openly and notoriously these trusts have flourished and grown fat, and now to curb and control them specific Congressional action must be taken. We must mandate this Department—marshal it in the way it shall act and what trust it shall attack. It must have legislative direction to the end for which it was created, and the gentleman has chosen the method of a resolution to that effect. Are we to still continue in the old rut of nonrigorous enforcement of antitrust laws? Is this what is meant by conservatism? A year ago, under the intense stress of an anthracite-coal strike which shook the world, the Republican Members of this House, urged on by the Democracy, repealed the tariff temporarily for a year on soft coal, but during the cold weather of last January that law of repeal of tariff duty lapsed into a tariff tax again, and no voice or word from the Republican side has come in favor of a repeal of the tariff tax on coal or in favor of reestablishing a restriction that will keep the coal trust from its extortion.

Mr. Chairman, the Indian Territory is without a Representative. Its benighted people—600,000 of them—have suffered long from Congressional neglect in many ways, and are suffering now. One hundred thousand school children without the facilities for any school education. No laws provided for civilized government. Yet Congress has passed no provision to call to the attention of the Department of Commerce and Labor to perform its duty and relieve these people from a trust equally as exorbitant as the beef trust, and it affects them in the form of a coal trust in the Territory. That coal trust in Indian Territory is distressing not only to the people of that Territory, but to the surrounding country. I refer to the coal trust in the Indian Territory, operated along the same lines as the beef trust operates, to which the gentleman from South Dakota referred. If we must go through Congress in order to appeal to the Department of Commerce, whose duty it is to protect our citizens, then I adopt this plan of presenting the matter on the floor of the House on behalf of a people without a Representative. This trust affects all the people who use the coal from the Indian Territory, and in proof of the condition which exists I present the statements of gentlemen of character, who came from the Indian Territory and Oklahoma to testify before the Committee on the Territories in its recent hearings upon the subject of granting statehood, and who came here at their own expense.

Incidentally only they mention the great extortions of the coal trust out in the Indian Territory. Operating upon the same line as the beef trust, by a combine, they compel the price to be fixed by a central agent, thus destroying all competition. I read the statements of these gentlemen:

STATEMENT OF MR. DICK T. MORGAN, OF ELRENO, OKLA.

The trouble is not so much with the railroads as it is with a company in the Indian Territory which has been formed for the purpose of selling coal. They have contracts with all the coal mines to take their entire output at a certain price. Consequently, when you go down there you must buy from [illegible] and these companies have to pay $4 a ton to the coal company. It is these same companies in the Indian Territory that make the coal so high.

STATEMENT OF MR. CHESTER HOWE, OF WASHINGTON, D. C., AND OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA.

Mr. ROBINSON. Are those coal companies combining to rob the people?

Mr. HOWE. I am informed that these companies are compelled to pay $2.25 per ton, including the agent to fix that coal, the retail and the jobber, which is only 25 cents per ton. I am further informed that the coal can not be produced for more than $4 a ton. If that is true, they are asking for an outrageous profit, and the people of that country are paying it.

STATEMENT OF A. G. HAVENS.

Mr. DOYLE. The press reports are to the effect that a combination of lessees were power to fix the price at which it should be sold to the purchaser in the city of the [illegible].

Mr. HAVENS. I can state that I know such a combination does exist, for I have been approached [illegible] people who would make application to purchase coal there from one of the companies, and they would send the communication back and refer him to the central communication, which contracts with the companies for the entire output. They would not sell you a pound of coal. You could not buy it of them. Of course the same companies who own mines and perhaps are composed of different individuals, but as an independent organization there is such a combination which controls the output of all those mines, and to which you must go for your purchase. They control the entire output of all the mines, and there is no competition whatever. We are paying the agent, the Territory of Oklahoma to day $5 a ton for coal that costs them but $1.25 to put on the car.

The good heart of my good friend Governor Powers, of Maine, was touched, and he asked this question:

Do I understand you can not get prices from any of the companies there except from one man?

Mr. HAVENS. There is one management. One man fixes the price of coal for every coal company in that country that can get a pound of coal carried on the railroad lines.

Then, fleet of mind as to the legislative duty of himself and every Member of this House, Governor Powers said:

I should think there would be a chance for interference of the United States authorities there.

But the Bureau of Commerce and Labor, created for that purpose, has not heard of the beef trust, although everyone here has, and they have not heard of hundreds of thousands of people in the West, around Oklahoma and Indian Territory, who are suffering under the grip of this coal trust. Mr. Havens continues:

Let me call attention to another thing. The coal mines in the Indian Territory are the most extensive and the most valuable in the United States outside of Pennsylvania, and what is more, more people will be dependent in the long future upon the coal product of the Indian Territory than upon any other section except Pennsylvania. As I stated a moment ago, it will continue to supply people, reaching on through Kansas and Missouri. Missouri has no coal mines that amount to anything; neither has Arkansas or Texas or Oklahoma, and all these States are dependent upon the coal mines of the Indian Territory.

STATEMENT OF JUDGE D. L. SLEEPER, OF LAWTON, OKLA.

Judge SLEEPER. Separate statehood would leave the coal miles in Indian Territory.

Mr. SPALDING. What difference would that make?

Judge SLEEPER. Because we can probably control the coal rates. For instance, we get a hundred miles from the coal fields, and we are paying $5.50 a ton for soft coal that we used to pay $2 a ton for in Ohio. If we had statehood we could throw the laws of Oklahoma over them, and bring some of them to terms.

STATEMENT OF MR. HENRY LASSON, OF ELRENO, OKLA.

Mr. LASSON. I am in the mining business and the grain business. I am also in the coal business. We are paying exactly the same as Mr. Morgan stated a while ago. That is to some extent has impaired the lines of business in Indian Territory, and we have had much of a way to match them. We have got ready to pay the price. I believe it is the same operations that the people have that are doing them of the same to us. That is all I have to say in the matter. If you have any questions to ask you I will be glad to answer.

Mr. ROBINSON. Do you consider that a combination of trust does exist there controlling the price of coal in the market?

Mr. LASSON. I do. I know that is it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Have you ever resorted to the antitrust law?

Mr. LASSON. It is pretty hard to reach them.

Here is a people 600,000 strong, and this Congress has refused to give them a Territorial form of government, and until now it has failed to give them a State government. There are 80,000 Indians, and only 13,000 of them are full bloods, and the others, for a hundred years under good educational facilities, have become generally, in business and industry to take care of themselves, the equal of the white men throughout the country. Yet there is a Secretary in the President's Cabinet charged with the duty of protecting them—the Department of Commerce and Labor—that has not heard their appeals nor of the infamies of this coal trust, which charges the people there from $7.50 to $8 a ton for coal by means of having a central board which fixes the price. I thought I would take this means on behalf of the people of the Indian Territory to call the matter to the attention of the Department of Commerce and Labor by percolating my way to that Department through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further demand for the remaining time on the part of the minority, the Clerk will begin the reading of the bill.

The Clerk, proceeding to read the bill, read the following:

At the Cheyenne River Agency, S. Dak., $1,700.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a typographical error in the paragraph just read. I ask unanimous consent that the word "seven" be changed to "six."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $30,200.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the word "two," in line 25, be changed to "three." This change is made necessary by reason of the amendment changing "seven" to "eight" in a former paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection the proposed amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

For contingencies of the Indian service, including traveling and incidental expenses of Indian agents and of their offices, and of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and [illegible] incidental expenses of special agents, at $5 per day when actually employed on duty in the field, expenses of transportation and compensation here in lieu of all other expenses now authorized by law, and of witnesses going to and going from the seat of government, and while remaining there to confer with officers and employees of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, for a period not to exceed twenty days, for payment of expenses not otherwise provided for, and for pay of two special agents, at $2,000 per annum each, $99,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. I offer, by direction of the committee, the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 10, page 6, insert:

"Provided, That hereafter when it becomes necessary to make such per capita payments to Indians, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized to require any disbursing officer of the Indian Department to file a special bond in such amount as may be necessary to make such payment in one instalment, the expenses incurred in procuring such special bond to be paid by the United States from this appropriation."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. What is the reason for this amendment?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has been in former bills, but in this case it was stricken out in committee, as the gentleman will remember, on the theory that the provision heretofore adopted was a permanent statutory provision. Afterwards we discovered that such was not the case, and this amendment is now offered to remedy the omission.

The Clerk read as follows:

For necessary expenses of transportation of such goods, provisions, and [illegible] for the various tribes of Indians provided for by the act, including pay and expenses of transportation agents and rent of warehouses, [illegible]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

After the word "dollars" in line 7, page 8, add:

"Provided, That no portion thereof shall be expended for the location or maintenance of an Indian warehouse at any place other than Chicago and New York City."

Mr. Chairman, this does not affect the St. Louis or the San Francisco warehouse.

Mr. LACEY. I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can not reserve the point of order. I am perfectly willing that the point of order be passed upon.

Mr. SHERMAN. If the House should agree to certain sections of this bill which come in at a subsequent point, no part of this appropriation will be used for any warehouse elsewhere than at New York or Chicago. But if the committee should see fit, for instance, to strike out the appropriation for San Francisco, then it would be necessary, in order to administer properly the affairs of the Bureau, to take some portion of this sum to maintain, as has been the custom heretofore, the San Francisco warehouse. I therefore hope that the gentleman will not insist on the amendment, or if he should do so, I hope it will not prevail.

Mr. MANN. I had a notion, Mr. Chairman, that the committee would have no objection to the amendment. There are now only two warehouses supported out of this appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is right.

Mr. MANN. Those at San Francisco and St. Louis are carried in separate items.

Mr. SHERMAN. Of course; and if they should be agreed to I have no objection to this amendment.

Mr. MANN. Those items will undoubtedly remain in the bill, I presume.

Mr. SHERMAN. I trust so.

Mr. MANN. As the law now stands, the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner of Indian Affairs could locate forty warehouses throughout the country. And there are various places asking for the location of warehouses. It is a very delicate matter for the Secretary of the Interior or the Commissioner to refuse such applications, as the law now stands. The board has frequently recommended that there be no additional Indian warehouses; and unless it is the purpose to create new Indian warehouses, I can see no objection to this limitation. It does not affect anything that now exists.

Mr. SHERMAN. My objection, Mr. Chairman, is to limiting unnecessarily an administrative office of the Government. The Department does not desire to increase warehouses. It has heretofore reported against certain warehouses which have been specifically appropriated for in this bill. In my judgment it is not necessary to adopt this amendment in order to limit the number of warehouses.

I am not overserrnnons about the matter; I think it does not make any material difference, provided the subsequent provision for the warehouse at San Francisco, for instance, be adopted; but neither the gentleman from Illinois nor I can guarantee that that will be done.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman in charge of the bill knows perfectly well that if this House desires to retain the San Francisco warehouse that provision will be kept in the bill. As I understand, everybody admits that the San Francisco warehouse is necessary. But let me suggest that the committee leaves out the Omaha warehouse.

Mr. SHERMAN. The committee has passed upon that, and has authorized the introduction of a committee amendment providing for the insertion of that when the proper point in the bill is reached.

Mr. MANN. It has done that?

Mr. SHERMAN. It has.

Mr. MANN. Suppose that Omaha had remained out; the gentleman knows perfectly well that there would have been a terrible uproar for the location of the Omaha warehouse out of this fund.

Mr. SHERMAN. No doubt about it at all.

Mr. MANN. The fund would not be sufficient to maintain all of the warehouses. Now, the same uproar may come from some other place. We have now the five Indian warehouses—New York, St. Louis, Omaha, San Francisco, and Chicago. I name Chicago last because I am modest and because it does most of the business.

Mr. SHERMAN. It does more than any other, of course.

Mr. MANN. It does more than all the rest put together.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; but it does more than any other one.

Mr. MANN. I, of course, will except New York. Now, there will be new warehouses constantly demanded. The gentleman knows there is no specific appropriation either for New York City or Chicago.

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly, I know that.

Mr. MANN. St. Louis has a specific appropriation, and so have Omaha and San Francisco. I propose now practically to make the appropriation in behalf of Chicago, and I think the gentleman ought to take the same view in behalf of New York. We do not want the money that is really appropriated for those places taken away or give the power to take it away from those places and the power to put it in some other unknown place.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have no apprehension that any portion of this fund will ever be used for any other warehouses than those two——

Mr. MANN. Then what is the objection——

Mr. SHERMAN. Unless there is no specific provision for the San Francisco warehouse. If there is no specific appropriation for the San Francisco warehouse, the San Francisco warehouse must be maintained out of this appropriation.

Mr. MANN. There is a specific appropriation.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a specific appropriation suggested, but it is susceptible to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SHERMAN. I will take the time in opposition, then, and will yield to the gentleman to ask questions or to make a statement. This has been rather informal. I have occupied as much of the gentleman's time as he has, and I yield to him.

Mr. MANN. The only objection, as I understand, is that if the San Francisco item be stricken out then there ought to be provision for maintaining it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Correct.

Mr. MANN. If Congress should decide to strike out the San Francisco item, which has been in the bill heretofore, then it will have to be maintained.

Mr. SHERMAN. It never has been in the bill. San Francisco always has been maintained out of this general fund. It never has had a specific appropriation.

Mr. MANN. I am not in favor of striking it out myself, and I do not know anyone who is.

Mr. SHERMAN. But one man can do that.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to include San Francisco in the amendment, if that will obviate the gentleman's difficulty.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I suggest to the gentleman from Illinois that he make his amendment read so that no other warehouse than those existing at present shall be taken care of out of this fund.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. SHERMAN. Or if the gentleman will add San Francisco, I will not oppose the amendment.

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to add San Francisco.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. If you provide for New York and Chicago as you do in this provision, on pages 8 and 9, and if you specify San Francisco to be included, I would like to know whether that would prevent the House from adopting a specific appropriation for St. Louis.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. The specific provision which is provided for on page 32?

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. MANN. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But if you adopt your amendment, there would certainly be a contradiction between the two.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. MANN. I will say to the gentleman that the amendment only refers to the specified in that paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Two places where warehouse shall be established.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Out of this fund.

Mr. MANN. Simply out of that $30,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. If San Francisco is included, I shall not object.

Mr. MANN. San Francisco is now included.

Mr. CLARK. I want the gentleman to yield to me so that I may ask the gentleman from Chicago a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I yield to both gentlemen.

Mr. CLARK. The object of your contention is to knock out the St. Louis warehouse?

Mr. MANN. Oh, not at all. I have no idea that the St. Louis warehouse will be knocked out. I think St. Louis as well as Chicago is equally interested in this amendment. There are various places, a great many places, where they have been asking for these warehouses. It was first recommended that there ought to be only one or two, but it is very hard for the Department to decline these various invitations, and it ought not to be left in that indefinite way. I have no doubt that the St. Louis warehouse will be continued.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to add the words "San Francisco" to the amendment as originally reported. The Clerk will now report the amendment as changed.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, after the word "dollars," in line 7, page 8, the following: "Provided, That no portion thereof shall be expended on the location or maintenance of an Indian warehouse at any other places than San Francisco, Chicago, and St. Louis."

The CHAIRMAN. Now, the Chair understands the gentleman from Iowa to reserve a point of order?

Mr. LACEY. I do not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

KICKAPOOS IN KANSAS.

For interest on $65,878.77, at 5 per cent per annum, for educational and other beneficial purposes, per treaty of May 18, 1854, $3,293.93.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment in lieu of that provision, covering lines 17 to 22, inclusive.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of lines 17 to 22, inclusive, on page 12, insert the following:

"Interest on $65,878.77, at 5 per cent per annum, for educational and other beneficial purposes, per treaty of May 18, 1854, $3,293.93.

"The principal herein due the Kickapoos of the United States to pay the legal representatives of one Kickapoo Indian Kenapa, that died intestate, whose estate is directed under the provisions of section 2 of the act of August 4, 1886, such sum, as fairly the proportion of a certain fund now held and kept for education and other beneficial purposes, not exceeding $50.00." (See 24 Stats., p. 34, art. 2.)

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would like to know the name of that Indian.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is before the Clerk, and he has spelled it out. We provide that when an Indian dies his property shall be paid to his legal representative, and notice of the death of this particular Indian with the unpronounceable name reached the committee after the bill had been passed; hence the amendment is now offered.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For support and civilization of Yakimas, and other Indians at said agency, including pay of employees, $3,000.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I move to strike out the last word, so that I may have an opportunity to ask the chairman of the committee a question about this provision. My recollection is that the appropriation for this agency heretofore has been from $5,000 to $8,000 a year. Five thousand, I think, in the last bill, and $8,000 in the preceding bill. Will the chairman state why it is cut down to $3,000?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman is correct. It has been cut down. It was $5,000 last year. It was found that the amount was not expended, and it was not necessary. There have been considerable reductions made in the incidental expenses, but none were made until we had a statement of the expenditures of the various appropriations of last year, and in no instance have we put the appropriation below the amount that was actually expended last year, and that is the case here.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I know that the superintendent there has been complaining very much the last year or two about not having sufficient help. I know the duties of the superintendent——

Mr. SHERMAN. Where?

Mr. JONES of Washington. At the Yakima Agency.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is a change of the incidental expenses. It has nothing to do with the school appropriations.

Mr. JONES of Washington. It has nothing to do with the agency. I did not refer entirely to the school. You see, the agency has been done away with, and he has charge not only of the school but also of the other agency employees, and he has been complaining that he has not had sufficient assistance along the line of schools and also along the line of the general work there.

Mr. SHERMAN. We had no such statement as that before us; but we did have the Commissioner before us in reference to every one of these items. We had them to give us an exact statement of the amount expended under each item last year, and it was found that it was necessary and been expended and was expended. We cut it down. If the amount provided is a thousand dollars or more, we proposed the appropriation for the following year; but in no case have we made such a cut as that it would not be possible to carry on the work as it had been done last year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I was rather surprised to see this reduction, in view of what had been done heretofore; but, of course, if the Commissioner recommended to put it in at that, why, all right.

Mr. SHERMAN. He was consulted about every reduction we made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Wyoming: For general incidental expenses of the Indian service in Wyoming, including traveling expenses of agents, $1,000.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask to pass over the part of the bill relating to the Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. What is the request of the gentleman?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That we pass over that part of the bill relating to the Indian Territory.

Mr. SHERMAN. I second the request of the gentleman that we pass over the provisions relating to the Indian Territory in the bill until we have concluded the consideration of the rest of the bill, and that we can return to that.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I suggest to pass over to page 34, "Support of schools."

Mr. SHERMAN. Page 30 will do it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. In line 13, on page 30, we turn off on another matter.

Mr. CURTIS. Page 32 will do.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, beginning at the top of page 32, we will then pass all the provisions relating to the Indian Territory, and then we can go back, at the conclusion of the consideration of the bill, and take up the different items under that. I suggest we pass over all the items down to page 32.

Mr. MANN. Then I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the chairman of the committee will ask that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the request that the committee pass over that part of the bill in relation to the Indian Territory beginning on page 28 and going down to page 32. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For clerical work and stationery in the office of the United States surveyor-general located at Pierre within the Pine Ridge Indian Reservation, S. Dak., the sum of $1,000.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 11, on page 33, the following:

"For rent of warehouses, Neb., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, at a rate not to exceed $1,000, for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian service, $10,000."

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, this item——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will pardon me. I wish he would have this item passed without prejudice if it is the desire of the committee to sit any longer.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HINSHAW. Just a moment. I prefer to have this item passed at the same time with similar items in the bill.

Mr. MANN. Well, I have no objection as far as that is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice down to line 20 on page 33.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would ask first whether the gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order.

Mr. MANN. No, sir; I do not make the point of order. I do not think it is subject to the point of order.

Mr. HINSHAW. I do not think it will take us long to dispose of it.

Mr. MANN. I think it will take some little time, if the committee give me the time I desire. I understand they want to get through the bill as fast as possible.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to pass over without prejudice for the time being down to line 20 on page 33.

Mr. LIVERNASH. If you pass over that, do I understand it will be without prejudice to the items therein, and you will return to it?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The items covering the St. Louis and San Francisco warehouses also are to be passed over without prejudice for the time being. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of one special attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $1,500, and for necessary traveling and incidental expenses of said attorney for the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico, $500; in all, $2,000.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the time for opening the unallotted lands to public entry on said Uinta Reservation, as provided by the act of May 27, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1904.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I believe that is a committee amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is a committee amendment and recommended by the Department.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I will insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior in reference to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter from the Secretary of the Interior. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 6, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: Referring to the following provision contained in the Indian appropriation act approved March 3, 1903:

"That the time for opening the unallotted lands to public entry on said Uintah Reservation as provided by the act of May 27, 1902, be, and the same is hereby, extended to October 1, 1904."

I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of a report of the 4th instant from the Commissioner of the General Land Office stating that it will require the whole of the next surveying season to complete the survey of this reservation.

After the completion of these surveys some 1,000 allotments are to be made. This will require at least three or four months or probably longer, as the act of May 27, 1902, provides that the allotments shall be approximate and which can be prepared, and if be allowed the next surveying season is required to complete the survey the allotments can not be made before the 1st of October, 1904. I have, therefore, the honor to request that the date for said opening be extended for one year from October 1, 1904.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, February 4, 1904.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I am in receipt of departmental letter of the 3d instant, inquiring as to the possible time necessary to complete the survey of the Uintah Indian Reservation, in view of the opening on October 1, 1904, of the unallotted lands therein to public entry as provided in the acts of May 27, 1902, and March 3, 1903.

You state that it is the desire of the Department to bring to the attention of Congress the necessity for the extension of the time for said opening, unless this office be satisfied that the surveys will be completed in ample time to have the allotments made before October 1, 1904.

In reply I have the honor to state that owing to the necessary preliminaries, such as the organization of parties, contracts, and preparation of instructions, the surveys were not ready to be started until in August last, having but a short season for their completion in the extensive region embracing the reservation. I am informed approximately 1,000 contracting surveyors have completed about three-fourths of the exterior lines of the township work in the field, the office work of the latter, and the subdivision of the interior lines of the field remaining, and the office computation have yet to be performed, and I am of the opinion that the whole of the field survey cannot, and that the date of said opening should be postponed at least another year.

Very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to withhold from the amount appropriated by act of February 9, 1903, to pay judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the New York Indians at additional sum not exceeding $5,000 to defray the expenses of the employment of expenses necessary in ascertaining the beneficiaries of said judgment.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, an appropriation was made better than two years ago to pay a judgment of about $2,000,000 obtained by the New York Indians. There has been a dispute as to who were the beneficiaries under that judgment. An investigation has been made to determine who they were, but that investigation has not been concluded, and more money is needed to conclude that investigation, and for that purpose the Department asks that this item be included in the bill and, without reading it, I will insert a letter from the Department on the subject.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 26, 1904.

Hon. JAMES S. SHERMAN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a draft of an item of legislation which is necessary in order to complete the enrollment of the Indians interested in the distribution of the fund arising from the judgment of the Court of Claims of November 14, 1898, in favor of the New York Indians, which is supplemental to a similar item contained in the act of March 3, 1903, page 1058 of the Statutes.

In the fund appropriated in the act of March 2, 1901, $10,000 of the said judgment is placed at the disposal of the Secretary of the Interior to meet the necessary expenses in ascertaining the beneficiaries of said judgment. The work so now partly completed and the work has not yet been completed, and an additional appropriation of $5,000 from the same fund is asked for in order to complete the work.

The work begun in ascertaining the beneficiaries of said judgment has greatly exceeded all expectations. It was known that the claimants were widely scattered, and therefore very extensive advertisements had to be made in order to give the proper notice to all parties in the tribe claiming, but the number of those claimants far exceeded all estimates, and applications have been filed from nearly all the States from Massachusetts to California.

In addition to the names of such Indians as are regularly enrolled for annuities, some thirty-four hundred applications have been filed, making claims for approximately [illegible] Indians. [illegible] of whom have to be considered [illegible] of the fund, [illegible] would have to be considered [illegible] claimant [illegible] rights through two tribes, and if his claim was found to be [illegible] in one it would still have to be considered in connection with the other.

The Re[illegible] Indians have particularly caused an extraordinary amount of work. These tribes are [illegible] Buffalo Creek of Jamesville, N. Y., which was the [illegible] of all the tribes, composed of about [illegible] individuals, and there have been [illegible] as independent Indians, [illegible] about 2,000 individuals, who now claim as the tribe with Indians. These tribes have had no relations with the United States for over sixty years, and there was therefore no information which they could [illegible] in the investigation, and no enrollment of any kind had been made of the tribe since 1840. It will be readily seen that the difficulties arising from the determination of the rights of these various claimants have been very great.

Another tribe that has also given special trouble is the St. Regis tribe, of New York, which has never received annuities from the United States and there was no enrollment of the tribe in the Department of the Interior. This tribe now numbers some 1,[illegible] Indians, and there were a large number of applications filed by parties claiming as St. Regis Indians who claims have been marked for rejection.

Considerable difficulty has arisen in the consideration of the claims of the so-called mixed bloods, growing out of the fact that there have been several divisions in the tribe, portions of which having, at different times since the treaty of Buffalo Creek of 1838, become citizens of the United States, while the rights of such parties have been preserved by various acts of Congress.

In order to adequately consider the questions arising, it became necessary for the special agent of this office in charge of this work to visit the various reservations in New York and Wisconsin, to investigate on the ground the rights of certain individuals and families, and to have determined the tribal relations which existed at the several tribes, as the Department of the Interior has determined that the fund was to be regarded as tribal, the right to participate in which would be dependent upon residence in the tribe, except in such cases as the rights of persons have been fixed by treaties had been expressly preserved by acts of Congress. In the course of this investigation a large number of the St. Regis Indians were found to exist who were unknown to the agent and whose rights were not covered by the rolls of the tribe, which, it was necessary for the agent to return, thus bringing to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior, who by request [illegible] a further ruling bearing upon the distribution of this fund, and it became necessary to reexamine a large proportion of the applications filed by the Kansas Indians.

Another particular form has developed in the course of the investigation which have resulted in some [illegible] of the Secretary of the Interior, which have had involved a reexamination of a considerable number of applications of the claimants of the Indian tribes.

One of these matters has reference to those Indians who went out to the New York Indian Reservation in Kansas under the terms of the treaty of 1838 and who attempted to settle upon the said reservation, but who based their claims upon the action of the United States and were compelled by stress of circumstances to join other tribes. These parties, having never attempted to carry out the provisions of the said treaty of 1838 upon their own members of the tribe were, under the literal construction of the original decision of the Secretary of the Interior, excluded from participating in the judgment, for the reason that they had become [illegible] and the general rule had been laid down that no Indian who had received benefits as a member of another tribe should be entitled to share in the judgment. When the attention of the parties concerned was called to the attention of the Secretary of the Interior, [illegible] as to direct that such a part [illegible] be made [illegible] by force to authorize the [illegible] of the Secretary of the Interior [illegible]

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills and joint resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 569. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse B. Nurse—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 556. An act granting an increase of pension to William Stall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 454. An act granting an increase of pension to Rinaldo M. Griswold—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 450. An act granting an increase of pension to George H. Sutherland—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 447. An act granting an increase of pension to David H. George—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 398. An act granting an increase of pension to Phebe A. Ford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 336. An act granting an increase of pension to William Lechleidner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 305. An act granting an increase of pension to John R. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 236. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Jackson Power—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 140. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel B. Bailey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 106. An act granting an increase of pension to Carrie Wages—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 2857. An act granting an increase of pension to Onne H. Ropka—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2690. An act granting an increase of pension to James Garry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2661. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Klingler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2655. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac Zellers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2348. An act granting an increase of pension to Hamilton S. Gillespie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2320. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Legrow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2058. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob A. Roof—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2029. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter P. Dobozy—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1959. An act granting a pension to Mary Remington—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1899. An act granting an increase of pension to Thompson Warren—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1764. An act granting an increase of pension to John Shehan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1657. An act granting a pension to Stalnaker Marteney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1661. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Riley—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 1436. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Wentworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1423. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Murry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1394. An act granting an increase of pension to Lewis M. Webster—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 1388. An act granting an increase of pension to Orson H. Sawtelle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 885. An act granting a pension to Sarah A. Gillham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 827. An act granting an increase of pension to Elias S. Gibson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 783. An act granting an increase of pension to William McGee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4455. An act granting an increase of pension to Ansel J. Busby—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4454. An act granting an increase of pension to John Seiler—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4371. An act granting a pension to Alison Clifton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4349. An act granting an increase of pension to Laura Ann Seaton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4339. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Nesmith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4317. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Augur—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4285. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Shands—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4284. An act granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Hankins—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4254. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Collingwood—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4246. An act granting an increase of pension to Louis Groverman—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 4237. An act granting a pension to Hannah Small Wiggin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 4078. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas B. Steele—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3979. An act granting an increase of pension to Sterling L. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3978. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Howard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3977. An act granting an increase of pension to Luther S. Baker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3946. An act granting an increase of pension to Jesse Bright—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3936. An act granting an increase of pension to Sylvania S. Cheney—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3896. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard F. Nugent—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3879. An act granting an increase of pension to Cyrus Q. Lemmond—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3878. An act granting an increase of pension to George Coffee—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3860. An act granting a pension to James Henry Martineau—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3833. An act granting an increase of pension to George T. Edwards—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3827. An act granting an increase of pension to Norman B. Davenport—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3774. An act granting an increase of pension to John C. Felton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3771. An act granting an increase of pension to Virginia C. Spencer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3727. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli Headley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3690. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Gregory—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3654. An act granting a pension to Hannah Hall—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3573. An act granting an increase of pension to Calvin E. Myers—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3544. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Phillips—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3535. An act granting an increase of pension to John Walton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3523. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Butz—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3519. An act granting a pension to Ruby A. Stirdivant—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3500. An act granting an increase of pension to Orrin L. Mann—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3499. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Lookingbill—to the Committee Invalid Pensions.

S. 3491. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Howe—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3417. An act granting a pension to Garrett V. Chamberlin—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3457. An act granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. Parker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3394. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Crawford—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3377. An act granting an increase of pension to John M. Tyree—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3201. An act granting an increase of pension to James I. Shafer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2971. An act granting a pension to Amelia Walsh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2960. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Horning—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2952. An act granting an increase of pension to William J. P. Buck—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2946. An act granting an increase of pension to Joshua Day—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2938. An act granting an increase of pension to James L. Ackley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2937. An act granting an increase of pension to Julius Bodenstab—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2894. An act granting a pension to Clara J. Garretson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2872. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert Schermerhorn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2871. An act granting an increase of pension to Justin M. Cooper—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 2263. An act to require the employment of vessels of the United States for public purposes.

Joint resolution (S. R. 55) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to print an extra edition of the map of the United States for 1903, and making the appropriation for maps made in the acts of April 17, 1900, and of March 3, 1901, available for that purpose—to the Committee on Printing.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting a report of the operations of the excise board for the license year ended October 31, 1903—to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of appropriation for equipment of mint at Denver—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing the report of the Venezuela arbitrations—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting an estimate of appropriations for dedication of the statue of Frederick the Great—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting the reply of the Director of the Census to the inquiry of the House as to employees, expenditures, etc., in the Census Bureau—to the Committee on Census, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. FOSTER of Illinois, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10007) to authorize the Commissioner of the General Land Office to transmit original papers to be used as evidence, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1384); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DAVEY of Louisiana, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12444) to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River, near Gilbertsville, Ky., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1385); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ESCH, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9871) to authorize the Buckhannon and Northern Railroad Company, a corporation under the laws of the State of West Virginia, to build a bridge across the Monongahela River near the town of Rivesville, in the State of West Virginia, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1386); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House H. R. 12689, reported in lieu thereof a bill (H. R. 13480) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River, in Vigo County, Ind., accompanied by a report (No. 1387); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolution of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LUCKING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12965) granting an increase of pension to William H. Dailey, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1335); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12461) granting an increase of pension to Milton Graham, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1336); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12452) granting an increase of pension to John A. McNerney, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1337); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12102) granting a pension to Lavall C. Obarr, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1338); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12034) granting an increase of pension to James T. McKinstry, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1339); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11846) granting an increase of pension to David Kinsey, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1340); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11615) granting an increase of pension to Socrates Moore, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1341); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11498) granting an increase of pension to William A. Porter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1342); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10974) granting an increase of pension to Robert Conn, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1343); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10941) granting an increase of pension to Mary Dougherty, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1344); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10845) granting an increase of pension to John C. Webb, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1345); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10798) granting a pension to James H. Allen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1346); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10340) granting an increase of pension to George F. Majors, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1347); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LUCKING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9862) granting a pension to Mary Yaw, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1348); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9792) granting a pension to Fanny Tracy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1349); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9574) granting an increase of pension to John H. Lennon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1350); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9562) granting a pension to Warren R. Herrell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1351); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8283) granting an increase of pension to Henry Herkes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1352); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7773) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Thoroman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1353); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7517) granting an increase of pension to Lemuel N. Bishop, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1354); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7487) granting an increase of pension to Francis Knapp, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1355); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7364) granting an increase of pension to Leonard M. Johnson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1356); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6973) granting an increase of pension to Simeon Billings, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1357); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6991) granting a pension to Sarah A. McCann, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1358); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6858) granting an increase of pension to Nelson Hart, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1359); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6088) granting an increase of pension to Marshall Howell, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1360); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6062) granting an increase of pension to Alvin Gray, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1361); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5912) granting an increase of pension to Alexander S. Bowen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1362); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5[illegible]) granting an increase of pension to Mary Irene Rosenthal, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1363); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5846) granting a pension to Carrie K. Baker, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1364); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5107) granting an increase of pension to John W. Kling, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1365); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5055) granting an increase of pension to Woodson R. Daniel, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1366); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4990) granting a pension to Georgia R. Demarest, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1367); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4877) granting an increase of pension to Mathias C. Mills, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1368); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LUCKING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4623) granting a pension to Electa L. Willard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1369); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4599) granting a pension to Ella F. Whitehead, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1370); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4353) granting an increase of pension to George Brown, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1371); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4938) granting an increase of pension to Jason H. Masterson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1372); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4280) granting an increase of pension to Jasper M. Griggs, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. [illegible]); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3533) granting an increase of pension to Capt. R. H. McIlroy, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1374); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3013) granting an increase of pension to James M. Hurley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1375); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2922) granting an increase of pension to George W. Ford, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1376); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2144) granting a pension to Myrtie B. Poole, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1377); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1568) granting an increase of pension to James V. Tabor, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1378); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 732) granting an increase of pension to John L. B. Thompson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1379); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 728) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Evans, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1380); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 360) granting an increase of pension to Mary Lucetta Arnold, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1381); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10406) to authorize a duplicate medal to be struck off and presented to John Horn, of Detroit, Mich., for life saving, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. [illegible]); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 2173) granting a pension to Sarah A. Sullivan—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12346) for the relief of Maria J. Blaisdell, widow of William Blaisdell, deceased—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HEPBURN: A bill (H. R. 13468) concerning receipts and bills of lading issued by common carriers engaged in interstate commerce relating to property transported in such commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SULZER: A bill (H. R. 13469) to establish a Department of Labor—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 13470) to amend an act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. PERKINS: A bill (H. R. 13471) to amend the act relating to the printing and the distribution of public documents, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Printing.

By Mr. BENNY: A bill (H. R. 13472) to bridge the Newark Bay—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. BELL of California: A bill (H. R. 13473) to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Santa Rosa, in the State of California—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. DOUGLAS (by request): A bill (H. R. 13474) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also (by request), a bill (H. R. 13475) to amend an act entitled "An act to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States," approved March 3, 1903—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 13476) validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BEDE: A bill (H. R. 13477) to provide for the construction and equipment of a revenue cutter for service in Lake Superior and adjacent waters—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 13478) to establish and administer national parks, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MAHONEY: A bill (H. R. 13479) to amend an act relating to the sale of gas in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce: A bill (H. R. 13480) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River, in Vigo County, Ind.—to the House Calendar.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13481) to ratify and amend an agreement with the Indians residing on the Shoshone or Wind River Indian Reservation, in the State of Wyoming, and to make appropriations for carrying the same into effect—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LIVERNASH: A bill (H. R. 13482) providing for establishing and maintaining at San Francisco, Cal., a permanent warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LOUD: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 125) relative to the colonial martyrs monument in Wawatam Park, at the Straits of Mackinaw, in the State of Michigan—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. ROBERTSON of Louisiana: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 126) providing for the extension of the time for the removal of the temporary dam and construction of locks in Bayou Lafourche, State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. SOUTHALL: A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 127) to furnish Members of the Fifty-eighth Congress copies of the Records of the War of the Rebellion—to the Committee on Printing.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BRANDEGEE: A bill (H. R. 13483) for the relief of Lewis Poessel—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13484) for the relief of certain enlisted men of the Navy—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: A bill (H. R. 13485) granting an increase of pension to William Glasgow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: A bill (H. R. 13486) granting an increase of pension to Henry Hovey—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CASSEL: A bill (H. R. 13487) granting an increase of pension to Eliza Ann Sanno—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CUSHMAN: A bill (H. R. 13488) for the relief of Matilda Elizabeth West—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. DWIGHT: A bill (H. R. 13489) granting a pension to D. M. Allen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DALZELL: A bill (H. R. 13490) granting an increase of pension to Henry Good—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEEMER: A bill (H. R. 13491) granting an increase of pension to Obediah Richmond—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DINSMORE: A bill (H. R. 13492) for the relief of the heirs of Matthias Price, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 13493) for the relief of John G. Wetzel—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GREGG: A bill (H. R. 13494) granting a pension to Cader B. Brent—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13495) granting a pension to Henry Landon—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 13496) to restore Berry Werse to the pension roll—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILDEBRANT: A bill (H. R. 13497) granting a pension to Margaret F. Randolph—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL of Mississippi: A bill (H. R. 13498) granting an increase of pension to William G. Marshall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13499) granting a pension to Otto Boeswetter—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOGG: A bill (H. R. 13500) granting a pension to William W. Ferguson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13501) granting a pension to James L. Townsend—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13502) for the relief of William Morehead—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 13503) granting an increase of pension to Catherine J. Hill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 13504) granting an increase of pension to James F. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13505) for the relief of Nancy Peck, of Marion County, Tenn.—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. OLMSTED: A bill (H. R. 13506) granting a pension to Hannah A. Krause—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OTIS: A bill (H. R. 13507) granting an increase of pension to John M. Sullivan—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13508) granting an increase of pension to Henry T. Howell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 13509) authorizing the Secretary of War to transfer to the Columbia Military Academy certain property in Maury County, Tenn.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 13510) to remove the charge of mutiny from the record of David Boyd—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13511) for the relief of Adam Ault—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 13512) granting a pension to Charles E. Rogers—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13513) granting a pension to Sarah P. McIntee—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 13514) for the relief of the city of Key West, Fla.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 13515) granting an increase of pension to Adam W. Grossley—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARNER: A bill (H. R. 13516) granting an increase of pension to Sewal A. Edwards—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 13517) for the relief of James H. Ambler—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD: A bill (H. R. 13518) granting an increase of pension to Chester R. Heath—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13519) to correct the military record of Richard R. Sprague and grant him an honorable discharge—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of residents of Sheldon, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Colonel Albert D. Shaw Circle, No. 10, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Protestant Church, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Resolution of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Chenango Bridge, N. J., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALLEN: Petition of George W. Norton and 210 others, of Portland, Westbrook, Kennebunk, and Kennebunkport, Me., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BENNY: Petition of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Bayonne, N. J., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the New Jersey legislature, relative to improving the Passaic River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, papers to accompany bill H. R. 5087, granting a pension to Annie Hosche—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BONYNGE: Petition of the Free Methodist Church of Boulder, Colo., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Iliff Sunday School, of Iliff, Colo., relative to the repeal of the anticanteen law—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Iliff Sunday School, of Iliff, Colo., relative to nullification of State liquor laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Mount Olivet Baptist Church, of Denver, Colo., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Mount Olivet Baptist Church, of Denver, Colo., relative to anticanteen legislation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BRANDEGEE: Petitions of H. C. Lathrop and 48 other voters of Windham, and George P. Phenix and 49 other voters of Willimantic, all in Connecticut, for passage of Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin: Petition of John F. Dufur and 48 others, of Ashland, Wis., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BROWNLOW: Resolutions of J. C. Giffin Post, No. 77; McKinley Post, No. 106; Robert A. Hood Post, No. 28; R. S. Kimbrick Post, No. 63; Meade Post, No. 75; Walter Harriman Post, No. 94; Ed Maynard Post, No. 14, and J. H. Franklin Post, No. 50, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Tennessee, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURKE: Petition of F. D. Tyler and 26 others, of Loomis, S. Dak., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petitions of R. F. Dunton and 19 others, of Belfast, Me.; Clarence H. Smith and 7 others, of Waldo, Me., and Howard W. Elwell and 9 others, of Northport, Me., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: Petition of Independent Order of Good Templars of Kansas, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of James Shields Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wellington, Kans., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Presbyterian Church societies of Hebron, Kans., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: Petition of Lodge No. 221, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of Pittsburg, Kans., relative to bill S. 2259 and sundry House bills—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of patrons of rural route No. 3, of Cherryvale, Kans., relative to increase of salary for rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. CANNON: Papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Josie C. Thomas—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAPRON: Petitions of George W. King and 28 others, of Johnston, R. I., and O. U. Whitford and 27 others, of Westerly, R. I., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CASSEL: Memorial of the Nottingham Quarterly Meeting of the Society of Friends, held at Little Britain, Pa., composed of 800 members, for the passage of the Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURTIS: Petition of patrons of rural route No. 1, of White Cloud, Kans., relative to increase of salary for rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, resolutions of J. L. Bliss Circle, No. 64, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Atchison, Kans.; petition of soldiers of Norton, Kans., and resolutions of Nathan Price Post, No. 288, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wathena, Kans., and Mayflower Circle, No. 80, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Senery, Kans., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of W. H. Marshall and 48 others, of Nortonville, Kans.; Independent Order of Good Templars of Kansas, and Christian Endeavor Society of the Congregational Church, Topeka, Kans., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DALZELL: Petition of the Presbyterian Church of Wilkinsburg, Pa., for the passage of the Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, papers to accompany bill to increase pension of Henry Good—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of the National League of Commission Merchants, relating to powers of Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. DAYTON: Petitions of C. H. Rictor and 39 others, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Grafton, W. Va.; W. L. Snyder and 22 others, of Valley Head, W. Va., and J. W. Pool and 35 others, of Flemington, W. Va., and vicinity, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of N. I. Wolfe and 58 others, of Flemington, W. Va.—to the Committee on ———.

By Mr. DINSMORE: Petition of D. C. Shannon, of Cherokee City, Ark., for a parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, four petitions of T. H. Bowan and others, of Siloam Springs, Ark., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DOUGLAS: Petition of Julius Wile and others, against the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Rev. Richard Hartley and 21 others, of New York City, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DRAPER: Petition of residents of rural route No. 4, of Troy, N. Y., relative to increase of salary for rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. ESCH: Resolution of the Wisconsin Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, relative to a bill to regulate the carriage of interstate freight, etc.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, papers to accompany bill H. R. 9017, granting a pension to Gertrude Howard—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Memorial of Deere & Co. and others, of Moline, Ill., in favor of the improvement of Kaw Valley—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of John Buell and 19 others, of Rockford, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARDNER of New Jersey: Resolutions of Phil Kearny Post, No. 1, of Newark; T. A. Sharp Post, No. 2, of Millville; G. Van Hauten Post, No. 3, of Jersey City; James A. Garfield Post, No. 4, of Newark; T. M. K. Lee Post, No. 5, of Camden; J. C. Shinn Post, No. 6, of Port Norris; George C. Meade Post, No. 7, of Bloomfield; Bayard Post, No. 8, of Trenton; Lyon Post, No. 10, of Vineland; Lincoln Post, No. 11, of Newark; U. Dodd Post, No. 12, of Orange; Henry Wilson Post, No. 13, of Jersey City; Ellsworth Post, No. 14, of Union; Kearney Janeway Post, No. 15, of New Brunswick; Parker Grubb Post, No. 16, of Burlington; Sedgwick Post, No. 18, of Hackettstown; Major Angel Post, No. 20, of Lambertsville; Mansfield Post, No. 22, of Bayonne; Aaron Wilks Post, No. 23, of Trenton; A. T. Torbert Post, No. 24, of Morristown; Ulic Dahlgren Post, No. 25, of Elizabeth; W. F. Barry Post, No. 27, of Rahway; Farragut Post, No. 28, of Paterson; George H. Thomas Post, No. 29, of Jersey City; General Howell Post, No. 31, of Woodbury; Joe Hooker Post, No. 32, of Atlantic; Acton Post, No. 33, of Penngrove; Hexanner Post, No. 34, of Newark; Chaplain Butler Post, No. 35, of Paterson; Van Leer Post, No. 36, of Gloucester; W. B. Hatch Post, No. 37, of Camden; Zulavski Post, No. 38, of Jersey City; Bartlett Post, No. 39, of Caldwell; C. K. Hall Post, No. 41, of Asbury Park; E. G. Brown Post, No. 44, of Hoboken; Washington Post, No. 45, of Bordentown; James B. Morris Post, No. 46, of Long Branch; J. G. Tohnie Post, No. 50, of Phillipsburg; W. P. Robeson Post, No. 51, of Camden; J. B. McPherson Post, No. 52, of Rahway; Major Delaney Post, No. 53, Atlantic City; J. McCavitt Post, No. 54, Dover; General Slocum Post, No. 55, Paterson; W. S. Pierson Post, No. 58, Bloomfield; Arrowsmith Post, No. 61, Red Bank; General Stahel Post, No. 62, Egg Harbor; Conover Post, No. 63, Freehold; Kilpatrick Post, No. 64, Elizabeth; I. M. Tucker Post, No. 65, Newark; John F. Reynolds Post, No. 66, Washington; R. Boggs Post, No. 67, New Brunswick; Russell Post, No. 68, Hammerton; Johnson Post, No. 69, Salem; W. Scott Post, No. 73, Plainfield; General Wadsworth Post, No. 75, Somerville; Frank Lloyd Post, No. 79, South River; Wagner Post, No. 81, Hoboken; Stratton Post, No. 82, Milltown; Bell Springfield Post, No. 83, Keyport; Berry Post, No. 85, Woodbridge; Arnold Post, No. 87, Point Pleasant; M. L. Ward Post, No. 88, Newark; General Smythe Post, No. 89, Elmer; Steadman Post, No. 90, Fenwick; Wheeler Post, No. 94, Montclair; E. H. Wade Post, No. 96, Millburn; Walker Post, No. 98, Branchville; Sherman Post, No. 100, Bayonne; Paul Post, No. 101, Westwood; J. A. Logan Post, No. 102, Camden; Dwight Post, No. 103, Englewood; Hancock Post, No. 107, Hightstown; Weart Post, No. 108, Englewood; Sheridan Post, No. 110, Newark; Sherman Post, No. 113, Cape May City; Fiske Post, No. 114, Highlands; U. S. Grant Post, No. 117, Samut, and Caillaux Post, No. 119, Asbury Park, all in New Jersey, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of 4 citizens of Maple Shade, N. J.; pastor and 113 members of the Baptist Church of Jacobstown, N. J.; pastor and 200 members of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Newport, N. J.; pastor and 251 members of the Berean Baptist Church, of Bridgeton, N. J., and pastor and 160 members of the Baptist Church of Dividing Creek, N. J., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GARDNER of Michigan: Petition of Immanuel Holiness Church, of Battle Creek, Mich., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. GIBSON: Petitions of A. H. Legg and 7 others; Rev. T. P. Summers, president of the ministerial meeting; Ed. M. Grant, mayor; the board of aldermen, and other officials, all of Morristown, Tenn., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAMLIN: Petitions of Rev. B. F. Flanery and 5 others, Rev. J. C. T. Woods and 15 others, J. E. Millette and 21 others, W. S. Banks and 13 others, W. L. Costay and 34 others, D. E. Cloud and 25 others, and Nellie Tupper and 25 others, all of Missouri, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, paper to accompany bill granting a pension to Berry Weese—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of Captain John Mathews Post, No. 69, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Missouri, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HASKINS: Petition of Andrew J. Pinney and others, of West Bridgewater, Vt., in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Plainfield, Vt.; Rev. H. R. Miles and 17 others, of Brattleboro, Vt., and the Vermont Anti-Saloon League, in favor of the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAUGEN: Petition of citizens of McGregor, Iowa, against a parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of citizens of Northwood, Iowa, and M. D. Mack and 9 others, of Lincoln, Iowa, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HAY: Paper to accompany claim of Mrs. Anne M. Brown—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HENRY of Connecticut: Petition of John B. Smith and 55 others, of New Britain, Conn., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HENRY of Texas: Petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and 12 others, and Andrew C. Dunn and 43 others, of Rosebud, Tex., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HILDEBRANT: Petition of patrons of sundry rural routes of Ohio, relative to increase of salary for rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HILL of Connecticut: Petition of George F. Carr and 17 others, of Terryville, Conn., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Mrs. Helen Whitehead and others, of Washington, Conn., in favor of establishing a forest reserve in the White Mountains—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HILL of Mississippi: Petition of R. V. McDonald and 20 others, of Jefferson, Miss., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HITT: Petitions of citizens of Cedarville, Ill., and members of the faculty and students of Steinman College, Dixon, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Colonel Albert D. Shaw Circle, No. 10, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of 86 residents of Dakota, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOGG: Petitions of H. M. Corey and 57 others, of Olathe, Colo., and J. R. McGill and 56 others and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, of Pueblo, Colo., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HOLSTON: Petitions of J. W. Balderston and 23 others and William F. Hersey and 25 others, of Seaford, Del., and the New Castle Institute, of South Wilmington, Del., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JAMES: Petition of E. L. Harris and others, of Graves County, Ky., in favor of bill H. R. 3574—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KEHOE: Petition of Frank C. Taylor and others, of Carlisle, Ky., in favor of a parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KELLIHER: Memorial of the board of supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, relative to Tuolumne River and Lake Eleanor reservoir rights of way—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the Grain Dealers' National Association, relative to inspection of grain at terminal markets—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the Boston Chamber of Commerce, relative to arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Boston Dry Goods Association, relative to arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Boston Fruit and Produce Exchange, relative to enlarging powers of Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, in favor of a light house on Outer Diamond Shoal, North Carolina—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, relative to legislation for the improvement of the Bedford (Mass.) Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of Friedrick Hecker Post, No. 21, Grand Army of the Republic, of Boston, Mass., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, in favor of bills H. R. 3559 and 3562, providing for improvement of Bronx Kills and Harlem River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the National Board of Trade, in favor of extension of the navigation laws to Philippine commerce—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, relative to the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, relative to reforms in postal rates and system—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of D. Cady Eaton, of New Haven, Conn., in favor of the bill to regulate corporations—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, relative to the destruction of derelicts in North Atlantic waters—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of the Massachusetts State Board of Trade, relative to the reorganization of the consular service—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Gloucester Board of Trade, in favor of bill H. R. 7056—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN: Petitions of J. R. Underhill and 26 others, of North Carolina; J. F. McCulloch and 82 others, of Greensboro, N. C., and A. R. Webster and 54 others, of Reidsville, N. C., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KNAPP: Resolution of Port Leyden (N. Y.) Grange, No. 562, Patrons of Husbandry, in favor of bill H. R. 9297—to the Committee on Education.

Also, resolution of E. B. Steele Post, No. 269, Grand Army of the Republic, of Carthage, N. Y., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LACEY: Resolution of Charlton Post, No. 142, Grand Army of the Republic, of Richland, Iowa, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of S. E. Sinder and others, of Ollie, Iowa, against the parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. LESTER: Petition of Rev. G. B. Whatley and 100 others, of Savannah, Ga., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Petition of Booth Tucker, commander of the Salvation Army, in favor of bill creating a colonization bureau, etc.—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: Petitions of Rev. H. B. Tilden and 24 others, of Waldoboro, Me., and Hon. A. M. Penley and 58 others, of Auburn, Me., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LIVERNASH: Resolution of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, in favor of granting an American register to the British bark Pyrenees—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, in favor of extending coastwise regulations over vessels flying between the Philippines and American ports—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of the San Francisco Chamber of Commerce, relative to Siuslaw Harbor, Oregon—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of Phelps Squadron, No. 12, United States Veteran Navy, in favor of bill S. 3014—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolution of the Board of Trade of San Bernardino, Cal., opposing joint statehood of Arizona with New Mexico—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. LLOYD: Petitions of R. B. Sanford and 25 others, of Newark, Mo., and H. B. Yaconbi and 20 others, of La Belle, Mo., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Paddy Shields Post, No. 36, Grand Army of the Republic, of Clarence, Mo., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MCMORRAN: Petition of F. E. Titers and 50 others, of Detroit, Mich., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MARSHALL: Petition of business men and citizens of Litchville, N. Dak., against passage of a parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. MAYNARD: Petitions of Rev. J. W. Nicholson and 41 others, of York County, Va., and P. S. Simpkins and 19 others, of Tanners Creek, Va., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Papers to accompany a bill granting an increase of pension to James F. Campbell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of S. H. Taylor and 15 other voters, of Maxwell, Tenn.; J. L. Baker and 9 other voters, E. L. Catlens and 48 voters, and S. M. Alexander and 15 other voters, of Winchester, Tenn., for the Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of nineteen Grand Army of the Republic posts in Tennessee, for the passage of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. OLMSTED: Petition of the legislative board of Friends of America, praying for the passage of bill H. R. 4072—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. OTIS: Petition of the Port Chester (N. Y.) Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Peekskill, Genesee, and Ossining, N. Y., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PAGE: Petition of W. H. Lassiter and 58 others, of Cedar Grove, N. C., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. POWERS of Maine: Petition of Henry N. Pringle and 40 others, of Whitneyville and Eastport, Me., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RAINEY: Petition of residents of Washington, D. C., in favor of bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of residents of Kinderhook, Ill., against passage of a parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. REEDER: Petitions of T. J. Ireland and 126 others, of Woodston, Kans.; C. D. Post and 22 others, of Asheville, Kans., and G. W. Buell and 31 others, of Logan and Wichita counties, Kans., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Arkansas: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 11938, for the relief of Thomas J. Estes—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. RYAN: Resolution of the Lake Seaman's Union of Buffalo, N. Y., in favor of House bill to prohibit employment on vessels of persons not entitled to admission into the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SHERMAN: Petition of P. H. Elwood and 24 others, of Stark, N. Y., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNOOK: Petitions of N. Boehm and W. R. Stone, rural route No. 3; D. M. Milholland, W. I. Dickey, and R. G. Carr, rural route No. 6; James McCague, J. M. Morris, J. E. Randolph, and B. C. Zell, rural route No. 5; John Hoeldrich, rural route No. 3; O. S. Mansfield, David Fullmer, and Samuel Sanford, rural route No. 4; S. M. Shirley and Henry Schoonover, rural route No. 6, of Defiance, Ohio; and H. H. Lattanner, rural route No. 2, of Montpelier, Ohio, favoring increase of salary of rural carriers to $850 per annum—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of John T. Mumea and J. F. Smith, of Columbus Grove, Ohio, favoring passage of bill to pension all Union ex-prisoners of war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPERRY: Petitions of William McGibbon and others, of Ansonia, Conn.; Rev. F. B. Stockdale and 42 others, and Rev. Oscar Harwood and 64 others, of Waterbury, Conn., and J. D. Roberts, jr., and 2 others, of Meriden, Conn., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota: Letter of Hugh H. Henry, national commander, Army and Navy Union, United States of America, in favor of bill H. R. 11581, providing for retirement of enlisted men of the Army, etc.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolution of the Fifth Annual Supervisors' Highway Convention, of New York, in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the executive committee of the National German-American Alliance, against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the International Reform Bureau, in favor of Sunday closing of the Lewis and Clark Exposition—to the Select Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions.

Also, petition of the Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders of America, in favor of bill S. 2259 and sundry House bills—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of Brooklyn Council, No. 165, United Commercial Travelers of America, in favor of an amendment to the bankruptcy act—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, in favor of bills H. R. 9050 and 9051—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of William B. Wilson, president of the United States Military Telegraph Corps, in favor of bill H. R. 2895—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of John E. Bendix Post, No. 402, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New York, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the New York Produce Exchange, relative to the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of the Maritime Association of the Port of New York, relative to the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, resolution of the board of governors of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange of New York, in favor of bill H. R. 7871—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TAWNEY: Petition of citizens of Racine, Minn., protesting against passage of the parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of J. B. Woolridge Post, No. 175, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Minnesota, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THAYER: Resolution of the Coal Club of Boston and vicinity, relative to the harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. THOMAS of Iowa: Petitions of 25 voters of Ocheyerdan, 9 voters of Sioux City, 17 voters of Hancock, 4 voters of Rock Rapids; the Presbyterian, Christian, and Friends' churches of West Liberty, and the Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian, Church of Christ, and Congregational churches of Perry, all in Iowa, for the passage of the Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Petition of E. D. Brooks and 3 others, of Ann Arbor, Mich., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of George Aprill and 46 others, of Ann Arbor, Mich., favoring increase in the salaries of rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. VAN VOORHIS: Resolution of Riverside Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Zanesville, Ohio, in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions adopted by the Union soldiers of Licking county, Ohio, urging the enactment of legislation entitling the wives of Union soldiers to entrance to Soldiers' Homes with their husbands—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, resolutions of Dick Cheatham Post, No. 317, of Beverly, Ohio; Cumberland Post, No. 216, of Cumberland, Ohio, and Major Cass Post, No. 415, of Dresden, Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of T. J. McClelland and 41 others, of Antrim; M. S. Roy and 102 others, of New Concord; E. J. Loyd and 20 others, of Dresden; C. H. Beck and 42 others, of Marion; the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Chesterhill; W. H. Berry and 45 others, of Roseville; Bowman Hastetler and 59 others, of Quaker City, and J. M. M. Reasoner and 18 others, of Janesville, all in Ohio, for the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WACHTER: Petition of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Protestant Church, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of the J. A. Bokel Company, H. Rosenheim & Son and others, and G. Gump & Sons, of Baltimore, Md., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of C. Mauler, of Baltimore, Md., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Gandy Belting Company, of Baltimore, Md.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: Petition of members of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Jeddo, Orleans County, N. Y., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petitions of patrons of rural free-delivery routes Nos. 1 and 9, of Lockport, N. Y.; No. 27, of Newfane, N. Y., and No. 19, of Lyndonville, N. Y., in regard to salaries and privileges of rural free-delivery mail carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of Lake Seamen's Union, in favor of bill H. R. 12230, to prohibit the employment on board vessels holding American registers of Chinese persons not entitled to admission to the United States—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of the Presbyterian Church, Rev. J. F. Sheppard, pastor, of Conshohocken, Pa., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, March 5, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. SCOTT, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved, there being no objection.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT SEATTLE, WASH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, calling attention to the fact that the contract for the construction of the court-house and custom-house and post-office building at Seattle, Wash., is based upon the use of granite for facing the lower portion of the building and sandstone for the superstructure, and that an additional appropriation of $60,000 will be necessary for the purchase of granite to be used for this building; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON SHIPPING BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 4th instant, a stenographic report of the hearing held before him February 25, 1904, on the Philippine shipping bill pending before Congress; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

SLOOP RALPH.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law and the opinion of the court filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel sloop Ralph, Moses Maxwell, captain; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

EDWARD M. CRAIG.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Edward M. Craig, administrator of George W. Craig, deceased, v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKenney, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3317) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian lands.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the resolution of the Senate authorizing the cancellation of the signatures of the Speaker of the House and the President pro tempore to the enrolled bill (S. 3223) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation and to correct an inaccuracy stated in the bill.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR HANNA.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice to the Senate that at the close of the routine morning business on Thursday, March 31, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the life and character of my late colleague, the Hon. Marcus A. Hanna.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HANSBROUGH presented petitions of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Larimore; of the Plymouth Congregational Church, of Fargo, and of the Roberts Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Fargo, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of the congregation of the Meridian Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. KEAN presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Elizabeth and East Orange, N. J., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Dividing Creek and Burrsville; of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Burrsville; of the congregation of the First Reformed Church of Somerville; of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Millville; of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Lamington; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Gladstone; of the congregation of the Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, of Long Branch, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Rahway, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. DRYDEN presented a petition of William B. Hatch Circle, No. 2, Department of New Jersey, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Camden, N. J., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Mercer Pottery Company, of Trenton, N. J., and a memorial of Fisher & Averis, of Trenton, N. J., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "eight-hour bill" and also the "anti-injunction bill;" which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Bloomfield; of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Bayonne; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Gladstone; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Alpine; of the Society of Friends of Moorestown; of the congregation of the Montgomery Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Newark; of the congregation of the Lake View Presbyterian Church of Paterson; of the congregation of the First Reformed Church of North Paterson; of the congregation of the First Methodist Episcopal Church of Highlstown; of the congregation of the German Pilgrim Baptist Church of Jersey City; of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Medford; of the congregation of the First Reformed Church of Somerville; of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of New Brunswick; of the congregation of the Swedish Baptist Church of Montclair, and of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Columbus, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. OVERMAN presented petitions of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Burlington, of the Pastors' Association of Burlington, and of sundry citizens of Greensboro and Advance, all in the State of North Carolina, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a memorial of the Mark Flather Planer Company, of Nashua, N. H., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "eight-hour bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a petition of the Meyer Brothers' Drug Company, of St. Louis, Mo., praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "pure-food bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Manufactures.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the Eastern Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Association, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the Evangelical Church of West Washington, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 166, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders, of Wyandotte, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to develop the American merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BLACKBURN presented petitions of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Pineville, and sundry citizens of Newport and Pineville, all in the State of Kentucky, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAPP presented a petition of sundry citizens of Red Wing, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. LONG presented a petition of Leavenworth Circle, No. 5, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Kansas, of Leavenworth, Kans., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented petitions of sundry patrons of rural free-delivery routes No. 2 and No. 4, of Burlington, and of rural route No. 5, of Lyons, all in the State of Kansas, praying that an appropriation be made to increase the salaries of rural letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Grenola, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BAGON presented a petition of the Blue and Gray Association of Fitzgerald, Ga., praying that an appropriation of $20,000 be made for the completion of the park at that city; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DANIEL presented a petition of sundry citizens of Solarville, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Brookland Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a monument in the city of Washington to Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, and John Morton, a distinguished signer of the same; which was referred to the Committee on the Library.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BLACKBURN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4083) for the relief of Payton Shields, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Mines and Mining, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4413) to authorize the location of coal lands upon unsurveyed public lands in the District of Alaska, and for the survey, entry, and patenting of the same, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SIMMONS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2879) to amend the law relating to taxation in the District of Columbia, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by himself on the 26th ultimo, proposing to appropriate $5,000 for the improvement of Twenty-second street from Decatur place to S street NW., in the city of Washington, D. C., intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN, from the Committee on Manufactures, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6295) for preventing the adulteration or misbranding of food or drugs, and for regulating traffic therein, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. BERRY. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4387) to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Gilbertsville, Ky., to report it with amendments.

Mr. BLACKBURN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. I am sure it will provoke no debate. It is indorsed by the Department, recommended and reported unanimously by the Committee on Commerce, and it simply authorizes the construction of a steel bridge in lieu of an old defective wooden one there on this important railway.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read to the Senate for information.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was to add at the end of section 1 the following proviso:

Provided, That upon completion of the bridge herein authorized the said company shall promptly remove the present bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 2, line 13, after the word "under," to insert "and subject to;" so as to read:

That the said bridge shall be located and built under and subject to such regulations for the security of navigation as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of War, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. DILLINGHAM introduced a bill (S. 4816) to provide for the appointment, duties, compensation, and inspection of accounts of commissioners in Alaska, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Territories.

Mr. PERKINS introduced a bill (S. 4817) granting a pension to Cornelia A. Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DEPEW introduced a bill (S. 4818) for the relief of James T. Barry and Richard Cushion, executors of the last will and testament of Martin Dowling, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a bill (S. 4819) to amend an act entitled "An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy," approved December 24, 1861, as amended by an act approved July 16, 1862; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 4820) for the relief of the legal representatives of Andrew Brown, deceased; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 4821) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Walley; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. To accompany the bill I present the petition of Mary E. Walley, widow of Irvin Walley, of Company B, Cass County (Mo.) Home Guards, for an increase of pension, together with sundry affidavits. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 4822) granting a pension to Jeremiah H. Milroy; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present the petition of Jeremiah H. Milroy, together with affidavits of J. M. Haley, W. F. Suda, and Dr. T. Guy Hetherlin, and the military and hospital records of the petitioner. I move that the bill and accompanying papers be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CARMACK introduced a bill (S. 4823) granting an increase of pension to Mary Martin; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FOSTER of Louisiana introduced a bill (S. 4824) to provide for building an annex to the court-house and post-office at Shreveport, La.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 4825) to provide for celebrating the first permanent settlement of English-speaking people by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures, and the products of the soil, mines, forests, and the sea, in the vicinity of Jamestown, and on and near the waters of Hampton Roads, in the State of Virginia, and to authorize an appropriation in aid thereof; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Select Committee on Industrial Expositions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4826) to provide for enlarging the public building at Roanoke, Va., in order to accommodate the United States courts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4827) granting an increase of pension to John S. Burkholder; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4828) for the relief of George Killeen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also (by request) introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4829) for the relief of the estate of J. C. Bailey, deceased (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4830) for the relief of the vestry and wardens of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, of Cedar Run parish, Fauquier County, Va.;

A bill (S. 4831) for the relief of Algernon L. Wilkinson, Kate E. Wilkinson, and Laura M. Powell, sole heirs of Laura E. Wilkinson, deceased;

A bill (S. 4832) for the relief of the estate of Catharine R. Moore, deceased;

A bill (S. 4833) for the relief of the estate of Mary Ann Goodwyn, deceased;

Mr. SIMMONS introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4834) for the relief of William Foy and H. B. Lane, executor of Mrs. H. B. Lane, of North Carolina;

A bill (S. 4835) for the relief of D. S. Barrus and others; and

A bill (S. 4836) for the relief of the heirs of D. W. Morton.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following amendments intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

An amendment providing for a fourth assistant corporation counsel, instead of a law clerk, in the office of the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia;

An amendment proposing to increase the salary of the two judges of the police court of the District of Columbia from $3,000 to $4,000 each; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 for constructing a bridge across Piney Branch on the line of Sixteenth street extended, in the District of Columbia.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment removing the restriction of existing law limiting the cost for the purchase of a site for a public building at Oklahoma City, Okla., and making the amounts heretofore appropriated available for the purchase of such site and the erection of a building thereon, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing for the holding of court in the western judicial district of the Indian Territory at Wetumka, in the Creek Nation, fixing the recording district for said court, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DEPEW submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for grading and improving Sixteenth street extended, with its present width, from Piney Branch northward, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. TELLER submitted an amendment proposing that field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of major-general, with creditable records, who served during the civil war, and who have been or may hereafter be retired, shall be placed on the retired list with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, intended to be proposed by him to the army appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

SALMON RIVER (IDAHO) IMPROVEMENT.

Mr. HEYBURN submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be and he is hereby authorized and directed to cause a survey to be made of the channel of the Salmon River between Salmon, Idaho, and the mouth of said river.

ARANSAS PASS AND CORPUS CHRISTI BAY.

Mr. CULBERSON submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, at the earliest practicable moment, to cause a survey to be made of the channel from Aransas Pass through Redfish Bay, so as to Turtle Cove to Corpus Christi Bay, Texas, and to submit an estimate for the improvement of said channel to meet the demands of commerce.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. B. F. BARNES, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 3d instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 2596) granting a pension to Frances S. Hopkins; and

An act (S. 2809) granting an increase of pension to Jesse J. Finley.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Senator from Maine will permit me, I should like to ask that a bill be taken up about which there is no controversy. It is to amend the practice in courts.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will wait until I get the appropriation bill up, there are two or three Senators who have bills, and I will yield to them. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] has a privileged report to present. I want to get up the appropriation bill first.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CULLOM submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9388) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 42, 47, 56, 57, 74, 93, 120, 135, 137, 143, 149, 151, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 152, 161, 162, 168, 174, 179, 205, 206, 211, 212, 214, and 215.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 74, 75, 76, 77, 78, 79, 80, 81, 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 92, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, 148, 149, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 156, 157, 160, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 168, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 174, 175, 176, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 185, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 231, 232, 233, 234, 235, 236, 237, 238, 239, 240, 241, 242, 243, 244, 245, 246, 247, 248, 249, 250, 251, 252, 253, 254, 255, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 261, 262, and 263, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 41, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: "messenger of mess 4;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "otherwise" in said amendment the words "hereafter appointed;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 69, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$10,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 70, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$37,700;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 81, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "Two messengers, at $1,000 each;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 82, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$2,000;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 91, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment, and in lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert after the word "dollars," in line 16, page 61, of the bill, the following: "Provided, That whenever the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine that it is necessary for the proper functions of the mint at Denver, Colo., the following force may be appointed, in lieu of the foregoing, at the yearly compensation herein stated, namely: Superintendent, at $4,000; assayer, melter and refiner, and melter, at $3,000; cashier, clerk, at $2,000; weigh clerk, at $1,800; clerk, at $1,600; two computing clerks, at $1,400 each, and two clerks, at $1,200 each, and any unexpended balance of the foregoing appropriation shall be available for payment of the latter force;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 92, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

"For wages of workmen, including extra work on the new five hundred and twenty dollars for other clerks and employees, twenty-two thousand dollars."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 108 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "three hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 109 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "necessary," at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following: "and estimates not to exceed the number of employees and rates of compensation then actually paid;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 116 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and sixteen thousand nine hundred and forty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 168 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 6 of said amendment strike out the words "two thousand dollars," in lines 7 and 8 thereof "clerk of class four," and in lieu thereof insert "eight thousand one hundred and forty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 187 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "one hundred and forty two thousand seven hundred and twenty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 130, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "$[illegible]"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line [illegible] of said amendment strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty"; in line [illegible] strike out the word "fifteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty"; in line [illegible] strike out the word "sixteen" and insert in lieu thereof the word "twenty"; and in line 10 strike out the words "thirty-six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forty-six;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 161 and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "Two hundred and seventy-two;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "[illegible]"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert [illegible]; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $[illegible]; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert $[illegible]; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Strike out the word "permanently" inserted by said amendment, and on page [illegible] of the bill, in line [illegible] after the word "appropriated," insert the words "to otherwise dispose of the same;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "personal," in line [illegible] page [illegible] of the bill, the words "or affiliate;" and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: At the end of the amended paragraph, after the word "President," the following:

"Sec. [illegible]. That this provision shall not apply to officials outside of the District of Columbia in the performance of their public duties. This paragraph shall not take effect until July 1, 1904."

And the Senate agree to the same.

S. M. CULLOM,
F. E. WARREN,
H. M. TELLER,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

L. N. LITTAUER,
L. F. LIVINGSTON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. HALE. There are a few Senators who have short bills that have been kept out by the appropriation bills, and I will hold up the consideration of the naval appropriation bill for fifteen or twenty minutes, in order that Senators may call them up.

I shall object to any bill that gives rise to debate, but not to short bills that are unobjected to.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3305) authorizing the Secretary of the Inte for to acquire the title to lands within certain Indian reservations.

The Secretary read the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. QUARLES. I should like to make an inquiry in regard to the bill. I see it provides for an exchange of railroad lands for other lands. I inquire whether that is going to increase the amount of scrip that is issued.

Mr. LONG. The bill provides that no land scrip shall be issued.

Mr. QUARLES. Let me further inquire, if the Government needs lands that belong to these railroads in the Indian reservation, why should not the Government negotiate and pay for that land instead of providing for an exchange of other lands? It would seem to me that our history in connection with the land laws in this country has been quite persuasive on that subject, that if the Government needs land belonging to a railroad company it ought to condemn it or buy it.

For one, without knowing anything about this particular bill, I am opposed to any further provision in the way of legislation for an exchange of lands.

Mr. LONG. This bill relates only to Indian reservations in Arizona and New Mexico. The bill was drawn in the Interior Department and contains safeguards which amply and fully protect the interests of the Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

Mr. NELSON. I think the bill ought to go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made, and the bill goes over.

MINERAL LANDS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3596) to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands.

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend section 2327 to read as follows:

"Sec. 2327. The description of vein or lode claims upon surveyed lands shall designate the location of the claims with reference to the lines of the public survey, but need not conform therewith; but where patents have been issued for mineral lands containing veins or lodes, the surveyors employed in extending the public survey shall, in the subdivision of sections, so adjust the lines of patented mineral claims so as to conform to the lines which shall be established by the mineral surveyors, so as to avoid the creation of fractional mineral claims. Where applicants have been issued patents for mineral lands containing veins or lodes, and such patents have been issued on the mineral survey, those lands only shall be patented which shall be included within the boundaries of the original location, as located by the mineral surveyor, defining said claims, and which are located in the manner prescribed by the mining laws of the United States, and which have been duly recorded according to the local laws, rules, and regulations governing the same, and which have been surveyed and platted by the mineral surveyor, shall be patented upon the official return of such mineral survey, and all other lands included within the exterior boundaries of the public survey shall be held to be part of the public domain, and erroneous claims in the patented survey shall give way thereto."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS.

Mr. QUAY. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1974) amending the act of Congress approved January 26, 1895, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct errors where double allotments of land have erroneously been made to an Indian, to correct errors in patents, and for other purposes."

The Secretary read the bill; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in page 2, line 13, after the word "thereof," to strike out the words "or for the best interests of the Indians;" so as to read:

That the act of Congress approved January 26, 1895 (28 Stat., 641), entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct errors where double allotments of land have erroneously been made to an Indian, to correct errors in patents, and for other purposes," be, and the same is hereby, amended as follows:

"That in all cases where it shall appear that a double allotment of land has heretofore been or shall hereafter be made to any Indian by an assumed name or otherwise, or where a mistake has been or shall be made in the description of the land intended to be patented, and Secretary of the Interior authorized and directed, during the time that the United States may hold the lands allotted to such Indian, and for which a corporate patent has been issued, to correct such mistakes and cancel such patent where they have been made, and to issue a new patent in place thereof, and where any patent has been issued for the same land to two persons, the same ought to be canceled for error in the issue thereof, and if possession of the original patent can not be obtained, such cancellation shall be effected if made upon the records of the General Land Office, and the proceedings shall be necessary to open to settlement the lands so held by an erroneous or fraudulent patent, has been canceled, provided such lands would otherwise be subject to entry."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 20, after the word "entry," to strike out the proviso in the following words:

Provided, That no conditional patent excepting in cases hereinbefore authorized, and excepting in cases where the conditional patent is relinquished in the interest of the Indian to make another allotment, shall issue, and no patent shall issue for any land so allotted, or any interest therein, or any improvements thereon, that may be occupied or operated in violation of any Indian allotment act, or be subject to alienation without authority of Congress.

And in lieu thereof to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no conditional patent shall issue, and no patent shall issue for any land that may hereafter be allotted in favor of any Indian under any allotment act or treaty, but shall be held and kept for the benefit of such Indian, and excepting in cases where the conditional patent is relinquished by the allottee in the interest of the Indian to make another allotment, shall be subject to alienation without authority of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ELECTRIC WIRING IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 3) to regulate electric wiring in the District of Columbia. I will state that the bill has been read and the first two amendments of the Committee on the District of Columbia were agreed to.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill has been read in Committee of the Whole, and two amendments proposed by the committee have been agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER. Concerning the third amendment a little controversy arose, and I have had an amendment prepared which is entirely satisfactory to all parties. I ask leave to withdraw the committee amendment at the bottom of page 1 and to substitute for that proviso what I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire withdraws the amendment of the committee at the bottom of page 1 and offers an amendment, which will be read.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is a substitute for the proviso in the bill, striking out after the word "Provided," in line 7, the rest of the page.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the word "Provided," in line 7, and the following lines down to and including line 14, on page 1, and insert:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to apply to the buildings and grounds of the United States, or to the generation of power by incorporated companies engaged in the production of electrical current for public service or use.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee also reports the following amendments, which will be stated in their order.

The next amendment of the Committee on the District of Columbia was, in section 4, page 2, line 15, after the word "government," to strike out "one" and insert "at least two;" and in line 16, after the word "power," to strike out "and who" and insert "and one of whom;" so as to read:

That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered to appoint an electrical board, to be composed of three employees of the District government, at least two of whom shall have knowledge of electrical lighting and power, and one of whom shall be the secretary of said board and act as chief inspector of electrical work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, page 3, line 8, after the word "afford," to strike out the word "greater;" so as to read:

As in their judgment will afford safety and convenience to the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 3, line 24, after the word "three," to insert "satisfactory;" in the same line, after the word "or," to strike out "by" and insert "of;" on page 4, line 2, before the word "District," to insert "Commissioners of the;" and in line 3, after the word "Columbia," to strike out the words "and upon the District being kept harmless from the consequence of any or all acts of the licensee during the period covered by said bond;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That in addition to such advisory duties as said Commissioners shall assign thereto, it shall be the duty of said electrical board to examine all applications for licenses as electrical contractors and to report to said Commissioners, who, if satisfied from such report that the applicant is a fit person to engage in the business of electrical contracting, shall issue a license to such person to engage in such business as an electrical contractor. Before such license shall be issued, the applicant shall file in the office of the Commissioners a bond, with good and sufficient sureties or of an approved surety company, in the sum of $2,000, conditioned upon the faithful performance of all work in connection with the regulations of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 7 of the bill, in the following words:

SEC. 7. That it shall be the duty of said electrical board to examine all applicants for license as electrical wiremen and to report to said Commissioners, who, if satisfied from such report that the applicant is a person competent to do expert work of wiring for electrical lighting, heating, and power, shall issue a license to such person to engage in such business as electrical wiremen.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7 [8], line 14, after the word "contractors," to strike out "and as electrical wiremen;" and in line 15, after the word "in," to strike out "their own handwriting" and insert "writing;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That applicants for license as electrical contractors must be not less than 21 years of age, must make application in writing, and must accompany such application with a certificate as to good character and of expertness in electrical work as said board may require, and certificate to be approved by at least three citizens of the District of Columbia, therein [illegible] reputable standing.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8 [9], page 4, line 22, after the word "persons," to strike out "contracting for supplying and;" and in line 24, after the word "power," to strike out the remainder of the section, in the following words:

And the term electrical wiremen shall include all persons employed in the [illegible] and putting in place wires or any other apparatus: Provided, That under such rules as the said Commissioners shall prescribe, apprentices and unskilled helpers may be employed at work appropriate to their years and capacity, and under the immediate supervision of a licensed wireman or contractor.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the term electrical contractor shall include all persons putting in place wiring and apparatus necessary for the production and utilization of electrical current for lighting, heating, or for power.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9 [10], page 5, line 8, after the words "per annum," to strike out "and for a license as an electric wireman, $1 per annum; all fees;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That the fee for a license as an electrical contractor shall be $5 per annum, to be paid to the collector of taxes of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10 [11], page 5, line 14, after the word "contractor," to strike out "or an electric wireman."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 11 [12], page 6, line 1, before the word "inspector," to insert the word "chief;" in line 16, before the word "inspector" to insert the word "chief;" and in line 18, after the word "shall," to strike out "be fined not less than $1 nor more than one hundred" and insert "pay a fine of not more than twenty-five;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 11 [12]. That the chief inspector of electrical work and his assistants are hereby empowered, under the direction of the Commissioners, to inspect any building in course of erecting, and annual inspections hereon upon application of the owner or occupant, or upon complaint made with oath of any responsible citizen, to enter into and examine any building where such electric current is produced or utilized for lighting, heating, or for power, for the purpose of ascertaining violations of any of the provisions of this act, and upon finding any defects, unsafe and defective or dangerous to life therein, to give a written notice of any violation of any provisions of this act, or of any regulations of said Commissioners duly adopted, to remove or amend upon the same a reasonable period to be fixed in said notice, and in case of neglect or refusal on the part of the party so notified to remove or amend the same within the time and in the manner prescribed by the chief inspector of electrical work, and approved by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the party so offending shall pay a fine of not more than $25 for each and every day's failure or refusal to remove or amend the same after being so notified and in default of payment of such fine such person shall be committed to the workhouse of the District of Columbia for a period not exceeding one hundred and fifty days, to be proceeded under this act shall be in the police court of said District, in the name of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 12 [13], page 7, line 3, after the first word, "That," to insert "in the place of the present electrical engineer now carried on the per diem roll;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 12. That in the place of the present electrical engineer now carried on the per diem roll there be, and is hereby, established, under the direction of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, the office of electrical engineer, and the Commissioners of said District are hereby authorized and directed to appoint an electrical engineer, at a salary of $2,500 per annum, and said electrical engineer shall be an expert electrical engineer, possessing a thorough knowledge of the most modern methods for the production, use, and control of electricity, as well as such executive ability and adaptability to office work as is requisite for the efficient management of the said office, and the said Commissioners are authorized and directed to appoint an assistant electrical engineer, said office at a salary of $1,200 per annum, with such qualifications as are required for the said electrical engineer, and in case of the absence or incapacitation of the electrical engineer to perform the duties of his office, such duties shall be performed by the assistant electrical engineer. And the Commissioners are authorized and directed to appoint two electrical inspectors to assist in the work required by the authority of this act, at a salary of $[illegible] per annum each.

And the Commissioners are authorized and directed to appoint a clerk, at a salary of $1,000 per annum, who shall perform the clerical duties attending the work required by the authority of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert, on page 8, after line 4, as a new section, the following:

SEC. 13. That it shall be unlawful for any person, company, or corporation generating current for electric light, heat, or power in the District of Columbia to construct its system and furnish current for electrical purposes to any building or premises the wiring of which shall not have been inspected and approved by the chief inspector of electrical work.

Any person, company, or corporation violating the provisions of this section shall, upon written notice from the chief inspector of electrical work to do so, immediately remove said connections and cut off the current, and shall not again supply said current until authorized by the said inspector. Failure to comply with said notice the offending person, company, or corporation shall be fined not less than $5 nor more than $[illegible] for each and every day's failure or neglect to remove said connections and to cut off the current.

The chief inspector of electrical work is hereby authorized and empowered, with the approval of the Commissioners, to order said connection to be removed and the current cut off upon such failure of the offending person, company, or corporation, and to refuse to permit said connection to be replaced and the current to be used until the wiring shall be put in proper and safe condition.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 13 (14), page 9, line 3, after the word "effect," to strike out "on its passage" and insert "ninety days from and after the approval thereof;" so as to make the section read:

That this act shall take effect ninety days from and after the approval thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF HYGIENE AND DEMOGRAPHY.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 48) authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and by unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement in support of the joint resolution.

Mr. HALE. I can not——

Mr. FAIRBANKS. I will say just a word.

Mr. HALE. I do not object to that. I am pressed by Senators on the other side who are desirous of speaking on the appropriation bill, and after the pending joint resolution is through I shall be constrained to ask the Senate to go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Oh, no.

Mr. HALE. I interpose no objection to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. FORAKER. There are two or three small matters that might be disposed of yet.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the delegates to the Eleventh International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, in session at Brussels in September, 1903, requested of the State Department, through the United States legation there, authority to invite the congress to hold its thirteenth session at Washington in 1909.

The State Department gave its sanction to the proposed invitation, subject to the requisite legislation of Congress to make the invitation effective.

Agreeably to the sanction of the Department of State the invitation was extended and was provisionally accepted by the committee on invitation, which announced its purpose to recommend at the next session, to be held at Berlin in 1906, the formal acceptance of the invitation, provided the Congress of the United States should favorably take the necessary action upon the subject.

The International Congress is a most important one. It will bring together at the national capital a large number of delegates from European countries and the United States—men eminent in matters concerning sanitation and the public health.

Charles Harrington, of the Harvard medical school and one of the delegates from the United States to the Eleventh International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, in a letter to the Secretary of State, among other things, says:

I would add that Sir Patrick Manson, the leading authority on tropical diseases and national hygiene, suggested that I urge my mature to the home of an international congress of an international character, considering the possibility and probability of the spread of epidemics from one country to another, particularly when the Panama Canal, which Ocean through vessels should strong means through the Panama Canal when that waterway shall have been completed.

The joint resolution which is now before the Senate simply authorizes the President to formally and officially extend the invitation which was provisionally extended by the delegates of the United States at the Brussels Congress. The benefits to flow from such a congress held in the city of Washington are obvious and far reaching.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SCOTT, Mr. LONG, and Mr. HEYBURN addressed the Chair.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY] substantially had the floor last night, and when we adjourned I stated that I would call up the naval appropriation bill at once this morning, so that Senators upon the other side might speak in this hour. I rather good-naturedly this morning, in which I made a mistake, agreed to hold off for fifteen or twenty minutes, which have expired, and it is not fitting treatment to Senators upon the other side who are ready to speak and desire to speak, and do not want delay, for me to consent further to the time being taken, however much Senators may desire it. I suppose I made a mistake in letting anyone in, Mr. President, but the pressure was very great. Therefore I must ask for the regular order.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to say——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The regular order is demanded.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12227) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, it is my purpose to occupy the time of the Senate but a short while this morning. I do not desire to discuss the amendment which was discussed yesterday evening. That amendment carries only $250,000 and is a very small item. I shall vote in favor of it, but I do not care to discuss it.

I desire to say a few words in regard to the position of the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] in a speech which each made day before yesterday in regard to this measure.

I understood the junior Senator from Massachusetts to take three positions. The junior Senator from Massachusetts said that there will be no relaxation in the future in regard to the building up of our Navy, that a great, strong, and powerful navy and that a great, strong, and powerful fighting force are absolutely essential to keep peace in this country and to prevent us from having war with foreign powers. The distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts also contended that a strong fighting force is absolutely essential in order to enable us to maintain the Monroe doctrine.

Mr. President, I do not desire to say anything against the course we have pursued in building up our Navy heretofore. I do not desire to say anything against the completion of the ships that we now have in process of construction. I do, however, say that when this plan is carried out and these ships are completed, in point of tonnage we will have a navy the third strongest in the world and in effectiveness the second strongest in the world. There will be no navy in point of effectiveness stronger than ours, except the navy of Great Britain.

I do not agree, however, with the junior Senator from Massachusetts in regard to the future. He not only approves the course which we have pursued in the past, during the last six or seven years, for the purpose of building up our Navy, but my distinguished friend tells us that in the future there shall be no relaxation.

Neither do I agree with the distinguished Senator that a great, strong, and powerful fighting force is essential to keep this country out of war. I know the idea has prevailed during the last two or three years that in all probability we shall be engaged in war with a foreign power. This country is over 125 years old, yet, Mr. President, we have never had but two wars with foreign powers, excepting a small skirmish which we had with Spain. Last Sunday morning I sat in the war. I desires war with the Government of the United States? When we went to war with Spain it was predicted that many foreign powers would come against us; that we would be likely to have trouble with foreign powers. I ask, What was the result? Instead of foreign powers joining with Spain against us, most of the foreign powers, and especially Great Britain, sympathized with the Government of the United States.

Not only that, but take our action in Panama. We recognized Panama in three days after that Republic was born, and it is true that fourteen nations in less than two weeks recognized our action and recognized Panama. We were then allowed to go on and complete our canal without any interference from any one of the nations on the face of the earth. I desire to say that in my opinion no nation to-day desires to engage in war with the people of the United States.

The distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts tells us that it is necessary for us to have a great fighting force, a strong and powerful navy, in order to maintain the Monroe doctrine. I ask what nation to-day is contesting the supremacy of the Monroe doctrine in this country? I ask what nation to-day [illegible] the Monroe doctrine? We are [illegible] to-day denies that the western hemisphere has been dedicated to free republican institutions?

Not many years ago a foreign power came across the water seeking to enforce the collection of a debt against a sister nation on this side of the ocean. We knew she was told [illegible] should be in violation of the Monroe doctrine, and she immediately withdrew.

I contend that the best way for the Government of the United States to maintain peace and to prevent war is to avoid [illegible] and to deal fairly with all the nations of the earth [illegible] friendly relations, and to [illegible] regard for the rights of other nations. Then, Mr. President, we shall always be able to avert war. In my opinion [illegible] a great fighting force, a great and powerful army, and a great and powerful navy preventing war, in nine cases out of ten they will get us into war.

We know we see it frequently stated in our naval journals that our naval officers say we are likely to have war with Germany. I do not believe it. A great and powerful navy and a great and powerful army, in charge of ambitious officers, anxious to advance their own ambition, anxious to make a great reputation, easy to take offense, are more likely to get us into war than to prevent war.

Mr. President, my distinguished friend from Massachusetts tells us there is to be no relaxation in regard to expenditures for our Navy in the future. Let us see. If we do not have a navy second to any country in the world when the programme now set forth in this bill is carried out, then ought there not in the future to be relaxation? If there shall be no relaxation, I ask the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts whether we do not [illegible]

Mr. President, I notice—and the statements have been published before—that in the year 1881 we spent $13,000,000, in round numbers, on our Navy; in 1884, $[illegible]; in 1887, $[illegible]; in 1891, $22,000,000; in 1895, $[illegible]; in 1898, $29,000,000; in 1897, $[illegible]; in 1898, $[illegible]; in 1899, $56,000,000; in 1900, $48,000,000; in 1901, $[illegible]; in 1902, $78,000,000; in 1903, $79,000,000; in 1904, $97,000,000, and there is to be appropriated for 1905 ninety-seven and a quarter million dollars.

My friend the junior Senator from Massachusetts says that for the next six or seven years there is to be no relaxation in our expenditures in regard to the Navy. During the last seven years we have spent $300,000,000, and the Senator tells us that for the future there is to be no relaxation, which means that we are to spend seven or eight hundred million dollars for a navy during the next five or six years.

Mr. President, if you will turn to the total expenditures in the Army and Navy, you will find that $200,000,000 are spent every year for the purposes of war. I hold in my hand a statement of war expenditures for the last several years. I will say that our war expenditures have increased during the last eight or ten years from [illegible] to $[illegible]. As has well been said, $2 out of every $5 which we are spending to-day is being spent for purposes of war. If you will take the expenditures of the entire civil department of the Government, you will find they amount to $126,000,000. We spend $100,000,000 for our Navy and nearly $100,000,000 for our Army. It is my [illegible] to be concerned in the future and we are to spend more money than we have spent for our Navy, such expenditures, in my judgment, can not be justified.

We all agree that when we went to war with Spain our Navy was in a dilapidated condition, and on both sides of the Chamber we have had [illegible] the expenditures up to this time. But when the junior Senator from Massachusetts lays down the proposition that in the future there is to be no relaxation, because we need a large fighting force to maintain the Monroe doctrine and to prevent this country from being compelled to go to war, then I do not agree with the junior Senator from Massachusetts.

Again, the distinguished junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] told us the other day in his [illegible] speech that it was absolutely necessary to have a great, a strong, and a powerful navy, and a great and a strong and powerful army [illegible] to maintain civil government in the Philippine Islands. The Senator told us that we had twenty-four [illegible] in those islands and that in the future it will be absolutely essential that we shall keep a large navy in the Philippine Islands. I have before me the Senator's exact words. What did he say? I read:

Mr. President, I have the greatest respect for [illegible] and most [illegible] the Secretary of War, and I have [illegible] Philippines. [illegible] Islands [illegible] the law with [illegible] I do not believe [illegible]

The Senator goes on in that speech and takes the position that we are to hold the Philippine Islands for all time to come, and that we are to govern them from the city of Washington as American colonies. I want to read exactly what Secretary Root did say about that subject. I have a copy of that interview in my hands. We all know that Secretary Root has been regarded as a very [illegible] and we all recognize the fact that he is a man of distinguished ability. No man has ever questioned his great ability. This question was asked Mr. Root after he had retired from the great office of the Secretary of War:

[illegible] Mr. Root, what [illegible]

[illegible]

Again this question was asked Mr. Root:

[illegible] the people will develop them in time.

Has your experience as Secretary of War convinced you that they are [illegible]

[illegible]

Mr. President, there is the great ex-Secretary of War, who had dealt with the people of the Philippine Islands for four or five years, who tells us that civil government has been established in all the provinces in the Philippine Islands, and that those people ought to enjoy their independence on the same line that we have dealt with the people of Cuba.

I do not believe that the American people will ever consent that the people of the Philippine Islands shall be held in perpetual subjection. I do not believe that the American people will consent that the Filipinos shall be governed by the Army, and governed from the city of Washington; but I believe that our people, when the Filipinos are capable of carrying on the functions of a government and maintaining law and order, will be in favor of granting to them the same liberty and independence which we have given to the people of Cuba.

If we intend to hold the people of the Philippine Islands in subjection under military law, for all time to come, we shall need a large navy for that purpose, but I do not believe that the intelligent and good people of the United States will consent to that new departure. We may keep guard over their international relations; we may see that they are not swallowed up by any other nation, but I believe that the good sense of the American people will demand that we shall respect the rights of the people of the Philippine Islands.

It does seem to me as if the great ex-Secretary of War, in giving out the interview from which I have quoted, after he had retired from that high office, owe it to the country to speak in regard to the Philippine Islands which the Democratic party has held since we have acquired them.

When the question of the ratification of the Paris treaty was pending before this body a resolution was introduced by my colleague [Mr. BACON] providing that so soon as a stable government should be established in the Philippine Islands, capable of maintaining law and order, it was our purpose to leave those people to govern themselves, and that we would deal with them just as we have dealt with the people of Cuba. That resolution came to a vote in this Senate, and there were, I believe, 43 votes in favor of it and 43 against it; and the resolution was defeated by the casting vote of the Vice-President. I believe to-day that if that resolution had been adopted, if we had set forth the policy we intended to pursue toward the people of the Philippine Islands, a gun never would have been fired, and a single drop of blood never would have been shed, and the great expenditures that we have incurred by a failure to do so could, in my judgment, have been absolutely saved.

I took the liberty to write to the War Department to find out something about our expenditures in those islands. What did I find?

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Washington, February 19, 1904.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Agreeably with your verbal request, I beg to hand you herewith the following memorandum relative to our in the Philippine Islands:

Average number of troops each year, 1898 to 1903:[a]

1898	14,765
1899	31,020
1900	64,592
1901	50,261
1902	27,394
1903	17,112

Number of deaths from all causes:

May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1899	795
July 1, 1899, to June 30, 1900	1,462
July 1, 1900, to June 30, 1901	1,031
July 1, 1901, to June 30, 1902	585
July 1, 1902, to June 30, 1903	470
June 30, 1903, to December 31, 1903	87
Total	4,332

Senate Document 416, Fifty-seventh Congress, first session, which contains the report of the Secretary of War, shows the expenditures in connection with the Philippine Islands from May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1902, which was practically the close of hostilities, was $[illegible].

W. P. HALL,
Acting Adjutant-General.

Hon. A. S. CLAY,
United States Senate.
(Mailed February 19, 1904.)

It is announced by the Department that the expenditures in connection with the Philippine Islands from May 1, 1898, to June 30, 1902, amounted to $[illegible]. In fact, the expense of our army in the Philippine Islands during the last six years has been about $[illegible] and this does not take into consideration our expenditures in regard to the Navy, which amount to fully two hundred and twenty millions.

Mr. President, I believe that if we had followed the line of policy mapped out by the Democratic party, assuring those people that so soon as they qualified themselves for self-government, promising them in the event they did, placing natives in office in every instance where we could, and teaching those people that they could expect at our hands the same justice that we administered to the people of Cuba, these expenditures could have been saved.

I rose simply for the purpose of discussing the future of our country in regard to the American Navy. The side of the Chamber has supported most zealously the building up of the Navy as far as we have gone; but during the last nine years we have seen the expenditures of this Government leap from $242,000,000 to $560,000,000 a year. Seven, eight, or ten years ago we maintained this Government by expending [illegible] per year, and to-day we have gone to the enormous sum of over $[illegible].

I believe that good government demands at the hands of both political parties the strictest economy in public expenditures. I believe that the great Departments of a government like ours, including its Treasury Department, its Navy Department, its War Department, its Post-Office Department, ought to be investigated both as to receipts and expenditures every year by a committee of Congress to see how an Administration is run. Take the case of a State. It is the duty of a State to watch carefully and closely its receipts and its expenditures. But during the last seven years we have not had an investigation of a single Department, except the Post-Office Department investigating itself.

I do not apply this to anyone. I say I do not criticise any Department. I know of no wrong; but if the Democratic party were in power and had been in power for a period of four years or eight years I should contend that it was the duty of Congress to investigate, by a committee of Congress, every Department of this Government, to see where our money went to and how our contracts for expenditures were made.

[a] This does not include the Philippine Scouts, about 5,000 in number.

Go to the War Department and you will find that $14,000,000 were spent for transportation. It is the duty of Congress to know what companies receive the money and if the best possible contracts were made.

Go to the Post-Office Department, where they spend $140,000,000, and a like investigation ought to be had. Go to the Navy Department, where large amounts are to be paid out for coal, for supplies, and for different items. A committee of Congress ought to know how the money was expended on each item and to see if the best contracts possible for our Government were made.

Would any business man permit any employee of his to expend hundreds and thousands and millions of dollars without making an annual investigation as to how those expenditures were made? Where are we drifting? I state, regardless of any political party, that we ought to know every year, or every two years, how each item of expenditure has been spent and what kind of a contract was made.

I know it was said at the time when an investigation was demanded in the Post-Office Department that there was nothing wrong, that every single dollar of the money had been honestly expended. I do not doubt that the Postmaster-General thought he was absolutely correct; but an investigation showed a condition of affairs not even dreamed of, Mr. President.

You may take a State government, you may take this Government, and let it run in the hands of one political party, either Democratic or Republican, for a long number of years, without making any investigation and going through the accounts of your public officials, and you do not know where it will drift.

Turn to the Treasury Department and you will find items embracing one million, five million, or six million dollars. That may be all right, but I say it is the duty of Congress to know with whom we dealt, with what firms we dealt, with what transportation companies we dealt, and the men with whom we had contracts, and to see that they were in accordance with our best interests.

Mr. President, I want it distinctly understood that my remarks in regard to the Navy apply to the language used by the junior Senator from Massachusetts, that "there shall be no relaxation in the future." Great Britain was building vessels on January 1, 1904, aggregating 351,000 tons: France, 150,000 tons; Russia, 142,000 tons; Germany, 118,000 tons; the United States, 322,000 tons; Italy, 59,000 tons; Japan, 10,000 tons, and Austria, 50,000 tons.

I now quote from a speech made by Mr. RIXEY in the House of Representatives. He said:

> For years past it has been a favorite theme for the Navy enthusiasts to insist that we should keep abreast of Europe. Now, Europe and Germany are building six battle ships each, we are building two; Germany is building three armored cruisers, we are building eight; Germany is building six protected cruisers, we are building eight. We have no conception of these great sums heretofore expended. We are building at a more rapid rate than any other nation on earth, except Great Britain, as the following table, taken from the report of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, shows:

Referring to the figures I have just given.

I have here a list of the ships that we are building, and you will find by carefully examining this report that more than 50 per cent of these ships will soon be completed. We are building 12 first-class battle ships. The Missouri is practically done, only 5 per cent of the work on her not being completed. The Ohio and Virginia both are nearly done. We are building, in addition to these, the Nebraska, the Georgia, the New Jersey, the Rhode Island, the Connecticut, the Louisiana, the Vermont, the Kansas, and the Minnesota. That makes 12 first-class battle ships we are building. We are also building 8 armored cruisers and 8 protected cruisers, 2 gunboats, 2 training ships, 1 training brig, 6 torpedo boats, and 2 steel tugs, and this report of the Secretary of the Navy shows that when these ships now in process of construction are completed we will have a tonnage greater than any nation except Great Britain and France, and, in point of effectiveness, the Navy Department says that our Navy will be more effective than that of France.

I ask to have inserted as a part of my remarks the table in the report of the House Committee on Naval Affairs, headed "Vessels under construction, United States Navy, February 9, 1904," including page 22 and page 23. I also ask to have included as a part of my remarks a table, which I hold in my hand, showing our naval strength at present and our naval strength when the ships now in process of construction shall have been completed. I also desire to have inserted as a part of my remarks a table showing the sea strength of the principal naval powers, which I will hand to the Reporter. I desire also to insert as a part of my remarks a statement of the expenditures of the Government from 1856 to 1903.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 9, 1904.

Vessels under construction, United States Navy.

No	Name.	Speed.	Where building.	Degree of completion. Jan. 1, 1904.	Feb. 1, 1904.
	Battle ships.	Knots.		Per cent.	Per cent.
11	Missouri	18	Newport News Co	99.9	99.95
12	Ohio	18	Cramp & Sons	84.5	85.5
13	Virginia	19	Newport News Co	52.5	53.8
14	Nebraska	19	Moran Bros	35	37.7
15	Georgia	19	Bath Iron Works	42.5	45.4
16	New Jersey	19	Fore River Ship and Engine Co	49.43	50.3
17	Rhode Island	19	[illegible]	50.61	51.7
18	Connecticut	18	Navy-yard, New York, N. Y.	26.7	28.5
19	Louisiana	18	Newport News Co	34.5	37.55
20	Vermont	18	Fore River Ship and Engine Co	2.76	3.6
21	Kansas	18	New York Shipbuilding Co	2.6	3.9
22	Minnesota	18	Newport News Co	12	14.73
	Armored cruisers.
4	Pennsylvania	22	William Cramp & Sons	64.9	68.8
5	West Virginia	22	Newport News Co	70.5	73.2
6	California	22	Union Iron Works	51	54
7	Tennessee	22	William Cramp & Sons	69	71.8
8	Maryland	22	Newport News Co	65.4	69.15
9	South Dakota	22	Bath Iron Works	47	50
10	Tennessee	22	William Cramp & Sons	15.1	16.6
11	Washington	22	New York Shipbuilding Co.	12	13.9
	Protected cruisers.
14	Denver	17	Neafie & Levy	98	98
15	Des Moines	16	Fore River Ship and Engine Co	97	99
16	Chattanooga	16	Lewis Nixon	79	72
17	Galveston	16	Wolff & Zwicker Iron Co.	70.5	76
18	Tacoma	[illegible]	Union Iron Works	99	100
19	San Diego	[illegible]	Newport News Co	36.2	37.9
21	Milwaukee	22	Union Iron Works	41	42.5
22	Charleston	22	Newport News Co	56.9	60
	Gunboats.
17	Dubuque	12	Gas Engine and Power Co.	20	25
18	Paducah	12	do	16	22.2
	Training ships.
	Cumberland	Sails.	Navy-yard, Boston	12	25.5
	Intrepid	Sails.	Navy-yard, Mare Island	5	7
	Training brig.
	Boxer	Sails.	Navy-yard, Portsmouth	6	10
	Torpedo boats.
19	Stringham	30	Harlan & Hollingsworth	93	93
20	Goldsborough	30	Wolff & Zwicker	99	99
27	Blakeely	26	George Lawley & Son	98	98
29	Nicholson	26	Lewis Nixon	99	99
30	O'Brien	26	do	98	98
34	Tingey	26	Columbian Iron Works	100	.....
	Steel tugs.
8	Pentucket	12	Navy-yard, Boston	100	.....
9	Sotoyomo	12	Navy-yard, Mare Island	98	99

Relative order of war-ship strength.

At present.		As would be the case were vessels building now completed.
Nation.	Tonnage.	Nation.	Tonnage.
Great Britain	1,516,040	Great Britain	1,867,250
France	576,108	France	755,757
Russia	416,158	United States	697,875
Germany	387,874	Russia	558,482
United States	294,465	Germany	505,619
Italy	258,888	Italy	329,257
Japan	243,586	Japan	254,481
Austria	93,913	Austria	149,833

SEA STRENGTH OF THE PRINCIPAL NAVAL POWERS.

Number and displacement of war ships, built and building, of 1,000 or more tons displacement.

Type.	Great Britain. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	France. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Russia. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Germany. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class[a]	50	669,000	9	142,600	20	223,621	6	87,800	17	201,129	8	112,864	14	152,581	6	77,982
Other battle ships and coast-defense [illegible]	6	49,900	.....	.....	20	94,615	.....	.....	12	66,679	.....	.....	16	90,773	.....	.....
Armored cruisers	27	262,800	14	166,000	15	113,767	8	91,849	8	71,261	.....	.....	3	28,144	3	28,048
Protected cruisers, first class (above [illegible])	21	201,950	.....	.....	4	31,513	.....	.....	6	33,546	8	19,965	.....	.....	.....	.....
Protected cruisers, second class (3,000 [illegible])	53	285,880	7	21,000	19	79,752	.....	.....	5	19,450	3	9,445	9	46,949	.....	.....
Other cruisers and scouts (above [illegible])	44	96,510	8	21,610	18	22,840	.....	.....	11	18,093	.....	.....	31	69,427	4	13,715
Total	201	1,516,040	38	351,210	96	576,108	14	179,649	59	416,158	14	142,274	73	387,574	13	117,745
Combined total	239, of 1,867,250 tons.				110, of 755,757 tons.				73, of 558,432 tons.				86, of 505,619 tons.

Type.	United States. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Italy. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Japan. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.	Austria. Built.	Tons.	Building.	Tons.
Battle ships, first class[a]	11	135,129	[b]11	166,700	14	173,276	5	63,125	6	84,390	.....	.....	.....	.....	8	31,900
Other battle ships and coast-defense [illegible]	12	47,945	.....	.....	3	12,244	.....	.....	8	18,004	.....	.....	11	62,480	2	10,720
Armored cruisers	2	17,415	8	111,800	5	31,391	1	7,264	6	73,850	.....	.....	2	11,592	1	7,400
Protected cruisers, first class (above [illegible])	2	14,750	3	28,800	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....	.....
Protected cruisers, second class (3,000 [illegible])	15	56,393	4	12,400	5	17,490	.....	.....	10	41,226	3	10,005	2	8,128	.....	.....
Other cruisers and scouts (above 1,000 [illegible])	23	32,773	2	2,170	11	23,997	.....	.....	17	32,506	.....	.....	6	11,785	.....	.....
Total	65	294,405	28	321,870	38	258,388	6	70,419	44	249,536	3	10,005	21	93,913	6	55,920
Combined total	93, of 616,275 tons.				44, of 329,257 tons.				47, of 259,681 tons.				27, of 149,833 tons.

[a] [illegible] tons or more displacement, and are not more than 30 years old. (The few exceptions as to age have been [illegible]) [b] Contract not yet [illegible] for two ordered and authorized.

N. B. [illegible] than 1,000 tons are not given in the table, nor are transports, dispatch vessels, converted merchant vessels or yachts, or [illegible] are not included in the table.

Recapitulation of expenditures by fiscal years.

Year.	Civil and miscellaneous. [illegible]	[illegible]	War Department.	Navy Department.	Indians.	Pensions.	Interest on public debt.	Total expenditures, including premiums.	Bonds and other securities applied to sinking fund.
1856	$[illegible] 372.00	$[illegible] 214.07	$16,948,196.89	$14,091,781.06	$2,769,429.55	$1,298,398.95	$1,953,822.37	$69,571,095.79	.....
1857	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1858	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1859	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1860	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1861	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1862	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1863	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1864	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1865	1,717,900.11	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1866	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1867	10,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1868	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....
1869	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	$[illegible]
1870	15,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	28,151,000.00
1871	9,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1872	6,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	32,638,450.00
1873	5,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	26,618,000.00
1874	1,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	287,183,873.17	19,993,450.00
1875	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	274,633,332.84	28,170,400.00
1876	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	265,493,797.93	32,193,400.00
1877	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	5,277,037.22	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	26,466,916.65
1878	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	4,829,280.28	[illegible]	[illegible]	17,012,096.67
1879	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	5,208,109.08	[illegible]	[illegible]	289,947,893.53	733,687.00
1880	[illegible]	51,713,329.76	[illegible]	[illegible]	5,946,467.00	[illegible]	[illegible]	267,642,057.78	73,994,617.41
1881	[illegible]	64,416,324.77	[illegible]	[illegible]	6,515,161.05	[illegible]	[illegible]	260,712,865.50	74,429,531.05
1882	.....	57,219,750.98	[illegible]	15,092,045.26	9,740,147.40	[illegible]	[illegible]	267,981,450.57	60,107,095.55
1883	.....	68,673,022.21	[illegible]	15,283,437.17	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	265,408,197.54	44,807,240.93
1884	.....	70,920,493.70	[illegible]	17,292,601.44	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	244,126,244.33	46,780,229.50
1885	.....	87,494,258.58	[illegible]	16,021,099.67	6,552,494.03	[illegible]	[illegible]	260,226,935.11	45,604,035.43
1886	.....	74,[illegible]	[illegible]	15,997,382.74	6,059,158.17	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	44,551,040.35
1887	.....	83,294,[illegible]	[illegible]	15,141,128.80	6,104,562.59	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	47,916,248.15
1888	8,270,842.46	72,952,260.00	[illegible]	16,228,445.65	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1889	17,[illegible]	80,664,064.25	[illegible]	21,378,[illegible].31	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	59,066,173.35
1890	20,304,224.00	81,493,256.49	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1891	19,401,230.61	101,040,167.49	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1892	.....	99,841,988.[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1893	.....	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	6,[illegible]
1894	.....	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1895	.....	93,279,730.14	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1,195,238.43
1896	.....	87,216,234.02	[illegible]	[illegible]	12,166,588.28	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	5,383,126.36
1897	.....	90,401,267.82	[illegible]	[illegible]	12,016,802.46	141,053,164.63	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1898	.....	96,590,505.17	91,992,000.29	58,823,984.80	10,994,607.70	147,452,368.61	[illegible]	[illegible]	63,[illegible]

Recapitulation of expenditures by fiscal years—Continued.

Year.	Civil and miscellaneous. Premium on loans and purchase of bonds, etc.	Civil and miscellaneous. Other civil and miscellaneous items.	War Department.	Navy Department.	Indians.	Pensions.	Interest on public debt.	Total expenditures, including premiums.	Bonds and other securities appropriated to sinking fund.
1899	.....	$119,191,255.90	$229,841,254.47	$23,942,104.25	$12,505,771.14	$140,844,909.07	$23,896,095.02	$605,022,179.85	$31,223.48
1900	.....	105,773,190.16	184,734,596.58	35,366,077.72	10,798,166.76	139,857,916.02	40,169,334.27	487,718,791.71	55,544,555.06
1901	.....	122,382,167.20	144,644,606.20	46,508,978.47	10,898,253.45	129,326,081.96	39,242,070.04	509,987,957.15	66,484,020.73
1902	.....	114,469,264.94	112,972,256.46	67,803,128.24	10,040,564.86	138,188,209.75	24,[illegible]	477,[illegible]	51,240,[illegible]
1903	.....	124,844,289.74	178,613,520.15	82,025,684.18	12,300,158.08	138,425,646.07	28,836,548.82	566,[illegible],067.04	29,[illegible],221.82

NOTE.—The expenditures for 1898 include $4,549,768.26 uninvested cash in Union Pacific sinking fund paid to Treasurer United States and credited into the Treasury as part payment on Union Pacific indebtedness. The additional sums of $13,845,256, the proceeds of sale of bonds in sinking fund and $46,[illegible] paid by agents of the Union and Kansas Pacific companies, making in all $64,751,223.75, were also covered into the Treasury on account of Pacific Railroad indebtedness, and are included in the receipts for 1898.

The receipts for 1899 include $[illegible] paid into the Treasury as part of Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness.

The receipts for 1900 include $[illegible] paid into the Treasury as part of Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness and $821,897.70 paid into the Treasury for interest account of Kansas Pacific Railroad, making a total of $[illegible].

The receipts for 1901 include payments into the Treasury on account of Pacific Railroads, as follows: Part of Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness, $4,[illegible] for interest account of Kansas Pacific Railroad, $[illegible] amount realized from sale of claim of United States against the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad, $2,[illegible] $41,24[illegible], making a total of $[illegible].

The receipts for 1903 include $4,[illegible] paid into the Treasury as part of Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, DIVISION OF BOOKKEEPING AND WARRANTS.

Mr. CLAY. It will be seen from the table in regard to receipts and expenditures that our total expenditures in 1886 amounted to $242,483,138.50; in 1887, $267,932,179.97, and the next year, $267,924,801.13. Now, in the year 1899, $605,072,179.85; 1900, $487,000,000; 1901, $509,000,000; 1903, $566,000,000.

It shows that in a period of ten years our annual expenditures have doubled. The best information I have been able to get is that we are raising more money by taxation for the support of our Government than any Government in the world except that of Russia.

Mr. President, it is time we should call a halt on our public expenditures. We have now reached a point where we have a navy ample to cope with any country in the world. I do not believe the American people will justify a continuous increase of expenditures for the Army and Navy when in all probability we will decline during the present session to give a single dollar to public buildings and to rivers and harbors.

We know that thus far not a single dollar has been appropriated during the present session of Congress for public buildings. We are told that not a single dollar is to be appropriated for rivers and harbors. I believe that the public buildings, the rivers and harbors of our country are of equal importance with the Army and the Navy. We were told on the floor the other day that we are not to have even a public building to relieve the State, War, and Navy Department building. We know we are paying $320,000 a year for rentals in the city of Washington for public purposes, and notwithstanding that fact the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds can not get a single dollar through the Senate for that laudable purpose—not a dollar for a public building in any State in this Union; not a dollar for rivers and harbors, but two hundred and seven millions for purposes of war.

This nation has made a reputation second to none in the world, and not by virtue of war, or a desire for war. We have made our reputation by reason of the fact that we were a just, a peace-loving people; by reason of the fact that we have sought peace. The Father of our Country taught us to maintain friendly and peaceful relations with all the countries of the world; to seek to do business with all the countries of the world, leading a high and moral life; to teach the world to follow our example; and the whole world has regarded us as the greatest Christian nation on this earth. Let us maintain forever the reputation and the character for peace and justice and righteousness which we have maintained heretofore.

I desire to ask permission of the Senate to have inserted as a part of my remarks pages 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and part of page 7 of the Report of the Secretary of the Treasury, dated Washington, December 8, 1903, and also to have inserted as a part of my remarks Table G on page 78.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Georgia? The Chair hears none.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Receipts and expenditures.

FISCAL YEAR 1903.

The revenues of the Government from all sources (by warrants) for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1903, were:

From customs	$284,479,581.81
From internal revenue	230,089,124.15
From sales of public lands	3,995,401.22
From profits on coinage, bullion deposits, etc	8,294,760.88
From revenues of the District of Columbia	5,168,038.56
From fees—consular, letters patent, and lands	4,048,838.22
From sales of Indian lands, proceeds of Indian labor, etc	2,393,298.83
From [illegible] and deposit funds	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From payment of interest by Pacific railways	[illegible]
From [illegible] fines, penalties, etc	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible] lands	[illegible]
From [illegible] army transports	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From [illegible] ory of Alaska	[illegible]
From [illegible]	[illegible]
From part payment Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness	[illegible]
	560,291,674.40
From postal revenues	134,224,443.24
Total receipts	694,621,117.64

The expenditures for the same period were:

For the civil establishment, including foreign intercourse, public buildings, collection of the revenues, District of Columbia, [illegible]	122,175,370.54
For the military establishment, including rivers and harbors, [illegible] and expenses of the war [illegible]	118,619,520.15
For the [illegible] and expenses of the war with Spain and in the Philippines	82,618,694.18
For Indian service	[illegible]
For pensions	138,428,646.07
For interest on the public debt	[illegible]
For deficiency in postal revenues	[illegible]
	567,[illegible],067.04
For Postal Service	134,224,443.24
Total expenditures	640,823,450.28
Showing a surplus of	54,297,667.36

In addition to the revenues collected during the year and the amounts received on [illegible] the Treasury was increased $[illegible] on account of interest accrued on [illegible] as follows:

Fractional currency	$2,083.10
Treasury notes of 1890	50.00
One-year notes of 1890	25.00
Two-year notes of 1890	50.00
[illegible]	520.00
[illegible]	40.00
[illegible] issued at 3½ per cent	500.00
[illegible]	6,440.00
[illegible] issued at 2 per cent	63,500.00
Bonds purchased:
Loan of 1904 $25,300.00
Loan of 1925 16,504,300.00	16,529,600.00
Premium on bonds purchased:
Loan of 1904 1,022.51
Loan of 1925 6,201,025.41	6,202,047.92
Premium on bonds exchanged:
Funded loan of 1907 4,170,932.47
Loan of 1908-1918 534,139.43	4,705,071.90
National-bank notes redeemed in excess of deposits	2,001,161.00
Total	29,511,323.82

Compared with the fiscal year 1902 the receipts for 1903 increased $10,294,837.17, as follows:

Increase in receipts for 1903.

Source.	1902.	1903.	Increase.	Decrease.
Customs	$254,444,706.10	$284,479,581.81	$30,034,875.62	.....
Internal revenue	271,180,122.16	230,089,124.15	.....	$41,090,997.93
Profits on coinage, bullion deposits, etc	10,970,506.57	8,254,739.88	.....	2,724,766.69
Tax on seal skins and rent of Pribyloff Islands	231,821.20	286,233.60	54,412.20	.....
Sales of Indian lands	1,775,832.69	2,393,298.83	617,466.20	.....
Sales of Government property	899,814.15	434,896.21	.....	395,017.94
Sales of public lands	4,144,122.78	5,896,311.22	1,752,188.44	.....
Interest on Columbia	4,217,841.43	5,168,038.56	950,196.13	.....
Navy pension, navy hospital, clothing, and deposit funds	2,019,850.25	2,300,501.17	280,650.92	.....
Fees—consular, letters patent, and land	4,085,229.87	4,048,833.22	.....	36,396.65
Depredations on public lands	107,935.58	231,144.20	123,148.62	.....
Customs fees, fines, penalties, etc	828,971.35	878,254.77	49,283.42	.....
Internal fees, fines, penalties, etc	334,233.95	368,757.49	34,523.54	.....
Internal land	747,217.15	1,366,158.83	618,941.68	.....
Proceeds for surveying private claims	316,579.23	305,701.88	.....	10,877.35
Tax on Indian lands	1,647,454.73	1,647,429.27	3,974.53	.....
Part payment Central Pacific Railroad indebtedness	.....	4,066,340.54	4,066,340.54	.....
Payment of interest by Pacific railways	1,564,554.71	997,197.79	.....	567,356.92
Sales of lands and buildings	272,422.72	289,731.88	17,308.16	.....
Sales of ordnance material	328,466.55	171,188.10	.....	157,250.45
Sales of old vessels	303,818.38	174,317.10	.....	129,431.88
Sales of Hennepin permanent land	590,045.62	743,139.35	217,093.73	.....
Depredations	20,000.00	38,551.04	18,551.04	.....
Trust funds, Department of State	222,061.94	1,293,692.07	981,630.13	.....
Spanish indemnity	.....	28,500.00	28,500.00	.....
Miscellaneous	631,959.55	796,634.01	164,674.46	.....
Total ordinary receipts, exclusive of postal revenues	562,478,233.21	560,396,674.40	49,019,596.92	45,101,095.73
Postal revenues	121,885,947.36	134,224,443.24	12,376,395.88	.....
Aggregate receipts	684,364,180.57	694,621,117.64	61,395,992.80	45,101,095.73
Net increase	.....	.....	16,294,897.17	.....

There was an increase of $47,284,545.38 in expenditures, as follows:

Increase in expenditures for 1903.

Object.	1902.	1903.	Increase.	Decrease.
CIVIL ESTABLISHMENT.
Legislative:
Salaries and expenses	$11,330,201.87	$12,190,749.17	$860,547.30	.....
Executive proper:
Salaries and expenses	213,585.22	357,637.23	144,052.01	.....
Department of State:
Salaries and expenses	169,487.44	178,098.28	.....	$8,369.16
Foreign intercourse	2,765,734.01	3,204,522.01	438,788.00	.....
Treasury Department:
Salaries and expenses	3,533,389.24	3,846,860.94	313,471.70	.....
Independent Treasury	683,491.82	704,211.34	20,658.52	.....
Mint service, etc	1,555,665.06	1,496,220.57	.....	79,445.49
Territorial governments	165,734.85	261,591.08	95,856.23	.....
Salaries, etc., internal revenue	4,248,497.33	4,346,139.89	97,642.56	.....
Miscellaneous, internal revenue	1,359,659.97	2,370,682.57	1,011,022.60	.....
Rebate of tax on tobacco	2,928,191.28	3,886,991.14	958,799.86	.....
Collecting customs revenue	7,967,473.86	8,468,710.19	501,236.33	.....
Refunding excess of deposits, customs	5,414,259.82	4,248,535.81	.....	1,165,724.01
Debentures or drawbacks, customs	5,236,157.44	5,348,308.96	112,151.52	.....
Miscellaneous items, customs	242,732.01	260,509.15	17,777.14	.....
Revenue-Cutter Service	1,203,637.12	1,441,614.26	237,977.14	.....
Regulating immigration	399,692.38	655,428.42	255,736.04	.....
Chinese exclusion acts	202,744.03	262,274.07	59,529.04	.....
New revenue vessels	112,514.96	205,057.17	92,542.21	.....
Alien contract-labor laws	150,032.16	106,718.89	.....	43,313.27
Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service	1,234,364.51	1,356,455.87	122,091.36	.....
Life-Saving Service	1,667,688.48	1,746,841.19	79,152.71	.....
Light-House Establishment	4,181,409.39	4,537,315.67	355,912.28	.....
Coast and Geodetic Survey	838,882.07	865,215.78	26,333.71	.....

Increase in expenditures for 1903—Continued.

Object.	1902.	1903.	Increase.	Decrease.
CIVIL ESTABLISHMENT—continued.
Treasury Department—Continued.
Steamboat-Inspection Service	$344,490.06	$436,871.50	$92,381.44	.....
Engraving and printing	2,653,582.49	2,782,248.50	128,666.07	.....
Public buildings	5,118,157.36	7,679,721.29	2,561,563.93	.....
Fuel, etc., public buildings	881,279.99	907,984.32	26,704.33	.....
Custodians and janitors	1,030,029.26	1,085,044.49	5,015.23	.....
Furniture for public buildings	257,389.74	270,896.35	13,506.61	.....
Fish hatcheries	51,435.72	55,993.26	4,557.53	.....
Salaries and expenses, Fish Commission	489,295.45	524,838.31	35,542.86	.....
National Museum	271,828.94	255,027.93	.....	$16,791.01
Zoological Park	83,283.19	101,740.00	18,456.81	.....
Smithsonian Institution	140,099.18	147,717.85	7,708.67	.....
Interstate Commerce Commission	270,059.55	302,972.35	32,912.80	.....
French spoliation claims	193,257.73	557,342.13	364,084.40	.....
Claims under Bowman and Tucker acts	407,855.31	172,285.00	.....	235,570.31
Epidemic diseases	141,814.53	176,553.53	34,739.00	.....
Refunding customs revenue collected from Porto Rico	399,988.10	375,402.45	.....	24,585.65
Payment of debt of Hawaii	751,202.44	187,300.04	.....	563,902.40
Buffalo exposition, New York	83,736.90	500,347.96	416,591.06	.....
Louisiana Purchase Exposition, St. Louis	45,275.59	424,967.06	379,691.47	.....
South Carolina exposition	.....	179,975.14	179,975.14	.....
Suppressing bubonic plague, Hawaii	.....	1,000,000.00	1,000,000.00	.....
Miscellaneous items	899,899.95	945,652.61	45,752.66	.....
War Department:
Salaries and expenses	2,385,030.04	3,062,025.73	676,995.69	.....
Navy Department:
Salaries and expenses	498,897.02	498,762.44	.....	134.58
Interior Department:
Salaries and expenses	4,742,480.28	4,933,929.83	191,449.55	.....
Indian Lands Service	3,212,726.28	3,619,628.49	406,902.21	.....
Irrigation land	.....	268,517.23	268,517.23	.....
Colleges for agriculture	1,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	.....	.....
Twelfth Census	2,[illegible]	1,[illegible]	.....	1,569,985.36
Reconstructing rooms of old Library of Congress	[illegible]	[illegible]	.....	167,361.17
Miscellaneous items	1,492,652.36	1,663,644.76	610,992.40	.....
Post-Office Department:
Salaries and expenses	1,053,649.79	1,439,498.87	385,849.08	.....
Deficiency in postal revenues	2,402,152.56	2,768,919.20	366,766.68	.....
Mail transportation, Pacific railways	592,682.31	701,648.28	108,965.97	.....
Department of Agriculture:
Salaries and expenses	3,423,215.92	4,073,265.06	650,049.14	.....
Weather Bureau	1,156,773.68	1,259,121.79	102,348.01	.....
Department of Labor:
Salaries and expenses	176,302.49	182,084.49	5,882.00	.....
Department of Commerce and Labor:
Salaries and expenses	.....	34,473.84	34,473.84	.....
Department of Justice:
Salaries and expenses	473,003.04	589,144.39	116,241.35	.....
Salaries of judges, assistant attorneys, etc	1,038,000.85	1,320,695.50	282,694.65	.....
Salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals	1,151,351.20	1,364,915.99	213,564.79	.....
Fees of witnesses	829,086.97	820,936.59	.....	8,150.38
Salaries and fees of district attorneys	416,297.51	493,719.69	77,422.18	.....
Fees of jurors	614,858.37	889,904.16	275,045.79	.....
Fees of clerks	247,488.66	263,194.46	15,705.41	.....
Fees of deputy clerks	147,531.76	149,036.69	1,504.93	.....
Supp[illegible] prisoners	734,048.16	811,640.64	77,592.48	.....
Pay of bailiffs	146,828.52	153,728.50	6,899.98	.....
Judgments, United States courts	26,406.64	19,154.16	.....	7,342.48
Miscellaneous items	953,492.53	1,081,795.28	128,302.95	.....
District of Columbia:
Salaries and expenses	9,363,742.00	8,584,037.82	.....	779,704.68
Total civil establishment	113,469,333.91	124,944,289.74	16,145,225.78	4,670,269.95
MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT.
National defense	.....	192,801.69	192,801.69	.....
Emergency fund	42,362.20	76,187.44	33,825.24	.....
Pay Department	36,915,284.17	28,615,762.10	.....	8,299,521.07
Extra pay, war with Spain	82,538.85	187,191.65	74,652.80	.....
Subsistence Department	6,420,827.38	5,419,793.29	.....	1,001,034.08
Quartermaster's Department	31,795,[illegible]	31,[illegible]	.....	903,057.63
Medical Department	850,962.41	1,330,453.99	479,491.58	.....

Increase in expenditures for 1903—Continued.

Object.	1902.	1903.	Increase.	Decrease.
MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT—continued.
Ordnance Department	$11,155,777.83	$10,637,105.75		$518,672.08
Engineer Department	795,691.75	1,082,265.56	$287,173.81
Signal Service	245,379.06	343,930.89	98,551.79
Military telegraph and cables	106,491.47	384,097.39	277,605.92
Military Academy	297,104.93	490,980.17	193,875.24
Improving harbors	6,391,767.29	7,[illegible]	[illegible]
Improving rivers	8,616,213.45	12,247,[illegible]	3,631,[illegible]
Building home remains of officers, soldiers, and others	109,972.27	90,993.13		18,979.14
Military posts	1,053,242.45	1,824,482.09	771,189.64
National Homes for Disabled Soldiers	3,286,434.40	3,988,294.04	701,859.64
State Homes for disabled soldiers	1,004,724.80	1,031,355.43	26,630.63
Support of Soldiers' Home	536,045.62	743,139.39	207,093.77
Soldiers' Home permanent fund	236,000.00	254,000.00	18,000.00
Soldiers' Home interest account	87,661.27	98,638.37	10,977.10
Reimbursing States and Territories, expenses of raising troops, Spanish war	599,431.34	217,852.35		381,578.99
Refunding to States expenses incurred in raising volunteers	1,053,652.42	6,364,609.31	5,310,956.89
Payment to State of Illinois		692,946.00	692,946.00
Relief of distress in the Philippines		3,000,000.00	3,000,000.00
Miscellaneous items	840,750.51	1,220,324.43	380,573.94
Total military establishment	112,272,216.08	118,619,520.15	17,470,147.06	11,122,842.99
NAVAL ESTABLISHMENT.
National defense	24,999.72	1,872,734.22	1,847,734.50
Emergency fund	114,019.42	175,132.00	61,112.58
Increase of the Navy	19,793,144.29	26,667,104.25	6,873,959.96
Bureau of Yards and Docks	5,[illegible]	6,[illegible]	702,690.21
Bureau of Equipment	5,[illegible]	5,[illegible]	284,[illegible]
Bureau of Navigation	[illegible]	[illegible]	281,514.17
Bureau of Construction and Repair	6,998,888.99	7,783,[illegible]	784,717.80
Bureau of Ordnance	2,549,000.51	3,474,[illegible]	925,[illegible]
Bureau of Steam Engineering	3,053,261.78	3,613,724.40	[illegible]
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts	3,957,819.29	5,701,472.94	1,743,[illegible]
Bureau of Medicine and Surgery	415,[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Marine Corps	2,[illegible]	3,[illegible]	[illegible]
Naval Academy	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Pay of the Navy	12,[illegible]	14,[illegible]	1,962,[illegible]
General account of advances	1,905,989.02	17,634.10		1,888,354.92
Judgments, bounty for destruction of enemies' vessels	374,[illegible]	93,869.37		280,184.[illegible]
Miscellaneous items	410,[illegible]	443,[illegible]	33,731.09
Total naval establishment	67,802,128.24	82,618,034.18	16,964,246.26	2,149,440.42
Indian Service	[illegible]	[illegible]	2,885,583.2[illegible]
Pensions	[illegible]	[illegible]		[illegible]
Interest on the public debt	29,[illegible]	28,556,348.82		[illegible]
Total ordinary expenditures, exclusive of postal service	471,199,557.[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	8,557,153.62
Postal service	121,848,04[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Aggregate expenditures	592,098,904.90	640,323,450.2[illegible]	[illegible]	8,557,153.62
Net increase			47,2[illegible]

FISCAL YEAR 1904.

The revenues of the Government for the current fiscal year are thus estimated upon the basis of existing laws:

From customs	$250,000,000.00
From internal revenue	295,000,000.00
From miscellaneous sources	45,000,000.00
From postal revenues	144,767,684.00
Total estimated revenues	674,767,684.00

The expenditures for the same period are estimated as follows:

For the civil establishment	$[illegible]
For the military establishment	115,000,000.00
For the naval establishment	96,000,000.00
For the Indian Service	11,000,000.00
For pensions	139,000,000.00
For interest on the public debt	24,000,000.00
For postal service	144,767,684.00
Total estimated expenditures	680,767,684.00
Or a surplus of	14,000,000.00

FISCAL YEAR 1905.

It is estimated that upon the basis of existing laws the revenues of the Government for the fiscal year 1905 will be:

From customs	$260,000,000.00
From internal revenue	240,000,000.00
From miscellaneous sources	45,000,000.00
From postal revenues	159,472,090.72
Total estimated revenues	704,472,090.72

The estimates of appropriations required for the same period, as submitted by the several Executive Departments and offices, are as follows:

Legislative establishment		$5,351,109.50
Executive establishment:
Executive proper	$320,000.00
State Department	2,[illegible]
Treasury Department	19,[illegible]
War Department	2,[illegible]
Navy Department	[illegible]
Interior Department	5,[illegible]
Post-Office Department	[illegible]
Department of Agriculture	[illegible]
Department of Commerce and Labor	2,[illegible]
Department of Justice	[illegible]
		30,189,059.98
Judicial establishment		[illegible]
Foreign intercourse		[illegible]
Military establishment		[illegible]
Naval establishment		[illegible]
Indian affairs		[illegible]
Pensions		138,[illegible]
Public works:
Legislative	5,[illegible]
Treasury Department	1,[illegible]
War Department	4[illegible]
Navy Department	1,[illegible]
Interior Department	[illegible]
Department of Commerce and Labor	3,[illegible]
Department of Justice	[illegible]
		67,327,307.69
Miscellaneous:
Legislative	6,390,645.82
Treasury Department	[illegible]
War Department	8,[illegible]
Interior Department	[illegible]
Department of Justice	[illegible]
Department of Commerce and Labor	6,[illegible]
District of Columbia	[illegible]
		53,997,012.01
Postal Service, including $3,613,709.23 deficiency in postal revenues		168,085,770.00
Permanent annual appropriations:
Interest on the public debt	$24,250,000.00
Refunding—customs, internal revenue, etc.	12,[illegible]
Collecting revenue from customs	[illegible]
Miscellaneous	42,[illegible]
		84,971,890.00
Total estimated appropriations, exclusive of sinking fund		7[illegible]
Leaving an estimated surplus of		[illegible]

TABLE G.—Population, net revenue, and net expenditures of the Government from 1837 to 1903, and per capita of the revenues and per capita of expenditures.

Year.	Population.	Net revenue.	Per capita on revenue.	Net expenses.	Per capita on expenditures.
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	$37,349,495.00	$2.48
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	33,865,060.00	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1.10	[illegible]	1.[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	1.[illegible]
1844	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	22,[illegible]	[illegible]
1846	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1847	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1848	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1849	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1850	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1851	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1852	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1853	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1854	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1855	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1856	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1857	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1858	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1859	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1860	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1861	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1862	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1863	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1864	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1865	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1866	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1867	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1868	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1869	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1870	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1871	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1872	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1873	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1874	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1875	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1876	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1877	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1878	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
1879	45,[illegible]	273,[illegible]	5.60	168,[illegible]	5.46

TABLE G.—Population, net revenue, and net expenditures of the Government from 1837 to 1903, etc.—Continued.

Year.	Population.	Net revenue.	Per capita on revenue.	Net expenses.	Per capita on expenditures.
1880	50,155,783	$222,596,011.00	$4.65	$267,642,958.00	$5.34
1881	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.00	[illegible]	5.68
1882	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.68	[illegible]	4.91
1883	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.41	[illegible]	4.94
1884	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.96	[illegible]	4.44
1885	[illegible]	[illegible]	5.76	[illegible]	4.62
1886	57,[illegible]	[illegible]	5.86	[illegible]	4.22
1887	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.16	[illegible]	4.76
1888	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.32	[illegible]	4.46
1889	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.01	[illegible]	4.88
1890	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.46	[illegible]	5.97
1891	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.14	[illegible]	5.79
[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	5.44	[illegible]	[illegible]
1893	[illegible]	[illegible]	5.[illegible]	[illegible]	5.77
1894	[illegible]	[illegible]	4.40	[illegible]	5.43
1895	[illegible]	[illegible]	4.54	[illegible]	5.16
1896	[illegible]	[illegible]	4.65	[illegible]	5.01
1897	71,[illegible]	[illegible]	4.85	[illegible]	5.10
1898	[illegible]	[illegible]	5.55	[illegible]	6.07
1899	[illegible]	[illegible]	6.[illegible]	[illegible]	8.14
1900	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.43	[illegible]	6.53
1901	[illegible]	[illegible]	7.36	[illegible]	6.66
1902	79,[illegible]	[illegible]	7.11	471,[illegible]	5.96
1903	80,847,000	560,396,574.40	6.93	508,[illegible]	6.29

[illegible]

NOTE.—The net revenue and expenses and [illegible] for 1901 [illegible] 1903, and [illegible] for the fiscal years [illegible]

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, as a member of the committee from which this bill was reported, I desire to say a very few words.

The bill was reported unanimously. There was no dissent or division in the committee. The responsibility is now transferred from the committee to the floor of the Senate, and it is a very wholesome practice to have all these great appropriation bills carefully scrutinized on the floor of the Senate. If there is a single item in the bill which is unnecessary or extravagant, it should be stricken out. If there is a dollar proposed to be appropriated by this bill in maintenance of a policy that is unwise, [illegible], or hurtful, the bill should be amended. The discussion so far has not disclosed any fault in either respect. No Senator has asked that any item in the bill be stricken out. No Senator has stated that anything in the bill either initiates or continues a policy which is unwise or hurtful to the public welfare.

With the exception of the discussion, which was a lengthy one, in relation to the location of a training school, the only point raised has been, I may say, academic and speculative; that is, what may be a wise policy in the future.

It is true that this bill does increase the Navy; it increases the personnel; it increases the number of men; but no Senator who has addressed the Senate has dissented from the wisdom and propriety of that course. It is true that the bill carries $97,000,000. That fact has been commented upon, yet no Senator has asked that it be diminished. The only suggestion is whether or not the time may come in the near future when we may call a halt in naval construction.

Mr. President, the policy of renewing our naval establishment was commenced under the administration of the Navy Department by Mr. W. C. Whitney years before those events which have so materially changed the relation of our Government to international affairs. And since the initiation of that policy at that time we have continued to increase our Navy. I do not believe there is a man within the broad limits of the United States who will say that there has been a dollar unwisely or injudiciously appropriated for that purpose. I believe we must have a strong navy. I believe the relation of the United States to international affairs now makes it indispensable to the public safety. I believe the American people take that view of this matter and are willing to be taxed to pay for a navy that will give a sense of safety which will come in no other way.

We have acquired the Hawaiian Islands. We have assumed responsibilities in relation to Cuba. We have acquired Porto Rico. We have acquired the Philippine Islands. We have undertaken the construction of an isthmian canal. We have reasserted in its broadest and its boldest form the Monroe doctrine. Each one of these transactions has had a material effect in changing the relations of the United States toward international affairs. Each one of them has increased the importance of having and maintaining in this country a powerful navy. The maintenance of a powerful navy in no wise conflicts with our desire to be at peace with all the people of the world. It does not militate against those high purposes referred to by the Senator from Georgia—the purpose of dealing justly and righteously with all governments.

In this day and time we hear a good deal about the peaceful methods which should prevail between the different countries. We hear a great deal about settling controversies between nations by arbitration. But do we see anything of that sort going on? When England desired possessions in South Africa, was her course governed by those high purposes about which we hear so much? Was there any suggestion of arbitration to determine what should be the true relation between those governments in respect to the matters in controversy? On the contrary, she took her army and her navy and took possession of what she wanted. Many other instances of like character might be cited. Unfortunate as it may be to have to say it, our own country has on more than one occasion engaged in similar business.

I deduce from this, Mr. President, the conclusion that a government can not rely altogether on these high ideas, on a high moral tone, a righteous course toward other nations, as a protection. The experience of mankind demonstrates that the only protection is in power to maintain what is right. There may be such a thing as international morality. It exists in theory, but in practice I observe very little of it. There may be near at hand a period when we may call a halt in naval construction. It is true that we have to-day a great navy, second in power only to that of Great Britain. It is possible that in the near future we will be able to discontinue heavy appropriations for increasing our naval strength. The future will determine that. I sincerely hope that time is near at hand. I earnestly hope we will not assert in the near future be called upon to make such a heavy appropriation as this bill carries for naval construction.

The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs called attention to the subject and threw out that suggestion that Senators might bear it in mind and give it careful consideration. I sincerely hope the time will soon be at hand when we may discontinue this heavy expenditure for naval construction. But, Mr. President, that time is not to-day. War is raging between two of the most powerful Governments of the world. One of them, Russia, is in close alliance with France, and it is not impossible that before the end is reached France may be drawn into the conflict. England is in close alliance with Japan and may be drawn into it. In the midst of the talk about peaceful methods, in the midst of the talk about arbitration, we find the governments of the world to-day more fully and more completely armed and prepared for war than at any other time in fifty years, and we find this war in the East, where we have interests and where we may become involved by remote possibility, although I do not believe it will come.

I say in the aggressive spirit manifested by the governments of the world and the unrest which now prevails, in the high state of armament that exists, it would not become the United States at this critical hour to call a halt on the increase of her naval establishment. When the time will come when we may safely call a halt is academic, is speculative. I sincerely hope that it will come in the near future, but I most positively believe that the time is not to-day. I am gratified to see that not a Senator on this floor has been willing to ask that a single item be stricken out, that a single vessel provided for shall not be constructed. The American people have a right to have that sense of security which comes only from a powerful navy. They will not begrudge the money necessary to maintain a powerful navy.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I have listened with great pleasure, as I always do, to the speech of my friend the Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. He seeks to separate the distinguished Secretary of War from my own State, who recently retired from office, from the Republican party on the question of the retention of the Philippine Islands. My own impression is that if Mr. Root shall, as he doubtless will, during the coming campaign, give a full exposition of his views from the platform, and not in the way in which an interview often misstates a man's opinions, it will be found that he does not differ from the line in which the Republican party has acted and, I think, will continue to act. To use a common phrase, the American people are not "quitters." They never yet have given up anything which they deemed it advisable to obtain.

I am not at this time going into a discussion of the reasons why we will find stronger arguments every year for establishing closer relations with the Philippines, but I will say that I believe no one now living will see those relations weakened. I believe that the extraordinary progress which has been made by those people, as testified to by Governor Taft, in education, in civilization, and in the industries, will continue with accelerated speed as the schools become more numerous, the education more general, and the communication between the United States and the Philippine Islands more constant and rapid. I do not think we yet fully understand two things. First, how much the Philippine Islands are to be advantageous to us in their own development; what they are to grow to when they have absorbed the spirit and are putting in practice the principles of American liberty, American law, and American enterprise. And the other, that we can not yet comprehend and the war clouds in the Far East are over and years have passed by the increasing importance to the United States, on its commercial and industrial side, of the possession of those territories, with their harbors and their depots so near to that market for which all the world is contending.

The Senator from Georgia was very vigorous and forceful in demanding that there should be universal investigations of the operations of the Government. He was alarmed for fear that in all the Departments there is either extravagance or corruption, which he said should be disclosed and corrected by an investigating committee on the part of Congress. He took the ground that now there is no supervision, no care, or attention of the operation of the great Departments of the Government. But, sir, every penny which is expended by these Departments has come here and gone to the other House before appropriated. The Appropriation, Finance, Ways and Means, the Naval, Post-Office, and Military are all of them investigating committees in perpetual session. Upon every one of them is a minority membership, selected by the minority, of members on their side, who are most competent to serve their party as well as their country upon those great committees.

They have the opportunity for months, as the programme comes in from the Post-Office, Navy, War, and other Departments, to look at each one of the proposals for the future and to examine what has been done in the past, and if the committee dared—which it would not—refuse an inquiry as to any item or as to any officer asked for by a minority member, a Senator or Member can go before the House or Senate explaining that he has been denied the privilege as a member of a great committee of receiving information or making an investigation which he wants, and neither House would for a moment stand before the country as obstructing any such inquiry.

But, sir, there has been an inquiry—an inquiry not made by an investigating committee or on the initiative of the Democratic members of any committee, but an inquiry made by the President of the United States, when the disclosures might bring disasters to his party, upon the principle which he has always maintained, of finding rascality if there is any, and punishing the rascal when he is caught.

There have been several speeches made in both Houses assailing the good faith and the earnest intentions of the President in this regard, but he has moved forward on his motto that no guilty man should escape, regardless of criticisms or complaint.

He set the whole machinery of justice at work, and the result is seen in the indictment of men in high position in the Government and out of it, and a few days ago in the illuminating exposition in this District of the conviction of men who had for years, under all administrations, had the confidence of the Department and, as far as they were known, of the country.

But, sir, I intend to make a few remarks upon the broader subject which was so ably discussed this afternoon by my friend the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. CLAY]. The present naval bill provoked much more debate in the House of Representatives than it has done here. The general charge against it has been very much on the line so vigorously pursued by the Senator from Georgia, against the size of this appropriation and the dangers of its increase in the future.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I spoke entirely in regard to what should be the size of our appropriations in the future. I said I did not believe we should continue at the rapid rate we have been going during the last six or seven years, and I did not speak against the passage of this bill.

Mr. DEPEW. I accept the correction. I misunderstood the Senator. But certainly in the other House the objection was of that character.

Now, I find no fault with rigid economists in public life. I believe in the "watchdog of the Treasury." It is a most disagreeable and unpopular position, but it is one which ought to be held by somebody in every deliberative body. No matter how rich we may be, and our wealth is constantly exploited, it is no reason for extravagance or foolish or unwise expenditures.

But, sir, we have been liberal in every direction, and especially in those directions about which complaint is made, that in order to take care of the Navy we are neglecting internal improvements and the construction of public buildings. We have been engaged for years in the most liberal expenditures for rivers, harbors, and bays. We have made those expenditures, though they are entirely local, out of the Treasury of the whole people, and out of taxation of the whole people, because we believed that it is the duty of the Government to promote navigation and safe carriage of our goods everywhere in the country.

We have gone a step further and made large appropriations for irrigation in territories which are sparsely inhabited, which will never have large populations, which ninety per cent of our people will never see, because we believed that what was for the benefit of one part of the country was the benefit of all, and that if we could bring vast regions of desert into productive agriculture we would be accomplishing a good result in the increase of the wealth, the opportunities for homes and employment, and the good living of our citizens.

We have made like appropriations with great liberality for the construction of public buildings all over the country, until the criticism has been made that many of them are beyond what the needs of the localities are or ever can be.

Every great power has found it necessary to provide protection for its commerce, its foreign trade, its ports, and its people doing business or traveling in other countries. We have become a great power. It is not an idle expression; it is a fact. We to-day stand alongside of the five great powers of the world. We have assumed responsibilities by this expansion from which we can not escape, and ought not to if we could.

Therefore it is incumbent upon us to act on the lines of the nations which are our rivals and competitors and whom we hope to keep our friends. We are free from invasion. Nobody supposes for a moment that it would be possible for any nation to send here an army that could secure a foothold upon our land. Our forts in our harbors and our submarines are protection for our coasts, and the Volunteer Army, which is always ready to call, would annihilate any army which any fleet, if by possibility it reached our coast, could land upon our shores.

But, sir, we are and have become within a few years, in being a world power, subject to perils and conditions which never existed before. We have obligations to the island of Cuba, where we have said to the world we will protect her against assaulting invasion, against any attack upon her independence or the integrity of her territory or her institutions. We have Porto Rico, which can be defended only from the sea, as Cuba can be defended only from the sea. We have Tutuila, Guam, Hawaii, and the Philippines, far from the United States, all of which must be protected from the sea.

Then we have assumed another obligation which is much greater, and that is the isthmian canal. We have the longest line of seacoast of any power in the world except one—7,000 miles, and in addition to that Alaska. Alaska is growing in wealth and in population to an extent which is enlisting attention everywhere, and has to be defended from the sea.

But, sir, the isthmian canal has opened a new era for America and the world. Already the treaty has been signed, the negotiations have ended, the Commission has been appointed. We are to establish soon a government upon the tract ceded to us and assume the responsibility for order and law. The spade is on its way. The steam drill and the dredge will be heard within a few months. One of the most inspiring lines of Emerson is, "Here once the embattled farmers stood and fired the shot heard round the world," and the sound of the dredge and the drill on the Isthmus will be heard around the world, because it is to alter the paths of commerce and to change the routes of nations.

The future of the Navy of the future is in the security of our Navy. Its peaceful protection will be the tribute which other nations pay not to the dominion, but to our sea power.

We do not appreciate until we study the subject that the commercial jealousies and alarms which now exist in Europe are sure to be accentuated by the construction and completion of the canal. Not alone our States on the Pacific, but the whole line of ports on the Atlantic coast will come into the competition for the ports on the Atlantic coast will be as near in miles to Asia, China, and the Orient by the isthmian canal as are the ports that gather for distribution across those products of continental Europe or London through the Suez Canal.

We all remember that during the Spanish-American war the prime minister of America did his best to bring about a hostile alliance against us among European powers because of what it termed an industrial invasion which threatened the living of the people of the Old World. He failed in persuading that combination because of international jealousies, but with the opening of the isthmian canal those jealousies are to increase, for the highly organized industrial nations of Europe are now making so much more than they can consume that they must have either a diminution of population and production, with its result of depopulation, poverty, and anarchy, or they must find markets. There is only one market which is free, and that is among the dependent peoples of Asia and Africa.

Now, when through the isthmian canal all products of the industrial energies of this country can reach that market just as quickly and cheaply as can the manufactures of the Old World, then, sir, will come a competition which will be most acute because of the skill of our artisans and business talent of our people. There will be no difference between it and competition between individuals. We all know what competition means between men, firms, or corporations, and in the progress of civilization all great nations have become business concerns, each looking in a materialistic and business way for the production of manufacturing and agricultural products which shall give employment to and support its people and a market for the surplus of those products.

Now, sir, we can not protect that commerce by an army or treaties alone. We can not protect our commerce and expand our trade by arbitration at The Hague alone. We can only maintain our commerce by having a sea power adequate for its protection, for the security of our islands, and to prevent a hostile fleet from destroying in a week the isthmian canal after it has cost us two to four hundred million dollars and ten years to build—a sea power, sir, which will not be aggressive, but will stand for and keep peace. Our peculiar position gives us a stronger place on the ocean than any other country, because we are less vulnerable upon the land. If we have a sea power so that our floating fortresses will be second or third in rank, no power, no matter what its industrial or diplomatic jealousies or its aggressive tendencies, no matter what its feelings beneath its professions, will ever incur the peril of a contest when there is so much to lose and so little to gain.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York will suspend one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports of the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, that the Senate may proceed with the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, every year, by the natural increase in population and the tremendous immigration which is pouring in upon us, we are stimulating our industries and our productiveness beyond that of any other nation in the world, and that stimulation increases a surplus for export which will grow larger as the years go by. Unless we can carry out the broad policy of expansion of markets, which has been so successfully pursued up to the present hour, there is danger to our business, employment, wages, and peace.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. I should like the Senator to be a little more exact in his suggestion as to danger unless we carry out our present plans or proceed along the broad line of expansion which we have inaugurated. Does the Senator from New York mean that we are to continue the securing of additional outlying territory, seeking conquests or purchases in different countries?

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I do not mean that we shall secure more outlying territory. I do not think the occasion will ever arise, so far as at present the situation is visible, where we will need or accept other lands. But I do mean that we shall, if possible, have a mercantile marine some day or other. I do mean that we shall have a navy adequate to protect our commerce all over the world, our people everywhere, and the outlying territories we possess. I do mean that we shall follow continuously, from our Executive and State Department, the line upon which the notes of Secretary Hay to the foreign powers for the open door and the integrity of China against partition proceeded, and that this will continue to be a policy for the benefit of the growing commerce, industries, and productiveness of the United States.

We all remember, who were in Europe after the formation of the German Empire and who had the opportunity of knowing, what were the views of that greatest statesman of the German race, Bismarck, that at that time he saw infinite peril to the German people because the increase of population and productiveness was so far beyond their home markets that he said he saw a congestion which might lead to a social revolution unless outlets could be found. So he sent his agents all over the world looking for territories which could be acquired or settled in South America or carved out of Africa or Asia for German colonization and for places where the productive German cradle could find homes and happiness.

He was followed by Emperor William, one of the most enlightened and far-sighted executives who ever inherited a throne. He saw these conditions and he improved upon them, both in the German mercantile marine and in the German navy. Under the inspiration of his energetic genius, under the inspiration, if you please, of his impulsiveness and strenuosity, the German mercantile marine has received encouragement from the Government by which, within ten years, it has grown from a very small place until now it ranks next to Great Britain. Its mighty steamships have their full share of the carriage of American products, and in every sea and in every port and in every trade in the world is found the subsidized ship of the German mercantile marine.

Coincident with that this enlightened and far-sighted Emperor has taken up the question of the navy of Germany. Germany is a most economical country, and yet the German navy, under the pressure of the enlightened opinion now shared universally by the intelligent and progressive people of that country, has risen from a low rank within ten years to be third in equipment and power.

I was in England some years since when a wave of pessimism was rolling over Great Britain and pervading Parliament. The general opinion was that the expenses of the naval armament were in excess of the needs of the country and a burden which could not be borne by the British taxpayer. That sentiment affected the budget. The admiralty could not get from Parliament what it asked and required.

There appeared at the time a book, and I am free to say that no book ever published from a private citizen and an ex-officer produced such an immediate impression upon the naval powers of the world as the Sea Power of Captain Mahan. It had the widest circulation and was generally read in Great Britain. Newspapers took it up. It became the talk of the clubs, the drawing rooms, and the workshops. The debate was entered in Parliament. I heard men of the highest distinction, from royalty down, talk with enthusiasm of the revelations and teachings of this book and the wisdom of acting upon its suggestions. Very soon a new programme was adopted by Great Britain, a programme which provided that, no matter what other countries might expend or do, Great Britain would always have a fleet equal to the combined fleets of the two largest naval powers.

We have given our thought and energies mainly during the hundred and seventeen years of our consumed existence to the development of our territory and its settlement, to invention and manufactures, to the building of railroads and canals, and to developing and encouraging our internal commerce, and we have paid very little attention to the sea.

Our position upon the sea has been spasmodic and not logical until within the last fourteen years. Whenever we have been forced upon the ocean the record of our Navy has been brilliant and glorious. The story of our ships with John Paul Jones in the Revolution, Hull, Decatur, Perry, Lawrence, McDonough, Rogers, and their associates in the war of 1812, Farragut, Porter, Foote, and others in the civil war, and Dewey and the great sea heroes in the Spanish war has proved that upon the sea we only need the ships, for we have the officers and the men.

But, sir, after the war of 1812 there was little done for our Navy. The old frigates, whose names and victories were the inspiration of all of us in our school days and are still war cruisers, battleships and cruisers, went into dry dock and were either broken up or became practice vessels or museums. Then, when the civil war came suddenly upon us, we bought everything which could float, much of which was only fit for the scrap heap. It is admitted that what that Navy did during the civil war was one of the principal means in bringing it to a close, and if we had possessed at that time a navy adequate to our needs it would have ended much sooner, notwithstanding that it was an internecine conflict and mainly upon land and carried on under conditions which could never exist in a war with a foreign power.

After the war we sold most of our fleet and devoted ourselves to reconstruction, to repairing the losses and disasters of the strife, and paid little attention to our Navy.

Then came the Spanish-American war. We had progressed somewhat in the naval programme then, or I do not know where Dewey would have been, or how we could have conducted the Cuban campaign. We had not the proper armament in our forts. We had nothing adequate in our harbors in the way of torpedoes, submarines, and the like. If that war, coming up in a night, had been with Germany, Great Britain, or France our situation would have been deplorable. Happily for us it was with a nation which could not compare with us as a sea power, and therefore its fleet was quickly destroyed.

Now, sir, the situation is changed. We have a programme which was adopted some fourteen years ago. It has been pursued with reasonable consistency up to the present time. It has given us ships which have raised us from the twenty-sixth in rank to the fifth, and with the ships in course of construction and the programme carried out which is in this bill we will be second in sea power.

One of the most valuable presentations made on this question has been the very able speech of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. But I will go for an instant outside of the limits of the official statement into the general character of this question.

The necessity for a navy which will place us third or second in rank I have already in a measure outlined. It takes five years to build a battle ship. It takes a proportionate number of years to build armored cruisers, torpedo boats, submarine boats, and torpedo-boat destroyers. A navy can not be extemporized or constructed in a day or a year.

I have no doubt, in addition to the tariff walls which have been put up all over Europe against us, and which prevent further expansion of our trade on the Continent of Europe, that Mr. Chamberlain will succeed in England. I think he will be defeated in the next general election, but the sentiment will grow, and there will be a short life for the party which comes into power on the old free-trade programme. Mr. Chamberlain will find himself in five or six years, with an increased majority behind him, coming into power on an entire reversal of the traditional policy of Great Britain.

The example of the United States, the tremendous development of our resources and industries by reason of the protective tariff, our enormous growth in wealth, because we have made America for Americans, have already made Germany, France, Russia, Italy, and Austria adopt the protective system.

Their tariff walls are raised against us because the enterprise of our manufacturers and the skill of our artisans and cheap transportation are making our competition dangerous. When England reverses her policy, when she ceases to be a dumping ground for our surplus, when her ports are no longer open to our cereals, our fabrics in cotton and wool, our manufactures in wood and steel, when she enacts a tariff which will keep her factories going and her own workmen employed at living wages against foreign producers, then we will find that the American business man, the American factory, the American farm, and the American workingman will demand that we enter those markets of the East which will not be opened and kept open for us except by an adequate Navy.

I do not know what will result from this war between Russia and Japan. We are taking no part with one side or the other, but we do know that whatever happens is of infinite moment to us.

Ten years ago, from a commercial standpoint, we would not have cared what happened to China. To-day what becomes of that ancient Empire is vital to American commerce, industry, and trade. If Russia should succeed, for instance, and take Manchuria, which is a large portion of Chinese territory, with its millions of people, with what Great Britain, Germany, and France have sliced off from that country, if in the general adjustment there should be further division and occupation, it would all mean that other doors were to be closed and other barriers to be raised against American production and its entrance into those markets.

So our policy is, and must be, to maintain as far as possible the integrity of China and her autonomy. We are going to be consulted when that time comes and this Russian-Japanese war is over, no matter which side is the victor. We are to be consulted because the adjustment is not to be made nor to be permitted by the rest of Europe to be made by those two powers, but by a European congress, the same as it always has been.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DEPEW. I do.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, this is a very interesting portion of the distinguished Senator's speech, touching upon China and its future. He speaks of the possibility or the probability of European powers dividing up China, and says that we must be consulted. Suppose the European powers divide up China without consulting us, has the policy of the United States been so changed, under a Republican or other Administration, that we shall enter into a foreign war to prevent the disposition of China by European powers?

Mr. DEPEW. No, sir; not that exactly, but——

Mr. PATTERSON. Well, not exactly, but pretty close to it?

Mr. DEPEW. Just only so close as this: If we have a navy which is second among world powers at that time, and we will come pretty near it——

Mr. PATTERSON. But suppose, Mr. President, England, with its navy as large as the navies of any other two powers, or Germany, whose navy at least will then be third in size, or France—this is the task we are undertaking—with the combined navies of those countries outclassing ours as three to one, what, in the opinion of the distinguished Senator from New York, will the United States do to prevent it? If mere negotiation fails, then is it the Senator's understanding that the policy is war?

Mr. DEPEW. My observations on this question are based upon broader lines than the possibilities of our going to war. They are based upon the position which the United States will hold among nations so jealous of one another that our friendship, even in a moral way, will be eagerly sought.

The partition of China is not to be done without immense friction. It is not to be done without tremendous antagonisms among European nations. Why are they now accepting a very unpopular note from Secretary Hay and assenting to it when we have no adequate Navy? It is because none of the great powers of the world want any irritation of any kind with the United States, even with her present equipment, for they recognize our bound less resources.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the Senator from New York, I think is aware that the note from Secretary Hay to which he refers was not on the initiative of Secretary Hay, but was suggested to him by the German Government, and when Secretary Hay sent out his note to the different powers he simply acted as the mouthpiece of Germany, according to the reports which have been uncontradicted now ever since that note went out.

Then one additional matter—passing from that, and the Senator can take it up—suppose the moral force and power of the United States is disregarded? The Senator has not yet answered that question.

Mr. DEPEW. I beg pardon. Will the Senator please repeat his statement?

Mr. PATTERSON. Suppose the moral influence, the moral power, upon which the Senator from New York enlarges so eloquently and clearly, is disregarded by those European powers, the European powers going upon the theory that "the United States, under the Monroe doctrine, excludes us from the Western Continent, therefore we will exclude the United States from our continent;" what, then, is the United States to do? The Senator from New York has not seen fit to answer, although the question relating to that particular phase of the subject has been pretty pointed.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, I thought I had answered.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I want to say to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] that the case he put is not a supposable case. The interests of the United States, England, and Japan are, in the nature of the case, one. They are all in favor of and believe in maintaining "the open door" as against Russia and whatever power may be associated with her. The conditions which the Senator from Colorado presupposes are never likely to exist. It is purely a farfetched hypothetical case.

With our Navy in those Eastern waters, with our power in those Eastern waters, we will be in exactly the condition we were when the Boxer rebellion broke out in China. With a few of our troops from the Philippine Islands and with part of our Navy we participated in suppressing that Boxer rebellion, and the voice of the United States was as potential as that of any of the great nations of the world in settling those Boxer troubles and bringing peace to China.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. DEPEW. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, in reference to the reply of the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] I understand now that he goes upon the theory that there is some sort of an alliance between the United States and Great Britain and Japan.

Mr. NELSON. If the Senator from New York, who has the floor, will allow me——

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I am trespassing on his time.

Mr. PATTERSON. So am I.

Mr. NELSON. With the permission of the Senator from New York, I will say there is nothing of the kind; there is no alliance other than that alliance which arises from a mutuality of interest. We have interests in common; we are interested in the Philippine Islands and we are interested in the building up of our commerce in the Orient. England is interested in maintaining her commerce in those countries; she has possessions there, and her commerce is immense. So with Japan. Their interests are identical with ours, and their interests are, in the very nature of the case, hostile to the dismemberment of the Chinese Empire or the absorption of Manchuria by Russia.

Mr. PATTERSON. Then, with the permission of the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW], I understand, according to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], there is no actual alliance, so far as he has knowledge, between the United States and Great Britain and Japan. It is simply a temporary alliance arising out of mutuality of interest. I am quite free to confess, if that is the case, that so long as that mutuality exists and it is not overcome by interests of still greater weight of one or the other of the three nations referred to by the Senator it is very likely that those three nations will stand united and opposed to the other nations which insist upon a different policy.

But, Mr. President, how long will an alliance based upon mutuality of interest exist where there is no obligation resting upon one nation having such an alliance with the other, except present mutual interest in a certain line of policy in the Far East? How long, Mr. President, would it require Great Britain, if it came to the conclusion that it was either war or a division of the Chinese Empire, to side with Germany and France and Italy and Spain and [illegible] "Since China is to be divided, we will unite with the other European nations and get the lion's share if we can?"

It is useless, it is childish, it seems to me, Mr. President, to rest for any considerable length of time upon a present friendly feeling between three far-apart nations—one in the Far West, another in the Far East, and the other between them—that depends solely upon present interests happening to be mutual for the time, because there is danger to the one or the other if they should disunite or seek benefits along another line. It becomes a mere matter in the future of greater interest or greater results for either one of the other to abandon the alliance that is based simply upon mutuality.

So, Mr. President, both Senators should look the proposition squarely in the face, since we are talking about our great Navy, and having become a world power, and that we must be consulted when the question of the division of the Chinese Empire may arise. The question the people of this country are interested in—since both of the Senators represent, in my opinion, the average sentiment of the Republican Administration—is what is to be the course of the United States in the event of these interests changing and Great Britain uniting with other powers for the division of the Empire of China.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. I do not desire, Mr. President, that the scope of the debate upon this appropriation bill, purely a matter of the Navy, should extend to extraneous matters; but I do not want the statement the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has made in the Senate to go unchallenged. I do not want it to be quoted, as it will be, and stated as a proposition covering the attitude of the United States, now that this war in the East is going on, to the countries involved in that war or to the interests that other countries or we may have.

I do not agree that there is any such common interest as the Senator from Minnesota states between the United States and Great Britain and Japan upon the one side against Russia and Germany or France or any other country on the other side. The attitude of the United States, as taken by the State Department, the attitude of the Administration, is one of complete neutrality between these parties; and when it is said that we have to-day a common interest with Japan and with England with reference to Manchuria, that is a statement that the Government of the United States and its interests and its tendencies are against Russia and in favor of Japan.

I do not want that statement to go unchallenged. I do not attempt to forecast—I can not pierce the future—but if I were called upon to prophesy, I should say that in the future, particularly if Japan emerges triumphant from this war, the country the United States will find her greatest rival in trade, her greatest antagonist in competition, the nation most likely to aggress, to monopolize, and control China is not Russia, but is Japan.

Now, I do not want to say, following that, that our interests and our attitude are in favor of Russia as against Japan; but I do not want it said, on the other side, that our attitude and our sympathies and our trade are all with Japan and with England and against the other powers.

Take the Philippines. If we hold that people in our power as colonies and continue to keep them under the yoke, the first power that will give us any trouble in the Philippines will not be Germany, nor Russia, nor France, nor England, but the growing, aggressive, ambitious power of the Orient—the Japanese Empire. It is not a feeble people; it is not a small people.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, as the Senator has called me to task for what I said, I should like to know by what right he calls the little country of Japan a vicious power.

Mr. HALE. "A vicious power!" I have not called it "a vicious power."

Mr. NELSON. The Senator just used that expression.

Mr. HALE. "Ambitious," I said. The two words, if the Senator will look at the dictionary, are not the same. "Ambitious" has one property, one definition; "vicious" has another.

Mr. NELSON. I beg pardon; I misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. HALE. I would use "ambitious" as applied to the Senator from Minnesota, but I would not use "vicious."

No, Mr. President, what I am protesting against is any statement here that countervails or modifies the wise position the Government is taking, that in this contest not only will it not interfere, but that it will not avow, show, or have any sympathy, but will maintain a determined and wise neutrality.

Whatever we may think, whatever may be our feeling, I am not going to discuss which nation I sympathize with. That is not the question. But, again I say, without my protest, no declaration shall be made here which, while the Senator says does not involve an alliance, is so strong a statement that it would in any emergency that might come up produce an alliance. I do not believe that Mr. President.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. DEPEW. Certainly.

Mr. PATTERSON. Just one word, because I recognize that we already have trenched too long upon the time of the Senator from New York. I simply want to emphasize, if possible, the attitude of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in insisting that this country shall be regarded as absolutely neutral in its feelings, if that were possible, and in its course as between the two fighting nations. Whether that is wise or not, or whether the public mind of the United States will permit it or not, is a question that need not be discussed now.

But, as I understand the attitude of the Senator from Maine, it is that, being neutral, the United States is in a position to take advantage for the benefit of the United States, which ever side may win. If it is Russia, the United States will be in with Russia; if it is Japan, the United States will be in with Japan; and there will be no antagonism between the United States and either the one nation or the other; and, following the commercial instinct, the United States will be in a position to secure the greatest possible benefit whichever way the war may end.

Mr. HALE. I do not go to that extent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. DEPEW. Yes.

Mr. HALE. I do not go to that extent. I suppose if we maintain this neutrality, whatever the outcome may be, we shall not have made an enemy; but I do not feel that we are maintaining that attitude for the sake of any great benefit to the United States.

I do not join in the feeling that a very critical thing for a very great thing to the United States, and a thing of great magnitude in our commerce is this oriental trade. It is a very small matter compared either with our other foreign trade or our immense home trade and home market. We have, through the events that have taken place in the last four or five years, not gained trade, but we have lost trade relatively.

When the troubles broke out in China, when the Boxer rebellion came to the surface, we were beating all the nations of the world in the trade with China. We did not want "the open door;" we had the preference of the Chinese. We had let China alone. England had bullied her; France had insulted her; Germany had derided her; Russia had despoiled her, and the United States had kept hands off. If we had not, through our position there, through our naval force and the proximity of the Philippine Islands, joined the armies of the aggressory nations—of which we were not—the Chinese Boxers would have taken the location of the United States, borne it in friendly arms to the seaboard, and kept it there while fighting with the other powers.

People have not reflected exactly upon that situation. We were beating the world, and if we had not been involved in any of these Eastern troubles we should have had no question of "the open door." They were with us. We alienated them for the time, and I do not want to see them further alienated. Again, I say that the question of trade out there is nothing to be compared with our other foreign trade and our immense home trade; it is very small. Therefore, when I am in favor of maintaining neutrality, I have not got any view that we are going to, when this war is over, drive a bargain that will be of any great importance to us with either power that comes out ahead. But we ought to keep our hands off of these oriental combinations and intricacies and policies. It will be an ill day for the United States when she takes upon herself the proposition that it is her business to maintain the integrity of China, as Europe has taken the proposition that it is their business to maintain the integrity of Turkey; because, as in Turkey's case, that means ultimately when it comes, war, if it is necessary to enforce that proposition.

I am not in favor of any policy that involves us at last in the immense expenditures, the stupendous losses, and the unspeakable wickedness of the American people and the United States being involved in a war upon any issue that arises in those seas, 7,000 miles away from us. So I want neutrality, and I want nothing said anywhere that will be quoted by either of those powers to inflame the other power, and so I deprecate the statement of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. DEPEW. Mr. President, my speech has had a very interesting interruption, as it always has when the keen intelligence of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] is watchful of the interests of his party; but when he states that the note of Secretary Hay, which has aroused such world-wide interest and such universal approval, was inspired by the German Government it would indicate that his enterprising paper, the Denver News, has Marconi relations with the palace at Potsdam, where the Emperor resides, not enjoyed by other newspapers of the United States.

Certainly, the revelation is brand new, and the Senator from Colorado would not make it unless, under the broad seal of Germany and the royal arms of its Emperor, he was in receipt of the information.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, just one moment. The Associated Press, which communicates to all the papers of the country, made that statement; and if the Senator from New York was conversant with the Associated Press news as published in the great dailies of the empire city of his own State, he would be just as familiar with it as though he were a subscriber for and a constant reader of the Denver News.

Mr. DEPEW. I am a careful reader of the New York metropolitan newspapers, the country journals which are sent me by my friends the country editors, and the papers of Washington. I think they will be delighted with this revelation which has come to them this afternoon from the Senator from Colorado.

Now, this interruption has developed the fact that the Republican party is the most liberal party in any free country of the world where parties exist, because in essentials there is unity, and in nonessentials liberty. Certainly the debate between the distinguished Senator from Maine and the distinguished Senator from Minnesota indicates that we can differ broadly and yet support this bill. While the Senator from Minnesota expressed his preferences for Japan, with a vigorous statement and straightforwardness characteristic of him, the Senator from Maine, in calling him rigidly to account for expressing in his position as a Senator any preference for one side or the other in this contest, said he was going to conceal his views.

Nobody in this Chamber, however, who heard what the Senator from Maine said has the slightest doubt where his sympathies are. So while the outspoken expression of the Senator from Minnesota is for Japan and the concealed views of the Senator from Maine are plainly for Russia, the Senator from Colorado adopts the position which comes from Democratic teachings and Democratic seekings for issues, without much regard to principles—he is for the side that is going to win, after it has won. [Laughter.]

To return, Mr. President, from the politics of the world to the construction of our Navy, we all know that a navy can not be built in time of war. We all know what supreme folly it is to wait for that. We can raise an emergency army in a month, but it takes five years to build a navy.

I remember being in the Executive Mansion at one time and in Mr. Lincoln's office when a telegram was handed to him which gave the information that a brigadier-general, through foolishness of an extreme sort, had been captured down in Virginia. In his command was a long train of pack wagons and mules. Mr. Lincoln read the dispatch and then took up his pen and said: "With that pen I can make a brigadier-general in a minute, but I can not replace those mules." [Laughter.]

Now, some one, in the exaggeration of American description, has said, while that may be true in the creation of brigadier-generals, it takes forty years to make an Admiral. We must have, if we are to occupy the position which seems to be admitted on all sides to be ours, the ships on which the future Admiral can be trained. Our Navy happily differs from every other navy in the world, because it has developed a democratic tendency. There is no navy except that of the United States where the sailor has the incentive to work because he can reach a commission. But with us the sailor is trained so completely in every branch of the service that if he has the genius, industry, temperance, and ambition he rises through the several grades until he gets his commission.

We all know that during the Spanish-American war—and none better than my friend here, the distinguished Secretary of War at that time and now the Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER]—when we endeavored to secure additions to our Navy there were no ships for sale. One of the most interesting competitions in trade which ever occurred was between the United States and Spain in trying to buy war ships. We knocked with a golden fist on the doors of every navy department of every nation, great or small, and the answer of all was: "No matter how much we want your money, it takes us too long to replace a ship, and you can not have it." Finally we discovered there were two building in the shipyards of England for a South American republic. I happened to be in London at the time, and the amount of diplomatic business and trading ability which was brought to bear, each bidding over the other, surpassed anything I had ever seen before in any trade. Of course the Yankee talent for barter came out ahead and we got the ships, but the Spaniard ran us a much closer race in trade than he did on the sea.

We know that in the present war both Japan and Russia, or Russia and Japan, so as not to place either first [laughter], tried to buy war ships, and in the whole world there was only one available; and I suppose the Senator from Minnesota is pleased that Japan got it.

I agree with what the Senator from Maine has said in regard to our position, but the fact can not be concealed that every man, woman, and child in the United States is lined up on one side or the other in this fight, as Americans always are. When there is a fight on, no matter what it is, whether a battle between nations, or a strife between parties, or a contest between individuals, or baseball or football, or a horse race, Americans instantly take sides; and they are lined up on one side or the other of this contest. But so far as we as a nation are concerned, our position has been expressed by the President of the United States in his proclamation, and we unanimously approve his action. Behind that we individually can say what we like.

Now, in this connection for I had hoped that my friend the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN] would enlighten us, as the leader of his party, in regard to the views of the opposition upon the naval programme this afternoon. I beg to call attention to a speech which he made on February 4, which created a great deal of comment in this country and interest abroad, as the utterances of the distinguished Senator always do. He said:

> Mr. President, an overgreen navy, an unnecessary navy, an unnecessary army means what? It is admitted on all hands that the officers, the admirals, without [illegible] and capacity to be counted in the great fleets which are [illegible] for our protection, was, and a way to make trouble. It appears to me that the action of the Commander in Chief, the President of the United States, in [illegible] to us upon the ground in insisting that the [illegible] from the presence and from the very ground which a conflict, if it should unfortunately be entered, was a wise precaution. There was in the same manner such a [illegible] in any other order issued to the Navy. It was [illegible] that we might be kept out of war, and certainly thinks, was the [illegible] that fleet to participate.
>
> We have naval vessels everywhere. Have you not enough now? Everybody will answer "Yes!" unless it is true as was floating around in high [illegible] that we are marching around the globe with a chip on our shoulders, looking for the one great nation that dares to be [illegible] than any other in our trade relations, to get up on the trouble. Who wants it?

Mr. President, there is nothing in the history of our new Navy, begun by my valued friend, that eminent New Yorker who recently died, and whose death is a loss to the country, William C. Whitney—there is nothing in the history of our Navy under its expansion by Republican Presidents, nothing in that Navy as it appears to-day in all the waters of the globe, which justifies a suggestion that the war ships of the United States are cruising about the world with chips on the shoulders of their admirals, their commodores, and their commanders, seeking trouble. I know of no trouble which we have ever got into by the indiscretion of officers of our Navy. They receive a training which is so perfect, an education which is so complete, they pass so many years in the Naval Academy and then so many years as subordinate officers before reaching supreme command that they have the age for command and the conservatism of age and experience.

No matter how large our Navy, wherever it is it will stand not for war, but for peace. No matter how great our Navy, it will stand not for aggressiveness, but for defense. I do not believe that the admiral of the fleet in the Eastern waters was seeking for trouble or would have involved us in a war with any nation out there or into taking sides with either of the combatants even if he had not been ordered away. We have twenty-four great ships now in those Eastern waters in the neighborhood of the hostilities; and we can absolutely trust their commanders, while preserving the honor, the rights, the trade, and the territories of the United States, not to invite trouble with anybody.

There is no better insurance policy than a navy. I am a believer in insurance. In a free country, where institutions rest upon the people and opportunities are alike for all, every schoolhouse, every church, every asylum, every college, every hospital, every influence of every name, nature, and description which educates the young or looks after those who are invalided and helpless is an insurance policy of a high kind for the safety, the peace, the good citizenship, and the future of the Republic. A large navy, adequate to the needs of the country, which is strong enough both to protect and defend it, is a minister of peace.

In these days, I would say to my friend the Senator from Colorado, with the tremendous results that follow war, no nation is going to seek war unless it is to gain more than it is to lose. We are to be aggressors nowhere. We are to be assailants nowhere. We simply, when we have the power, are to say what our rights are, and we will state them so conservatively that they will not be denied if we have the Navy. But if we have not the Navy, no matter what we assert, it will be denied.

Wars arise in a minute, and, as I said before, it requires years to build a navy. Our Spanish-American war came on overnight almost. Nobody anticipated it. The Japanese-Russian war, each side complain, came on unexpectedly, when they were negotiating. I will tell a little incident, and I do not vouch for its absolute accuracy, though I received it from a distinguished man who was in every way credible, which illustrates how a hair's breadth stands between peace and war.

I was told by this gentleman that when President Cleveland's Venezuelan message arrived in London, one of the strongest and most eminent members of the British cabinet said:

> This evinces a disposition and a desire for war. If a war is to occur between [illegible] and the feeling of that country is [illegible] time to fight be [illegible] America has [illegible] have no forts. They have no guns. Her harbors are [illegible] or any other appliances. The war would be a [illegible] and we would be [illegible] the time it was [illegible] which called [illegible] and then [illegible] form a peace with [illegible] the United States would be the most formidable power in the world because of their inaccessibility upon land.

Now, that statement, so I was told, was overruled by the unanimous judgment of his associates and by the unanimous feeling of the British people that they would have good relations with the United States under any circumstances. But the incident shows, if the incident was as narrated by my friend, that there stood just a hair's breadth between peace with honor, as it came in the arbitration which we brought about, and the most disastrous war of modern times, with the United States absolutely unprepared.

My friends the enemy have frequently assailed the President on account of the danger to the country with a great navy in his hands. Through several speeches which have been made there has run that current, that it would be dangerous to place in the hands of the President a naval power such as we will have when the ships now under construction are completed and this programme is carried out.

Mr. President, I want to say that, with all the wonderful accumulation of epithet with which this phrase of unsafety has been sent over the country and repeated in the two Houses of Congress over and over again, there is nothing in the utterances or in the acts of President Roosevelt which justifies the charge. He had the opportunity, with the whole country behind him, to make trouble at the time of the Canadian arbitration, if he had chosen. Suddenly there had been discovered within the disputed territory untold wealth in the mines, and thousands upon thousands of American citizens had rushed up there and accumulated great interests and made large investments.

The whole country stood by the President in maintaining the line we claimed, which brought these rich mines and this valuable territory under our flag. It would have taken but little to have stood firmly for our rights and to have said "We yield not at all," and a less wise and more impulsive and impetuous President would have seen there the opportunity of arousing the enthusiasm of the country for his course. But the President laid that aside. He suggested and secured arbitration.

When the Alaska Boundary Commission—upon which were the very able Secretary of War, the very able Senator from Massachusetts, and the very able ex-Senator from Washington on the one side and the equally able and distinguished commissioners on the other, with that great lawyer and judge, the chief justice of England—met in London, the whole country looked on at this mighty contest of testimony and of law.

We have [illegible] times in our history several commissions which discharged their duties with distinction, but none displayed [illegible] judicial temperament and judgment or won more important results for our country than this one on the Alaskan boundary.

When the trial was over and the judgment rendered, nothing in modern history [illegible] in all countries among right-thinking people greater gratification than that event and its example. The country will and the country does owe to President Roosevelt a debt of gratitude for the wisdom and the patriotism with which he initiated and carried to a successful conclusion that arbitration.

Mr. President, nations change rapidly. There is no telling what may occur in the realignment after the closing of the Russian-Japanese war. There is no telling what may be the position of Japan. Thirty-eight years ago I was appointed minister to Japan. You would not think it to look at me. [Laughter.] I did not go, happily for me, but I was confirmed by the Senate and studied the question for months. It took then, thirty-eight years ago, six months to get there. It now takes six weeks. Japan at that time was in the feudal condition of Europe in the twelfth century. She had no navy except junks. Her army was equipped with spears, and bows and arrows, and clad in armor. Thirty-eight years have passed by since the opening of Japan at that time, and she has been studying the methods of Western civilization so completely that she has advanced as far in thirty-eight years as Europe did in six hundred years.

Now she has a representative government, a constitution, a parliament, universal suffrage, colleges and schools, and a free press and railroads, telegraphs, telephones and electric lights, and an army built upon the plan of and quite as efficient as that of Germany, and a navy built upon the plan of and quite as efficient, as far as it goes, as that of Great Britain. She advanced because her people saw if they were to keep up with the rest of the world, now that they had become part of its activities, they must follow the example of the successful nations and get abreast of the best. She saw that while in her isolation she might live in her old way, it would cease a power of the world she must have its tools and weapons, intellectual and physical. She saw the necessity of a naval power, and she began ten years ago to develop both her mercantile marine and her navy.

In doing that she secured for herself commerce and markets for her products and a naval power which has enabled her to arouse the wonder of the world for the last few weeks. In the alignment of nations a government with a possibility of 300,000 troops against a government with 3,000,000 seems to be nowhere, and would be nowhere if the contest was on land. But the command of the sea illustrates what Captain Mahan has said, that it is the sea which will govern the world for the future; and if the command of the sea proves complete, then this war is to result in conditions which will be the surprise of everybody.

Now, as to our ability. We are a nation of 80,000,000 people. According to Mulhall we have one hundred and twenty-seven thousand million dollars of wealth. Great Britain has 42,000,000 people and $[illegible],000,000 of wealth. France has 39,000,000 people and $54,[illegible] of wealth. Germany has 56,000,000 people and $45,[illegible] of wealth.

The commerce exports and imports of the United States last year were $[illegible],000,000; of Great Britain, $4,000,000,000; of France, $1,66[illegible],000,000, and of Germany, $2,453,000,000. Germany is under us by $150,000,000, and France is under us by nearly one-half.

And yet the cost of the navies now on the sea and in course of construction are $629,000,000 for Great Britain, with one-half of our population and less than one-half of our accumulated wealth; $327,000,000 for France, with less than one-half of our population and less than one-half of our accumulated wealth, and $[illegible] for Germany, with less than three-quarters of our population and less than one-half of our accumulated wealth.

The actual cost of the vessels in commission and those that will be when the present construction is carried out for the United States, against the figures for these other countries, will be $182,000,000. The United States now occupies the fifth place, with 294,405 tons, as against 387,874 for Germany, 416,158 for Russia, 576,108 for France, and 1,516,040 for Great Britain. When the vessels of all nations now building are completed, then Great Britain will have 1,867,250 tonnage, France 755,755, and the United States 616,275, and while the United States will be in the third rank, Russia and Germany will be very close to us. There are [illegible] battleships, armored cruisers, and other cruisers and scouts above 1,000 tons built and building belonging to all the nations of the world. Of this number the United States has 93.

It has been one of the claims of all writers on the monarchical side that republics, where the people govern, will not have that high appreciation of international relations which maintains the national honor. I have read repeatedly in nearly all English newspapers, when there has been the election of a Washington or an extreme radical, a prediction that if his party got in power Great Britain would lose her place among the nations by comparing policies and legislation on finance and industry which would result in the loss of her prestige and power and the decline of that commerce upon which she depends. But, sir, the United States stands as a living refutation of all those charges. Our appropriations are upon a scale of liberality unequaled in history, but justified by our resources.

We have spent $150,000,000 for the improvement of our rivers and harbors, $[illegible] of it in the last seven years. We have appropriated more in the last ten years for the improvement of our rivers and harbors than the entire cost of our Navy, both that already afloat and that which will come out in the next five years from our shipyards.

Republics are not ungrateful. We are paying $140,000,000 a year in pensions to the soldiers and their widows of a war which ended forty years ago. We are paying it cheerfully and gratefully. The time is not distant when there will be added $[illegible],000,000 or $40,000,000 for a service pension, and then we will be paying to these heroes who saved the country and to their widows a sum greater than the cost of the active army of any great nation in the world, and a sum equal to the present cost of the American Navy, with that added which is now in the shipyards. The cost of the active French army is about $143,000,000 and of Germany $129,000,000.

At the same time we have with great liberality built public buildings everywhere. We have established and are establishing forest reservations for the preservation of our magnificent domain of the woods and for the protection of farms from the floods which come from denuded hills. We have wisely appropriated some twenty-odd millions of dollars for expositions which were purely local in their immediate administration, upon the ground, and the wise ground, that by bringing anywhere the products of other countries for the study of our skilled artisans and the exhibition of our skill for other countries we were promoting the best interest of the trade, commerce, employment, and happiness of our people.

Mr. President, I have talked longer than I intended, but I have been helped by so many to extend the time that I think I may be excused. But I trust that I may be permitted to offer a fervent aspiration that after this programme of naval equipment is completed, this programme of naval equipment which, in my judgment, receives the almost unanimous approval of the American people, then we shall enter into some enlightened system, I care not much what it may be, by which we can have a mercantile marine that will save us from paying $200,000,000 a year to foreign ships to carry the products and the merchandise of America, while we are paying $100,000,000 a year for a navy which could be happily employed in conjunction with our mercantile marine.

The American flag is seldom seen in any port or on any sea or navigable water of the world except upon a fighting ship. We are in every sense a peaceful and a producing people. We are not a fighting nation except under necessity and provocation and for defense. Our clipper ships over fifty years ago were the fastest vessels afloat, models for other nations, and carried 60 per cent of our commerce. Now only 8 per cent goes under the American flag and 92 per cent in foreign vessels. I look forward hopefully to a near future when, by the adoption of a wise and patriotic policy, an American mercantile marine will reverse these humiliating conditions and bring 92 per cent of our tonnage under our flag, when $100,000,000 spent upon our Navy annually will have an offset in the transfer of two hundred millions per annum, now paid to alien shipowners for the carriage of our trade, to an American fleet to find its stimulating way into every channel of our internal commerce and every department of our industries.

I want the world to know that we are a commercial nation by becoming familiar with the flag of the United States upon steamers and sailing vessels carrying our products and the exchange of exports and imports. I want our flag, as an emblem of peace, of expanding commercial relations, and of prosperity, to be on every sea and in every port in the world. [Applause in the galleries.]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Applause is not permitted under the rules of the Senate. It must not be repeated.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate very long, because I am not in a condition to do so, and have no desire to weary the Senate. I wish, however, to congratulate the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] in charge of this great bill upon the distinguished services he has rendered in connection with the construction of the new Navy. It has been my great fortune to have been associated with that Senator for eighteen years in the consideration of bills making appropriations for the support of the Navy, and during that whole period, with the exception of one Congress, the party to which he belongs has been in the majority in this body. But, sir, the construction of the new Navy has not been a political matter, as Senators on both sides of this Chamber have always favored liberal appropriations for a navy of sufficient size for our country's needs.

After the close of the civil war the Navy was permitted to deteriorate, and the party to which I belong made its condition a subject of political discussion. Finally, in 1881, the pressing need of appropriate vessels was so apparent that Hon. William H. Hunt, the then Secretary of the Navy, assembled a board of officers, known as the "advisory board," to consider and recommend a scheme for a modern navy, as all patriotic Americans desired a navy of which we might be proud and sufficient to protect our interests at home and abroad.

Following Secretary Hunt came another distinguished Secretary of the Navy, Secretary Chandler, under whose immediate administration the first three ironclads for the new Navy were constructed. At that time there was but a single man of the genius, enterprise, and foresight to provide a shipyard at which they could be built, and even then political feeling had run so high, the Navy having been for so long a period the football of party, that Mr. Roach was almost driven to bankruptcy.

The Administration of President Cleveland followed, and Hon. William C. Whitney, so feelingly referred to by the Senator who has just spoken, accepted the portfolio of Secretary of the Navy. We are all familiar with the patriotic and distinguished services he performed during the time he presided over the Navy Department. A man of tremendous intellectual force, of vast comprehension, with executive ability of the highest order, he devoted all his energies to the great work under his charge, and we can not pay him a tribute worthy of his genius. When Mr. Whitney found the party on the other side of this Chamber in the majority, it did not require a second appeal to the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], in charge of the naval appropriation bill, or the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], or other distinguished Republicans to unite with those of us on this side and provide for the construction of a navy under a plan carefully considered and well devised. During the Administration of President Harrison, which followed, and up to this hour, so far as I know, party lines have never divided us upon the question of proper appropriations for the naval service.

But, Mr. President, there have been on both sides careful inquiry, thoughtful consideration, and frank criticisms. At one time we stayed the hands of the Administration when we believed it had gone too far in the construction, too rapidly for a healthy increase, and I did not hesitate to criticise the Democratic Secretary who failed to recommend sufficient ships, in my judgment. At another time I aided and we succeeded in preventing him from securing the authority of Congress to construct too many ships.

Such is my position to-day. And I think, Mr. President, that the distinguished Secretary of the Navy who now controls that Department, for whom I have a high personal regard and whom I knew during his service in Congress, has grown too [illegible] has been imprudent and unwise, because I happened to criticise the rapidity with which this great work goes on, in rushing to a distant city and there charging my action to partisanship and trying to create the impression that the Democratic party is opposed to the Navy. I will state, Mr. President, I spoke only for myself, and not for the Democratic party.

But that does not, Mr. President, prevent those of us who believe in a proper Navy, one ample and of sufficient size to protect all our interests, from saying to the Department, "You have gone too far," or from saying to the whole Administration, "You have advanced too rapidly; there is no necessity for it, in our judgment."

The executive branch of the Government must be brought to realize that it was intended by the framers of this Government that the representatives of the people and the Representatives from the States in this body should determine how much money is to be expended for war purposes as well as to declare war. It is for the Executive Departments to recommend; but the judgment is here, and it is placed here by the organic law. If I may say so, and I think it entirely proper, the executive officers of the Government would serve their country better if they attended to the details of their offices and abstained from criticisms of Senators and Members of the House.

Now, Mr. President, what was the scheme upon which we entered? It was for the construction of seventeen ships for the whole American Navy, the number recommended after mature consideration, by the most skillful officers of the Government. Twice seventy ships have been constructed, and the expenditure of $[illegible] per annum has grown to $100,000,000, and is soon to be $150,000,000.

The Senator from New York says it is for peace and commerce that we want this great organization. The fathers and all who preceded us thought otherwise. But then we are coolly informed by the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] that the fathers knew very little of the conditions which confront us and their judgments amount to nothing.

Mr. President, every thoughtful man who has discussed this question in Congress has feared this great armament both on sea and land, and I call attention to the patriotic words of President Garfield, delivered in the House of Representatives in 1878 and repeated and indorsed by Secretary—afterwards Senator—Chandler in his annual report in 1883.

Mr. Garfield said:

> The men who created this Constitution also set it in operation and developed the [illegible] of its character. That idea was unlike any other that then prevailed upon this earth. They made the [illegible] of the great league and association of the [illegible] States. In the history of the Old World the people [illegible] were used for the purpose of [illegible] and for the purpose of [illegible] against foreign [illegible]. In the history of the United States we will see the first [illegible] power to construct a central government [illegible] to keep pace with the knowledge of [illegible] and the [illegible] shall be the [illegible] of our own [illegible] and make ourselves intelligent, happy, and prosperous [illegible] of war, and make ourselves intelligent, happy, and prosperous [illegible]

President Garfield believed, as the country has always believed, that we should not be classed as one of the great military powers of the world. But now it is coolly stated by the distinguished junior Senator from Massachusetts that we have become a rich and progressive nation, with aggressive policies, and therefore our Navy, in point of numbers and effectiveness, must be greater than that of France, greater than that of Russia, superior to that of Germany, and he bows only to England. I wonder that he and the distinguished Senator from New York hesitated at desiring a navy equal to that of Great Britain.

Mr. CARMACK. It will not be long before they do want it.

Mr. GORMAN. No; it will not take long at the rate at which we are now moving on, unless the people of the country shall return to that old sound Republican and Democratic theory that our power and our prestige do not depend upon the number of guns afloat in the Navy or the number of men who wear uniforms on land.

The expense, Mr. President—"well, what of the expense?" I am quite certain the Senator from New York would say: "We are a rich people. There is no trouble about our paying for a hundred more ships and meeting our annual expenditures on this account, even if they run up to one hundred and fifty million or two hundred million dollars, as the case may be." But who pays these expenditures? The people. Will they submit to it? For the time being it is possible they may, as no man can deny they desire and insist that we shall have a splendid, well-equipped navy, equal to any which exists in the world in respect to appointments. They do not ask for a Republican or a Democratic navy, but an American navy; and when one or more of its officers in command of its men are unfortunately brought into an engagement, they want not only the conduct of the officers praised, but they desire that the men who really fight the battles and who win the victories shall receive their just mead of praise, and not be relegated to the rear because of petty jealousy.

It is the people's Navy. They want it well administered, but they want it administered with due reference to economy. I do not mean parsimony, but economy.

The American people are familiar with our past greatness. They know that every interest has been protected; that the Monroe doctrine has been as safe with a navy which cost $14,000,000 a year to maintain as it is with one which costs $[illegible]. They also know when our expenditures reach $100,000,000 for this one branch of the service in 1904 that there is something radically wrong in its administration.

Mr. President, the increases in our naval expenditures have gone on so rapidly and we have been so prosperous that the amounts of money flowing into the Treasury and out of it have not been considered. They will not be until you reach the time when it becomes necessary to collect more money by taxes either from internal revenue or from the tariff.

Mr. President, I doubt, unless Senators have carefully inquired into this matter, if they know how much we have expended on this account in the last few years. My attention was called to it sharply, as I have no doubt was that of other Senators, by the statement of a distinguished gentleman in another branch of Congress who has a right to speak as to appropriations. He called the attention of Members of another body and the attention of all of us here in the Senate to the fact that in the present condition of the revenues we must proceed with great care in the appropriations made or otherwise there would be a deficit.

The gentleman referred to, Hon. JAMES A. HEMENWAY, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives, in a speech delivered on January 26 last said:

> Mr. [illegible] referring to the provisions of the bill which I have [illegible] the Committee on Appropriations [illegible] the Treasury of the United States [illegible] all [illegible] [illegible] Members of that Congress to which legislation [illegible] Treasury, I [illegible] to call the attention of the [illegible] country [illegible] called upon to [illegible] ran we [illegible] estimated expenses of the Government for the ensuing fiscal year $[illegible]
>
> [illegible] submitted at the beginning of this session for ordinary expenses [illegible] of $36,500,000 required to meet the sinking fund, amount [illegible] than ten millions in the nature of supplemental [illegible] [illegible] $[illegible] [illegible] $[illegible] [illegible] fiscal year beginning July 1 next at $[illegible] Estimated receipts of the probable total revenues, $42,845,862.07.

His action in cautioning us was wise and proper, and upon that statement this discussion began.

I submit to Senators on the other side who have tried to give this debate a party turn that they will not succeed. We on this side will join with the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and aid him to reduce the expenditures of this Government. They have never been greater in the history of the country than they are now in the matter of preparation for war. The expenditures provided for in this bill for the pay of officers and the amount included for ships are greater than the entire amount expended in any one year of Mr. Lincoln's Administration, when we had to create a navy which was sufficient to blockade every port from the Potomac to the Gulf.

The sum of $122,000,000 in 1864 included all the naval expenditures, as well as the money used to purchase ships, and we were then purchasing vessels of any kind we could secure.

Let me read to Senators a statement compiled from the appropriation bills, so that we may see how rapidly our appropriations for the Navy have increased since the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland:

Appropriations for the Navy.

First Cleveland Administration, fiscal years 1886-1889:
1886	$[illegible]
1887	[illegible]
1888	[illegible]
1889	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$1.[illegible]
Harrison Administration, fiscal years 1890-1893:
1890	$21,682,510.27
1891	[illegible]
1892	[illegible]
1893	[illegible]
Total	101,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	64,[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$1.[illegible]
Second Cleveland Administration, fiscal years 1894-1897:
1894	$[illegible]
1895	[illegible]
1896	[illegible]
1897	[illegible]
Total	107,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$1.54+
First McKinley Administration, fiscal years 1898-1901:
1898	$53,003,234.19
1899	[illegible]
1900	[illegible]
1901	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	78,[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$2.68+
Second McKinley-Roosevelt Administration, fiscal years 1902-1905:
1902	$78,101,791.00
1903	[illegible]
1904	[illegible]
1905 (as reported to the House)	[illegible]
Total	[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	81,097,500
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$4.13+

Mr. President, no appropriations, except those for the Army, compare in their increase with this naval appropriation, and it is evidently intended to make our Navy the second in the world. Is it not time to consider this matter? Probably nothing can be accomplished now, but I desire to call attention to it, so that this subject may be dealt with hereafter.

Think of it, Mr. President! The total expenditures for the Navy from 1860 to 1869, inclusive—the ten years which included the period of the great civil war—were $458,000,000. The following period of ten years, from 1870 to 1879, inclusive, they ran down to $204,000,000, making a total for twenty years, from 1860 to 1879, of $662,000,000. From the Administration of President Harrison to 1905 (pending bill included), a period of sixteen years, we will have expended $746,000,000, or $84,000,000 more than were expended for the twenty years which included the civil war.

But this taken by itself does not begin to give a correct idea of all we have expended for army and for naval purposes and for fortifications. We have inaugurated a system of fortifying the coasts at every great harbor in the United States. The necessity for this was brought sharply to the attention of the country, and more sharply than by any other by Mr. Tilden, who was probably the greatest statesman of the Democratic party in my time. He called attention to the necessity of fortifying the coasts of the United States at a time when we had not facilities here to make a gun of respectable caliber, and we then began our system of fortifications.

The following tables show the total appropriations on account of the Army, Navy, and fortifications from the first Administration of Mr. Cleveland to the period covered by the pending bill:

Appropriations for the Army, Navy, and fortifications.

First Cleveland Administration, fiscal years 1886-1889:
Army	$[illegible]
Navy	[illegible]
Fortifications	4,697,000.00
Total	177,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	59,[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$2.99

Harrison's Administration, fiscal years 1890-1893:
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	211,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	64,459,512
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$3.27
Second Cleveland Administration, fiscal years 1894-1897:
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	215,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	69,062,[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	[illegible]
First McKinley-Roosevelt Administration, fiscal years 1898-1901:
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	474,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	[illegible]
Second McKinley-Roosevelt Administration, fiscal years 1902-1905:
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible] (as passed House for 1905)	$299,442,899.22
[illegible]	[illegible]
[illegible]	[illegible]
Total	724,[illegible]
Estimated average population for the 4 years	[illegible]
Appropriations per capita for the 4-year period	$9.55+

[illegible] appropriations.

[illegible]	[illegible]
1886-1889 (4 years), first Cleveland Administration	177,[illegible]
Excess	298,[illegible]
1899-1903 (4 years), McKinley-Roosevelt Administrations	1,[illegible]
1886-1889, 1894-1897 (8 years), first and second Cleveland Administrations	[illegible]
Excess	[illegible]

Mr. President, in the [illegible] the tremendous sum of $[illegible] of Mr. Cleveland's first Administration. [illegible] what we know as the [illegible] side of the Chamber—the national debt was at the close of the war with Spain, [illegible] dollars [illegible] in the affairs of the country. [illegible] as to how it should be [illegible] interest and the sinking fund of the country. Part of it was spent for the Navy, and that is not included in the figures to which I have referred; part of it was spent for the Army, and part of it for the purchase of the two ships mentioned to by the Senator from New York, which were bought in an hour when there was no time but with balanced consideration in the Navy Department and which never reached this country until after the close of the Spanish war. Thus about $2,154,[illegible] has been appropriated for these three purposes within the last twenty years. Has this money been wisely expended, Mr. President?

The report of the Secretary of the Navy informs us that he [illegible] wages all the ships in commission and thoroughly [illegible]. There are more officers now in the Navy during a time of peace than there have been at any time during the history of this country.

We have now a naval force in [illegible] which is equal to the [illegible] the Mexican war. The efficiency of the Navy [illegible] to be all in consideration, for he says: "[illegible] unless you give me men to man them, and [illegible] is to put them into a service [illegible] in the Navy." [illegible] be sent from one end of our country to the other and [illegible] world. What is going to be the cost, Mr. Secretary? Half a million dollars a year to run each battle ship, it is said by the report. Add to it the depreciation of wear and tear, and it will make nearly a million dollars a year for every battle ship that is in commission. In other words, we will have to spend nearly the first cost of the ship on the machinery to keep it in repair for twenty years.

I do not see any necessity for it. If there were any necessity for it, if war were imminent, if there were [illegible] could by any other navy on the face of the earth, why [illegible] a billion dollars? We would give the Secretary of the Navy and the Administration all they could spend. We have not even [illegible] whether the money voted for the Navy has been spent [illegible] improvidently, but the country knows and appreciates the situation, as we must.

These millions, these billions that have been poured out by Congress with so lavish a hand, have tended to demoralization. Extravagance is in the very atmosphere. A war with Spain, that lasted in fact but a few days of actual conflict, has cost us, Mr. President, a billion of money.

Well, it is said we have entered upon a new policy. That is true. We now have colonies, as was frankly admitted by the Senator from New York, and to stop would be to recede in a way [illegible] to those who inaugurated the system. Mr. President, I [illegible] distant lands was before this body. I [illegible] or coaling stations, as they are [illegible] I considered the acquisition of islands [illegible] from our shores, and the government of [illegible] upon which we had [illegible] productive of dire consequences.

The money it has cost we can afford to lose; but I fear from the intimation we get from the Senator from New York, who [illegible] Great Britain, we will not stop in the [illegible].

I have myself no sympathy whatever with any movement which would involve us with the great powers that are engaged in war in the Far East or those whose interests are in China. I still adhere to the old fashioned doctrine of the fathers. No alliance [illegible] and Japan may divide China and carve it up among themselves, but no matter who happens to control those governments they can never prevent the American people from acquiring their [illegible] done for one hundred and twenty-five years, and let it be known that our Navy or Army will not be used in the affairs of other nations.

Mr. President, we should provide a sufficient navy to protect [illegible] and to look after our trade and commerce in every sea of the world. Why, sir, a single battle ship or armored [illegible] was.

It did not take many guns to open the ports of Japan. Commodore Perry, on his mission, was accompanied by a distinguished citizen of my State as the commissioner, and the dawn of the [illegible] Japanese knew that they were dealing with a nation that had no design upon their Government. The opening of Japan, their relations with the [illegible] their [illegible] and [illegible]. In our anxiety for the continuance of that great Empire we have made treaties and then have violated them at will and treated her as [illegible] in the East [illegible], in its wisdom and [illegible] the other powers in [illegible] from that nation. That wise and just action has not only been universally commended, but it has greatly advanced our commercial interests.

Mr. President, fair dealing and noninterference with the government of the East is the policy of commerce; and it will do more to strengthen our trade and increase our commerce than all the ships that can be built in the next seven years.

Mr. President, it [illegible]. Can we afford, [illegible] year or two years, it [illegible] by the [illegible] party, it can be met, but [illegible] have [illegible] country. In the face of the [illegible] on the policy of the party in power can not be [illegible].

Mr. President, this bill will pass with all the [illegible] and [illegible] provisions. When the [illegible] I, I hope and [illegible] that we shall determine the [illegible] of the Navy without [illegible] to party lines, [illegible] not to enter into the [illegible] of this country. We all [illegible] power in a navy commensurate [illegible] protect every American interest at home and abroad, but not one to [illegible] the impression that we are striving to dominate [illegible] in other portions of the earth.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, I am [illegible] the attention of the Senate for a very few minutes. I listened with a great deal of admiration to the speech of the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. Of course, I could not undertake any elaborate reply to that speech, but will address just a few remarks to one or two features of it.

The Senator dwelt upon the vast commercial importance of the Philippine Islands to the United States, and he denied with great earnestness that the possession of that country would be a source of military weakness or a military burden to the United States. That is one view of the question, Mr. President, and I do not know anyone who can state it better than the distinguished Senator from New York.

I have another view of the question, once expressed by a distinguished citizen of New York, one Chauncey Depew. I will leave [illegible] to decide which of these two views ought to prevail. I undertook a day or two ago to get up a debate between the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and the Senator from New York. I failed in that. I hope now I can get up a debate where the two opponents will be exactly equal in wit, logic, and power of argument.

The argument made by the Senator's distinguished relative is as follows:

[illegible] are no [illegible].

The Senator then went on to say that the increase of taxes would be felt in the homes of the country, and he said that the Federal tax collector would become a familiar official to the American people. One result of this policy, he declared, would be a "centralization of power far beyond what the old Federalists ever dreamed of."

He added:

"[illegible] in 1776.

Mr. DEPEW. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. CARMACK. With pleasure.

Mr. DEPEW. I am glad you read these utterances of mine made many years ago.

Mr. CARMACK. Your relative is dead now. I understand.

Mr. DEPEW. That Chauncey Depew is dead. I knew nothing about the Philippines at that time, and I was not then a Senator. I was simply a New Yorker making speeches every night without much thought, and that was one of them.

I was born a Democrat, and continued so until after I had received a collegiate education. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. Does the Senator say he was born a Democrat?

Mr. DEPEW. I was born a Democrat. My father was a Democrat—a very rigid one—and, as I say, after I received [illegible] education and had some contact with the [illegible] necessities of the country I became a Republican. [Laughter.] But it so happens that my first impressions are always Democratic. [Laughter.] When I made that speech it was a first Democratic impression. When I studied the question I changed my views.

When Daniel Webster—and I am not comparing myself to Daniel Webster, except to follow him as an example, and a long way off—entered Congress he came here a free trader. After he had been here long enough he became educated into a protectionist. When he was taken to task for a great protection speech by having quoted to him his free-trade views, he remarked that only wise men change their opinions. [Laughter.]

Mr. CARMACK. The Senator from New York says he used to be a Democrat. I heard of a distinguished man once who made a like statement, and his competitor replied to it by saying: "So Satan, when he trod the burning marl of hell, boasted that he, too, was once an angel of light." [Laughter.]

The Senator says that when he made that speech he was just talking; that he had not thought. I think, Mr. President, the difference between the Senator's situation then and now, if I may be permitted to say so, is that at that time he was not a member of this body; that he was speaking simply as a patriot, and that he had not then taken a case as a criminal lawyer to defend the policy of the Republican party. I think the Senator's prophecy made in that speech is in line with what he has said here to-day when he warned us, in effect, that we must get ready to take part not only in European, but in oriental politics, and that we must be ready and have a sufficient navy to enable us to engage in the great war which some people think is pending over the division of China. I say that is in line with the warning which the gentleman gave, or his distinguished relative gave, in 1898.

Mr. President, I do not agree with the Senator upon that. If there is to be any great war over oriental questions between the nations of Europe, it would be to our advantage to keep out of that war. While they are destroying each other, wiping each other's commerce from the sea, we would seize and hold the commerce and the carrying trade of the world.

I do not agree with the Senator either in his belief that henceforth we must look——

Mr. DEPEW. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. DEPEW. Where would we get the ships, as we have none now, to do the carrying trade of the world, as long as the Senator's party will not let us have the ships?

Mr. CARMACK. Oh, Mr. President, "the Senator's party" is trying to give you the ships. If you had [illegible] Democratic policy of free ships you would have had them long ago, and you will have the ships whenever it pays to build ships. The time is coming, and is now at hand, when American capital is ready to go into the building of ships for our merchant marine. The distinguished Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] who presides over this body, in a speech upon the ship-subsidy bill, gave as one reason why American capital had not been invested in building American ships the fact that it had been so much engaged in building railroads and developing the internal industries of the country that it had not cared to seek investment along that line.

Now that the country has developed in that respect, that railroads have been built all over the country, American capital is ready to go into the building up of a great merchant marine, and if you will just let American shipbuilders know, once for all, that they are not going to get any subsidy, they will at once proceed so to invest their money.

As I was saying, I think the Senator from New York is very much mistaken if he thinks the hope of extending our foreign commerce lies in the Orient. I think the hope of a foreign commerce would be a very poor hope indeed if we had to depend upon that. We have heard a great deal about the vast possessions of our commerce in China and Japan and India. Mr. President, the [illegible] people in China buy from all the world just about what the 5,000,000 people in Canada do. That is the kind of trade you are to get in these oriental countries. If we could sell to the people of China one-half of all the goods they buy from all the world, it would be just about what we are now selling to the 5,000,000 in Canada. The imports of India amount only to [illegible] per annum; the imports of Japan to about [illegible]. People who have a low standard of living, people who work, like the people of India do, for 4 or 5 or 6 cents a day, are never going to become great purchasers of American goods. That is India after it has been one hundred and fifty years under British rule.

Mr. President, I will say furthermore that I agree with what was said by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with respect to Russia and Japan. Like that Senator, I do not care to take any part. I intend to make a proclamation of neutrality and to live up to it. But I am tired of hearing people say it is to the interest of the United States that Japan shall prevail in that conflict. [illegible] progressive, ambitious nation, a progressive nation in the [illegible] but it is not a nation built upon the model of our western peoples or our western country, and if China falls under the dominion of Japan, and that great country is organized with the genius and the progressive talent of the Japanese, its vast internal resources developed, and its 400,000,000 organized on such a military system as Japan could organize it, it is a very serious question whether or not this country or the countries of Europe, for that matter, would derive any advantage from it.

Mr. President, there is just one other little matter to which I wish to call the attention of the Senate in reference to the pending bill. There are many items of naval expenditure so covered up in the appropriation bill that they are not visible to the naked eye. A naval appropriation bill is intended to be, or at least is supposed to be, an appropriation of public money for public purposes, for the purpose of strengthening and maintaining the American Navy.

Now, it ought to be plain, Mr. President, and it ought to require no argument to show that the expenditure of money for the maintenance of a pleasure yacht for any individual, from the highest to the lowest, is not a naval purpose, and it is not a governmental purpose.

I wish to read in this connection a statement, as follows:

[illegible] the U. S. S. [illegible] President's yacht	$100,000
[illegible] and repairing [illegible] of the President's yacht	65,000
Estimated cost of repairs this year	30,000
Cost of keeping the Dolphin and the Sylph at the disposition of Mr. [illegible]	60,000
Estimated cost of keeping the two ships in readiness for a Presidential call this summer	2[illegible],000

The total is about $345,000. It is not important as an item of expense; it is a very modest item compared with the total appropriation carried in this bill, but it is important from the standpoint that it is a misappropriation of public money. Where does the President get any authority to convert a naval vessel of the United States into a private pleasure yacht for his own use and benefit? He is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but because he is Commander in Chief of the Army that does not give him the right to take all the cavalry horses of the United States and put them in his own stables and use them to draw his own carriages; and likewise because he is Commander in Chief of the Navy it does not give him the right to convert a naval vessel of the United States, purchased or constructed for naval purposes, into a private yacht for the private use of himself and his family.

Mr. President, it is simply a question of meum et tuum. The naval vessels of the United States belong to the Government and the people of the United States. They are not the goods and chattels of any man who may happen to be President at the time. The President may find or invent laws never heard of before to justify [illegible] country, but there is no [illegible] "mandate of [illegible] the property of the Government and of the people of the United States [illegible] use.

I say it is not a matter of much consequence, so far as the amount [illegible] ought to be used for naval purposes. Every Senator on this floor has as much right to have a naval vessel converted into a pleasure [illegible] as the President of the United States has. I do not think the President intended anything wrong; I [illegible] impropriety in this act; but it is simply because he [illegible] of [illegible] policy and the sense of law. He is using the property of the United States and has converted it to his own use and benefit.

Mr. BACON. I wish to ask the Senator from Maine one or two questions. It will not occupy very much time. I notice at the bottom of page 34 of the bill this item:

Naval station, Guantanamo, Cuba: Dry dock, $200,000.

The question I wish to ask the Senator from Maine is what evidence has been given to the Senate Committee on Appropriations that the Senate has [illegible] of Guantanamo has been ceded to this Government? Did the Senator from Maine hear the question I propounded?

Mr. HALE. Yes; I was looking for the papers. Has the Senator concluded?

Mr. BACON. I asked the Senator what evidence has been furnished to the Senate or to Congress that the port of Guantanamo in Cuba has been ceded to the United States.

Mr. HALE. I do not know about the technical completion of any act of cession, but that the station has been turned over to the United States, that the United States is in possession, and that it is in a small way going on with the work of making a naval station, the purpose for which it was acquired, are shown by the hearings before the committee and by the estimates of the Department, which I will say in this matter estimated something more than a million dollars. That amount has been cut down to $880,000.

Mr. BACON. I am not criticising the amount.

Mr. HALE. No. I was giving the Senator the fact as to what is the condition.

Now, the Senator can tell better than I whether the final interchange has taken place between the two Governments. I do not know. But to all intents and purposes the United States owns Guantanamo, possesses it, is using it, and is in a gradual way building up a naval station.

Mr. BACON. How does the Senator arrive at that conclusion?

Mr. HALE. First, the estimates, and then the hearings.

Mr. BACON. Certainly the Senator does not undertake to say that when territory known to belong to a foreign government is represented as having been ceded to the United States appropriations are to be made upon hearsay or even upon hearings before the committee or upon estimates sent from a Department? The Senator would not contend for a moment that such is a sufficient evidence to authorize action by Congress in the absence of any official communication to Congress of the fact that there has been a transfer of sovereignty to the United States.

Suppose we should have an estimate sent in by a Department with respect to a part of some Canadian province or a part of Canada on the Atlantic side, and there should be hearings before a committee, in which it should be said that there had been a cession to the Government of the United States; would the Senator say that that was sufficient evidence upon which to proceed to make an appropriation for the fortification of that port?

Mr. HALE. Now——

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I am not in doubt as to the attitude of the Senator or the attitude of Congress. I suppose I know about the same as the Senator knows and the same as other Senators know, and the object I have in calling attention to this is to show the attitude which we to-day occupy in relation to this matter.

We know by common newspaper report that there has been some negotiation. Of course we know the fact that in the Platt amendment one condition upon which the Government of the United States relinquished control of Cuba was that we should have the right to select certain ports in Cuba to be established as naval stations, and we have [illegible] doubtless I will say that before [illegible] been made that there have been such [illegible] made. But is that the proper information upon which Congress is to act?

Mr. President, if Cuba is an independent country—and we claim that she is—and in [illegible] treaties with her, there is but one way in which [illegible] cession of any territory of Cuba to the United States, and that is by a treaty entered into in the manner in which the Constitution of the United States says a treaty shall be entered into—through negotiation by the President and by the approval of this body. But we [illegible] here to-day proceeding to legislate with reference to this matter as an accomplished fact, when we have not even yet failed to have any treaty in this way, but when we have [illegible] have any [illegible] to us of the fact that there has been ceded to the United States the port of Guantanamo.

Mr. HALE. Let me say to the Senator that the thing is all brought out fully. The Senate [illegible] for assuming that we should [illegible] n. The Navy has [illegible] before the Naval Committee of the House, and one of which is brought out in the public documents which has been printed, and he states [illegible] what [illegible] n is. An arrangement has been made [illegible] is to be given by the Republic of Cuba, if it has not already [illegible] in accordance with it. Quite likely [illegible] Relations Committee know more about [illegible]

Mr. BACON. I will ask the [illegible] nizes that as a proper way in w[illegible] of such a fact?

Mr. HALE. I think Congress is informed. First, there is the provision of the treaty.

Mr. BACON. W[illegible]

Mr. HALE. The [illegible] amendment.

Mr. BACON. That is not a treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. It is a legislative compact.

Mr. BACON. That is a different matter.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. BACON. I was replying to the Senator from Wisconsin when I said it was a different matter. I beg pardon.

Mr. HALE. I base it on what appears here by Secretary Moody and the provision—

That to enable the United States to maintain the independence of Cuba and to protect the people of Cuba, as well as for its own defense, the Government of Cuba will sell or lease to the United States lands necessary for coaling stations or naval stations, at certain points to be agreed upon with the President.

I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts [illegible] Wisconsin, as members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and as [illegible] State, can tell [illegible] ceded far enough that we have taken possession to go on and occupy and build a naval station there I [illegible] no question whatever.

Mr. BACON. Of course we all know the facts the Senator is stating. I suppose I have the same information that the Senator from Massachusetts and the Senator from Wisconsin have, so far as information has been communicated to the Committee on Foreign Relations. I am not in any manner disputing the fact that these things are stated, and that they have been brought to [illegible] in this way, but the point to which I am calling attention is that whatever we may know about it in our private capacity or in our official capacity, gathered from newspaper reports or other statements sent to us by departmental officers or [illegible] a committee, those are not matters of communication to Congress.

There are two suggestions which I make. The first is that, in my opinion, if there had been any cession, if there had been any sale or any lease, that is the subject-matter of a treaty. What the Senator has read is an agreement to make it a treaty.

Mr. HALE. A lease.

Mr. BACON. I am speaking of the Platt amendment. The Platt amendment, under which this is made, is a specific agreement that a treaty will be made to carry it into effect.

Mr. SPOONER. No; not at all.

Mr. HALE. No: it is not. It does not depend upon that. This provides that there shall be either a sale or a lease, and it is left to the President.

Mr. BACON. I am not speaking of that. The Platt amendment stipulated that it should be embodied in a permanent treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. That is another thing.

Mr. BACON. No, if the Senator will pardon me, it is not.

Mr. LODGE. The Platt amendment is the law of the land. There is no doubt about that. It is embodied in a law passed by Congress. That law provided that in regard to the Isle of Pines we should proceed by treaty; that in regard to a further assurance we should make a treaty, but that in regard to lands for coaling or naval stations Cuba should sell or lease them to us, and it became the duty of the President——

Mr. BACON. The Senator will allow me——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from Georgia will allow me to finish my sentence?

Mr. BACON. Yes; of course.

Mr. LODGE. It became the duty of the President to make an a[illegible] that agreement has been made.

Mr. BACON. How does the Senator know it?

Mr. LODGE. It is so stated by the Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. BACON. Oh!

Mr. LODGE. A person of authority.

Mr. BACON. The Secretary of the Navy——

Mr. LODGE. Wait a moment——

Mr. BACON. Is not the officer to communicate that fact to us.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I sent for the papers, and I have a copy of the lease and the statement of the [illegible] stages it has gone through. It was signed at Habana June 2, [illegible] President October 2, 1903; ratified by the President of Cuba August 17, 1903; ratifications exchanged at Washington October 6. It is just as complete a d[illegible] deed of warranty when it passes from the grantor to [illegible] and has been recorded in the office of the register of deeds.

Mr. LODGE. And it has been transmitted to Congress by the [illegible]

Mr. BACON. The point I am making is that it has never been officially communicated to the Senate or to Congress.

Mr. LODGE. It has been. It is a Senate document officially [illegible]

Mr. BACON. Transmitted by whom?

Mr. HALE. Transmitted from the Executive.

Mr. BACON. By the President?

Mr. LODGE. Transmitted by the President of the United States.

Mr. BACON. I did not see that. That is exactly the information I have been trying to get from the Senator from Maine all the time. I asked him in the beginning where he got the information, and he has been insisting that he got it from the Secretary.

Mr. HALE. [illegible]

I, Theodore [illegible] President of the United States of America, hereby [illegible] seen and [illegible] virtues of [illegible] the [illegible] appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, [illegible]

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WASHINGTON, [illegible]

Transmitted to Congress

Mr. BACON. Transmitted by whom?

Mr. SPOONER. By whom could it be transmitted?

Mr. BACON. It could be transmitted by a departmental officer. I want to know if the President ever sent a communication to Congress on the subject.

Mr. HALE. He has.

Mr. BACON. Please show me the document in which he sent it.

Mr. HALE. Here it is.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator had stated in the beginning that the President had transmitted it, he would have answered my inquiries. But I do not still understand.

Mr. HALE. He did not bring it down here himself. He never does that. He sends one thing to us through the Navy Department and he sends another through the Treasury Department, but that——

Mr. BACON. I will follow the example of my distinguished friend [Mr. HALE] in his lecture this afternoon to the Senator from Minnesota in calling his attention to the difference in the dictionary between the definition of the word "transmit" and the word "bring." I used the word "transmit," and if the Senator will refer to the dictionary he will see that that does not mean the same as "bring." I said "transmit," not "bring."

Mr. HALE. He has transmitted it.

Mr. BACON. This is the report of the Secretary of the Navy, and if there has been any message sent to the Senate or Congress——

Mr. LODGE. It is in the annual message.

Mr. FORAKER. How do we get the report of the Secretary of the Navy? Was it not transmitted by the President of the United States? If the Senator will look at the message he will see that the President transmits the reports of all the Secretaries. That is how we get them there.

Mr. HALE. I am sorry the Senator from Georgia, who is an old Senator, does not know more about the vehicle by which we get things from the Departments. They are all——

Mr. BACON. That is not the question at all.

Mr. HALE. That is the question.

Mr. BACON. No. I beg the Senator's pardon, it is not.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I think he is making a very fine point here on the matter of transmittal. The President sends in his annual message. With that he sends in the reports of the Secretaries. They are not made to us. They are made to him.

Mr. ALLISON. Except the report of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. HALE. Except the report of the Secretary of the Treasury. The reports of all the other Departments are sent to the President and he transmits them. [illegible] is this report of the Secretary of the Navy, which [illegible] facts that the lease is based upon the law, that it has been entered upon and signed by all parties, that it has been ratified in Cuba by the Congress of Cuba, here, that the President has ratified it here, and it [illegible] If the Senator [illegible] that it [illegible] here, then he has more [illegible] I have. I do not know of [illegible] closed here of [illegible] way.

Mr. HALE. As the Senator from Wisconsin says, I do not know of any other way by which the [illegible] it. In his special message at the beginning of the session he made this [illegible]

Mr. BACON. Now, Mr. President, I come to the main point I had in mind and to which I now call the [illegible] Senate. I stated before two propositions. In the first place, that any agreement which had been made between the United States and Cuba [illegible] be ratified [illegible] Senators will remember that I mentioned that.

In the second place I had no information of the manner in which the fact had been communicated to us of any agreement and I [illegible] Senator to state in what way he had received that information.

Passing from the point as to whether or not it has been properly communicated to us, the point to which I call the attention of the Senate is that this is a treaty between Cuba [illegible] States [illegible] and that in the failure to do so there is simply a contravention of an increase of the habit, not simply of this Senate [illegible] session, but of the executive department generally under all Administrations, to usurp, if I may not use that term offensively—I will change it to the [illegible] authority to itself.

I have here now in my hand what I have not seen before, and I did not know that it was here until the Senator gave it to me a moment ago. It is what [illegible] proposes to read [illegible] of it, at least, to the Senate [illegible] not [illegible] but [illegible] by those who were delegated with the power to make a treaty, and using the very phraseology which is always used in the case of treaties. And yet it was not sent to this body for its consent, and it is not proposed to send it to this body.

Mr. President, what does the Constitution say? It says that a treaty may be made by the President and the United States by and with the advice and consent of the Senate [illegible] thereto. It means that a treaty with foreign countries which shall have the effect of law shall be made only by the assent of two-thirds of this body [illegible] now, and it is intended to distinctly take away from the Executive that which belongs or did belong to all the executives of Europe at the time our Constitution was made, to make treaties at pleasure, and to confer it upon the Executive only in conjunction with the Senate.

I will read the beginning of this agreement to show to the Senate that my objection is not a captious one; that it is one of substance. It is upon a par with the [illegible] to a man as a minister and sending him to a foreign country while the Senate is in session without ever having submitted his name to the Senate for confirmation, if such a thing ever occurred, or sending him even after his name had been submitted by nomination and before he had been confirmed. One is as much without authority of law as the other.

Now, how does this agreement between the United States and Cuba differ from a treaty. Let us see whether or not it is a treaty. First, as to form. It is true it speaks of it as a lease, but you can not change the substance and character of an instrument by a change of names. If it is an agreement between two countries which is intended to have the effect of law, it is a treaty, and this went through all the forms of a treaty.

The United States of America and the Republic of Cuba being desirous to [illegible] the relations between the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico, the Republic of Cuba hands to the United States by the agreement of February 16, 1903, in fulfillment of the provisions of article V of the constitutional ordinance of the Republic of Cuba, have designated their plenipotentiaries to that end:

The President of the United States of America, Herbert G. Squiers, envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary in Havana.

And the President of the Republic of Cuba, José M. Garcia Montes, secretary of finance, and acting secretary of state and justice, who, after communicating to each other in proper form their powers, found to be in due form, have agreed upon the following articles:

Do Senators, who so often have to pass upon treaties, recognize the phraseology, the ordinary form of parties coming together in behalf of two governments for the purpose of making a treaty? Then it goes on with the enumeration of the different articles, and it winds up as follows:

In witness whereof we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this lease, and hereunto affixed our seals.

Mr. SPOONER. Read that again, please.

Mr. BACON (reading):

In witness whereof—

I am speaking of the signatures of the plenipotentiaries—

In witness whereof we, the respective plenipotentiaries, have signed this lease and hereunto affixed our seals.

Done at Habana, in duplicate in English and Spanish, this 2d day of July, 1903.

H. G. SQUIERS. [SEAL.]
JOSÉ M. GARCIA MONTES. [SEAL.]

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BACON. I am not through, but still if the Senator wants to speak on this point I will yield. I wish to call attention to other features of the agreement.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I was going to ask the Senator to do.

Mr. BACON. I am going to do that because——

Mr. SPOONER. I had never seen it.

Mr. BACON. I never saw it before.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; with pleasure, in a moment. I had heard of it, but had never seen it. I think it has never been transmitted. Even if it were a proper document, even if it did not require the approval of Congress, it has not been transmitted to the Senate in the way in which I think it was due to the Senate that it should have been transmitted—by a formal Presidential message. It is true, as the Senator from Maine says, it is here in a department report, and that departmental report was transmitted by the President, but that is not a direct communication by the President of the character which is usually employed when important matters are communicated to Congress, upon which they are to take action.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I am coming to the features of the agreement.

Mr. SPOONER. Just a moment. The Senator says it was transmitted to Congress, not to the Senate?

Mr. BACON. Yes; I understood that is the case, and so far as that goes it is a mere matter of form. I would be perfectly content to pass by as an inadvertence the manner of transmission; but the point I am troubled about, and which every Senator here ought to be troubled about, and which ought not to become upon which we divide on party lines, is that this is a treaty and is of no effect until it has been properly transmitted to the Senate and has received the approval of two-thirds of this body.

Now, as to the form, I have already shown that it is in the usual form of treaties made by parties empowered as plenipotentiaries are for the purpose of making treaties, exchanging to each other their credentials and each agreeing that the other has his authority in due form. Now it goes on. In Article I there is an agreement—but I will read it rather than state the substance:

ARTICLE I.

The United States of America agrees and covenants to pay to the Republic of Cuba the annual sum of $2,000, in gold coin of the United States, so long as the former shall occupy and use said areas of land by virtue of said agreement.

While that is in pursuance of an agreement to make a lease, it is nevertheless a covenant between two countries, which could only be made by a treaty to be the law of the land.

All private lands and other real property within said areas shall be acquired forthwith by the Republic of Cuba.

The United States of America agrees to furnish to the Republic of Cuba the sums necessary for the purchase of said private lands and properties, and such sums shall be accepted by the Republic of Cuba as advance payment on account of rental due by virtue of said agreement.

ARTICLE II.

The said areas shall be surveyed and their boundaries distinctly marked by permanent fences or inclosures.

The expenses of construction and maintenance of such fences or inclosures shall be borne by the United States.

ARTICLE III.

The United States of America agrees that no person, partnership, or corporation shall be permitted to establish or maintain a commercial, industrial, or other enterprise within said areas.

That certainly is subject-matter of treaty agreement.

Mr. DRYDEN. Was it transmitted to the Senate?

Mr. BACON. No, sir; it was never transmitted to the Senate. I repeat the sentence which I desire certain Senators to hear. That stipulation is a matter of treaty agreement. It is true it grows out of a lease, but it is a stipulation which is to have the effect of law in this country, a binding obligation, and one which can only be made by the treaty-making power. But if there were any doubt about it the next article is one which, it seems to me, puts it beyond the possibility of difference between us about it:

ARTICLE IV.

Fugitives from justice charged with crimes or misdemeanors amenable to Cuban law, having [illegible] by the United States authorities on demand by duly authorized Cuban authorities.

Is it possible that any Senators can divide on party lines on a question of that kind, as to whether that is a treaty stipulation, which can only be made by a properly executed and approved treaty? It is an absolute extradition stipulation.

On the other hand—

Mark the other side now—the reciprocal agreement on the part of Cuba—

On the other hand, the Republic of Cuba agrees that fugitives from justice charged with crimes or misdemeanors amenable to United States law, committed within said areas, [illegible] demand be delivered up to duly authorized United States authorities.

I do not know whether I should stop to discuss Article IV or not. I am in doubt whether by discussing I should assume that any Senator will for a moment doubt or dispute the proposition that it is a treaty provision. There is a plain reciprocal extradition treaty on the one part, and on the other something that never was conceived of before as possible, except through a treaty properly made and properly consented to by the Senate.

ARTICLE V.

Materials of all kinds, merchandise, stores, and munitions of war imported [illegible] munitions of war shall not be transported [illegible] into Cuban territory.

ARTICLE VI.

Except as provided in the preceding article, vessels [illegible] into or depart from the ports of said areas [illegible] the usage of nations and to particular [illegible] of war.

ARTICLE VII.

This convention shall be ratified and the ratifications shall be exchanged in the city of Washington [illegible] seven months from this date.

In witness whereof [illegible]

Then follows the approval of the President

I, THEODORE ROOSEVELT, President of the United States of America, having [illegible] for the support of the Army for the [illegible] June, 1903, [illegible] of the Army for the [illegible]

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WASHINGTON, October 2, 1903.

That approval was doubtless made in good faith by the President, but it was none the less an approval which could have no effect to make it law and binding on the United States. The agreement, being essentially and necessarily a treaty, could only become law, binding in its terms and effect, when consented to and advised by two-thirds of the Senate.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is another lease——

Mr. McCOMAS. Will the Senator allow me to read just from that reference?

Mr. BACON. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut. I will yield to the Senator from Maryland in a moment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There is another lease of a different date, establishing the boundaries, which has nothing in it except the establishment of boundaries.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not know whether the Senator had that lease.

Mr. BACON. I will be very frank and say to the Senator from Connecticut, and to other Senators, that my object in calling the attention of the Senate to this matter was not for the purpose of defeating this item of appropriation, because I have the moral certainty of the fact, which has been stated by the Senator from Maine and known to other Senators, as to what has occurred. But, in the first place, I had not the information, and I still do not have it, that we have been properly informed of it; and, in the second place, and more particularly (I might say that without this I should have said nothing), I had heard casually, never having seen this document, that it did contain these provisions, which were provisions which could not possibly be of force, according to my view, unless they had been put into a treaty properly negotiated, submitted to the Senate, and consented to in the way prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly. I yield the floor to the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not wish to take the floor. I only want to ask the Senator whether he is not of the opinion that this agreement, whatever may be its form, is valid so far as it leases or attempts to lease to the United States a coaling station? If invalid, it must be upon [illegible] which [illegible] was conferred, or perhaps would be conferred, upon the President by the Platt amendment. That is the question, and the only question, which has to do with the question of appropriations.

Mr. BACON. My judgment is that while, of course, the agreement would be binding on Cuba from the fact that it was a condition upon which we had surrendered the military control of the island and turned it over to its own people, that fact alone is not one which would authorize that which the Senator spoke of just now as a legislative compact between two nations, so as to take it out of the class known as "treaties." In other words, I do not recognize the fact that Great Britain and the United States can enter into a [illegible] that compact is put into the form of a treaty and consented to by the Senate.

I do [illegible] the fact that Cuba could enter into an agreement with us [illegible] to the dignity of a treaty and not require the [illegible] of a treaty at the time she consented to the Platt amendment, as we call it for purposes of brevity and perfect identity, because she was not then in a condition in which she could make a treaty. Cuba could not make a treaty at the time the Platt amendment was consented to by her, but she could consent to a condition by which she would be put into a position where she could thereafter make a treaty. That fact, I am sure, is recognized by Senators who were not only familiar with the Platt amendment, but were instrumental in devising it and constructing it.

The Platt amendment itself contains a provision which recognizes the very legal status which I have spoken of, that while it would exact this as a condition before the United States would take certain action, Cuba should make the treaty thereafter, when after that change of condition she should have the power to make a treaty.

Now, this lease is executed at the time when Cuba was empowered to make a treaty, and I think that any cession of territory, whether it be a permanent cession accompanied by absolute sovereignty or a temporary cession accompanied by partial sovereignty given by one nation to another, must necessarily be a treaty. The Senator from Connecticut has just pointed out to me that there is another one. Is this the one?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think it is there. I have sent for it.

Mr. BACON. I understand from the Senator from Connecticut that there is another paper which has one of these provisions in it.

Mr. CULLOM. There are two papers. I have sent to the committee for those papers to see exactly what they are.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope that what I have presented has relieved me from the imputation, which was plainly made by the Senators on the other side of the Chamber, that I was making a captious objection. I think it is a matter of the gravest moment that this Senate should not in any manner surrender its right to approve or disapprove any agreement between this country and any other country, because any agreement which is to have the effect of law must necessarily be a treaty, and the function of this Senate to advise and consent to such a treaty, or to reject it, is not to be defeated by calling a treaty by some other name.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] asked me a question which I probably have not answered as directly as I should. He asked whether, in so far as this paper is designed to convey a lease to this Government, I consider that effective without the ratification of the Senate, and I do not know that I have answered it concisely.

Therefore I will repeat what I said, much more generally. I think that any agreement by which territory is ceded, either temporarily or permanently, by any government to this Government must necessarily be in its essence and nature and substance a treaty, and should be negotiated in the same way and approved in the same way; and as a member of the Senate it would be my opinion that that ought to be put in the form of a treaty, and ought to be sent to this Senate and receive its sanction in the manner provided by law.

So far as this particular appropriation is concerned, while it is proper that the matter I have spoken of should be called to the attention of the Senate, it is not my design to move to strike it out. But I do think that we ought never to pass—and I would object if there were a Democrat in the White House as quickly as I would when there is a Republican there—we ought never to pass without protest and resistance anything which looks like an encroachment upon the proper function of the Senate in so solemn a matter as the execution and ratification of a treaty.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to state that the papers, which are agreements made in reference to these lands, were sent to me in response to a letter from myself to the Secretary of State.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I think perhaps the facts in this case ought clearly to appear.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. There was a lease made of this Guantanamo property prior to what is called the "lease," to which the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] has alluded. On the 16th of February, 1903, there was an agreement made between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba. It does not seem to have proceeded along the same lines as the subsequent agreement. There was nothing said in it about plenipotentiaries having been appointed. It referred exclusively to the boundaries of the proposed territory to be leased for a coaling station, and I think, perhaps, to make this entire subject clear, I ought to read that entire agreement or lease. It is as follows:

CUBA COALING AND NAVAL STATIONS.

Agreement between the United States of America and the Republic of Cuba [illegible] United States of America and the Republic of Cuba [illegible] and upon by the two Governments) [illegible] United States of America and the Republic of Cuba [illegible] of the [illegible] 2 May, 1902 [illegible] specified points, to be agreed upon have reached an agreement to that end, as follows:

ARTICLE I.

The Republic of Cuba hereby leases to the United States, for the time required [illegible] the following-described [illegible]

FIRST, in [illegible]

From a [illegible] House, a line running north (true) a distance of 4.25 miles [illegible] eastward of Windward [illegible]

From the northern extremity of this line a line running west (true) a distance [illegible]

From the extremity of this last line a line running southwest (true) [illegible]

From the extremity of this last line a line running south (true) [illegible]

The [illegible] be subject to all the conditions named in Article II of this agreement [illegible] on Chart 2030.)

[illegible] and a line running north [illegible] a point [illegible] west (true), [illegible]

ARTICLE II.

The [illegible] the [illegible] and naval [illegible] shall have free passage through the waters [illegible] adjacent.

ARTICLE III.

While on the one hand the United States recognizes the continuance of the ultimate sovereignty of the Republic of Cuba over the above-described areas of land and water, on the other hand the Republic of Cuba consents that during the period of the occupation by the United States of said areas under the terms of this agreement the United States shall exercise complete jurisdiction and control over and within said areas, with the right to exercise such rights of sovereignty as would naturally be incident to such occupation, but not to extend beyond the period of such occupation, and to acquire property therein by purchase or by exercise of eminent domain, with full compensation to the owners thereof.

Done in duplicate at Habana, and signed by the President of the Republic of Cuba the 16th day of February, 1903.

[SEAL.] T. ESTRADA PALMA.

Signed by the President of the United States the 23d of February, 1903.

[SEAL.] THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The document which the Senator has read was a "lease to the United States by the Government of Cuba of certain areas of [illegible] for naval or coaling stations in Guantanamo and [illegible]," which was signed at Habana July 2, 1903; approved by the President [illegible] 1903; ratified by the President [illegible] and ratifications exchanged at Washington [illegible] 6, 1903.

Mr. TAYLOR. If the Senator will pardon me, I think the proper [illegible] of those papers is [illegible]. That the first paper is an entirely proper [illegible] in other words, a preliminary to a treaty. [illegible] in a case [illegible] as a [illegible] as the [illegible] which this appropriation [illegible] and if [illegible] should be negotiated [illegible] as a treaty.

Mr. [illegible]. I agree to say that I [illegible] of the provisions of the [illegible] or lease to the United [illegible] such as might be [illegible] to the Senate to be ratified as a treaty. I do not think, however, that provisions which are usually included in treaties [illegible] into such a lease without its ratification by the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. I will take the liberty of putting the first paper, which has been read by the Senator from Georgia, in the RECORD.

Mr. BACON. As I have read that paper, it will necessarily go in the RECORD.

Mr. CULLOM. Very well.

Mr. [illegible] and Mr. McCOMAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. [illegible]] is recognized.

Mr. McCOMAS. I rose at the Senator from Georgia's call had the floor, and I wish him to yield to me for a moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from [illegible] to yield the floor.

Mr. [illegible]. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate, although it is rather late, to submit a few [illegible] in reply to some of the statements which were made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

The Senator seemed to intimate that I had violated some of the principles of neutrality [illegible] I say to the Senator that [illegible] in the United States [illegible] Canada and England. The Senator seems to think that that was a gross breach of the principles of neutrality, but in the same breath and while taking me to task for that, he called the attention of the Senate to the great danger we had in case Japan should be victorious. The language I used—I can not quote his exact language—was that Japan was such an ambitious power that, in his opinion, we have more to fear from that country than from any other. I submit to the Senate that if there was any [illegible] the principles of neutrality on my part, I think the Senator from Maine violated them as strongly as I did.

I want to say further, Mr. President, that in the remarks I made I did not intend to imply that our Government should take any other position than that taken. We ought to have a navy to protect our interests in this controversy.

[illegible] that question, when we are discussing a matter of this kind we have a right to look in the direction where our commercial interests lie. We have now become a great manufacturing and producing nation—the greatest on the face of the earth. Our productive capacity is far in excess of our home demand, of our home market.

We have got to look abroad. In Europe we have almost exhausted ourselves; we have almost got to "the end of our rope." Owing to the hostile tariff legislation which some of the European countries have enacted, and more that is threatened, and, as the Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW] intimated to-day, such as the changed policy that is likely to take place in England, and owing to the commercial jealousies which exist in the countries of the old world we are subject to great competition and have great difficulties. The great field for American commerce and for the extension of our trade lies in the Orient. That is not a new gospel, as the Senator from Maine seems to indicate, but it is an old Democratic gospel. Away back in 1854, under a Democratic Administration, when Japan was a sealed book and a closed door to us, Commodore Perry was sent there by our Government to open Japan to the commerce of the United States and to the commerce of the world. In opening the doors of Japan we opened the eyes of those people to the benefits of western civilization and western progress.

We can see the difference, Mr. President. While Japan was in that condition, in a [illegible] state, with a closed door, we had no commerce and traffic with her at all. Since then our commerce [illegible], we have secured an [illegible] commerce with her.

The Senator from Maine intimates that our commerce in the Orient is not of much consequence. It may not be as yet as large as our commerce with Europe, but the figures I have here indicate what we may expect in [illegible].

In 1892 our total commerce with oriental countries was $102,583,634, and in 1903, eleven years later, it was $213,501,048, more [illegible] in eleven years; and, mind you, that increase occurred while the Boxer rebellion was on in China, which prevented the full measure of trade that we should otherwise have had with [illegible].

[illegible] at the territory in the Orient, China proper consisting of [illegible] or nineteen provinces, with 1.3 [illegible] and a [illegible] with an area [illegible] in seven [illegible] is Korea, with an area of [illegible] as large as the State of Minnesota, which I have the honor in part to represent here, and with a population of over 10,000,000. Then [illegible] is little Japan, [illegible] Yankee of the Orient—little [illegible] with an area of [illegible] 50,000 [illegible].

Right here [illegible] the service of humanity, right at its very doors, are our [illegible]—the Philippine Islands. [illegible] in our possession we are placed in a position [illegible] the trade of [illegible] and the [illegible] and manner of the great nations of Europe. [illegible] we could not do that. There was only one honorable, upright, and manly thing for the great American people to do, and that was just what we did—take the country, occupy it, civilize the people, give them a good government, and establish law and order there. That is exactly what we have done.

With that country in our possession and under our rule, Mr. President, we have got such a rooting in the Orient that we can develop and control that trade. Having that possession, we have a duty [illegible] care of the Philippine Islands, to keep them [illegible] and to preserve peace and order there, but we need a fleet in eastern waters to look after our commercial interests, to preserve them, and take care of them.

So, Mr. President, with all due respect to the Senator from Maine, I must say to him that nothing in the past history of Japan, since Commodore Perry opened the doors of that country, will afford any ground for him to imagine that the American people need apprehend any danger from that point.

With Japan we have the open door, and have had it for years. With China, under the recent treaty, we have the open door, thank God, on liberal conditions, and we are not entirely out of Manchuria, as the Senator from Maine intimates. Under the recent treaty ratified by the Senate we get two treaty ports—Antung, near the mouth of the Yalu River, and Mukden, the capital of the Province of Sheng King. It is really the principal town in Manchuria. There is no country that has greater interests in the Orient than we have, and it is necessary that the American nation should exercise a moral influence, and a moral influence comes from the fact not only that we are a great and strong nation, but from the fact that we have a good, aggressive navy. I think every American citizen who believes in the progress and prosperity and growth of the country, who wants to build up our country, East and West, North and South, and to promote its interests in all quarters of the globe, ought to do his utmost to build up our Navy. We can never have it any too large.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] to the amendment.

Mr. QUARLES. I desire to suggest a verbal change in the amendment which I offered to this bill. It is in line 5 of the printed amendment, to strike out the word "school" and insert in lieu thereof the word "station."

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is right. If the Senator had not made that motion, I should have made it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that verbal change will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Illinois to lay on the table the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The motion was not agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. I am very desirous of getting this bill out of the way of other matters in which Senators are [illegible]. I hoped to pass it to-night. The Senator from [illegible] [Mr. [illegible]] tells me that at this hour there are two or three amendments which he wishes to propose to the bill, but that he is not ready with his facts and documents. We shall go over until Monday morning. I am disappointed that we can not pass the bill to-night. But the only reason that has been made is that controversy has been discussed. Therefore I shall ask the Senate to take up the bill the first thing on Monday morning.

I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, March 7, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, March 5, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported a bill (H. R. 15521) making appropriations for the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] may have the privilege of filing the views of the minority of the committee on this bill.

Mr. MANN. Are points of order reserved on the bill?

The SPEAKER. One moment.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I want to reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will say that the gentleman from Tennessee has the right to file the views of the minority, if they are ready.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Very well; I file them now, and I desire to reserve points of order on the bill.

The SPEAKER. All points of order are reserved upon the bill by the gentleman from Tennessee.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. BOUTELL in the chair) and resumed the consideration of House bill No. 12684, [illegible] Indian bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I notice on page 2928 of the RECORD that the amendment in reference to the Uinta Reservation contains the words "October 1, 1904." It should read "October 1, 1905." I think it is a misprint. It should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk informs the Chair that in the bill the language is "1905."

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct.

Then, Mr. Chairman, on the same page is an amendment providing for the payment of $5,000 out of the indgment in favor of the New York Indians, for the purpose of ascertaining the beneficiaries of that judgment. The amendment should have provided that the appropriation be immediately available. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as adopted in that form.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to insert in the amendment to which he has referred the words "to be immediately available." Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. MANN. I notice, Mr. Chairman, that in the left hand column of page 2927 of the RECORD, in an amendment which I offered, the language as printed is "San Francisco, Chicago, and St. Louis." It should be "San Francisco, Chicago, and New York." It was so read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed by the Clerk that it so appears in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. In the printed bill, on page 41, which has been passed over, the word "building," in line 12, should have been "buildings." That is a printer's mistake. I ask unanimous consent that the correction be made by inserting "buildings" instead of "building."

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the correction will be made.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am advised that an amendment, which was agreed to in line 6, page 2, providing for a change of the word "seven" to the word "eight," has been made in the bill to change "seven" to "six."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that "eight" is the word appearing in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is correct. That is what the RECORD shows.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. LITTLE. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] line 6, insert, after the word "[illegible]," the following:

"[illegible] provision for the attendance of children of noncitizens [illegible]."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment that I have offered not only as of the highest importance, but as enabling the Secretary of the Interior in a large measure to carry out the purposes that he evidently has in mind. The situation is about this: This appropriation to aid the Choctaws, Chickasaws, etc., [illegible] of new schools and in [illegible] present [illegible] amounts to $[illegible]. The rural schools in the country [illegible] to sustain or maintain [illegible] schools. Now, with this amendment to the provision which will enable the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] In other words, if in the management of the schools it is found necessary or reasonable to do so, noncitizen children can be admitted into the Indian schools upon terms that the Secretary may prescribe for payment, and this money may be used in part in assist in the carrying on of the work of [illegible] in the schools.

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the gentleman would read the law he will come to the conclusion that that can be done as the law now stands.

Mr. LITTLE. I think it important to relieve the Secretary of any embarrassment on that point. [illegible] not absolutely mandatory; it is left as I [illegible] school board, but I want the Secretary to feel free about the matter, because I believe he ought to do it. I believe it to be to the best interest not only of the noncitizen children but of the citizen children of that [illegible].

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw any objection to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so. I regard it as of very great importance. [illegible] in the near future become patrons of the same common schools of the same common State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That [illegible] supplies for which appropriations are herein [illegible] as may be necessary, to be paid in the manner [illegible] and disbursed by him under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. LITTLE. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page [illegible], in line [illegible], insert, after the word "[illegible]," the following:

"[illegible] providing provision for the attendance of children of noncitizens [illegible]."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment that I have offered not only as of the highest importance, but as enabling the Secretary of the Interior in a large measure to carry out the purposes that he evidently has in mind. The situation is about this: This appropriation to aid the Choctaws, Chickasaws, etc., [illegible] of new schools and in [illegible] present [illegible] amounts to $[illegible]. The rural schools in the country [illegible] to sustain or maintain [illegible] schools. Now, with this amendment to the provision which will enable the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] In other words, if in the management of the schools it is found necessary or reasonable to do so, noncitizen children can be admitted into the Indian schools upon terms that the Secretary may prescribe for payment, and this money may be used in part in assist in the carrying on of the work of [illegible] in the schools.

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the gentleman would read the law he will come to the conclusion that that can be done as the law now stands.

Mr. LITTLE. I think it important to relieve the Secretary of any embarrassment on that point. [illegible] not absolutely mandatory; it is left as I [illegible] school board, but I want the Secretary to feel free about the matter, because I believe he ought to do it. I believe it to be to the best interest not only of the noncitizen children but of the citizen children of that [illegible].

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw any objection to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad to hear the gentleman say so. I regard it as of very great importance. [illegible] in the near future become patrons of the same common schools of the same common State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That [illegible] supplies for which appropriations are herein [illegible] as may be necessary, to be paid in the manner [illegible] and disbursed by him under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe.

Mr. LITTLE. I offer the amendment which I sent to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page [illegible], in line [illegible], insert, after the word "[illegible]," the following:

"[illegible] providing provision for the attendance of children of noncitizens [illegible]."

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I regard the amendment that I have offered not only as of the highest importance, but as enabling the Secretary of the Interior in a large measure to carry out the purposes that he evidently has in mind. The situation is about this: This appropriation to aid the Choctaws, Chickasaws, etc., [illegible] of new schools and in [illegible] present [illegible] amounts to $[illegible]. The rural schools in the country [illegible] to sustain or maintain [illegible] schools. Now, with this amendment to the provision which will enable the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] In other words, if in the management of the schools it is found necessary or reasonable to do so, noncitizen children can be admitted into the Indian schools upon terms that the Secretary may prescribe for payment, and this money may be used in part in assist in the carrying on of the work of [illegible] in the schools.

Mr. CURTIS. I think if the gentleman would read the law he will come to the conclusion that that can be done as the law now stands.

Mr. LITTLE. I think it important to relieve the Secretary of any embarrassment on that point. [illegible] not absolutely mandatory; it is left as I [illegible] school board, but I want the Secretary to feel free about the matter, because I believe he ought to do it. I believe it to be to the best interest not only of the noncitizen children but of the citizen children of that [illegible].

Mr. CURTIS. I will withdraw any objection to the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. I am glad to hear the gentleman [illegible]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against this amendment until I can know something about it.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will state that this was a matter that was brought to the attention of the chairman a few days ago and, at his suggestion, was referred to the Indian Office. This matter was brought to my attention about a week ago, after the bill was reported, and I consulted with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs regarding it, and he said he had no objection to it. I submitted it to him in writing for a report. I went there day before yesterday, and they said the report had been prepared and sent to the Secretary of the Interior, and that they had no objection to it. They said I would get it yesterday. I did not get it, and I sent my secretary this morning, and it seems that it has not yet come before the Secretary of the Interior; at least, he has not acted on it. I have here a slip stating that their report had gone to the Secretary of the Interior March 3.

Mr. SHERMAN. With a favorable report?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; the report was favorable. The Indian Office said that they had no objection to it. I will state for the benefit of the chairman and of the committee that there are a few Indians living along the Colville River, a sluggish stream, along which there are much swamp lands that will make first-class agricultural lands if drained. These Indians have their allotments, but not being allowed to convey any land for any purpose, the building of a drainage canal is blocked because it would have to go through their lands or some of them. These people are very anxious that these Indians shall be assessed for that benefit, but of course the Commissioner would not approve of that, and the committee would not approve of it. But aside from that, if they can get permission to negotiate with the Indians for a right of way, they will build the canal, and this will not only reclaim the lands of the whites, but be of great benefit to most of these Indian lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. By the amendment it is left discretionary with the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. JONES of Washington. The conveyances must be approved by him. I have adopted the same language that the gentleman has already adopted in the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The amendment was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire of the chairman of the committee the necessity and propriety of the exemption of the persons named in sections 12 to 16, inclusive.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I have here a report from the Department in each individual case. They are rather too voluminous to read, but each report is separate and each report was considered by the full committee, and in each case it was considered that the case was made out that brought these Indians outside of the general rule where it seemed proper that the right to alienate should be granted.

I will very gladly put all of these reports in the RECORD, and will be glad to hand them over to my friend from North Dakota if he cares to see them.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, owing to the confusion I could not hear the question of the gentleman from North Dakota.

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota inquired why the exception was made in reference to these persons named in sections 12 to 16, inclusive, and I was explaining to him; and, without objection, I will insert in the RECORD the reports made in each case.

The reports are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 11, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of Indian Office report of 6th instant upon the application of Edgar Hendrix, a full-blood Wichita [illegible] the Kiowa Agency, Okla., for authority to sell [illegible] of his allotment, to wit, the northwest quarter of section 9, township [illegible] Indian Office's report shows that the Enid and Anadarko Railway [illegible] town, at the place [illegible] would be of great benefit to the Wichita [illegible] for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill providing the necessary authority.

Concurring in the Commissioner's recommendation, I have the honor to request that the matter receive favorable action by your committee.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 6, 1904.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: This office is in receipt, by reference from Lieut. Col. James F. Randlett, in charge of the Kiowa Agency, of a petition addressed to you by Edgar Hendrix, Wichita allottee No. 349.

The petitioner represents that he is a full-blood Wichita Indian of the Kiowa Agency, Okla.; that as such Indian there was certified to him an allotment of 160 acres of land from the former Wichita Reservation, in Oklahoma, which allotment comprises the northwest quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 10 west; that the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company since the time when said land was allotted to the petitioner has built a line of railway across said allotment of the petitioner, and that said railway company has established a station upon his allotment, and that said allotment is located about 9 miles northwest of the town of Anadarko, Okla., and about [illegible] miles south of the town of Binger, Okla. The petitioner therefore prays that you make recommendation to the Congress of the United States to the effect that he may be authorized to sell for townsite purposes, under such conditions and regulations as you may prescribe, not to exceed 80 acres of the land allotted to the petitioner as Wichita allottee No. 349.

He has accompanied his forwarding the petition Agent Randlett approved the request and states that the allottee is a deserving person of lawful age, and that the proposition for a small town at the place proposed would be of great benefit to the whites and Indians living in the vicinity.

I have prepared a draft of an item authorizing said allottee to sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, the conveyances to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and have the honor to report that it be transmitted to the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives with request that it be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill.

I also inclose two copies of the petition.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, KIOWA AGENCY,
Anadarko, Okla., December 29, 1903.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

(Through the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the United States Indian agent, Kiowa Agency, Okla.)

SIR: Your petitioner respectfully represents that he is a full-blood Wichita Indian of Kiowa Agency, Okla.; that as such Indian there was certified to your petitioner an allotment of 160 acres of land, more or less, from the former Wichita Reservation, in Oklahoma, which allotment was [illegible] Wichita Reservation, and comprises the northwest quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 10 west; that the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, since the time when said land was allotted to the petitioner, has built a line of railway across said allotment of the petitioner, and that said railway company has established a station upon his allotment, and that said allotment is located about 9 miles northwest of the town of Anadarko, Okla., and about [illegible] miles south of the town of Binger, Okla. The petitioner therefore prays that you make recommendation to the Congress of the United States to the effect that he may be authorized to sell for townsite purposes, under such conditions and regulations as you may prescribe, not to exceed 80 acres of the land allotted to the petitioner as Wichita allottee No. 349.

He has accompanied forwarding the petition Agent Randlett approved the request and states that the allottee is a deserving person of lawful age, and that the proposition for a small town at the place proposed would be of great benefit to the whites and Indians living in the vicinity.

I have prepared a draft of an item authorizing said allottee to sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, the conveyances to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and have the honor to report that it be transmitted to the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives with request that it be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill.

I also inclose two copies of the petition.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, KIOWA AGENCY,
Anadarko, Okla., December 29, 1903.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

(Through the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the United States Indian agent, Kiowa Agency, Okla.)

SIR: Your petitioner respectfully represents that he is a full-blood Wichita Indian of Kiowa Agency, Okla.; that as such Indian there was certified to your petitioner an allotment of 160 acres of land, more or less, from the former Wichita Reservation, in Oklahoma, which allotment was [illegible] Wichita Reservation, and comprises the northwest quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 10 west; that the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, since the time when said land was allotted to the petitioner, has built a line of railway across said allotment of the petitioner, and that said railway company has established a station upon his allotment, and that said allotment is located about 9 miles northwest of the town of Anadarko, Okla., and about [illegible] miles south of the town of Binger, Okla. The petitioner therefore prays that you make recommendation to the Congress of the United States to the effect that he may be authorized to sell for townsite purposes, under such conditions and regulations as you may prescribe, not to exceed 80 acres of the land allotted to the petitioner as Wichita allottee No. 349.

He has accompanied forwarding the petition Agent Randlett approved the request and states that the allottee is a deserving person of lawful age, and that the proposition for a small town at the place proposed would be of great benefit to the whites and Indians living in the vicinity.

I have prepared a draft of an item authorizing said allottee to sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, the conveyances to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and have the honor to report that it be transmitted to the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives with request that it be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill.

I also inclose two copies of the petition.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
UNITED STATES INDIAN SERVICE, KIOWA AGENCY,
Anadarko, Okla., December 29, 1903.

To the honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

(Through the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the United States Indian agent, Kiowa Agency, Okla.)

SIR: Your petitioner respectfully represents that he is a full-blood Wichita Indian of Kiowa Agency, Okla.; that as such Indian there was certified to your petitioner an allotment of 160 acres of land, more or less, from the former Wichita Reservation, in Oklahoma, which allotment comprises the northwest quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 10 west; that the Enid and Anadarko Railway Company, since the time when said land was allotted to the petitioner, has built a line of railway across said allotment of the petitioner, and that said railway company has established a station upon his allotment, and that said allotment is located about 9 miles northwest of the town of Anadarko, Okla., and about [illegible] miles south of the town of Binger, Okla. The petitioner therefore prays that you make recommendation to the Congress of the United States to the effect that he may be authorized to sell for townsite purposes, under such conditions and regulations as you may prescribe, not to exceed 80 acres of the land allotted to the petitioner as Wichita allottee No. 349.

He has accompanied forwarding the petition Agent Randlett approved the request and states that the allottee is a deserving person of lawful age, and that the proposition for a small town at the place proposed would be of great benefit to the whites and Indians living in the vicinity.

I have prepared a draft of an item authorizing said allottee to sell and convey not exceeding one-half of his allotment, the conveyances to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and have the honor to report that it be transmitted to the proper committees of the Senate and House of Representatives with request that it be inserted in the Indian appropriation bill.

I also inclose two copies of the petition.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

EDGAR (his x mark) HENDRIX.

Witnesses to mark:

JNO. P. BLACKMON.
PHILLIP HENDRIX.

KIOWA AGENCY,
Anadarko, Okla., December 29, 1903.

Respectfully transmitted to the honorable the Secretary of the Interior (through the office of Indian Affairs, Washington, D. C.).

[illegible] would be a great benefit to the whites and Indians living [illegible]

JAMES F. RANDLETT,
Lieutenant-Colonel, Captain Sixth Cavalry,
United States Indian Agent.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 21, 1903.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith for your information a report of the 16th instant, from [illegible] an item for insertion in the Indian appropriation bill providing for the issuance of a patent in fee to James N. Jones for the [illegible] of his allotment, a full-blood Iowa tribe of Indians, [illegible].

Mr. Jones is a white man, intermarried with and legally incorporated in the Kiowa tribe of Indians. He is recommended by Agent Randlett and by the [illegible] honor to request that the same receive favorable action by your committee.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, December 16, 1903.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: This office has received, by reference from Lieut. Col. James F. Randlett, United States Indian agent, Kiowa Agency, Okla., of a communication, addressed to you from James N. Jones, dated Anadarko, Okla., November 25, 1903.

Mr. Jones represents that he is a full-blood Iowa Indian, intermarried and legally incorporated in the Kiowa tribe of Indians of the Kiowa Agency, Okla., and that he was regularly enrolled [illegible] and as a member of said tribe of Indians, which [illegible] Kiowa Agency, Okla., on the [illegible] of November, 1892, [illegible] quarter section 9, township [illegible] north, range 8 west.

The petitioner further represents that his allotment is located on the Mangum branch of the Rock Island Railway system, at a place known as [illegible] Okla., and Anadarko, Okla., on the same branch, between the towns of [illegible] and Anadarko, that said Mangum branch of said Rock Island system is now in process of construction, and that the petitioner's allotment is at a junction with the Anadarko branch of said Rock Island system; that there are many farmers with families living in the near vicinity of Cottonwood station whose best interests demand a local trading point with elevators, gins, etc., and that the petitioner has an Indian family composed of a wife and nine children. He therefore prays that the Interior Department will recommend to Congress legislation to the end that the petitioner be authorized to sell for townsite purposes and give a [illegible] title to [illegible] of the proceeds of the sale and [illegible] to be used as a [illegible] Iowa tribe.

In the opinion of the undersigned it would result in benefit to the members of the Iowa tribe of Indians, [illegible] and equally to proven [illegible] the interests of the Indians [illegible] Mr. Jones has a family of half-blood [illegible] land as prayed for by Mr. Jones.

In view of Agent Randlett's recommendation and the facts stated, I have [illegible] Mr. Jones [illegible] to recommend [illegible] committees of Congress with the recommendation that it be [illegible] Indian appropriation bill.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

ANADARKO, OKLA., November 25, 1903.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, D. C.

(Through the United States Indian agent, Kiowa Agency, Okla.)

DEAR SIR: Your petitioner respectfully represents that he is a white man [illegible] Kiowa Agency, Okla., [illegible] quarter of section 9, township 8 north, range 8 west, of the Indian meridian in the Indian Territory.

Your petitioner further represents that his allotment is located on the [illegible] Railway system, at a place known as [illegible] Okla., and Anadarko, Okla., on the same branch, between the towns of [illegible] and Anadarko, that said Mangum branch of said Rock Island system is now in process of construction, and that the petitioner's allotment is at a junction with the Anadarko branch of said Rock Island system; that there are many farmers with families living in the near vicinity of Cottonwood station, there is now and has for some time been a small [illegible] and temporary depot, also a postoffice, known as Verden, Okla.; that there are many farmers with families living in the near vicinity of Cottonwood station whose best interests demand a local trading point with elevators, gins, etc., and that the petitioner has an Indian family, commending him to you as a thorough business man, good citizen, fully capable at handling and transacting any kind of business. Hoping that you will see your way clear to confer this favor on him, and it will be greatly appreciated by me.

Very truly, yours,

C. J. WEBORG,
Representative, Sixteenth District.

PENDER, NEBR., January 8, 1904.

Hon. J. J. McCARTHY, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In regard to Mr. George J. Lemmon, of Thurston, Thurston County, Nebr., I desire to state that I have known him for several years or since that [illegible] the Winnebago Office of Indians [illegible] and upstanding business man. He is conducting a general store business at the town of Thurston on the Winnebago Reservation.

[illegible] Mr. Lemmon [illegible] man, and [illegible] as any other [illegible] business. [illegible] he should not have every right [illegible]

Very respectfully submitted.

W. I. WILTSE,
Ex-County Clerk, Thurston County.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to [illegible] whether that has been referred to the Department.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will state that it has not. But I will [illegible] regard to the matter: Zenobia Adams is, I am [illegible] of a former Indian agent who had control of the Choctaw Indians. She was the first white child born at the Indian agency. She is now a young lady and, I understand, a school teacher. This land has been [illegible] hers by a [illegible] was allotted from the tribe by reason of the fact that she was the first white child born on that agency. She is, of course, a white person, and well educated. She has a guardian, and that guardian applies to Congress for this relief. She wants to use her land. It is valuable land.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to inquire the purpose of this provision for paying the sum of something over $3,000 for maps for the Cherokee Indians. I do not understand why they need a map, at least that badly.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is recommended by the Department, and I will ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 16, 1904.

CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
United States Senate.

SIR: The Department is in receipt of your [illegible] dated February [illegible] intended to be proposed by Mr. QUARLES to [illegible] for the current and contingent expenses [illegible]

[illegible] Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and di[illegible] Nation of Indians in [illegible]

[illegible] m for $[illegible] instead of $3,700 as m[illegible] failed to [illegible]

[illegible] on the [illegible] shall be appropriated [illegible]

[illegible] eminently proper that [illegible] tion proposed [illegible] education," and that said amendment as amended be incorporated in the Indian appropriation bill.

Respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that is satisfactory to the gentleman from Arkansas. I happened to have slight personal knowledge in reference to this item. The maps were furnished.

Mr. LITTLE. I will say, Mr. Chairman, that since hearing the reading of the report of the Secretary I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. The maps were furnished. There is no controversy about that. They were perfectly acceptable, but for some technical reason the Cherokee Nation did not pay for [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. They were furnished under a contract, I understand.

Mr. MANN. They were furnished under a contract and are perfectly satisfactory—no question raised about it at all.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I think it should be paid.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 19. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and di[illegible] Mary Matthews holds his receipt in [illegible]

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] and insert in lieu thereof the following: [illegible] to Mary [illegible] C. B. [illegible] on Warner's Ranch, California, au[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That for the purpose of irrigating lands allotted to the Indians in [illegible] remainder of the land in said reservations irrigable under the system so constructed shall be sold at such price as may be deemed proper by the Secretary of the Interior, said price for the land being in addition to the charges provided for in the reclamation act, and shall be paid in annual installments in like manner. The proceeds of the sales of the lands not allotted to the Indians shall be devoted to the payment of the charges upon the lands allotted to them in [illegible] with the provisions of the reclamation act, and the remainder shall be expended by the Secretary of the Interior from time to time, in his discretion, for the benefit of the said Indians.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MORRELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9480) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions: in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 53.

[illegible] That the Secretary of War be and [illegible] improvement of said channel to meet the [illegible]

Senate concurrent resolution No. [illegible]

Resolved by the [illegible] concurring). That the [illegible] Salmon River, between Salmon, Idaho, and [illegible]

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title: in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2665. An act to provide for the allowance and payment to the employees of the Government Printing Office of the same leave of absence as is allowed to the clerks and employees of the Executive Departments of the Government.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana and Mr. STEPHENS of Texas rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order to the section just read as being contrary to existing law, as [illegible] legislation, and as contravening the irrigation act. I would like to have a reasonably full explanation of the section, an explanation which would give the number of acres involved and the number of Indians affected and the number of acres outside of the Indian reservation that it is sought by this new legislation to irrigate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana makes the point of order against the entire section, reserving it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, of course I will admit that the point of order is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from New York that the Chair understands the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] offers an amendment to this section and it might be well to consider that first.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The point of order, I understand, has been sustained.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, no; the gentleman from Indiana reserves the point of order until he hears an explanation, which I think will satisfy his mind that the provision is all right, and if it does not of course the section must go out on a point of order, if insisted upon. Of [illegible] round numbers 25,000 acres of land that is susceptible of irrigation and on the Colorado reservation 175,000 acres of land susceptible to irrigation. To give to the Indians 5 acres each of irrigated land will require 150,000 acres, I think the report says.

I think I will ask the Clerk to read [illegible] the matter is one of considerable importance. I will [illegible] read first the letter from the Geological Survey and then the two letters from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, both of which reach us through the Secretary of the Interior, with his indorsement. The letters are quite full, and if the gentleman from Indiana will listen to the reading I think he will be satisfied with the explanation.

The Clerk read as follows:

IRRIGATION OF YUMA AND COLORADO RIVER INDIAN RESERVATIONS, ARIZONA AND CALIFORNIA.

JANUARY 23, 1904.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: In pursuance of the engineering investigation and surveys which for [illegible] comprehensive system of utilizing the waters of the river to the best possible advantage.

The portion of this general system which appears at the present time most feasible for early construction would include the irrigation of lands in the Yuma and Colorado River Indian reservations in California and Arizona.

As the reclamation act requires the return to the reclamation fund of the money spent for the irrigation of lands the large areas in Indian reservations involved in these projects can not be allowed without special authority from Congress. There are, approximately, 2,000 acres of irrigable land in the Colorado River Indian Reservation.

An agreement was made December 4, 1893, with the Yuma Indians for the disposal of the lands in their reservation. This agreement was approved by act of Congress of August 15, 1894. [illegible] under the provisions of this act it was proposed to sell such Indian lands of irrigable lands, the proceeds of the sale to be used in irrigation, and sold at public auction not less than the appraised value, after giving due notice of such sale by publication in the newspapers.

It was also proposed that the Colorado River Irrigating Company which was chartered under the laws of Arizona [illegible] Congress of February 18, 1891 [illegible] of the Indians at such rates as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] to reach the requirements of the canal through the reservation [illegible] the passage through the land [illegible] upon the road [illegible] of the canal.

It is understood that under the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the cases of Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock and U. S. v. Lucas and Lone Wolf v. Hitchcock [illegible] U. S. the Congress has full power to dispose of the Indian lands in such manner as it may consider best fitted for the benefit of the Indians.

The lands in these Indian reservations are of no practical value without irrigation, and only a very small part could ever be sold in the absence of the [illegible]

It is approximately [illegible] acres of land on the Yuma Reservation which [illegible] to be irrigated [illegible] the proceeds of the sale of these lands could, he says, be used to pay into the Reclamation Fund the cost of irrigating the lands belonging to the Indians, and leave a surplus, which could be utilized for their benefit.

In the case of the Colorado River Indian Reservation the number of Indians [illegible] so far as is [illegible] reports of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, [illegible] knowledge of the [illegible] Accordingly [illegible] River Indian Reservation [illegible] for the irrigation of lands [illegible] the Indians as proposed by the reclamation act.

I transmit herewith draft of a paragraph which has been prepared for [illegible] the Indian appropriation bill, if the plan meets with the approval of the Department. It [illegible] has been so prepared as to carry out the ideas [illegible]

[illegible] be prepared to take up the consideration of the matter at the proper time, if it is desired that this legislation be given at the present session of Congress.

Very respectfully,

CHAS. D. WALCOTT, Director.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February [illegible], 1904.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: This office is in receipt, by Department reference, of a preliminary report in [illegible] P. N. [illegible] of the Geological Survey, dated January 23, 1904, relative to irrigation of Yuma Indian Reservation and the Colorado River Indian Reservation, Arizona and California. [illegible] involve the [illegible] Colorado River Indian Reservation.

[illegible] Department [illegible] the reclamation fund for the irrigation of lands, but as the [illegible] in these projects can not be utilized without [illegible]

[illegible] indicates that there are approximately 23,000 acres of irrigable land in Yuma Reservation and about 175,000 acres in the Colorado River Reservation.

[illegible] of these lands, leaving [illegible] the sale of these lands could, he says, be used to pay into the [illegible] of irrigating the allotments, leaving a surplus [illegible]

As to the Colorado River Reservation [illegible] construct, under [illegible] River and other irrigation laws, by the diversion of the water of the [illegible]

It further provides that after the allotment of 5 acres each to [illegible] relief [illegible]

One [illegible], however, is suggested.

The Yuma Indians have already assented to allotments of 5 acres each, but this office is not prepared to state that those to the Colorado River Indians [illegible] such amount, although it is probable that such conclusion [illegible] the revised scheme.

[illegible] that the Department should be allowed discretion to allot [illegible] acres each, which will still leave some [illegible] to the Director's estimate.

[illegible] that the second sentence be amended by striking out the word "reservations," after the word "said," in line 13, and inserting in lieu thereof the following words:

"Yuma reservation, and of said reservations, not exceeding 10 acres each, as the Secretary of the Interior may determine, to all Indians belonging on the said Colorado River reservation."

The papers are now with returned.

Very respectfully,

A. C. TONNER,
Acting Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 5, 1904.

The Hon. SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

Sir: Referring to your request of February 3, 1904, on a communication from the Director of the Geological Survey dated February 23, 1904, relative to [illegible] on the Yuma Indian Reservation in California, and the Colorado River reservation in Arizona, and with my report I suggested that the Department should [illegible] the Director of the Geological Survey to visit the Colorado River Indians and [illegible] the proposition to allot them 5 acres each, as in the case of the Yumas, and [illegible] that the amendment of the bill submitted by the Director be [illegible] to permit the allotment to the Colorado River Indians, in the discretion of the Department. I now desire to state that after [illegible] with the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, I am convinced that the bill should be [illegible] the best interests of the Indians, I am opposed to limit the allotment to be made to the Colorado River Indians to 10 acres.

[illegible] the contract irrigation, but the same would be [illegible] to place the [illegible] in the sale of the surplus lands in [illegible] the complete [illegible] reservation lands. Moreover, I am satisfied that five acres per capita of irrigable land on the Colorado River, where six or seven crops a year can be depended upon, is all the Indians will ever require or make use of.

In view of the foregoing, I respectfully withdraw my recommendation for the amendment of the draft of the bill prepared by the Geological Survey, and recommend that the bill be submitted to Congress without amendment.

Very respectfully,

A. C. TONNER, Acting Commissioner.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 5, 1904.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

Sir: I have the honor to inclose the draft of a paragraph prepared by the Director of the Geological Survey with a view to its insertion in the Indian appropriation bill, which has for its object the [illegible] of irrigation works for the Yuma and Colorado Indian Reservations, in California and Arizona, as a part of the general system for the irrigation and reclamation of lands along the course of the Colorado River, both within and without these reservations, and the allotment of a sufficient tract of land to each Indian on the same, and the sale of the remainder of the lands irrigable under the system to the public.

The system of irrigation contemplated in this locality is to be prosecuted under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat., 388), and the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs has recommended that the draft be submitted to the Congress with an amendment.

[illegible] the premises I inclose a copy of a letter from the Director of the Geological Survey, dated the 23d ultimo, and copies of the report [illegible] by the Acting Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated February 5, 1904, in which, and recommends that a paragraph be inserted in the annual Indian appropriation bill in the words of the draft.

Very respectfully,

E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, from the letters read I see the Secretary recommends that the Indians be allotted 10 acres each instead of 5.

Mr. SHERMAN. He modifies that in a subsequent communication—a communication of February 6.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I heard both communications read. I observed that one stated 10 acres. I may say that I regard this as a piecemeal amendment of the irrigation act. But for myself personally, if it is satisfactory to the Members of the House especially interested in irrigation, and particularly to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANIELS], who represents the district especially affected, I have no disposition to press the point of order, and will withdraw it.

Mr. MONDELL. I renew the point of order.

Mr. LIVERNASH. I renew the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. LIVERNASH] makes a point of order against section 20.

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman from California make the point of order simply for the purpose of hearing further discussion or does he mean to insist on the point of order?

Mr. LIVERNASH. I renew the point of order, designing to press it. It is my belief that section 20 is new legislation of dangerous type and should be killed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then you do not simply reserve the point of order, but desire to make it?

Mr. LIVERNASH. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I am not going to discuss it. The section is clearly subject to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order made by the gentleman from California.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all of the mineral lands in the mountainous parts, aside from the agricultural [illegible] Indian reservations in the United States and Territories, [illegible] are hereby declared to be open for location, development, operation, and entry, by the citizens of the United States, [illegible] of the United States are now subject to location, development, operation, and entry; and that all of said mineral lands in said reservations [illegible] subject to location, development, operation, and entry, and governed by the same rules, the same as other mineral lands of the United States are now so subject to location, development, operation, and entry, and the money arising from the sale of said lands under the said mining laws shall be paid to said Indian tribes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I make a point of order against the amendment, and I shall insist upon it. I am willing to reserve it long enough for the gentleman from Texas to discuss the amendment if he wishes to do so, but it may as well be understood that I am going to insist upon it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his kindness, but I anticipated as much when I sent up the amendment.

This is the only opportunity I have ever had to place before Congress my views on this subject. For three Congresses I have had a bill for the purpose set forth in the amendment pending before the Indian Committee, but have been unable to have it reported or, in fact, considered favorably by the committee. But it certainly is legislation looking in the right direction. It is legislation demanded by the people of the West. Mr. Chairman, [illegible] the pressing necessity for this legislation I will [illegible] that there is an Indian reservation known as the Mescalero Apache Reservation in the eastern portion of New Mexico that is well known to contain valuable mineral deposits. There is a railroad in operation on each side of a range of mountains included within this reservation. There are 444 Indians on this reservation containing half of a million acres of land. The Indians are not occupying more than 10,000 acres for any purpose whatever.

This mountain range contains valuable mineral deposits. For the last thirty or forty years these Indians have been on this reservation, kept there and supported by the United States Government. Now, I think it is time that the reservation should be thrown open and the lands allotted to the Indians. I have had a bill pending for this purpose, but it seems impossible to open up this reservation either for mining entries or for [illegible] lands to actual settlers.

If we should adopt the policy set forth in this bill, together with the amendment, it would open up those reservations and give work for the Indians—would make them self-supporting, so that instead of hunting and fishing over large reservations, tribes would be opened up and labor would be given to the Indians on the reservation. They make excellent teamsters; they can do work for the miners above ground as well as the white men, and it would be better for them in every respect to be associated with the white people. If we intend to civilize and educate these people it is time to break up their tribal relations and give them something to do at home.

This amendment certainly looks in the right direction. Every man who understands the conditions in the West recognizes the necessity for this legislation. There is no reason why [illegible] in the manner policy of locking up vast Indian reservations containing valuable mineral deposits should be pursued any longer. These Indians can not and will not work these mineral deposits; and the Government prohibits the white miner from developing them, and thus benefiting the Indians and the whole country as well. The policy now pursued is certainly a very bad one, and this amendment should become a law, and I therefore hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will not insist on his point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I do not. I think it is well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the [illegible] and the [illegible] shall be [illegible] courts in the [illegible] clerks [illegible] at such [illegible] monthly, as well as all other [illegible] by the clerks of the respective United States courts [illegible] from the emoluments of their respective offices as provided by the act of June 30, 1902.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I desire to make a point of order against this paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky makes a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman——

Mr. SHERMAN. Does the gentleman make the point, or reserve it?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I will reserve it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I should like to make an explanation.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should be glad to have the gentleman from Texas explain the provision. He is very familiar with it.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BAKER. I understand that I am in order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky yields to the gentleman from Texas for an explanation.

Mr. BAKER. I understood I had the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky made a point of order, which will be disposed of. Afterwards the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] will be recognized.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this legislation is necessary, for this reason: In the last Congress we passed a bill providing for the registration of deeds and other instruments in the Indian Territory, setting apart certain districts for that purpose. A deputy recorder has been appointed at each place where the records are kept, and there were twenty-five of these deputies and recording districts. The law provided that each of them should have twelve hundred dollars a year, and that all the fees in any office amounting to more than twelve hundred dollars should be paid into the United States Treasury. The result is that in about half of these recording districts the recorders receive as fees more than twelve hundred dollars, and that excess goes into the United States Treasury. A part of the recorders do not get enough to pay their salaries, because the fees do not amount to twelve hundred dollars per annum.

The bill was framed so that the overplus going to those who received more than twelve hundred dollars in fees could be paid to those who did not receive that amount, so as to equalize the salaries. Hence it is necessary that we should have legislation along this line to pay these salaries.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Was it not the purpose in framing the law that you refer to to pay these clerks out of the fees? In other words, not to allow them any sum out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That was the purpose of the law.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. To make the fees of the office pay the clerks?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Now, under this provision, if the fees taken in by all the clerks would not pay all the clerks twelve hundred dollars each, you pay them the remainder out of the Federal Treasury?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. It might have that effect. I have a letter from the Acting Comptroller of the Treasury in reference to that matter and advocating the passage of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I should like to hear it read.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. [illegible]

OFFICE OF COMPTROLLER OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, February 18, 1904.

Hon. JOHN H. STEPHENS,
[illegible]

SIR: I [illegible] the receipt of your letter of the 12th [illegible] to and [illegible] several [illegible] led by the [illegible] in the copy [illegible]

Respectfully,

L. P. MITCHELL, Acting Comptroller.

Here is the copy of the amendment that he suggested and to which he referred in the letter just read.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I think the gross sum paid to these deputy clerks ought to be limited to the amount of fees taken in by them. I do not [illegible] that each clerk should be limited to the amount of fees taken in by himself, but, on the other hand, I do not believe that the Treasury of the United States ought to be subjected to any expenditure on account of the [illegible] so framed that the sum taken in by all the clerks shall be used to bring their salaries up to the highest point, not exceeding twelve hundred dollars, but I do not believe that the Congress ought to provide by law that if the fees will not bring their salaries up to twelve hundred dollars a year that the deficiency shall be paid out of the general revenues of the Government.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me for a moment?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. LITTLE. In regard to this proposition I want to say that by the treaties made by the United States with the Indian tribes the United States obligated itself to record the original patents of these Indians without cost to them. It was hoped and believed when these deputies were provided, who are recorders merely, that their fees would reach the sum of twelve hundred dollars each, the amount of the salary that was thought to be as low as would be reasonable for the services.

I am not prepared to say whether all the fees collected would equalize them and to twelve hundred dollars each or not. In some localities the amount received runs over the sum; but owing to the fact that the allotments have not progressed as rapidly as it was hoped, and that the sales have been so [illegible] the offices have fallen below the amount expected to be received. I have no doubt that in the next succeeding fiscal year their fees will not only pay the salaries provided, but will pay into the Treasury of the United States many thousands of dollars beyond the compensation provided for these clerks.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. If your statement of the facts be correct, and I have no reason to doubt them whatever, would there be any objection to making the point of order apply to all [illegible] but that and the remainder of the [illegible]

Mr. LITTLE. How far?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. All down to and including the whole of line 19, and make the point of order against all that follows.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. So that, in other words, say for "existing deficiencies."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kentucky yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman from Kentucky yield for a moment? I think there is no question but what the allowances in the aggregate will exceed $100 per month and will be constantly increasing.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. You mean the fees.

Mr. LACEY. The fees will be constantly increasing in the aggregate, and if an amendment were put in [illegible]—

Provided, that no compensation shall be paid to any deputy clerk in excess of $1,200 per annum—it would prevent, in any event, an amount being paid in excess of the fees, because the fees will always amount to that sum in the aggregate.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. In other words, the excess would go to the [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. Now, this amendment and the appropriation under [illegible] in connection with the act of 1895, [illegible] to obtain [illegible] and by providing that provision in it would prevent such a construction.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. I suggest, both to the gentleman from Arkansas and to the gentleman from Iowa, that we make the point of order to all after line 19 and add the amendment that has been suggested.

Mr. LACEY. Well, that would make no provision for the future, and the future is more necessary than the past. The past has gone. The future as to this [illegible] the present influx of population, and the recording of leases and allotments [illegible] will be very much more in the aggregate, and will exceed $1,200 a year.

Mr. LITTLE. I have no doubt that in the succeeding fiscal year it will be possibly more than double all their fees in this office now.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Have you drawn the amendment?

Mr. LITTLE. I think the amendment ought to be [illegible]

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, if the committee will [illegible] from Iowa [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [illegible] withdraws the point of order and the gentleman from Iowa offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

Mr. LACEY. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the paragraph after line 9 on the last page, the following:

"Provided, That no compensation shall be paid to any deputy clerk in excess of $1,200 per annum."

Mr. MANN. I would ask the gentleman if that conflicts with the [illegible] on line 8, page 56?

Mr. LACEY. No; he is a chief deputy and has $3,000 now.

Mr. MANN. Because he is a deputy, I wanted to be certain that it would not interfere then.

Mr. LACEY. It would not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to take the place of the section stricken out, section 20.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] is hereby, authorized and [illegible]

Mr. SHERMAN. That amendment is submitted by the Department, is approved by the committee, and without reading it I will print in the RECORD the report upon it:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, January 2, 1904.

Hon. W. P. [illegible],
House, Washington, D. C.

[illegible] Joseph Chantier, and ask my views [illegible]

[illegible] tion as to the ability of these allottees to [illegible] would suggest [illegible] tary of [illegible] that may be [illegible]

With this amendment the bill would meet with my approval.

Very respectfully,

W. A. JONES, Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I was unable to be present yesterday when general debate took place upon this bill. I regret it very much, because I wished to say a few words upon the general subject involved in the bill itself, not on any particular section, but particularly in reference to a matter that was discussed in the House some five weeks ago——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take the gentleman off the floor, but I would like to know what is the pending question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. BAKER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. I ask the Chair where is the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is speaking to an amendment offered at the last word.

Mr. MANN. That was not in order. I think the gentleman ought to ask unanimous consent. There is no last word to strike out, everything has been passed, and there is nothing pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York moves to strike out the last word in section 2.

Mr. MANN. That has been adopted. The gentleman will please state [illegible]

Mr. BAKER. All I want is unanimous consent to insert a few remarks on the general subject.

Mr. MANN. What is the unanimous consent.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, yielding to the request of the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs [Mr. SHERMAN], and in order not to delay action upon the bill, I simply ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. Chairman, five weeks ago to-day, on January 30, I came was the only voice and the only vote recorded against the passage of H. R. 7175, providing for the sale of certain areas of land of the Rosebud Reservation at $3 and $5 per acre.

It is true that my opposition to the bill was based upon my objection to the policy of outright sale of the public lands, insisting that that policy had been shown to be a [illegible] and was directly the cause of the monopolization of immense tracts of land by land and cattle companies and by individuals.

But had I then been in possession of certain information which has come to me during this week, I should most certainly have also opposed the bill on the ground of what appears to be convincing evidence that the Rosebud Indians are to be made the victims of a land-grabbing conspiracy to deprive them of some three-fourths of the present value of the land, so that not only will those who are engineering this fraud upon the Indians get land outright which should be leased, but they will get hold of it at less than half of its present value.

I can not believe that but one vote would have been cast against the bill if this House had had before it the information which I shall now insert in the RECORD.

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION,
[illegible]
Philadelphia, March 3, 1904.

Hon. ROBERT BAKER, House of Representatives.

DEAR SIR: We desire to enlist your especial interest for fair treatment for [illegible] shown to be worth three or four times the price to be offered [illegible] are not favorable to unfair treatment of [illegible] state is shown by the following editorial [illegible] matters interfered with the regular order, [illegible] in opposition to [illegible] that it appeared to accomplish nothing toward [illegible] but intended rather to assail the White House with a [illegible] by the [illegible] tion over the [illegible] sale. It can, therefore, [illegible] thous" [illegible] respectfully, yours,

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION.

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia.

ANOTHER "CENTURY OF [illegible]"

We appeal for instruction [illegible] of the [illegible] of South Dakota, [illegible] provide that the Indian owners receive [illegible] in the [illegible] ng given as a consideration full relinquishment of claims [illegible] Agency [illegible] instance. Such facts speak for themselves as [illegible] There is, however, need to arouse a healthy public sentiment that will demand of the lawmaking power fair treatment in this as well as similar cases that may arise.

All friends of the Indian are urged to write to their representatives in Congress (Senate and House), calling attention to the Rosebud bill and inviting careful scrutiny of similar legislation that may hereafter be attempted.

[illegible] rendered by the press in arousing a demand for justice will be appreciated.

PHILIP C. GARRETT,
President Indian Rights Association.

INDIAN LANDS AND FAIR PLAY.

[From The Outlook, New York, February 27, 1904, by George Kennan.]

[illegible] that the United States Supreme Court decided, in the [illegible] that Congress has the power to alienate [illegible] Reservation, or to convert its treaties without consent of the Indians [illegible] proposed, and so dispose of Indian reservation lands known [illegible] and expropriations. The court assumed, as a matter [illegible] Congress has the power to deny Indians the benefits of [illegible] property. * * * And with perfect good faith to the Indians [illegible] as to the exercise of the power and the wisdom or justice of [illegible] the opinion of the court, we cannot wonder [illegible] of this decision particularly interested in the acquisition [illegible] various parts of the West have insisted that Congress [illegible] which [illegible] settlement, and upon assumptions [illegible] Congress [illegible] the interests of the Indians [illegible] the opening up and settlement of [illegible] Congress and [illegible] matters interfered with the regular order, [illegible] in opposition to [illegible] that it appeared to accomplish nothing toward [illegible] but intended rather to assail the White House with a [illegible] by the [illegible] tion over the [illegible] sale. It can, therefore, [illegible] thous" [illegible] respectfully, yours,

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION.

INDIAN RIGHTS ASSOCIATION,
Philadelphia.

ANOTHER "CENTURY OF [illegible]"

We appeal for instruction [illegible] of the [illegible] of South Dakota, [illegible] provide that the Indian owners receive [illegible] in the [illegible] ng given as a consideration full relinquishment of claims [illegible] Agency [illegible] instance. Such facts speak for themselves as [illegible] There is, however, need to arouse a healthy public sentiment that will demand

[illegible] and an investigation of the matters to which it [illegible] of the Revised Statutes [illegible] "An act [illegible] have been on [illegible] and fair play [illegible] Congress [illegible] Reservation in the [illegible] Indians by Inspector McLaughlin in March, 1902, but inasmuch as the terms of the agreement do not correspond with the provisions of the bill, this legislation can not be regarded as a taking of Indian lands without Indian consent. On its face this bill seems to provide for a competitive sale, with allotment of the lands to the highest bidders; but it contains a provision that "after the first competitive" sale hereunder shall be closed the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry" (under the homestead laws) "at the price of $3 per acre."

The apparent nature of this bill is so unconventional or accidental as to imply guilty. Instead of saying that the lands shall be offered at competitive sale for a period of six months or one year, and that thereafter any land unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the "fixed" price of $3 per acre, it seems to provide for an abandonment of the initial $3 after the first sale. It is perfectly possible that if lands worth $10 to $20 an acre are put up at auction for a single day, and if those same purchasers be allowed the following day for $3 "fixed," few people will bid at the "first sale." Therefore the bill, therefore, may be to give the whole tract of 220,000 acres to settlers at the "fixed" rate, which, if it were dropped of by means of competitive sales, advertised and continued from time to time at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the whole tract would bring the actual market value.

This bill has been brought to the attention of the President, and his action upon it may perhaps depend upon the opinion of the law officers of the Government as to its legal merits and effect. If its object be honestly to substitute the competitive sales from time to time, even to sell to the highest bidder all the land that has marked with it, then it is unnecessary, but does the property owner, the Government, or the Indian owner any good to compel its outcast. If its effect should be to force the lands, or the bulk of them, at $3 per acre, it would deprive the Red Lake Indians of about $[illegible] which they are entitled, and. Neither of these two possibilities have been suggested by the Indian Office, and the Secretary of the Interior. One of them was, or may be intended to make a large ticket of land passes from the Indians without giving them adequate compensation, whereas the other was necessarily drawn so as to leave room for a counter action that would work great injustice.

Now that the Supreme Court has virtually given Congress full power to [illegible] the Indians of the West to get possession of valuable Indian lands easily and [illegible] that the Government, including Congress, has [illegible] such Indians as a straight fact [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians have a right to get, and the Government, as their guardian, is bound to see that they get the highest [illegible] that the same holding be given and honestly compensation [illegible] be ascertained by means of public competition [illegible] highest bidders.

[illegible] adopted this method in dealing with [illegible] Indian lands in the Indian Territory, and the results have been in every way satisfactory. Other lands, if leased, have, for example, near the town of Anadarko, which was appraised at $[illegible] per acre, and sold at competitive sale for $[illegible] per acre, or $[illegible] an acre more than the appraisal. Many other lands have been sold at their appraised value, [illegible] Congress [illegible] have received [illegible] wealth.

[illegible] which they [illegible] their reservations and [illegible] and expenditures of the nation, the Government is bound by every consideration of honor and equity to protect them [illegible] Indian property [illegible] and sold and [illegible] property [illegible] of a minor ward. It is to be [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] sale instead of [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Reservation in the State of Minnesota [illegible] with the Red Lake Indians by Inspector McLaughlin in March, 1902, but inasmuch as the terms of the agreement do not correspond with the provisions of the bill, this legislation can not be regarded as a taking of Indian lands without Indian consent. On its face this bill seems to provide for a competitive sale, with allotment of the lands to the highest bidders; but it contains a provision that "after the first competitive" sale hereunder shall be closed the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry" (under the homestead laws) "at the price of $3 per acre."

The apparent nature of this bill is so unconventional or accidental as to imply guilty. Instead of saying that the lands shall be offered at competitive sale for a period of six months or one year, and that thereafter any land unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the "fixed" price of $3 per acre, it seems to provide for an abandonment of the initial $3 after the first sale. It is perfectly possible that if lands worth $10 to $20 an acre are put up at auction for a single day, and if those same purchasers be allowed the following day for $3 "fixed," few people will bid at the "first sale." Therefore the bill, therefore, may be to give the whole tract of 220,000 acres to settlers at the "fixed" rate, which, if it were dropped of by means of competitive sales, advertised and continued from time to time at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the whole tract would bring the actual market value.

This bill has been brought to the attention of the President, and his action upon it may perhaps depend upon the opinion of the law officers of the Government as to its legal merits and effect. If its object be honestly to substitute the competitive sales from time to time, even to sell to the highest bidder all the land that has marked with it, then it is unnecessary, but does the property owner, the Government, or the Indian owner any good to compel its outcast. If its effect should be to force the lands, or the bulk of them, at $3 per acre, it would deprive the Red Lake Indians of about $[illegible] which they are entitled. Neither of these two possibilities have been suggested by the Indian Office, or the Secretary of the Interior. One of them was, or may be intended to make a large ticket of land passes from the Indians without giving them adequate compensation, whereas the other was necessarily drawn so as to leave room for a counter action that would work great injustice.

Now that the Supreme Court has virtually given Congress full power to [illegible] the Indians of the West to get possession of valuable Indian lands easily and [illegible] that the Government, including Congress, has [illegible] such Indians as a straight fact [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians have a right to get, and the Government, as their guardian, is bound to see that they get the highest [illegible] that the same holding be given and honestly compensation [illegible] be ascertained by means of public competition [illegible] highest bidders.

[illegible] adopted this method in dealing with [illegible] Indian lands in the Indian Territory, and the results have been in every way satisfactory. Other lands, if leased, have, for example, near the town of Anadarko, which was appraised at $[illegible] per acre, and sold at competitive sale for $[illegible] per acre, or $[illegible] an acre more than the appraisal. Many other lands have been sold at their appraised value, [illegible] Congress [illegible] have received [illegible] wealth.

[illegible] which they [illegible] their reservations and [illegible] and expenditures of the nation, the Government is bound by every consideration of honor and equity to protect them [illegible] Indian property [illegible] and sold and [illegible] property [illegible] of a minor ward. It is to be [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] sale instead of [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Reservation in the State of Minnesota [illegible] with the Red Lake Indians by Inspector McLaughlin in March, 1902, but inasmuch as the terms of the agreement do not correspond with the provisions of the bill, this legislation can not be regarded as a taking of Indian lands without Indian consent. On its face this bill seems to provide for a competitive sale, with allotment of the lands to the highest bidders; but it contains a provision that "after the first competitive" sale hereunder shall be closed the lands remaining unsold shall be subject to sale and entry" (under the homestead laws) "at the price of $3 per acre."

The apparent nature of this bill is so unconventional or accidental as to imply guilty. Instead of saying that the lands shall be offered at competitive sale for a period of six months or one year, and that thereafter any land unsold shall be subject to sale and entry at the "fixed" price of $3 per acre, it seems to provide for an abandonment of the initial $3 after the first sale. It is perfectly possible that if lands worth $10 to $20 an acre are put up at auction for a single day, and if those same purchasers be allowed the following day for $3 "fixed," few people will bid at the "first sale." Therefore the bill, therefore, may be to give the whole tract of 220,000 acres to settlers at the "fixed" rate, which, if it were dropped of by means of competitive sales, advertised and continued from time to time at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, the whole tract would bring the actual market value.

This bill has been brought to the attention of the President, and his action upon it may perhaps depend upon the opinion of the law officers of the Government as to its legal merits and effect. If its object be honestly to substitute the competitive sales from time to time, even to sell to the highest bidder all the land that has marked with it, then it is unnecessary, but does the property owner, the Government, or the Indian owner any good to compel its outcast. If its effect should be to force the lands, or the bulk of them, at $3 per acre, it would deprive the Red Lake Indians of about $[illegible] which they are entitled. Neither of these two possibilities have been suggested by the Indian Office, or the Secretary of the Interior. One of them was, or may be intended to make a large ticket of land passes from the Indians without giving them adequate compensation, whereas the other was necessarily drawn so as to leave room for a counter action that would work great injustice.

Now that the Supreme Court has virtually given Congress full power to [illegible] the Indians of the West to get possession of valuable Indian lands easily and [illegible] that the Government, including Congress, has [illegible] such Indians as a straight fact [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians have a right to get, and the Government, as their guardian, is bound to see that they get the highest [illegible] that the same holding be given and honestly compensation [illegible] be ascertained by means of public competition [illegible] highest bidders.

[illegible] adopted this method in dealing with [illegible] Indian lands in the Indian Territory, and the results have been in every way satisfactory. Other lands, if leased, have, for example, near the town of Anadarko, which was appraised at $[illegible] per acre, and sold at competitive sale for $[illegible] per acre, or $[illegible] an acre more than the appraisal. Many other lands have been sold at their appraised value, [illegible] Congress [illegible] have received [illegible] wealth.

[illegible] which they [illegible] their reservations and [illegible] and expenditures of the nation, the Government is bound by every consideration of honor and equity to protect them [illegible] Indian property [illegible] and sold and [illegible] property [illegible] of a minor ward. It is to be [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior [illegible] sale instead of [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Congress [illegible] Indians [illegible] Reservation in the State of Minnesota [illegible] with the Red Lake Indians by Inspector McLaughlin in March, 1902, but in-

as

of these Indians; that they will suffer great injustice if the bill H. R. 10418, now pending before the Senate, be enacted into law.

Briefly, the bill proposes to dispose of 416,000 acres of the Rosebud Indian lands lying in Gregory County, S. Dak., without Indian consent, at prices ranging from $3 per acre downward, according to date of purchase, etc., the Government acting only as trustee for the Indians, especially providing that it does not guarantee any part of the purchase price.

The bill sets up an agreement secured from the Indians in 1901, wherein the lands were guaranteed $1,040,000 for these lands by the Government (being $2.50 per acre).

The Supreme Court of the United States, while deciding (Lone Wolf case, October term, 1903) that Congress was vested with authority to disregard treaties made with our Indian wards, proposes that in our dealings with the Indians absolute justice will be done them. The court says:

"The power exists to abrogate the provisions of an Indian treaty, though presumably such power will be exercised only when circumstances arise which will not only justify the Government in disregarding the stipulations of the treaty, but may demand, in the interest of the Government and the Indians themselves, that it should. * * * It is not to be doubted that the power to abrogate existed in Congress, and that in consistency such power might be exerted from time to time in the interest of governmental policy, particularly if consistent with present and future duty to the Indians.

"We must presume that Congress acted in perfect good faith in the dealings with the Indians * * * and that the legislative branch of the Government exercised its best judgment in the premises."

Congress having assumed absolute control by guardianship of the Indians, it must accept the added responsibility of providing for absolute justice to these wards.

If an obligation of the Government entered into with the Indians may be broken at will, by reason of inadequacy of the ward, we can not in justice per grant more than the ward to an administrator in a further attempt as to the value of lands. Furthermore, the agreement calling for the $1,040,000 had to be secured through a strenuous effort. The Indians claim that they were given to understand that the Government would take these lands anyway at the Government price ($1.25 per acre) if they did not agree to accept $2.50 per acre.

As already stated, it is not necessary to dwell upon the history surrounding the agreement of 1901. Congress provides [illegible] for its supervision practitioners by withdrawing the authority of payment of the [illegible] money, and requiring the Indians to the immediate payment of [illegible] upon the work, who, upon obtaining employment, usually agreed to [illegible] a percentage of the time of payment, and proved for their pay [illegible] claim. This plan in the past has been found to result sometimes in fattening away the Indian estate.

In brief, the agreements are held not to be binding upon the Government, although the Indians, as the other contracting party, are [illegible] bound. To set up the agreement of the Indian tribes [illegible] are [illegible] less and cannot be otherwise than unavailing. [illegible] to [illegible] What is the actual value of the land proposed to be sold by the guardian Government?

Reuben Quickbear, president of the Rosebud Indian council, writes as follows:

ROSEBUD, S. DAK., January 5, 1904.

DEAR SIR: I suppose you know that Mr. BURKE's bill taking our Gregory County land without our consent and at a merely nominal price, is now in the hands of Mr. SHERMAN, chairman of the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

Never we needed help we need it now, and badly. Mr Clark, the Presidential missionary here, has written to Mr. SHERMAN [illegible] the amount offered—or rather thrust at us—for our land. [illegible] years and know the value of it. A few years ago [illegible] and told a friend of mine that he would give [illegible] for land [illegible] offered the Commissioner $5 per acre for the whole county, and land around here has stood [illegible] in value. We could not sell for less.

We ask the Indian Rights Association to help us in this our hour of need, and we yet to protest to Mr. SHERMAN against the passage of this bill.

Yours, truly,

REUBEN QUICK BEAR,
President of the Indian Council.

Mr. HERBERT WELSH, Philadelphia, Pa.

As shown by the report dated January 9, 1904) of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, [illegible] question, the Indians were not satisfied with the prices offered them. [illegible]

"When the agreement, [illegible] 14, 1901, was being [illegible], the Indians of good water frontage [illegible] more than $5 per acre, and they were offered [illegible] the agreement [illegible] from the Special Indian Agent [illegible] that the [illegible] agreement [illegible] terms for the sale of their lands, [illegible] Bishop Hare [illegible] the Indians [illegible] to be paid. In [illegible] the Government [illegible] the Government price [illegible] the Government would [illegible] the Indians [illegible] taken as a whole, exclusive of allotments, is worth a [illegible] than $2 per acre."

The Sioux City (Iowa) Journal of July 2, 1903, regards the tract as comprising five [illegible] and says:

"BONESTEEL OPENING. DEP SHOW MAJOR M'LAUGHLIN ABOUT TO MAKE TREATY WITH INDIANS—APPOINTMENT FOR J. D. KELLER—FORMER SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS OF WOODBURY COUNTY MADE UNITED STATES COMMISSIONER AT BONESTEEL, S. DAK.—TO TAKE ACTION NEXT SESSION.

"Persons who have been interested in the opening of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in south [illegible] will be encouraged by the news that the reservation is almost ready to be thrown open to settlement after the [illegible] session of Congress.

"[illegible] will be made possible by a new treaty with the Indians, which is to be made by Maj. James McLaughlin, of the Indian Department, Washington, D. C., who was in Sioux City this week, en route from Washington to North Dakota on business with the Indians.

"The news of the new treaty was brought to Sioux City by Joseph D. Keller, of Bonesteel, S. Dak., of the real estate firm of Rathman & Keller, who is here for a brief visit with friends.

"Mr. Keller formerly was county superintendent of schools for Woodbury County. Fourteen months ago he left Sioux City for Bonesteel, and has been doing well there.

"Major McLaughlin is now in North Dakota attending a powwow of the Indians, with whom he is [illegible] throughout the Northwest. He is to go to the Rosebud Reservation in South Dakota and meet the Indians there. This is the primary object of his trip west, according to a letter which Congressman BURKE of South Dakota, has received from Commissioner Jones, of the Indian Bureau.

"There are [illegible] to be opened. Many of it is fine land. Not a mile and a half from the reservation boundary [illegible] one day we saw a quarter section too [illegible] but the land is not bad. There will be [illegible] settlers to be allowed to settlers when the reservation is opened. We have received frequent inquiries about the land from all over the country.

"You see, Congress passed an act last session providing that it would necessitate an appropriation of $1,500,000 to buy the land from the Indians, and the purpose of the new treaty will be to make a deal by which the Indians will [illegible] a certain length of time for their money, which the settlers will pay in in payments specified as belonging to the Government. [illegible]

"Mr. Keller has [illegible] been appointed United States commissioner at Bonesteel, his jurisdiction extending over Gregory County and a large portion of country west of that county. By virtue of his official position he [illegible] will be given charge of the drawing by settlers for the Rosebud lands when the Reservation is opened.

"Bonesteel, S. Dak., lies on the border of the Indian lands referred to. A messenger sent by a Bonesteel [illegible] to the Indian Bureau [illegible] as to the value of lands in that section of the country. It reads as follows:

"Rosebud Indian Reservation.

"Four hundred and sixteen thousand acres of choice lands to be thrown open to settlement under the homestead law.

"[illegible] conceded by [illegible] to know that the drawing will be held in Bonesteel [illegible]

"[illegible] should send 50 cents for large sectional map showing the names of all allottees.

"Gregory County is one of the best in the State of South Dakota. [illegible]

"First. The soil is heavier.

"Second. The water is better.

"Third. [illegible]

"Fourth. [illegible]

"Fifth. There has [illegible] a failure of crops.

"Sixth. [illegible]

"Seventh. [illegible] better adapted to the raising of hogs and cattle as [illegible]

"Eighth. [illegible]

"Ninth. The prospect for a bumper crop last year was never better in any county.

"Tenth. We are in direct communication with both the Sioux City and Omaha markets.

"Read descriptions and prices of land:

* * * * * * *

"18. Ninety acres, [illegible] farm land, 3½ miles from town; frame house and good well. [illegible] per acre.

"[illegible] from town; good house, all fenced [illegible] per acre.

"[illegible] acres, 10 miles from town; 100 acres in crop, all fenced [illegible] per acre.

"[illegible] acres, 7 miles from county seat; 135 acres in cultivation [illegible] per acre.

"[illegible] acres, 2½ miles from town; good farm land; 120 acres in crop, all fenced [illegible] per acre.

"23. Three hundred and [illegible] acres in cultivation. [illegible] farm. Price [illegible] per acre.

"24. Three [illegible] from town; [illegible] well water; hay meadow cuts 70 tons per year; [illegible] acres in crop. Price $35 per acre.

"[illegible] rolling, but [illegible] for stock raising, 9 miles [illegible]

"27. Two hundred and fifty acres, 3 miles from town; 180 in crop, good well and stock pond, frame house, all fenced, one of our best. Price, $30 per acre.

"28. Stock ranch consisting of 2,955 acres, [illegible] 1640 acres of [illegible] land in [illegible] and [illegible] stock, [illegible] fence. For particulars [illegible] eighty acres, 6 miles from town; well watered and all fenced [illegible]

"[illegible] twenty acres, 1 mile from town; abundance of good [illegible] well improved, and [illegible] price cultivated [illegible] balance pasture, all fenced, plenty of good springs. Price, $30 per acre.

"[illegible] 3 miles from town; 120 acres in crop, 40 acres pasture [illegible] such land suitable for pasture, on the W[illegible] 70 acres can be [illegible] price pasture land. School section adjoining leased for four years. Price [illegible]

"[illegible] six hundred acre stock ranch, improved and well watered [illegible] of good [illegible]

"[illegible] from town: 140 acres in crop, 20 acres pasture [illegible] Price [illegible] (Sold.)

"[illegible] water; 110 acres [illegible] of water, frame house [illegible] Price [illegible]

A recent issue of the Sioux Falls Press, Sioux Falls, S. Dak., has this to say of the following bill:

"BURKE'S ROSEBUD BILL.

"Representative BURKE, of South Dakota, favors the Press with a copy of his bill for the opening of a portion of the Rosebud Indian Reservation in this State and his report thereon from the House Committee on Indian Affairs.

"This is a measure the Press has criticised in one particular—that the price per acre to the Indian owners of the land was not enough. In Mr. BURKE's new bill the price is increased from $2.50 to $3 per acre for all the land entered within six months after the opening of the reservation, the price thereafter to be reduced to $2.50 per acre.

"If [illegible] the land to be surrendered will be taken by settlers long before the [illegible] year has expired, as there is no water in South Dakota [illegible] the new law, which gives the settlers [illegible] than was contemplated in [illegible] treaty.

"We have [illegible] visited the Indians last summer to procure their consent [illegible] the land then appraised at $5 per acre and [illegible] to agree to sell [illegible] the land [illegible] for the sum of $1,040,000 [illegible] less than $2,000,000. [illegible] it was expected at that time to procure from the Indians Mr. BURKE has [illegible] in his bill [illegible] suggestions of those who have [illegible] in southern [illegible] which [illegible] the property at $3 per acre. The government was facilitate the [illegible] but failed to secure ratification, the managers of the House [illegible]

[illegible] that at all exorbitant in their demand for $5 per acre [illegible] more than that. In the measure now before the House [illegible] Rosebud Reservation, as [illegible] the opening of the [illegible] Lake [illegible] Rosebud Reservation, as [illegible] the price of the land [illegible] for the second six months [illegible] than the Devils Lake [illegible]

[illegible] Bonesteel and Fairfax, S. Dak., [illegible] are [illegible] which is [illegible] Rosebud Reservation. Their statements follow:

JANUARY 23, 1904.

DEAR SIR: As it is probable that the Indian lands in Gregory County will be open to settlement soon, we are thinking of investing some money in the land [illegible]

[illegible] farm lands be? I have a friend who would like [illegible]

[illegible] what would be the price? [illegible] stamped envelope and will be pleased to hear from you as early as convenient.

C. W. BEGGS, SONS & CO.

THE C. A. JOHNSON REALTY COMPANY,
Bonesteel, S. Dak.

FAIRFAX, S. DAK., January 26, 1904.

GENTLEMEN: Your esteemed favor of January 23, 1904, has been received, and in reply will say that 3,000 acres of land for grazing purposes can be obtained herein this county for about $2 per acre. The farm land is much more valuable [illegible]

[illegible] land in [illegible] land [illegible] These lands are [illegible] per acre for the homestead as soon as the land is opened for entry and $2.50 per acre if filed upon after the expiration of six months from the date the land is opened for entry. The bill also provides that after the expiration of four years [illegible] land [illegible] per acre, but [illegible] to the rules and [illegible] the Indians.

[illegible] the matter, I beg to remain.

Yours, truly,

C. A. JOHNSON REALTY COMPANY,
Bonesteel and Fairfax, S. Dak.

C. W. BEGGS, SONS & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Confirmatory of the above, the following statement of Edwin M. Starcher, of Fairfax, S. Dak., is important:

JANUARY 23, 1904.

DEAR SIR: We have a party in this city who is desirous of securing about 320 [illegible] would [illegible] in that [illegible] envelope [illegible] we are,

Yours, truly,

C. W. BEGGS, SONS & CO.

Mr. E. M. STARCHER, Fairfax, S. Dak.

JANUARY 27, 1904.

GENTLEMEN: To your favor of 23d instant beg to say that the average price of [illegible] lands in this country runs from $5 to $10 per acre; improved farms [illegible] tracts of land that could be purchased here at this time [illegible] stamped envelope and will be pleased to hear from you [illegible] who own land [illegible] sell. Such a sale would probably run approximately $1,000.

Yours, truly,

EDWIN M. STARCHER.

C. W. BEGGS, SONS & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Rev. A. B. Clark, a missionary among these Indians for a score and more years, [illegible] the Indians are forced to [illegible] for the pending legislation.

[illegible] from the Valentine Democrat, Valentine, Nebr., issue of February [illegible]

[illegible] agent held a grand council yesterday [illegible] February 1) with the Indians and the result was that the Indians agreed to cause their unallotted land [illegible] years. The Indians are [illegible] positively refused to lease, but they [illegible] of the South Dakota [illegible] organization, to [illegible] at a [illegible] that they [illegible] for seven years.

[illegible] the Indians in the matter of leasing, we see the immediate [illegible] that tend in the wake of attempted unfair treatment. It has been shown by those observing the conditions, and is to be inferred by all experienced in Indian life in that portion of the Northwest, that it is much better to encourage the Indians to pasture their surplus lands with stock owned by themselves rather than to lease the same to outsiders.

The Indians have united upon $5 per acre as a compromise price, although they realize that the lands are more valuable.

Can the Government afford to commit so apparent and gross an injustice?

Respectfully submitted on behalf of the Indian Rights Association.

S. M. BROOKS,
Agent Indian Rights Association.

I also desire to append an article on this very subject. This particular Indian reservation bill—by one of the best known of New York newspaper correspondents, who, while I assume he is not in accord with my views that the only solution of this, and all other phases of the land question, is the application of the single tax principle (the principle that the only way to secure to all other equal right of access to the earth is to compel those who monopolize [illegible] in any form to pay into the public treasury annually the rental value of the land they monopolize), yet does agree with me that land grabbing is an evil, and that the Rosebud Indians are by this bill to be made the victim of land-grabbing speculators.

[From the New York Evening Post.]

TAKING INDIANS' LANDS—DEALING OF CONGRESS WITH THE ROSEBUD SIOUX—A PREFERENCE FOR THE METHODS OF [illegible] THAN THOSE OF HIGHWAY ROBBERS—BARS [illegible] LONE WOLF DECISION—COMPELLING INDIANS TO ACCEPT $2.50 AN ACRE FOR 416,000 ACRES [illegible] AS ALLEGED [illegible] AS A GIFT—INDIANS ALSO EXPECTED TO TAKE THEIR CHANCES OF COLLECTING THE MONEY OF WHITE HOMESTEADERS.

WASHINGTON, February 17.

The latest plan to take away Indians' land and give it to white men has to do with the Rosebud Sioux Reservation in South Dakota. [illegible] Indians [illegible] per acre [illegible] from [illegible] at the rate of $2.50 an acre. [illegible] Congress has [illegible] $2.50 an acre at least. Congress has [illegible] $2.50 [illegible] country—except for certain [illegible] apart [illegible] Lone Wolf decision—compelling Indians to accept $2.50 an acre for 416,000 acres [illegible] Rosebud Reservation. [illegible] Indians also expected to take their chances of collecting the money of white homesteaders.

[illegible] Congress has [illegible] Indians' land [illegible] Congress has [illegible] Indians [illegible] Congress has [illegible] Indians [illegible] Congress has [illegible] Indians

Our heads [illegible] all powerful. The highest tribunal in the land has left us free to do [illegible] we please with Indian land. We have fixed our eyes on your [illegible] and we purpose to take them and give them to the whites for settlement. If we can collect from the whites $2.50 an acre, we will pay the money to you. If not, not. You are helpless, so the wise thing for you to do is to bow to the inevitable."

I hope the Indians will have realized the full meaning of the transaction. So [illegible] the Government people, who are not land grabbers, even when the Respicos [illegible] the victim marked for plunder.

F. E. L.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to have the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa a few moments ago to section 21 amended by inserting after the word "to," before the word "any," the words "or received by;" so it will read:

Provided, That [illegible] shall be paid to or received by any deputy clerk [illegible]

Mr. LACEY. I think that is necessary to carry out the purposes of the amendment, so that the reception, whether paid by the Government or received by the officers as fees, in no case will exceed the [illegible].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent to amend the amendment offered to section 21. Without objection, the Clerk will make the correction.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that we go back to page 23, line 12.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the first paragraph passed over was on page 26.

Mr. SHERMAN. The agreement shown by the RECORD was we should return to that after we had concluded everything else in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the paragraph, beginning on line 12, page 26.

The Clerk read as follows:

To [illegible] at the city of San Francisco, Cal., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, [illegible]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment at line 11.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the Chair understand the gentleman from Illinois to make the point of order?

Mr. MANN. No; I do not make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 11, page 26, the following:

To [illegible] at the city of Omaha, Nebr., in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, a warehouse for the receipt, storage, and shipping of goods for the Indian Service, [illegible]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask where that amendment offered comes in.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HINSHAW. Just a moment. The amendment I offer is at line 11, and [illegible] of the [illegible] sections.

Mr. MANN. But the other sections have been read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska [illegible] and [illegible] line 11, page 26, [illegible] by the gentleman from Nebraska should have been presented by the Clerk [illegible].

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the warehouse at St. Louis and that at San Francisco have been [illegible] and [illegible] been made, [illegible] the amendment to be offered now should come after line 19.

Mr. MANN. I do not see that it makes any difference where it comes.

Mr. HINSHAW. It makes some difference, and I reserve the point of order on both of those amendments. If the [illegible] upon the point now, prior to the amendment, I shall reserve the point of order against both.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that a point of order is made against the amendment?

Mr. MANN. There is no point of order against it, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. MANN. I am trying to find out whether anything has become of the other two paragraphs read.

The CHAIRMAN. The other two propositions were read by the Clerk under a misapprehension on the part of the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. The other two provisions have been read and agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair explained to the Member from New York and the members of the committee that the Clerk read the paragraph by direction of the Chair inadvertently. On referring to the RECORD of yesterday, it appears that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska was to line 11. So that, in order that no rights should be lost in the matter, the gentleman's amendment will be considered as offered to line 11. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I want to say in reference to this Omaha appropriation that I think it is four years now that this item has been put in this bill for the Omaha supply depot. Omaha, as you all know, is located on the Missouri River, and is probably the city in closest touch to the great mass of the Indians of any other State. I have no objection to the Indian supply depot at St. Louis or the Indian supply depot at San Francisco. San Francisco is located in easy touch with the Indians on the Pacific slope. St. Louis is located conveniently for the Indians in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma. Omaha is equally well located for the distribution of supplies for the Indians of the Dakotas, of Minnesota, of Montana, of Idaho, and probably of Washington; to some extent Colorado and Utah. During the time that this appropriation has been in here the business of the Omaha supply depot has increased systematically and regularly.

For the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1901, and extending to June 30, 1902, the amount of [illegible] pounds. Now, notice the next fiscal year beginning July 1, 1902, and ending June 30, 1903, it had increased nearly threefold, to 1,118,556 pounds. I have here a comparative statement of the supplies which have been furnished by the four prominent supply depots: [illegible] one temporary supply depot. New York had [illegible] 1 to December 31, 1903, which is the first part [illegible] year, 1,362,000 pounds; Chicago, during the [illegible] 7,150,000 pounds; Omaha, in the same six months, 892,908 [illegible]; St. Louis, for the same fiscal half year, 594,776 pounds; [illegible]

This is a comparative statement of significance. The remainder of the fiscal year, as I understand it, affords very small shipments, so the Indian Office reports.

Now, in view of the vicinity of Omaha to these great tribes of [illegible] I can not understand it unless the gentleman de[illegible] monopolize in the city of Chicago all the Indian supply [illegible] I hope he does not.

Mr. MANN. It is because we have so many Indians.

Mr. HINSHAW. There are a few Indians in Chicago, but not a great many. [Laughter.] Now, I ask this committee to put in this item. It is only $40,000. It is a matter of economy. The [illegible] from Chicago would cost more than they would from Omaha. As it is now, I understand, the goods are shipped in bulk to the city of Omaha, and the goods are distributed from there, whereas if they were distributed from Chicago they would be shipped in detail and in small consignments.

Mr. Chairman, if I have any more time, I want to reserve it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, the history of the Omaha warehouse is somewhat peculiar. It never was recommended by the Department and was not [illegible] favorably by the Indian Committee. It was first inserted in the bill in the Senate, I think. The amendment was [illegible] in the House and was put [illegible] in, with the [illegible] there if further [illegible] free of [illegible] That was the proposition of the Representatives of the Indian Bureau of the State. Under that provision there never was a warehouse there, for they never [illegible] year [illegible] enough in the form that the gentleman from Nebraska now proposes it.

The gentleman quotes figures in pounds and numbers of packages. The facts are that last year, 1903, in value the total amount [illegible] from Chicago [illegible] or New York, and [illegible] while the shipments from Chicago were [illegible] and those from New York $270,000. The expense for maintaining at the same time the Omaha warehouse, shipping out [illegible] worth of goods, was $6,400, while the expense for maintaining the Chicago warehouse, which shipped out almost $900,000 worth of goods, was but $22,000. There never has been a time, in my judgment, when the service required a warehouse at Omaha, and I think that time is not present now. I think the amendment ought not to be adopted. I want to say, in all fairness, that I opposed the amendment in the committee. It was favorably considered by the majority of the committee, and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] was authorized to present it here as a committee amendment. I do not want to be misunderstood by the committee here. I am speaking for myself, and not for the members of the Indian Committee.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I call attention to the fact, and ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] if it is not true, that while the value of stuff shipped from Omaha was $60,740 for the last six months of the year 1903, the value of the stuff shipped from St. Louis was only $36,750 during the same half of the fiscal year, and that the cost of the St. Louis depot was $5,795, as against $6,425 at Omaha.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I presume the gentleman has correctly stated the figures. I know he has as to amount. I have mislaid the paper I had here a moment ago, but I have no doubt that the gentleman states it correctly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I think there is some mistake about the cost. The cost to St. Louis was $4,400 out of the $10,000 appropriated.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I have here the statements from the Indian Office, which gives the figures that I have given.

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes; the gentleman is correct. I said I had no doubt that the gentleman was correct, but I could not find my statement. It is the same as the gentleman's, but I am not discussing the relative merits of Omaha and St. Louis. I am discussing the question of whether or not there is need for the maintenance at Omaha of an Indian warehouse. I maintain that the figures demonstrate that there is not any need for it. I say that its establishment was never asked by the Department, and that it was believed that it was a handicap to the Bureau [illegible] as an aid in [illegible] at that place. I trust the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. BURKE. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will prevail. The amendment was suggested in the committee and considered by the committee, and it was ordered reported [illegible] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HINSHAW] was [illegible] to offer the amendment.

Mr. SHERMAN. I just stated that.

Mr. BURKE. Yes; I understand so. It is the only amendment offered by the committee that has not [illegible] I trust that this committee will not make [illegible] item and refuse to adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Nebraska. As has been stated, Omaha is situated at a point tributary to the great reservations in that portion of the country. The warehouse has transacted considerable business, as has been shown by the statements, and the Department estimated for this warehouse when the estimates were made up for this Congress just the same as it estimated for other items in the bill and for other warehouses. I hope the amendment will prevail and that this committee will adopt it.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. Chairman, just a word in favor of this amendment. There is one advantage in having this additional warehouse. It increases the range of competition in the bids. It [illegible] the wholesalers at Council Bluffs, Omaha, Leavenworth, Kansas City, and the surrounding region to join also in the bids, while if they had to bid for delivery at a point farther east it would bar them out. What [illegible] be much more than saved in the lowness of the bids. At any rate, it is discretionary in the Secretary of the Interior whether to establish it or not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the pending proposition is whether [illegible] warehouse at Omaha for the next fiscal year. [illegible] Indian warehouses. The ones at Chicago and New York are maintained out of a general appropriation relating to "transportation" and "warehouses," etc., but Chicago and New York are not mentioned in that general item, so that as the law has stood the Indian Bureau might have taken the warehouses away from Chicago and New York entirely and located them elsewhere. That danger is now covered by the amendment which I offered last night and which was adopted, providing that no portion of this general fund [illegible] for warehouses at any place other than Chicago and New York.

Now, the question is, shall we make specific appropriations of $10,000 in each case for the maintenance of the warehouses at Omaha, St. Louis, and San Francisco?

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that I should now take [illegible] to discuss the subject, except for the fact that [illegible] source or other it became widely circulated throughout the city of Chicago that it was proposed to entirely remove the depot for Indian supplies from Chicago to St. Louis.

I have no doubt that that was an entirely erroneous impression. The fact, however, that the Secretary of the Interior was from St. Louis might have given, to some of those who did not know the gentleman, an appearance of truth to the proposition. Mr. Jones, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, is a man of great business ability and with character above reproach. I took occasion, however, to make some investigation as to the amount of business, the character of business, and the cost of business at Chicago and the other Indian warehouses, and I want to show the House why the Indian-warehouse business should remain at Chicago. Now, I have not the slightest doubt that in the end, when the vote is taken, this amendment will prevail. I never have yet known, as a matter of observation and experience, legislative bodies to either abolish offices or officers.

To cut down the pay roll is something almost impossible; to increase the number on that roll is always easy. And it is very evident from the appearance of this floor that the most genial and able and faithful Representative from Omaha has been diligent in seeing that enough of the Members on his side should be here to decide the vote when it comes. I admire him for his enterprise and industry.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield a moment?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Does not the gentleman think that Omaha, being nearer to where the Indian tribes have their homes, would be much better for a warehouse than farther east? Could not the various shipments of goods be concentrated in this way nearer the abodes of the Indians and where the great railroads center?

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman and the committee will have patience with me for a few moments I will try to demonstrate that such is not the fact.

The cost of maintenance to-day at the different Indian warehouses is in proportion to the amount of business transacted. I will [illegible] from the statistics I have before me—that is, the administrative cost of the warehouse and the proportion of that to the value of the goods handled. At St. Louis it is 15.7 per cent. For every hundred dollars' worth of goods which go to the Indian [illegible] $15.70 for maintenance at that [illegible] per cent for every hundred dollars' worth of goods. In other words, at that point 10 per cent is paid for maintenance. At New York the percentage is 6 per cent; at San Francisco, 4 per cent; at Chicago, 3.8 per cent.

Mr. CLARK. May not that grow entirely out of favoritism by the men who have this business in hand?

Mr. MANN. Well, I can not understand the meaning of that question.

Mr. CLARK. The meaning of the question is this—that somebody may be "playing favorites." Do you understand that? [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Well, I do not even understand that. Certainly, Mr. Chairman, there is no chance, as far as favoritism in the offices is concerned.

Mr. SHERMAN. Let me suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK], as to favoritism being played, that the Secretary of the Interior lives in St. Louis.

Mr. CLARK. It does not make any difference if he does. Where does the chief "muck-a-chuck" of the Indian Bureau live?

Mr. SHERMAN. The gentleman to whom I suppose my friend [illegible] away up in the Northwest, and he has [illegible] r, except for the good of the service.

Mr. CLARK. As a matter of plain common sense, does it not seem that the cost in this matter ought to be less at Omaha and St. Louis, which are closer to the Indians, than at the other places?

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, it is not the fact.

Mr. MANN. I object to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] asking these questions until I get through. I propose to show not only that it does not cost less than at the places named, but that it can not.

The cost of administration in St. Louis was $5,795. The value of the goods handled under the contracts was $36,749.06. You might think from the industry which has been displayed on the floor and elsewhere to preserve the Indian warehouses at St. Louis and Omaha that it was a matter of vital importance to the Indians [illegible] yet the total value of the goods handled at St. Louis for the last six months of the fiscal year (in which practically all the business is done) was $36,749.06. At Omaha the total value of the goods handled was $60,740, and the cost was [illegible].835—10 cents for administrative purposes upon every dollar's worth of goods.

At New York the cost of administration was $16,620, and the cost of the goods handled $[illegible]6. At San Francisco, where the Indian warehouse is maintained only a part of the year, the cost for the year was about $[illegible] and the value of the goods [illegible] $125,000. At Chicago the cost of administration was $[illegible], and the value of goods handled was $[illegible]—a percentage of 3.8.

Mr. Chairman, more goods were handled at Chicago than at all the other four warehouses; and I call the attention of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], who very ably discussed my statement on this point, to the fact that the value of the goods handled at Chicago was more that the value of the goods handled at all the other Indian warehouses combined—much more; and the cost of handling was a great deal less. It cost $22,000 at Chicago and $33,000 at the other warehouses; but the value of the goods and the amount of the work at Chicago were much more than at all the other warehouses combined. That is easily shown also by tonnage. The tonnage at St. Louis was 594,776 pounds; at Omaha, 892,908 pounds; at New York, 1,362,103 pounds; at San Francisco, 2,420,565 pounds; at Chicago more than all the rest combined nearly twice over—7,459,178 pounds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The figures which the gentleman has just read relate to the last six months of 1903 and not to the whole year. It that not true?

Mr. MANN. The figures which I have just read relate only to the last six months of the year 1903, which are the first six months of the current fiscal year; but they practically cover all of the shipments. I am informed, and other gentlemen have stated here, that practically all the shipments are made in the first six months of the fiscal year.

Now, that is not all by any means. Any bidder can have his goods delivered at any Indian warehouse under his contract, or the Department can direct him where to deliver, there being a variation in price so far as freight is concerned. The man in Chicago who bids in New York City can deliver his goods in New York City, or he can deliver them in Chicago, or he can deliver them at Omaha, or he can deliver them at St. Louis, or San Francisco.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Bids are received at New York and Chicago. Bids are not received now at Omaha, St. Louis, or San Francisco, and the complaint has been made by some of the gentlemen from St. Louis that because bids were not opened at St. Louis the St. Louis people were discriminated against. Now, that is not the case. Mr. Chairman, Chicago this last year went to New York, where certain bids are opened. Let me say that the bids for certain classes of goods are opened in New York, and for certain classes of goods they are opened in Chicago. Last year bids were opened in New York for class 1 blankets. Chicago merchants went to New York and bid and took the whole business, got the contract for the whole amount, $15,520, away from New York, away from St. Louis merchants, away from Omaha merchants, away from all the other merchants in the land.

The woolen and knit goods bids were opened in New York, and Chicago went to New York and bid, and the result of the bids was that New York merchants received contracts for $6,705 worth; St. Louis got the biggest contract that it has got on anything in the Indian-warehouse business, or $8,342, and Chicago went to New York and got five times as much, or $42,[illegible], on woolen and knit goods. Omaha got nothing on that class of goods.

In class 3, cotton goods, Chicago bid in New York and received the contracts for $68,100 worth, while the New York merchants took $6,174 and the St. Louis merchants $4,826, and Omaha got nothing. The only big contract which was let to New York merchants was [illegible]. The clothing was contracted for in the East.

Now, then, bids were let at Chicago last spring for various classes of goods. One of the principal of these is subsistence, which covers meats. The only business that Omaha does with the Indian warehouses is with meats. The Omaha merchants bid on bidding also principally. They have no other contracts with the exception of a few dollars' worth. Now, most of the meats do not go into the Indian warehouses at all. There is no occasion for a dollar's worth of the meats going into an Indian warehouse. The meats are shipped directly to the agencies and the schools.

For the first six months of the fiscal year, out of the total of $60,000 worth of goods handled in the Omaha warehouse, [illegible] worth were under the head of subsistence, practically for meats. Fifty-two thousand dollars worth of meats were handled at the Omaha warehouse, which they say is so near to the Indians, while $649,000 worth went to no warehouse at all, but were shipped directly to the agencies or schools. That which was shipped directly to the agencies cost the Government nothing extra for administration, but that which went through the Omaha warehouse added one dollar of expense to every ten of the cost of the goods.

The claim that is made that Omaha is so much nearer the Indians, in the first place, so far as freight rates are concerned is not true. The freight rates from Omaha to the Indians, on an average, as I am informed, are higher than they are from Chicago. I do not decry Omaha. I have the greatest admiration for Omaha. Some of the pleasantest moments of my life have been spent there; some of the principal men with whom I have been connected are men high in affairs in Omaha. But the Omaha merchants do not obtain contracts in any class of goods to any extent except the meats; and these are bid for mostly by Chicago meat men in the provision business who have plants in Omaha.

Now, let us see. The only things that Omaha merchants got any contracts on last year except subsistence were paints, $3,530; medical supplies, $4,550; wagons, $240. That was out of a total of $316,000 in classes 7 to 16. And St. Louis, represented by that genial gentleman, Mr. BARTHOLDT, who ought to have been satisfied when he took $4,500,000 out of the national Treasury to help his city, should not now insist upon 15 cents on every dollar's worth being spent for the maintenance of a warehouse in that city that is of no more use to the Indian Service than the fifth leg on a dog. St. Louis merchants out of a total of $316,656 received contracts to the amount of $11,476, while the merchants of Chicago received contracts for $296,140 worth.

Mr. METCALF. May I interrupt the gentleman at this point?

Mr. MANN. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. METCALF. I have a statement here showing that the cost, according to the value of the goods in St. Louis, was 57 per cent.

Mr. MANN. Well, the gentleman has a statement which relates to the year before last.

Mr. METCALF. I do not think so.

Mr. MANN. And the St. Louis warehouse was only open for about three months in that year. That is the gentleman's statement which the gentleman has. That Indian warehouse was established the year before last, and a statement was made at that time for the first six months of the fiscal year, and the statement of the value of the goods and the statement of the cost made the cost about half the value of the goods; but that was only for the first three months the warehouse was doing business.

Mr. METCALF. It was from July 1 to December 31, a period of six months.

Mr. MANN. That was of 1902 and not of 1903, if the gentleman will pardon me. The gentleman from St. Louis [Mr. BARTHOLDT] last year said that if the St. Louis warehouse did not do a great deal more business this year than last year, he would be willing that it might be abolished; and in proportion it has not done more business.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I greatly desire to correct the erroneous impression that might be created by the remarks of my friend from Illinois. The warehouse at St. Louis was opened two years ago after all the contracts had been let and after the year's business had already been done.

Mr. MANN. That is what I said.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. So that we had very little chance to do business in the first year. But the second year we have been doing remarkably well, and the only reason why we have not done larger is that all the bids are opened at Chicago, and the St. Louis merchants have got to take their samples to Chicago, which causes a great deal of expense. In the future these bids should be opened at St. Louis as well as at Chicago.

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is surprising for the statement to be made that they have to take samples of groceries from St. Louis up to Chicago, at great expense, as they claim. I have just shown the gentleman and the committee that the Chicago merchants took their samples to New York and took the business away from the New York merchants. They made no baby plea that they could not afford to do it. They went there and took their samples and got the business.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. But not in heavy goods. We can not take any samples of anvils to Chicago or samples of plows to Chicago for the reason that it would cost the merchants more than the profits would amount to.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, I do not know whether they make anvils at St. Louis or not. I think not. So far as plows and agricultural implements are concerned, every man knows that Chicago gets the bulk of the business in agricultural goods. The agricultural-implement business is located principally around Chicago. The merchants are not required to take samples of everything. There is a large bid for augers which are supplied to the Indian warehouses. Augers are required of different sizes and of different diameters; but they are not required to present a sample of each kind. They usually supplied to present an sample, say of a half-inch auger, showing the style and quality of all the kinds of augers that are to be furnished.

The gentleman's statement, which he gets probably from the merchants of St. Louis, is incorrect as to the fact.

Boots and shoes are bid for at various places. On boots and shoes during the last year Chicago got contracts for $185,190 worth, St. Louis $1,610 worth, and New York $300 worth.

Of groceries—not hard to handle samples—Chicago took $35,010 worth, St. Louis took $300 worth, and Omaha took only $95 worth. Crockery, class 7, Chicago took $5,740 worth, St. Louis took $610 worth, and Omaha nothing.

Furniture: Chicago took $22,250 worth, St. Louis took $170 worth, and Omaha nothing. Harness: Chicago took $22,940 worth, St. Louis took $26 worth—I do not see how that got away from us [laughter]—and Omaha nothing. Agricultural implements: Chicago took $9,780 worth; St. Louis, $300 worth—the item itself is very small. Wagons: Chicago took $12,010 worth; Omaha, $240 worth, and St. Louis nothing. Paints: Chicago took $24,980 worth; Omaha, $3,530 worth, and St. Louis nothing. Tinware: Chicago took $4,330 worth; St. Louis, $330 worth, and Omaha nothing. Medical supplies: Why they claim they have the largest——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has again expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that he may be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. St. Louis has a very large wholesale medical drug house; possibly more than one, for aught I know. There were three contracts let to St. Louis last year, and they got $5,[illegible] worth, and Chicago $12,140 worth, and Omaha $4,550 worth. Books—Chicago took the whole thing, with $19,860 worth. Now, the fact that bids are opened in New York and Chicago is no discrimination against Omaha or St. Louis.

I am not making any proposition, so far as I am concerned, to strike out St. Louis, because I fully realize, at times at least, when a jagged stone wall is in front of my head; but Omaha was not brought in by the committee at first, is not wanted by the Department or the board of purchasers. The board of Indian commissioners have recommended that it be abolished; and I call attention to the report of the board of Indian commissioners, composed of very eminent men—Archbishop Ryan, Charles J. Bonaparte, Doctor Draper, and men of that character—in which they recommend that the warehouse at St. Louis be abolished, stating that there is no necessity for it.

I had hoped that when the distinguished gentleman from Omaha himself, who is in favor, I believe, of cutting off carriages in Washington, brought it home to himself that he would be willing to economize in the interest of the Government without regard to personal considerations. I recognize his desires, and I believe if the gentleman from Lincoln—whom he has often followed as a leader—were on the floor of this House, he would say in the interests of public economy the Omaha warehouse ought to be left off. It costs more; it is not needed; it handles no ordinary goods of any kind; it handles only meats, most of which are now shipped to the Indian agencies and schools, and all of which could easily be shipped direct; and the only purpose of the Omaha warehouse is a matter of pride to Omaha, and possibly to the Member from Omaha.

Mr. LACEY. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. LACEY. Would not that require the Kansas City packers and Sioux City packers to ship meats to Chicago and from there ship through Omaha in order to reach the Indians of the country?

Mr. MANN. It would not. I will say to my friend from Iowa, so far from that, last year in the meat business there were shipped of subsistence supplies direct to the agencies, without going through any of the warehouses at all, the total of $649,000 worth as against a total purchase of $769,000 worth. Of a total of $769,000 worth only a little went to warehouses and none is necessary to go through warehouses.

Mr. LACEY. Where was it inspected?

Mr. MANN. It is inspected, I presume—I can not answer the gentleman where it is inspected. I do not know whether it is inspected at the point of shipment or at the point of receipt. It may be inspected at the point of shipment, but it is not shipped through the warehouses, and there is no occasion for shipping it through the warehouses. There is no possible advantage to the Government. The Omaha warehouse is simply an excrescence, and the gentleman from Omaha and the gentleman from Nebraska, whose high-mindedness or their desire to serve their country faithfully no one can deny, ought themselves to be in favor, as a matter of public pride, of waiving the salaries of five or six thousand dollars which are paid out there and let the business be transacted in the interest of the Government.

I submit for consideration the following letter and memoranda, showing the amount of the business at the various Indian warehouses:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
OFFICE OF INDIAN AFFAIRS,
Washington, February 2, 1904.

Hon. JAMES R. MANN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of the 9th ultimo requesting to be advised of the business transacted at each of the Indian warehouses at Chicago, New York, St. Louis and Omaha for last year.

The following is a statement showing the amount of business transacted at the various Indian warehouses for the period from July 1 to December 31, 1903:

St. Louis:
Tonnage	pounds	594,776
Value of the goods		$36,749.06
Cost for the year		$8,795.00
Omaha:
Tonnage	pounds	892,908
Value of the goods		$[illegible]
Cost for the year		$9,425.00
Chicago:
Tonnage	pounds	7,459,178
Value of the goods		$[illegible]
Cost for the year		$[illegible]
New York:
Tonnage	pounds	1,362,103
Value of the goods		$[illegible]
Cost for the year		$15,620.00
San Francisco:
Tonnage	pounds	2,420,565
Value of the goods (about)		$[illegible]
Cost for the year (about)		$[illegible]

The Chicago, St. Louis, Omaha, and New York warehouses are open and transact business throughout the year, and the business is practically completed. The San Francisco warehouse is open for only a few months, and transacts its business during that period.

Very respectfully,

A. C. TONNER,
Acting Commissioner.

Memoranda showing value of contracts awarded at annual lettings, 1903.

[New York letting, May 19.]

Class 1, blankets	$15,520
Class 2, knit goods	6,705
Class 3, [illegible]	68,100
Class 4, [illegible]	191,700
Class 5, [illegible] caps	22,100
Class 6, notions	21,620
Total	327,440

Delivered as follows:

	In New York.	In Chicago.	In St. Louis.	Total.
Class 1	[illegible]	$15,520	[illegible]	[illegible]
Class 2	6,174	48,100	4,826	[illegible]
Class 3	168,900	19,620	2,180	[illegible]
Class 4	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Class 5	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]	[illegible]
Class 6	[illegible]	8,600	1,460	[illegible]
Total	220,372	149,520	17,548	$387,440

[Chicago letting, April 21.]

Subsistence, delivered as follows:

In New York	[illegible]
In Chicago	[illegible]
In Omaha	[illegible]
In St. Louis	1,488
At the various agencies and schools	649,224
Total	769,310

Classified goods, delivered as follows:

Articles.	In Chicago.	In St. Louis.	In New York.	In Omaha.	Total.
7. Boots and shoes	$185,190	$1,610	$300	.....	$187,100
8. Groceries	35,010	300	95	.....	[illegible]
9. Crockery, etc	5,740	610	.....	.....	[illegible]
10. Furniture, etc	22,250	170	.....	.....	[illegible]
11. Harness, etc	22,940	26	.....	.....	[illegible]
12. Agricultural implements	[illegible]	300	.....	.....	[illegible]
13. Wagons, etc	12,010	.....	.....	240	[illegible]
14. Paints, etc	24,980	.....	.....	3,530	[illegible]
15. Tinware	4,330	330	.....	.....	4,660
16. Stoves, etc	4,900	400	.....	.....	[illegible]
17. Hardware	57,720	1,750	.....	.....	59,470
Medical supplies	12,140	5,980	345	4,550	23,015
Books	19,860	.....	.....	.....	19,860
Total	296,140	11,476	740	8,320	316,676

RECAPITULATION.

New York deliveries	$[illegible]
Chicago deliveries	[illegible]
St. Louis deliveries	[illegible]
Omaha deliveries	61,113
		$824,202
Add deliveries at agencies and schools		649,224
Aggregate of both lettings		1,473,426

These figures are given in round numbers for the sake of convenience, and are therefore not exact, but they are believed to be very nearly so; certainly sufficiently so for the purpose of comparison.

It should also be understood that they represent only the value of the goods contracted for at the time of the letting. Each contract contains a clause that it may be increased or diminished 25 per cent. Advantage is taken of this clause to get additional goods during the year.

These additional orders, if added to those given above, would considerably increase the figures given above, but would not, it is believed, materially affect their relative values.

There is also purchased through the warehouses during the year a large number of miscellaneous articles in open market.

The gross amount represented by the value of the goods shipped from July 1 to December 31, 1903, as taken from the reports of the warehouse superintendents, was given as follows:

New York	$270,830
Chicago	579,400
St. Louis	[illegible]
Omaha	60,740

The gross amount represented in this. The additional orders and miscellaneous purchases spoken of account for the difference.

WAREHOUSES FOR INDIAN SUPPLIES.

Of these there are four permanent and one temporary.

The cost and operation are as follows:

New York, permanent:

Cost for year (1903)		$16,620
Tonnage shipped July 1 to December 31, 1903	pounds..	1,332,100
Value		$270,830
Cost per cent of value.

Items paid from "Transportation of Indian supplies;" balance from "Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies."

Chicago, permanent:

Cost for year		$20,[illegible]
Tonnage shipped July 1 to December 31, 1903	pounds..	7,[illegible]
Value		$[illegible]
Cost per cent of value.

Items paid from "Transportation of Indian supplies;" balance from "Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies."

Omaha, permanent:

Cost for year		$6,495
Tonnage shipped July 1 to December 31, 1903	pounds..	822,[illegible]
Value		$60,740
Cost per cent of value.

Supported wholly out of special appropriation of $10,000.

St. Louis, permanent:

Cost for year		$[illegible]
Tonnage shipped July 1 to December 31, 1903	pounds..	[illegible]
Value		$38,75[illegible]
Cost per cent of value.

Supported wholly out of special appropriation of $10,000.

San Francisco, temporary:

Cost for present year, about		$5,[illegible]
Tonnage shipped present year, about	pounds..	2,[illegible]
Value, estimated		$[illegible]
Cost per cent of value.

Items paid from "Transportation of Indian supplies;" balance from "Telegraphing and purchase of Indian supplies."

[illegible] cost of operating New York, Chicago, Omaha, and St. Louis is given as of last year. [illegible] is safe to assume that the cost for the present year will be about the same.

[illegible] of operating San Francisco is that for the present year, the work [illegible]

[illegible] at New York, Chicago, Omaha, and St. Louis is for the [illegible] year. [illegible] is not exact, but [illegible]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I shall ask for a vote on this amendment after two or three words of explanation. It is true that Omaha does not do as much business at its warehouse as is transacted at the warehouse in Chicago, but Omaha has a growing institution. It handled for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, more than twice as much business as in the fiscal year ending in June, 1902. The gentleman from Illinois, however, who now declaims so vigorously against Omaha, I presume sat in his seat and voted for the Omaha proposition last year and the year before when its business was much smaller.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Nebraska is mistaken: I did not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, at least he did not rise to oppose it. The situation in Omaha is the same as in St. Louis, as outlined by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. The Omaha merchants are compelled, in bidding for Government supplies, not only to go to Chicago when the bids are opened, but to pay the freight on the supplies upon which they bid to Chicago and back to Omaha.

So the business has been developed in Omaha and St. Louis under great disadvantages. I certainly think, although I am a believer in economy, that it is for the interest of this Government to build up in various parts of the United States not only competitive bidders, but competitive business centers from which to invite bids. In that way the Government can take every advantage in the saving of freight rates. It undoubtedly saves money when warehouses are established near the supplies of food which come from the great West and near to the Indians to whom the supplies are delivered.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Nebraska yield for a question?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I understood the gentleman to say that the business last year, which is a fiscal year, in Omaha was twice as much as it was the year before.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I said the number of pounds handled at the Omaha warehouse for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, was 484,531 pounds, and the number of pounds handled for the fiscal year 1903 was 1,118,556 pounds.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman pardon me? The gentleman may be correct—I do not know—but I have a statement coming from the Indian warehouses, which states that the number of pounds handled at Omaha in 1902 was 930,210 pounds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Calendar year?

Mr. MANN. The fiscal year [illegible]

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am talking about the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, compared with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903. And I want to say, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, in concluding and [illegible] that if Chicago is able to outmatch all the other centers so completely, as the gentleman boasts, surely the gentleman from Illinois cannot not to be afraid to let St. Louis and Omaha and San Francisco have an opportunity to bid with her.

Mr. LIVERNASH. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment will prevail.

The Indian warehouse is a valuable means to reasonable cost and expeditious distribution of the supplies furnished by the [illegible] lation.

I am not much influenced by what has been said here concerning [illegible] of restriction. It is as the gentleman from Nebraska [illegible] St. Louis and Omaha [illegible] and tends to reduction of Federal outlay. Our experience in the West has abundantly [illegible]

Nor am I much impressed by the statement put forward by the gentleman from New York in charge of the pending bill [Mr. [illegible]] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to show that it is more costly to handle supplies through Omaha or other cities than through Chicago.

It does not appear, making due allowance for basic administrative outlay, that Chicago handles supplies ten for ten or dollar for dollar [illegible] only [illegible] cities. There are salaries, rentals, etc., necessarily attaching to every warehouse; and of course, if the Interior Department so exercises its large discretion as that the business handled by one [illegible] volume of supplies; and it seems reasonably [illegible] that, percentage of cost being in inverse ratio to extent of business, the favorable showing by Chicago would have been duplicated by cities farther west had they [illegible] business in the past. [illegible] that this is so than does the [illegible] gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Chicago has been getting an inordinate share of the Indian business and I am inclined to think with my friend from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] that an inquiry would disclose favoritism on the part of the Interior Department. It is not so much because Chicago is a center of Indian population, I fear, as because it is a center of practical "politics" that the big city has been preferred by the officials of the Indian Service. Moreover, Chicago has been and is so strongly represented on this floor that it is small wonder the far West has had to struggle industriously to get anything at all, no matter what the relative rights may have been.

I not only hope the amendment will prevail, but I hope the discussion in Congress will lead the Interior Department to pursue an impartial course in the use of the warehouses authorized, whether they be in the East or the West.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken; and amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to put some tables in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the paragraph beginning [illegible]

The Clerk read, beginning with line 12, page 33, down to and [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now recur to page 28, and read, beginning with line 11, "miscellaneous."

The Clerk read as follows:

MISCELLANEOUS.

[illegible] acts of Congress approved [illegible] Five Civilized [illegible] residue of lands left over after allotments of 160 acres to each of [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible] "twenty thousand" and insert in lieu thereof the [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman withhold it until I [illegible] statement?

Mr. STEPHENS. [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman reserves the point of order. The [illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS. [illegible] man, my object is to reduce [illegible] compounded. In the language of some citizens of that Territory, "The conditions in that Territory are worse than they were five years ago." I am reliably informed [illegible] themselves. [illegible] They are [illegible] what one seeks to accomplish [illegible] seeks to undo. The consequence is that it is a self-[illegible]

[illegible] more toward closing out this work than the four commissioners [illegible] are now doing. [illegible] believe, in round numbers, $250,000 for [illegible] Commission. There [illegible] fighting machine of four, as I have before stated, and I also move to strike out [illegible] and insert in lieu thereof "$3,[illegible]," the salary of one man. I think the amendment should prevail.

Mr. LACEY. Mr. C[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. LACEY. Is the gentleman's amendment pending?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Yes.

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise the point of order to it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I must confess that the point of order, in my judgment, is well taken, but I had hoped that the gentleman would not make it. It should be as evident to him as it is to myself that this Commission would be far more effective and [illegible] at its head to conduct [illegible] than it can with the four that we now have, besides lessening the expense to the Government in salaries by $15,000.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York insist on the point of order?

Mr. SHERMAN. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the [illegible] the following language:

"And on the [illegible] of all the allottees of either of the [illegible] of Indians who are not of the [illegible] the restrictions upon the homes which shall not be affected hereby."

Mr. SHERMAN. I raise a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. LITTLE. Do you raise it or reserve it?

Mr. SHERMAN. I will reserve it if the gentleman wishes to discuss the matter.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, since I have been a Member of Congress I have given no [illegible] to Indian affairs. I have heard assaults made upon the Dawes Commission from almost every direction, and I confess that at [illegible] with some of the complaints. But when we go seriously into the merit of the proposition we shall find that the complaints are not so much against the system prevailing in the Indian Territory as against the laws we have put in force there or decreed to put in force.

The truth of the business is that the Committee on Indian Affairs [illegible] have [illegible] the class of Indians who need protection from those who are able to protect themselves.

It is a fact that in that Territory, among a citizenship of 80,000 [illegible] Five Civilized Tribes [illegible] are not to-day, in my candid opinion, founded [illegible] that I have been able to make, as well as based upon my own personal knowledge, "there are not [illegible] 15,000 people entitled to be enrolled in the Indian [illegible] And [illegible] Secretary of the Interior and the [illegible] fast in their [illegible] of the [illegible]

[illegible] I offer at this time provides that that [illegible] Indian Territory who are not of Indian [illegible] their business and sell their property [illegible] would have the right to do. These people [illegible] Government. In fact they are citizens of [illegible] act of Congress. There are more [illegible] Indian Territory who are enrolled as enrolled [illegible] that country who have not a single drop [illegible] flowing in their veins. There are also from [illegible] thousand adopted citizens or negroes who have no [illegible]

And I can say for the negroes of the Indian Territory that as a [illegible] they are in advance of any [illegible] in any of the [illegible]

[illegible] Interior, the agents, the agencies operating in the [illegible] country, to hold and maintain the present [illegible]

[illegible] I offer simply authorizes the sale or lease of [illegible] go further in this [illegible] and I amend by [illegible] to their own affairs, in this [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Arkansas [illegible]

Mr. LITTLE. I should like to proceed for ten or fifteen minutes [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from [illegible] unanimous consent to occupy [illegible] tion? There [illegible]

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I believe this matter of vast importance, because, while it [illegible] the Government [illegible] and expense, it enables [illegible] to select his neighbors; it [illegible] entitles [illegible]

I [illegible] act [illegible] sympathy to [illegible] I do not believe there is a [illegible] Indian [illegible] or any other Member of this House [illegible] sions who will deny that the material prosperity of the Indian [illegible] in the Indian Territory, and in my opinion [illegible]

Why, then, this stupendous folly? Why should we appropriate money to pay the agents of this Government to go to that country and hold a restrictive hand over fifty or sixty thousand people who are as competent practically as I am or you for the transaction of their ordinary business affairs?

We expect to see ere long on the flag of this country a star representative of the great State that shall be in part made out of this Territory. Why not take off these restrictions where they ought not to exist? When you do this you will build up in that country 10,000 homes within twelve months. These lands will not go into the hands of speculators, as the lands now being sold are going. Why, sir, I know, upon the borders of that country, where I was raised and where I have lived all my life, white citizens who have resided there for thirty or forty years, who have been cultivating Indian lands, many of them intermarrying with members of Indian tribes.

When the Indian sells his lands he wants to sell it to his friends. He wants the man who has tilled the soil for twenty or thirty years to have the benefit of the lease; and in doing this we will enable them not only to sell their lands, but to sell them upon long terms of payment, which is to the benefit of the Indians. Let him sell his land on terms of partial payments, and then if he fritters away a portion of the money the remainder will come later on. How is it now with the sales that are being made in the Creek country by the Secretary of the Interior? It is estimated that at the present rate it will take thirty years to dispose of the land. The only way now to sell the land is by sealed bids. The allottee goes and puts his land into the hands of the Indian agent and says, "I want to sell that land." It is advertised for sixty days for sealed bids. These bids are opened, the land is appraised; if it is found that it is satisfactory to the allottee and satisfactory to the Department, if the bidder can pay cash for the entire amount he can get the land. The result is that of the land that has been sold more than 80 per cent has not gone into the hands of individual people, but has gone into the hands of land speculators. That is the situation. They claim to be protecting the Indian in selling land and turn all the cash over to him. If he is incompetent to sell his land he is certainly not competent to handle the money.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the chairman of this great committee, who is familiar with this country, will not insist upon this point of order. I have another amendment to come a little later——

Mr. CURTIS. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIS. As I understand your amendment, it only applies to the intermarried whites (not to their children if they have Indian blood) and to the colored people.

Mr. LITTLE. That is all, absolutely.

Mr. CURTIS. It does not apply to any person of Indian blood.

Mr. LITTLE. The amendment says specifically "citizens who are not of the Indian blood."

Mr. CURTIS. And also it precludes——

Mr. LITTLE. Precludes their selling the homestead.

Mr. CURTIS. That was my main question.

Mr. LITTLE. Yes. There is no doubt in the world but that the amendment ought to pass, in my opinion. It will not only benefit the people themselves, but it will be a godsend in part to the Government. [After we have paid out up to this time from $8 to $10 a head for every Indian in that country in the way of administrative expenses there, why do we want to continue and perpetuate those expenses. Why do we cause the Dawes Commission and demand that they close their work within twelve months? Why not put them at the work that they should do and let them do it, and the men who can transact their own business, let them transact it? Let us give these people the rights of an ordinary white man, to transact his own business.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. LITTLE. Certainly.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Would it not expedite the work of the Dawes Commission and enable them to complete their work much sooner by passing the amendment, so that they would not have to look after these negro lands and the lands of the intermarried white citizens?

Mr. LITTLE. Just exactly as I attempted to state a moment ago, that those people who are competent to transact their own business, if you take them from under the supervision of the Indian Department you relieve the Government of that much work, you relieve the Commission of that much work, and the result is that they can give their time and attention to the business that is demanded at their hands in completing the rolls and making the allotments in that country. I do hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will withdraw his point of order. I can not think of a solitary reason why it ought not to pass. I know how faithfully the gentleman has labored—I know how faithfully every member of that committee has labored for the last ten years.

I know how they have felt dissatisfied, and, as my friend suggests, how they have agonized at the slow progress made in the opening of that country and the allotment of the lands. I have myself shared in that, and I share the responsibilities of the present situation. But we have reached a time now when we can differentiate between the citizenship of that country; we have reached a time when we can draw the line and let those who are competent to transact their business do so, and let those who deserve the care, protection, and supervision of the Government have it in the extremest degree. If we do that we will pursue an intelligent policy; we will pursue a just policy; we will pursue a policy that will not only prepare that country for statehood, but give it a basis of taxation for school purposes and good government. I do again urge and hope that the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the Committee on Indian Affairs have considered and reported many bills, and I may greatly regret the loss of the services of the distinguished gentleman from Arkansas, who saw fit at the beginning of this Congress to withdraw from the committee. I have never ceased to regret that act on his part, and I think I never shall. I am impressed with his statements, and I am impressed with the condition as he describes it down there, with which I am somewhat familiar; but, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman presents here a matter that has never been presented to the committee. It is important; it is far-reaching. My impression is that had the matter been presented to the committee——

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But does not the gentleman know enough of the sentiment of the committee to know that it is proper to take this action to complete this work, and that if the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas be adopted that that work will be very greatly retarded, and that it will enable the Commission to complete its work at a much earlier date?

Mr. SHERMAN. I was about to add that, so far as my belief was concerned, if the matter had been presented to the Committee on Indian Affairs, it would have been favorably acted upon and the committee had reported it. I am willing, as a proposition stated by the gentleman from Arkansas, that it receive the consideration either by the full committee, or, so far as I know, any member of the present committee. I feel very reluctant to do that proposition of the gentleman on the committee, who feels so competent to speak in relation to Indian affairs, and who has been connected with Indian affairs in Arkansas; but I feel constrained to withdraw the point of order without any authority of the committee—without any action on the part of the committee.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will state to the gentleman that I am the only member of the committee present, and I feel that he should withdraw the point of order and let it be voted upon, for it is right. I think it is his duty to withdraw the point of order, and I feel certain that should he withdraw it no member of the committee would criticise him for such action.

Mr. LITTLE. I would be very reluctant to differ from New York that the proposition is not a complicated one.

Mr. SHERMAN. I understand that; I understand what the proposition is perfectly.

Mr. LITTLE. It goes close and clearly to this question of whether the white citizens and the colored citizens should have the right to sell their surplus land. That is the whole thing, and there is nothing in it that can have any other effect.

Mr. SHERMAN. Well, Mr. Chairman, what I rose a moment ago for was a different purpose; but there is a fairly good attendance in the Committee of the Whole now, the gentleman from Arkansas, as he always does when he speaks, lucidly explains the proposition, and I think I will withdraw the point of order and let the committee vote upon the proposition. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York withdraws the point of order, and the question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Arkansas.

Mr. LACEY. If so important a proposition is to be allowed to go through in this way, I think the amendment ought to be read again. I would like to get the drift of it.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment again.

The amendment was again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I will offer an amendment and then call the attention of the committee to it. In line 22, after the word "said," strike out the word "Commission" and add "Commissioner of Indian Affairs." I will state to the committee my idea for this amendment. The Dawes Commission was empowered under the law to make the roll of citizenship, to allot the lands, to supervise the appraisement, and so on along these lines. This bill provides that the Commission's existence shall cease in twelve months. My object is that the Commission may be relieved from this labor and that they may give their entire time to the question of citizenship, the question of enrollment, and the question of allotment, and I believe then they will be better able to complete the work within that time.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think it should be placed in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. LITTLE. Well, let it be the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHERMAN. With such an amendment as that, I will not oppose it.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page [illegible] line [illegible] after the word "said" strike out the word "Commission" and insert "the Commissioner of Indian Affairs" or "Secretary of the Interior."

Mr. SHERMAN. Strike the words "said Commission," and insert "the Commissioner of Indian Affairs."

Mr. LITTLE. And the same amendment should be made in line 25.

Mr. SHERMAN. And the same in line 25.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I would suggest that the same amendment should be placed in line 25.

Mr. SHERMAN. The same amendment should be made in line 25 by striking out "by said Commission" and the same in the line.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 25 strike out the words "said Commission" and "approved by."

The amendment was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, is hereby authorized, upon the application of any adult member of any tribe of Indians in the Indian Territory, [illegible] to the lands of his or her tribe, [illegible] to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, [illegible] the Secretary of the Interior, [illegible] the lands of such applicant, [illegible] the lands of such applicant, [illegible] the lands of such applicant either mortgage and borrow money—tie himself up—before he gets it in order to improve his land.

There are cases within my personal knowledge where good old Indians with the farmers from Arkansas having a tenantcy of the Indian land for twenty years, where the Indian would rather give away half his land than to sell it into the hands of a stranger, where they have lived as friends belonging to the same church, even sending their children to the same school where they could do so, and if you do nothing else you ought to allow the Indian to select his neighbor. This will be for the benefit of the Indian and the white man. I have not got a feather's interest from one edge of the Indian Territory to the other. I have never permitted myself to engage in any sort of a speculation in that Territory, whether I regarded it as legitimate or illegitimate. I have kept hands off. I have wanted to hold myself where I could do untrammelled justice to what I believed was right when I met these propositions.

I believe this proposition is right. It will go another step in aiding the Government on the same line as the amendment adopted a while ago. The two will work together, and where there is a witness now and little shacks it will result in planting dozens and dozens of honest farmers around the homes of these Indians, who are citizens of the United States and whom we hope to protect and guide along upon that line.

The amendment provides for the absolute care of the full blood, for the absolute care of the children, and of their estates. That is right, and I most heartily indorse it. As to the other Indians, their estates will be governed by the probate laws in force in that country, which are as safe as they are in any state of the Union as to the estates of minors. It has been decided by one of the judges that the law does not permit a natural guardian to lease the land of his ward without the approval of the court, and this decision has been affirmed by the court of appeals.

Now, Mr. Chairman, these two amendments should go together; whether they have had the formal consideration of the committee or not. Members are familiar with the situation as I state it. I do not believe anybody will controvert a single fact I have stated. I want to say in conclusion, while it is no more to me than to you, it means much to the 600,000 people in that country; it means much to the thousands of children who are deprived of schools today; it means building up their homes, and making a progressive agricultural, industrial community that will be a basic rock for one of the grandest States in the Union. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] makes the point of order against the paragraph, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] makes the point of order against the proviso, and I against the amendment. I think the Chair ought to sustain all of the points of order, and let it all go out.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the gentleman from New York that I will be willing to make a bargain with him. Let him withdraw his point of order to my amendment, and I will withdraw the point of order that I have made to the paragraph.

Mr. SHERMAN. Oh, I think the better way is to let the whole business go out.

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Chairman, the chairman of the committee does not often make mistakes, but I think he is making two mistakes to-day. First, I think he makes a fundamental mistake in not passing the provision for the protection of the full-bloods. I believe the other is almost as great an error in not permitting this amendment. The committee will have ample time to consider it between the two Houses. It has yet to go to the Senate.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Arkansas yield to the gentleman from Kansas?

Mr. LITTLE. I do.

Mr. CURTIS. I would like to ask the gentleman from Arkansas to withdraw his point of order against the last part of this section. It was drawn to protect the full-bloods, and he knows as well as I do that something ought to be done to protect the full-blood Indians in the Indian Territory.

Mr. LITTLE. That is true. I fully agree with the gentleman, and if I withdraw my point of order against that, then I think mine will not be subject to a point of order, for it would be germane.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, I would suggest to the gentleman that I think his amendment is subject to the point of order, but he must know that the first part of this section ought to be incorporated into this bill.

Mr. LITTLE. I have so announced.

Mr. CURTIS. There is more necessity for that than there is for the amendment offered by the gentleman.

Mr. LITTLE. I hardly concede that proposition. I believe both are important and just. I believe both ought to be the law. I think we ought by common understanding and common consent to pass both of these provisions, but I do not want to urge too hard upon my friend the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN], and I will state that my pro forma reservation of the point of order was not serious, of course, because I want both of these provisions passed. I am perfectly willing to withdraw the point of order if the gentlemen will let the amendment go to a vote of the committee. The committee is reasonably full.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I can not consistently withdraw the point of order. If the amendment delegated the authority to the Secretary of the Interior I think I would feel a little differently about it; but I must insist, if it is offered in the form in which it is now presented, upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands it, the point of order has been made to the proviso on page 31, from line 6 to line 17, by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Another point of order has been made against the whole paragraph, from line 23 on page 30 to line 17 on page 31, inclusive. The Chair sustains the point of order against the entire paragraph. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. LITTLE] offers an amendment, which is in the nature of a new paragraph, as to which the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] reserves the point of order.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York makes the point of order, which the Chair sustains. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[illegible]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 19 and 20, the words "with the consent of the nation, secured in the usual manner," so that it will read, "that the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the interests in the Cherokee Nation," etc.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think that ought not to prevail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I think as it is now in the bill, that portion to which I refer is new legislation and subject to the point of order. I therefore make the point of order.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order [illegible] point of order comes too late, after an amendment has been [illegible].

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is correct. After an amendment has been offered to the section and it has been disposed of it is late to raise the point of order.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. But, Mr. Chairman, I had not taken my seat.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand that the point of order comes too late. The gentleman from Texas was still on his feet.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Texas offered an amendment, which was reported, and then he said that he would [illegible]

The CHAIRMAN. [illegible] gentleman from [illegible] order. If that was the intention of the gentleman, the Chair would hold that the point [illegible]. The Chair will put the question [illegible]

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment ought not to prevail.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is designed to [illegible] Indians. The law [illegible] consent, we must resort to a treaty. The Indians of the nation must be called together; the headmen [illegible] and make an agreement with the United States. [illegible] of these lands shall be secured "in the usual manner." The "usual manner" of making treaties is to have an election, which costs a great deal of trouble and money. I see no necessity for that formality. The money should be paid to the people to whom it is due. Why not direct the Secretary of the Interior to make payment to the persons entitled to it? They were the men who went there, leased lands from the Indians, and put their farms and houses upon it.

The Dawes Commission assessed the value of these improvements under existing law, and if we refuse to pay them we will deprive them of property rights—that is, of the money due them when we dispossessed them. This money should be paid to the people to whom it is due. Why should we get the consent of the Indians to pay this money? It seems to me that this proceeding is utterly useless. It would cost the Government quite a sum of money and would cause needless annoyance to the men to whom the money is due. In my judgment it is perfectly useless that a treaty of this kind should be made with these Indians before paying the money already found due for these improvements.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, these "intruders," so called, were tendered the value of their betterments at one time; they refused to accept the tender because they were contending that they had a right to the lands and could not be ejected therefrom. Now, the Supreme Court has decided that they were in error in that position. It seems to me under the circumstances it would be improper to pay this money without the consent of the nation. That consent is to be obtained through the council. It is not necessary to call the entire tribe together. The council speaks for the nation.

This is not the serious matter that the gentleman from Texas appears to consider it. The council has the right to speak for the Indians; and I think we ought not to agree to the amendment proposing to waive the obtaining of consent as a preliminary to the payment of these damages.

Mr. LITTLE. If I remember this matter correctly—it is some time since I paid attention to it—these amounts were fixed under the authority of the Cherokee Nation, and money was appropriated for their payment.

A large number of the persons who had been occupying these lands accepted the tender which was made to them and were paid off. A number of them were still desirous to assert legally their right of citizenship, which had not been determined, as they claimed, and these people refused to accept.

Afterwards the cases were decided against them. They were dispossessed of their improvements, and have not been reimbursed. The money is theirs, and it should be paid without delay.

My idea is that the tender was no payment; they are still entitled to the reimbursement under the law. And I think it unnecessary or superfluous to ask the consent of the tribe for the payment of these people. I think they number only about fifty persons.

Mr. CURTIS. Forty-two persons refused to accept the tender; ninety-odd had made improvements, and all but forty-two accepted.

Mr. LITTLE. I think, [illegible] consent of the tribe. I believe [illegible] been given.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas.

The question being taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I call for a division.

The [illegible] was again taken; and there were—ayes 27, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to insert in line 18, page 2[illegible] bill, the words "to be immediately available," and also to insert the same words in line 22. These people ought not to be compelled to wait until the 1st of July for their money.

The CHAIRMAN. In the absence of objection, the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York will be inserted by the Clerk.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration House bill 12684 (the Indian appropriation bill), had directed him to report the same back with sundry amendments and with a recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and the bill as amended passed.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the vote will be taken on the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHERMAN, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to present a conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York presents a conference report upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill. If there be no objection, the statement will be read in lieu of the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. MANN. Does not the report have to be printed in the RECORD?

Mr. LITTAUER. Mr. Speaker, a very proper rule of the House requires that a conference report be printed in the RECORD and lie over for a day. This is a complete agreement. Every rule applying to the government of a conference report has, I believe, been lived up to, and for the personal reason that I desire to leave town to-night I should like very much to get unanimous consent that the statement be now read and the report agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I should like to do anything that would be personally kind to the gentleman from New York, but I think it is right and necessary that I should object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The conference report and statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

[illegible]

[illegible] amendments numbered 42, 47, 56, 57, 74, 93, [illegible] 141, 145, 146, 147, 149, 156, 159, 161, 162, 168, 174, 175, 176, 185, [illegible]

[illegible] 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, [illegible] 54, 55, 58, 59, [illegible] 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, [illegible] 114, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, 138, 139, 140, 142, 143, 144, 148, 150, 151, 152, 153, 154, 155, 157, 158, 160, 163, 164, 165, 166, 167, 169, 170, 171, 172, 173, 177, 178, 179, 180, 181, 182, 183, 184, 186, 187, 188, 189, 190, 191, 192, 193, 194, 195, 196, 197, 198, 199, 200, 201, 202, 203, 204, 205, 206, 207, 208, 209, 210, 211, 212, 213, 214, 215, 216, 217, 218, 219, 220, 221, 222, 223, 224, 225, 226, 227, 228, [illegible] agree to the same.

[illegible] 41: That the House recede from its disagreement [illegible] amendment numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "and the clerk of class four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 65: That the House recede from its disagreement [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word "otherwise" in said amendment the words "or contracts;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] amendment numbered 70: That the House recede from its disagreement [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "two thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 74, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the number proposed insert "three;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 77, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "two hundred dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 82: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 83, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "twenty-five thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 92: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 93, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert the following: "or wages of workmen, including not exceeding six thousand six hundred and twenty dollars for other clerks and employees, twenty-two thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert "thirty-five hundred and sixty thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible] 151: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: After the word "assistants" at the end of the matter inserted by said amendment the following: "and employees, not to exceed the number employed and rates of compensation then actually paid;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and sixteen thousand nine hundred and forty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] numbered 153: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 153, and agree to the same with amendments as follows: In line 6 of said amendment strike out the words "[illegible] dollars;" in line 8 strike out the words "clerk of class two;" and in lieu of the sum named in lines 7 and 8 insert "eight thousand one hundred and forty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "[illegible] thousand seven hundred and twenty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 170: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In the last line of said amendment strike out the words "[illegible] hundred;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and [illegible]" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two hundred and [illegible]" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "forty-four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible] That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "[illegible] thousand seven hundred and sixty dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "two thousand [illegible] and seventy [illegible]" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "four thousand dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "[illegible] dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "[illegible] dollars;" and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered [illegible]: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered [illegible] and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum proposed insert "nineteen hundred and four;" and the Senate agree to the same.

[illegible]

Managers on the part of the House.

[illegible]

Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT OF THE MANAGERS ON THE PART OF THE HOUSE.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. [illegible]) [illegible] the Senate bill [illegible] upon and recommend to the adoption of the Senate and House the following [illegible] in the amendments [illegible]:

Amendments numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25 and 26, which [illegible] the Senate [illegible] the House [illegible] Senate [illegible] the House [illegible] Senate [illegible] the House [illegible]

ATLANTIC AND PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, NEW MEXICO.

Mr. RODEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that we had better adjourn. It is [illegible] o'clock on Saturday afternoon.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] [illegible] but a few minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If we begin this, there will be no end to it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi makes a statement which is in substance a motion.

Mr. PAYNE. If the gentleman from Mississippi should demand the yeas and nays, I suppose we should have to do that.

Mr. RODEY. I ask the gentleman from Mississippi to allow this bill to be considered.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will withhold the motion for the present moment, and at the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] does not insist on the motion, I will.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Mexico asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a bill which the Clerk will report.

The bill (H. R. 12533) for the relief of small holding settlers within the limits of the grant of land to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company in the Territory of New Mexico was read, as follows:

[illegible] That the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company [illegible] to which was referred the bill (H. R. [illegible] Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company in the Territory [illegible] section to raze [illegible] to the [illegible] as suggested.

[illegible] A. [illegible], Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE [illegible] House of Representatives.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR.

[illegible] and Pacific Railroad [illegible] lands w[illegible] (33 Stat. L., 827) as amended by the act of February 21, 1903 [illegible] for the relief of [illegible] ped tracts of [illegible] or more of th[illegible] ing after the [illegible] to entry by [illegible] words "without cost to them:" [illegible] respectfully states: [illegible] as which it was [illegible] as well as [illegible] W. A. [illegible] cr.

[illegible] SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

The SPEAKER. [illegible] Mr. [illegible] Indiana. Mr. [illegible] s to me very much as if this was [illegible] ing the C[illegible] of affairs in New Mexico made it necessary to pass such a bill.

[illegible] two or three little places where the people had lived for many generations on the land they had [illegible] these lands upon land grants, and the [illegible] the land as home steads in the ordinary way because they believed that they had a superior and better title to the lands than the Government itself. When the Court of Private Land Claims was created by Congress, in 1891, they went into that court and sought to have their land grants confirmed. These grants had been segregated from the public domain for many years, but the court declared that there was some defect in the inception of their land-grant titles, and refused to approve the title, thus throwing the Land back as public domain of the United States.

It transpired that in the meantime the Government, by the act of Congress of 1866, had given alternate sections of these very lands to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company; in fact, had given the title away from under them, although these people were in possession. Then under the small-holding sections of the Court of Private Land Claims act it was found that they could not prove up their claims. It was provided in the land-court act that when the Government surveyors found settlers in possession of small tracts the same should be set aside to them and the Government would give them patents for it, but it was found that those provisions of the land-court act had died a death of limitation, so that these settlers were denied the relief which had been given to a great many other people in other places in New Mexico who had their titles fixed and arranged under the small-holding act. Such people were found to have no title at all to the land on which they were living and on which they and their forefathers had been living for more than a hundred years.

Everybody believed before the land court rejected the grant claims that they had title to them. A portion of these settlers were then permitted to get their homesteads wherever they were situated on the alternate sections of land within the railroad grants that still belonged to the United States, but as to those settlers who were living upon sections belonging to the railroad company, they were absolutely without title to their home. Then to remedy this condition of affairs the Interior Department requested the railroad company to relinquish these lands and to take other lands in lieu, but the railroad refused unless with the right to take a whole section wherever they released any portion of a section to these settlers.

Now these lands given to these poor people are in tracts of not to exceed 160 acres. The railroad company, after repeated requests, finally agreed to give up these lands to the settlers, so that the latter might get their title to their homes in case the railroad company was allowed to select lands in lieu thereof. In this way the railroad company would agree to give up a whole section in any one place and select another whole section in another place in lieu of it, but would not give up pieces of sections. That is the best the railroad company would do.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has the railroad obtained patent to this particular area?

Mr. RODEY. Yes. The Department has decided, and I think the courts also have decided, that the railroad title is good.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Has it been paying the taxes upon it?

Mr. RODEY. Yes. That is my understanding, and I feel sure I am right about it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much land is involved in this?

Mr. RODEY. Not more than two or three thousand acres, as I understand. This act we are discussing can only apply to two or three small settlements around Cubero and Las Lentes, in Valencia County.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I see that the bill provides for the payment of not exceeding $50,000 to pay expenses.

Mr. RODEY. That was a mistake of mine in putting such a large amount in the bill, and the committee struck it out. I do not think it will take more than $1,000 to $2,000 to pay the expense of the whole exchange. The bill was corrected in committee, as you will see.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. That is the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. RODEY. That was stricken out by the committee, as you will see in the report.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much land will be involved, how much land will it take to secure the change for these settlers on this land, and how much will that destroy of the checkerboard system?

Mr. RODEY. I am not sure that the railroad company can use these exchanges to fill up their checkerboard sections, as they have sold so much of their lands, but it will not exceed 2,000 or 3,000 acres. I do not think that it will seriously affect the checkerboard system, there is so little of this. The passage of this bill is of great importance to these settlers; so much so that it is a positive charity to let it pass. You will notice that the bill provides that the lien land must be of equal quality and that all exchanges must be made only on the request of the Secretary of the Interior. That surely safeguards it.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. How much money will there be involved?

Mr. RODEY. Not more than two or three thousand dollars, as I am told. The amount that was put in the bill by me in the first place was a mistake. The committee advised me that it would not be necessary, and states that the Department can do the work in the regular course of its work without any direct appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman state that it will not amount to over 3,000 acres in all?

Mr. RODEY. Not exceeding that, in my opinion, as the act only applies to conditions existing in two or three small settlements in and around Los Lentes and Cubero, in Valencia County, N. Mex.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Relying entirely upon the gentleman's statement, I will not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. LACEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 38 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of T. L. Pursley, administrator of estate of Rosa Pursley, against The United States—to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the conclusions of fact and law in the French spoliation cases relating to the sloop Ralph, Moses Montague, master—to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, transmitting a reply to the inquiry of the House as to the condition, rental, etc., of mail cars—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for contingent expenses, shipping service—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for seagoing steam tender for thirteenth light-house district—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting an estimate of appropriation for analyzing coal and lignite at the Louisiana Purchase Exposition—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, relating to an addition to the cost of the public building at Seattle, Wash.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MANN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12533) to authorize the Paragould and Memphis Railroad Company to construct a bridge across St. Francis River, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1390); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. BURKE, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3867) making appropriations for the removal of the quarantine station at San Diego, Cal., and to acquire new site, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1391); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. ADAMS of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11677) to provide for the reorganization of the consular service of the United States, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1393); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LIND, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11370) to relieve the Italian-Swiss Agricultural Colony from the internal-revenue tax on certain spirits destroyed by fire, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1389); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5335) to provide an American register for the British ship Pyrenees, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1394); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 649) granting a pension to Mary E. Rice—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3269) granting a pension to Eliza A. Camp—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 3270) granting a pension to Charles W. Atkinson—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12185) for the relief of the estate of Joseph Brugere, deceased, late of Orleans Parish, La.—Committee on War Claims discharged, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (H. R. 13422) granting a pension to Jesse C. Thomas—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BOUTELL: A bill (H. R. 13520) to amend section 3282 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads: A bill (H. R. 13521) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes—to the Union Calendar.

By Mr. JONES of Washington: A bill (H. R. 13522) to authorize the sale and disposition of surplus or unallotted lands of the Yakima Indian Reservation, in the State of Washington—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13523) to provide for an extension of time for completion of bridge over the Missouri River at Council Bluffs, Iowa, until January 1, 1905—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 13524) to provide for the admission of Indian Territory as a State, and to enable the people thereof to form a constitution and State government and to be admitted into the Union as the State of Jefferson, on an equal footing with the original States, and to make donations of public lands to said State—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. DAYTON: A bill (H. R. 13525) to amend an act entitled "An act to further promote the efficiency of the Navy," approved December 24, 1861, as amended by an act approved July 16, 1862—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WILEY of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 13526) to establish a Soldiers' Home at or near Daphne, in Baldwin County, Ala.—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GIBSON: A resolution (H. Res. 242) referring certain claims to the Court of Claims for a finding of facts under the terms of the Tucker Act—to the Committee on War Claims.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BONYNGE: A bill (H. R. 13527) granting an increase of pension to William Odenheimer—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13528) for the relief of the heirs of John Evans and the trustees under the will of Robert E. Carr—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. BROUSSARD: A bill (H. R. 13529) for the relief of the estate of Marcus Walker, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. CASSINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 13530) granting an increase of pension to Stephenson Creal—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13531) granting an increase of pension to Lyman L. Jones—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DEEMER: A bill (H. R. 13532) granting an increase of pension to John Shroat—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FORDNEY: A bill (H. R. 13533) granting an increase of pension to James Price—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13534) granting a pension to Julia Strohm—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HERMANN: A bill (H. R. 13535) granting an increase of pension to Alexander B. Mott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13536) granting a pension to William H. Lung—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13537) granting an increase of pension to Reuse P. Kendall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES: A bill (H. R. 13538) for the relief of the heirs of Joseph Chandet—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: A bill (H. R. 13539) granting an honorable discharge to Isaac Dulhagen—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LORIMER: A bill (H. R. 13540) granting an increase of pension to S. C. H. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 13541) granting an increase of pension to Ephraim E. Lake—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 13542) for the relief of L. B. Wyatt—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHERMAN: A bill (H. R. 13543) granting an increase of pension to H. Clay Hall—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SHULL: A bill (H. R. 13544) granting pension to Leonard Andre—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13545) granting an increase of pension to Craig Mardis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 13546) granting an increase of pension to Joel J. Addison—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13547) granting an increase of pension to Lewis J. Parr—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13548) granting an increase of pension to Robert Bullock—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13549) granting an increase of pension to James L. Miller—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13550) for the relief of certain surgeons in the Philippine service—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SULLOWAY: A bill (H. R. 13551) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth F. Minor—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. ACHESON: Resolutions of Grand Army of the Republic Post No. 330, Department of Pennsylvania, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. AIKEN: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 13420, for the relief of the estate of Samuel Chapman, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BIRDSALL: Petitions of L. H. Munkel and 23 others, of Laporte, Iowa; William Tadler and 80 others, of Hazleton, Stanley, and Prairie Center, Iowa; Woman's Christian Temperance Union and H. D. Pratt and 43 others, of Manchester, Iowa; Rev. F. H. Thiel and 40 others, of Dubuque, Iowa, and L. F. Foulk and others, of Waterloo, Iowa, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BOWERSOCK: Resolution of Lodge No. 82, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron Ship Builders' of America, of Osawatomie, Kans., in favor of legislation relative to the merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolution of James Shields Post, No. 57, Grand Army of the Republic, Wellington, Kans., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petitions of Independent Order of Good Templars of Kansas; citizens of Paola, six Christian organizations of Lecompton; J. W. Bracewell and 15 others, of the second Congressional district; citizens of Shawnee; citizens of Richmond; G. H. Smith and 20 others, of Kansas City; citizens of Vinegar Point, all in Kansas, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BURKETT: Resolutions of the Farmers' Institute at Grand Island, Nebr., in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of Samuel Lichty and 24 others of Falls City, Nebr., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of E. C. Richards, of Hillsboro, Ill., in favor of bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. CAPRON: Resolution of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, for the construction of a light-house on the Outer Diamond Shoal—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, resolution of Border Grange, No. 3, Patrons of Husbandry, of Woonsocket, R. I., in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of Rocky Hill Grange, No. 27, Patrons of Husbandry, of East Greenwich, R. I., in favor of the passage of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Rhode Island State Board of Soldiers' Relief, relative to appropriation in aid of State Soldiers' Homes—to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, petition of Woman's Club of Pawtucket, R. I., in favor of a bill for a forest reserve in the mountains of New Hampshire—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. DALZELL: Memorial of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, against issue of liquor-tax receipts—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. DANIELS: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 11833, granting a pension to Jennie Blackburn Johnstone—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. EMERICH: Resolution of Chicago Board of Trade, in favor of bill H. R. 7871—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Chicago Post-Office Civil War Veterans' Association, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Iron Molders' Conference Board, of Chicago, relative to increasing capacity of the Naval Gun Factory—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, petition of J. R. Alcock, of Chicago, Ill., against passage of bill requiring licensed engineers on small pleasure craft—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, memorials of the Western Association of Shoe Dealers and the Board of Trade of Chicago, favoring the Cooper-Quarles bill, amending the interstate-commerce act—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorials of Builders and Traders' Exchange of Chicago, the Chicago Typothetæ, and the Weller Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, protesting against the anti-injunction and the eight-hour bill—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, memorial of G. B. Wheeler, of Chicago, favoring repeal of section 3 of the immigration law—to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

Also, memorials of H. G. Holloway & Bro. and Guthmann, Carpenter & Telling, of Chicago; the Pingree Company, shoe manufacturers, of Detroit, Mich.; Edwards Stanwood Shoe Company, Frank M. Fargo, Kullman, Satz & Co., Wilder & Co., Selz, Schwab & Co., and W. D. Allen Manufacturing Company, of Chicago, protesting against transfer of office for opening bids for purchase of Indian supplies from Chicago to St. Louis—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: Resolution of the drug-trade section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, in favor of the reduction of the tax on alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. FLOOD: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 2105, for the relief of the estate of Peter Sheets, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. FRENCH: Resolution of R. B. Hayes Post, No. 2, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Idaho, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of F. Madlener and others, of Chicago, Ill., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Jacob P. Sargeant and 85 others, of Rockford, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Colonel Albert D. Shaw Circle, No. 10, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Chicago, Ill., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Resolution of General assembly of the State of Ohio, in favor of bill H. R. 6475—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, paper to accompany bill H. R. 12861, granting an increase of pension to Bartlett Mingus—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of A. E. Foote and 92 others, of Creston, Iowa, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HINSHAW: Petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Waco, Nebr., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HITT: Resolutions of the Illinois Farmers' Institute, in favor of bill H. R. 9302, for untaxed alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Farmers' Institute of Illinois, in favor of an appropriation of $15,000 annually for advancement of farmers' institute work—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HOWELL of New Jersey: Petition of Asbury Methodist Episcopal Church, of Long Branch, N. J., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KNAPP: Resolution of Columbia Circle, Grand Army of the Republic, of Fulton, N. Y., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Resolutions of the drug-trade section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, in favor of a reduction of the tax on alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. LLOYD: Petition of 31 citizens of Macon County, Mo., in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: Ten petitions of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, against the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LORIMER: Papers to accompany House bill granting an increase of pension to S. C. H. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of D. C. Thoms and 50 others, of Chicago, Ill., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LOUD: Petition of Rev. G. A. Pastor and others, of Prescott, Mich., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Ancient Order of Hibernians of Bay County, Mich., in favor of bill H. R. 62, for the erection of a monument to the memory of Commodore John Barry—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. MILLER: Petitions of patrons of rural route No. 2, of Council Grove; No. 1, of Eskridge; No. 3, of Council Grove, and rural route of Burlingame, all in Kansas, relative to increase of salaries of rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petitions of citizens of Council Grove; of G. W. Cones and 16 others, of Burlingame, and Independent Order of Good Templars, all of Kansas, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PADGETT: Papers to accompany claim of Washington W. Miller—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RANDELL of Texas: Petition of Rev. S. J. Kincaid and 60 others, of Denison, Tex., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Alabama: Papers to accompany House bill for relief of L. B. Wyatt—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee: Petition of J. C. Morton and 40 others, of Petersburg, Tenn., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Sarah Price, praying reference of claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of J. M. Timmins, praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of W. H. Tuck, praying reference of war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RUPPERT: Resolution of the drug-trade section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, relative to reduction of the tax on alcohol—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolution of Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Lafayette Circle, Department of New York, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Iowa: Petitions of C. B. Woodrow and 56 others, of Oakland, Iowa, and Henry DeLong and 58 others, of Council Bluffs, Iowa, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Kentucky: Papers to accompany House bill for the relief of Stephen Duncan—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SNOOK: Petitions of I. L. White and S. A. Stever of rural route No. 2, Montpelier, Ohio, in favor of increasing the salary of rural carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Petition of residents of Clay County, Tex., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULLIVAN of Massachusetts: Resolution of the Coal Club of Boston and vicinity, relative to a harbor of refuge at Point Judith, R. I.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WANGER: Petition of Elmer E. Garrett and 1 other, of Wyncote, Pa., against enactment of an anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Elmer E. Garrett and 1 other, of Wyncote, Pa., against the enactment of an eight-hour law—to the Committee on Labor.

Also, petition of James Righter, of Norristown, Pa., in favor of bill H. R. 62, for the erection of a monument to the memory of Commodore John Barry—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. WILEY of New Jersey: Resolution of the legislature of New Jersey, relative to the improvement of the Passaic River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

SENATE.

MONDAY, March 7, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of Saturday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. McCUMBER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved.

FINDINGS BY THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of O. H. Perry, administrator of George W. Perry, deceased, v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of John Mantel v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of Albion W. Knight, Thomas E. Walker, Paul Romeri, George H. Noble, W. A. Hansell, Arnold Bowles, Robert C. Alston, William S. Elkin, jr., Benjamin Owens, Robert Sharpe, and Thomas H. Austin, rector, wardens, and vestrymen of St. Philip's Church, of Atlanta, Ga., v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. C. R. McKENNEY, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 5755) for the relief of small holding settlers within the limits of the grant of land to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, in the Territory of New Mexico;

A bill (H. R. 12081) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 14889) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River, in Knox County, Ind.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the following bills, asks conferences with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. SULLOWAY managers at the respective conferences on the part of the House:

A bill (S. 1543) granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson; and

A bill (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 880) granting a pension to Caroline S. Winn;

A bill (H. R. 4392) granting a pension to Abbie E. Webster;

A bill (H. R. 4540) granting a pension to Amanda Skinner;

A bill (H. R. 4624) granting a pension to Isabella Phelps;

A bill (H. R. 4750) granting a pension to William J. Jackson;

A bill (H. R. 5030) granting a pension to William H. Mount;

A bill (H. R. 5342) granting a pension to Jane E. Sutfin;

A bill (H. R. 5580) granting a pension to Celia C. Owen;

A bill (H. R. 5610) granting a pension to Annie Dolliver;

A bill (H. R. 5749) granting a pension to James B. Coombs;

A bill (H. R. 7063) granting a pension to Ellen F. Lynch;

A bill (H. R. 7248) granting a pension to Robert H. Cooke;

A bill (H. R. 7368) granting a pension to Annie G. Norwood;

A bill (H. R. 7382) granting a pension Ellen A. Harris;

A bill (H. R. 7559) granting a pension to Caronne Hurley;

A bill (H. R. 7712) granting a pension to Emma Crosier;

A bill (H. R. 8185) granting a pension to Herman Lemmerman;

A bill (H. R. 8343) granting a pension to Annie P. Erving, formerly Cilla Zerbe;

A bill (H. R. 8648) granting a pension to Shadrach D. Bardin;

A bill (H. R. 8771) granting a pension to Walter F. Horner;

A bill (H. R. 8922) granting a pension to Martha E. Nolen;

A bill (H. R. 8924) granting a pension to Georgia A. Whitehead;

A bill (H. R. 9061) granting a pension to Nettie A. Buell;

A bill (H. R. 9127) granting a pension to Moses Schuman;

A bill (H. R. 9683) granting a pension to Henry Austin;

A bill (H. R. 9739) granting a pension to Lizzie M. Worster;

A bill (H. R. 9791) granting a pension to Abram Claypool;

A bill (H. R. 9835) granting a pension to Maggie Fitzpatrick;

A bill (H. R. 9921) granting a pension to Virginia Boyd;

A bill (H. R. 10741) granting a pension to Mary Tate;

A bill (H. R. 10968) granting a pension to Marceline P. Hamilton; and

A bill (H. R. 11345) granting a pension to Joseph H. Hull.

CREDENTIALS.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, the legislature of Ohio has elected Hon. CHARLES DICK to succeed my late colleague, the Hon. Marcus A. Hanna, as a member of this body. I present his credentials both for the unexpired term that Senator Hanna was serving at the time of his death and for the full constitutional term commencing March 4, 1905. I ask that both sets of credentials may be received, read, and filed.

The credentials were read, and ordered to be filed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HOAR presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Chicopee Falls, Mass., praying for the establishment of a national forest reserve in the White Mountains; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Springfield, Mass., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a reorganization of the consular service and also for the development of the American merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Springfield, Mass., praying for the ratification of a treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Norwood, Mass., praying for a reorganization of the consular service; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of the Cambridge Branch of the Massachusetts Indian Association and a petition of the Massachusetts Indian Association, praying that lands in severalty be granted to the landless Indians of northern California; which were referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented petitions of the Woman's Club of Chicopee Falls, Mass.; of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Protestant Church, of Baltimore, Md.; of sundry citizens of Marcellus, Mich., and of the Pleasant Lawn, North Page, and Hepburn congregations of Montgomery and Page counties, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of J. C. Coy Circle, No. 3, Department of Michigan, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Unionville, Mich., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PROCTOR presented petitions of the Vermont Anti-Saloon League, of Burlington; of sundry citizens of Arlington; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of the Baptist Church of Manchester, and of sundry citizens of Grafton, Rockingham, Wilmington, and East Barnard, all in the State of Vermont, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of Buckhannon Post, No. 49, Department of West Virginia, Grand Army of the Republic, of Buckhannon, W. Va., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LONG (for Mr. BURTON) presented a petition of Local Lodge No. 221, Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of Pittsburg, Kans., and a petition of Local Lodge No. 82, Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of Osawatomie, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation to develop the American merchant marine; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also (for Mr. BURTON) presented petitions of Princeton Circle, Department of Kansas, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Princeton; of Griffin Post, No. 266, Department of Kansas, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ada, and of Leavenworth Circle, No. 8, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Leavenworth, all in the State of Kansas, praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also (for Mr. BURTON) presented a petition of the congregation of the Presbyterian Church of Chanute, Kans., and a petition of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Kansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CULBERSON presented a petition of the congregation of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church of Coleman, Tex., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CARMACK presented the petition of Amos Woodruff, president of the Overton Hotel Company, of Memphis, Tenn., praying that he be granted compensation for the use and occupation by the United States Army, during the late civil war, of a certain building at that place; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BARD presented a petition of sundry citizens of San Jose, Cal., praying that lands in severalty be granted to the landless Indians of northern California; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MILLARD presented a petition of the Commercial Club, of Omaha, Nebr., praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Church of Crab Orchard, Nebr., praying [illegible] made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Blair, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the congregations of the Friends Church of Lincoln, the Methodist Episcopal Church of Wausa, the Episcopal Church of Belgrade, and the Trinity [illegible] of Lincoln; of the Sorosis Club, of Tecumseh; of the North Nebraska Conference; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Tecumseh; of the Social Circle of Tecumseh; of the Acme Club of Tecumseh; of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Ord; of sundry citizens of Alma, and of the congregation of the Grace Baptist Church, of Omaha, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of Jefferson Grange, No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, of Jefferson County, Ind., praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the King Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., and a petition of the congregation of the Fletcher Place Methodist Episcopal Church, of Indianapolis, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Evansville Manufacturers' Association, of Evansville, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to develop the American merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Indian Rights Association of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation providing for the sale of a portion of the Rosebud Indian Reservation; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of the Studebaker Brothers Manufacturing Company, of South Bend, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the registration and protection of commercial marks, prints, and labels used in foreign or interstate commerce; which was referred to the Committee on Patents.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of John A. Logan Circle, No. 1, Department of Rhode Island, Grand Army of the Republic, of Providence, R. I., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of Kingston Grange, No. 10, Patrons of Husbandry, of Kingston, R. I., and a petition of Lime Rock Grange, No. 22, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lime Rock, R. I., praying that increased appropriations be made for the support of agricultural experiment stations; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DOLLIVER presented petitions of the congregations of the Baptist, Presbyterian, Christ, Methodist Episcopal, and Congregational churches, of Perry, Iowa; of the Ministers' Alliance of Sedalia, Mo.; of the congregations of the First Baptist, Methodist Protestant, St. Paul's Evangelical Lutheran, and First Methodist Episcopal churches, and the Anti-Saloon League, all of Morgantown, W. Va.; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Lineville, Iowa, and of the Iowa Association of Southern California, of Pasadena, Cal., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Forest City, Pa., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church of the United States, remonstrating against the issuance of liquor-tax receipts by the Government; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BAILEY presented petitions of sundry citizens of Greenville, Thorp Spring, Reagan, Denison, Dallas, Kemp, Childress, Paris, and Plano, all in the State of Texas, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of Fred H. Bailey, of Hopkinton; of C. M. Greene, of Pitsfield, and of rural free-delivery route No. 2, of Antrim, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying that an appropriatipn be made to increase the salaries of the rural letter carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Retail Grocers' Association of Philadelphia, Pa., praying for the passage of the so-called "pure-food bill;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the East Washington Citizens' Association, of the District of Columbia, praying that an appropriation be made for the construction and maintenance of two or more public-convenience stations in the city of Washington; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Interstate Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4403) to amend "An act to promote the safety of employees and travelers upon railroads by compelling common carriers engaged in interstate commerce to equip their cars with automatic couplers and continuous brakes and their locomotives with driving-wheel brakes, and for other purposes," approved March 2, 1893, as amended April 1, 1896, and March 2, 1903, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4421) for the preparation of a railroad map of the United States, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HOAR, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2356) to amend section 4921 of the Revised Statutes relating to patents, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Patents; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3294) providing for the appointment of a commission on the alcoholic-liquor traffic, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Education and Labor; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4092) relating to liability of common carriers by railroads in the District of Columbia and Territories and common carriers by railroads engaged in commerce between the States and between the States and foreign nations to their employees, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1531) to extend the provisions of section 5499 of the Revised Statutes to the preliminary examinations held before a commissioner lawfully appointed by any court of the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLATT. I am directed by the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 161) to extend the provisions of section 5406 of the Revised Statutes to the preliminary examinations held before a commissioner lawfully appointed by any court of the United States, to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed. That bill has been annexed as an amendment to the bill just reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4480) granting an increase of pension to Jane E. Fuller;

A bill (S. 2194) granting an increase of pension to Phoebe Buch; and

A bill (S. 4727) granting an increase of pension to W. M. Tanner.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2598) granting an increase of pension to Morris H. Jones, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2491) granting a pension to Larkin Maynard;

A bill (H. R. 6848) granting an increase of pension to John W. Plattenburg;

A bill (H. R. 11557) granting a pension to Alfred D. Burton;

A bill (H. R. 10655) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca Mayo;

A bill (H. R. 10576) granting a pension to Lulu E. McKee;

A bill (H. R. 2490) granting a pension to John Maynard;

A bill (H. R. 1268) granting an increase of pension to John B. Hart;

A bill (H. R. 790) granting an increase of pension to Oliver A. Filman;

A bill (H. R. 5648) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Herod;

A bill (H. R. 8482) granting an increase of pension to John C. Foos;

A bill (H. R. 5395) granting a pension to Mattie Aten;

A bill (H. R. 8180) granting an increase of pension to William Smith;

A bill (H. R. 138) granting an increase of pension to James W. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 6087) granting an increase of pension to Anthony Bracklin;

A bill (H. R. 4114) granting an increase of pension to Robert S. Carns;

A bill (H. R. 1519) granting a pension to Thomas P. Moore;

A bill (H. R. 2371) granting a pension to Sarah J. Herman; and

A bill (H. R. 7079) granting an increase of pension to John J. Fleming.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 8220) granting an increase of pension to Edward B. Nugent;

A bill (H. R. 10267) granting a pension to Florence R. Russell;

A bill (H. R. 10580) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Longberry;

A bill (H. R. 7754) granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah Myers;

A bill (H. R. 2767) granting an increase of pension to John E. Neary;

A bill (H. R. 11141) granting an increase of pension to John B. Keller;

A bill (H. R. 5091) granting an increase of pension to William Kennedy, alias Leonard;

A bill (H. R. 2457) granting an increase of pension to James Carr;

A bill (H. R. 1352) granting an increase of pension to Samuel McClure;

A bill (H. R. 10264) granting an increase of pension to Lewis C. Amberg;

A bill (H. R. 12036) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Wetzel;

A bill (H. R. 5682) granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Hunt;

A bill (H. R. 8742) granting an increase of pension to Jason Robinson;

A bill (H. R. 6258) granting an increase of pension to Theodore C. Putnam;

A bill (H. R. 8010) granting an increase of pension to Josiah B. Dexter;

A bill (H. R. 9398) granting a pension to John Lindsey; and

A bill (H. R. 6249) granting an increase of pension to Frederick J. Fairbrass.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4055) granting an increase of pension to David Misener;

A bill (S. 2645) granting an increase of pension to La Roy B. Church;

A bill (S. 2880) granting a pension to Jane Smith; and

A bill (H. R. 691) granting an increase of pension to Rebecca C. Shurloce.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3485) granting an increase of pension to John C. Van Campen;

A bill (S. 2975) granting a pension to Claude C. Swafford; and

A bill (S. 3490) granting an increase of pension to Bucklin H. Wood.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 3027) granting an increase of pension to William H. Vickers;

A bill (H. R. 6501) granting an increase of pension to Isaiah Robinson, jr.;

A bill (H. R. 2122) granting a pension to Orlo H. Lyon;

A bill (H. R. 7249) granting a pension to Lydia M. Hill;

A bill (H. R. 194[illegible]) granting a pension to Mary J. Bradley;

A bill (H. R. 2180) granting an increase of pension to Henry Spindler;

A bill (H. R. 1285) granting an increase of pension to Adam Gessner;

A bill (H. R. 11606) granting an increase of pension to Caleb J. May;

A bill (H. R. 153) granting a pension to Harriet Snyder;

A bill (H. R. 10171) granting an increase of pension to Josiah H. Tyack;

A bill (H. R. 6611) granting an increase of pension to Austin Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 10847) granting an increase of pension to James O. Knowles;

A bill (H. R. 1176) granting an increase of pension to George W. Kimble;

A bill (H. R. 967) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Gruber;

A bill (H. R. 805) granting an increase of pension to George W. McConkey;

A bill (H. R. 11066) granting an increase of pension to Joshua D. Griffith;

A bill (H. R. 5693) granting an increase of pension to Joel M. Street;

A bill (H. R. 8725) granting an increase of pension to John A. Parker;

A bill (H. R. 8387) granting an increase of pension to Emma R. Wallace;

A bill (H. R. 8287) granting an increase of pension to Abram T. Carney;

A bill (H. R. 5873) granting an increase of pension to Sirbrina Palmer;

A bill (H. R. 5700) granting an increase of pension to Christopher C. Richards; and

A bill (H. R. 5824) granting an increase of pension to Casper J. Schoer.

Mr. McCUMBER (for Mr. TALIAFERRO), from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4528) granting an increase of pension to Amanda M. Hand;

A bill (S. 4529) granting an increase of pension to Jesse N. Jones; and

A bill (S. 4531) granting an increase of pension to Julia C. Vanzant.

Mr. McCUMBER (for Mr. BURTON), to whom was referred the bill (S. 2252) granting an increase of pension to David Inches, reported it with amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. BURTON), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2248) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Sommers, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. BURTON), from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 11175) granting an increase of pension to Isaac S. Drummond; and

A bill (H. R. 1528) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Joralemon.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3988) granting an increase of pension to John L. Hughes, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3352) granting an increase of pension to Mary M. Nash; and

A bill (S. 3985) granting an increase of pension to Isabel F. Easum.

Mr. ALGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3956) granting an increase of pension to Patrick Fleming, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CARMACK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2458) granting a pension to J. H. Oney; and

A bill (S. 4708) granting an increase of pension to Samuel Bailey.

Mr. CARMACK, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4308) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Pillow, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5476) granting an increase of pension to William Davis, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 1570) granting an increase of pension to Jasper Robinson; and

A bill (S. 2030) granting an increase of pension to Elias L. Fidler.

Mr. PATTERSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10179) granting an increase of pension to William H. Bell;

A bill (H. R. 10822) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Smith;

A bill (H. R. 5527) granting a pension to Frances Reck;

A bill (H. R. 6416) granting an increase of pension to Anna S. Dunn; and

A bill (H. R. 936) granting an increase of pension to William Miriam.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 10912) granting an increase of pension to Leonard J. Whitney; and

A bill (H. R. 7411) granting an increase of pension to Matthew Caldwell.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4363) granting an increase of pension to Eli Veazie; and

A bill (S. 4514) granting an increase of pension to John P. Whitehouse.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 2582) granting an increase of pension to Harry M. Sherman; and

A bill (S. 3227) granting a pension to James F. Mears.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3084) granting an increase of pension to Helen F. Nichols;

A bill (S. 4773) granting a pension to Juliette Nunez;

A bill (S. 2361) granting an increase of pension to Clara E. Daniels;

A bill (H. R. 6880) granting an increase of pension to Charles T. Preston;

A bill (H. R. 8050) granting an increase of pension to John I. Lose;

A bill (H. R. 5855) granting an increase of pension to Herbert M. Blackwell, alias Levi W. Moar;

A bill (H. R. 7438) granting an increase of pension to Corinne Tolman;

A bill (H. R. 8044) granting an increase of pension to Seymour F. Burlingame;

A bill (H. R. 10919) granting an increase of pension to Susan E. Oliver;

A bill (H. R. 1170) granting an increase of pension to Lewis L. Bean;

A bill (H. R. 10399) granting an increase of pension to Francis Marshall;

A bill (H. R. 1515) granting a pension to Lucy Warren;

A bill (H. R. 2110) granting a pension to Mary Farrell;

A bill (H. R. 729) granting an increase of pension to Freeman O. Hodge; and

A bill (H. R. 742) granting an increase of pension to George W. Darrah.

Mr. ALLEE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1353) for the relief of George T. Hamilton, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4602) granting an increase of pension to Hiram Imus, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 3327) granting an increase of pension to Isaac N. Moore;

A bill (S. 4428) granting an increase of pension to Edwin W. Ford;

A bill (H. R. 10531) granting an increase of pension to George W. Farr;

A bill (H. R. 11428) granting an increase of pension to Augustus Fellows;

A bill (H. R. 11229) granting a pension to Francis M. Good;

A bill (H. R. 8789) granting an increase of pension to George K. Knowlton;

A bill (H. R. 5952) granting an increase of pension to William H. Kent; and

A bill (H. R. 8611) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. De Motte.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4275) granting a pension to Nancy Noxon;

A bill (S. 3561) granting an increase of pension to Anna E. Draper; and

A bill (H. R. 11169) granting an increase of pension to Reuben Griffith Porter.

Mr. BALL, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 4759) granting a pension to John M. Manlove;

A bill (H. R. 2589) granting a pension to Susanna Cosgrove;

A bill (H. R. 10209) granting an increase of pension to Margaret Delaney;

A bill (H. R. 10901) granting an increase of pension to John Quinn;

A bill (H. R. 8025) granting an increase of pension to James Payton;

A bill (H. R. 8078) granting an increase of pension to William J. Mosier;

A bill (H. R. 3806) granting an increase of pension to George H. Sweet;

A bill (H. R. 6271) granting an increase of pension to Catherine M. Wonderly;

A bill (H. R. 6024) granting an increase of pension to Calistro Castro; and

A bill (H. R. 6563) granting an increase of pension to John Barragar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10792) granting an increase of pension to Frederic Lockley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 2852) granting an increase of pension to Abraham J. Yeomans.

A bill (H. R. 2855) granting an increase of pension to John W. Bilk; and

A bill (H. R. 6432) granting a pension to Ellender C. Miller.

Mr. FAIRBANKS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2266) to repeal so much of an act approved March 3, 1903, as authorized the erection and completion of new buildings for the accommodation of the United States Naval Hospital, Washington, D. C., on the grounds belonging to the United States Naval Museum of Hygiene, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs; which was agreed to.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3783) for the relief of the families of certain Indian policemen who were killed during the engagement at Sitting Bull's camp, on Grand River, December 15, 1890, and for the relief of Alexander Middle, who was wounded in said engagement, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. BERRY, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4620) to amend section 8 of an act approved April 15, 1902, authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Parkville, Mo., reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PROCTOR, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4505) to amend an act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. DOLLIVER on the 4th instant, proposing to appropriate $9,750 for the purchasing of two lots adjoining the Macruder School building on the east, to provide a playground for the children of the Macruder and Sumner schools, intended to be proposed to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed, which was agreed to.

PUBLIC ROAD AT WINTHROP, MASS.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 13969) to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land, to report favorably without amendment. It is a brief bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It authorizes the Secretary of War to convey to the town of Winthrop, in the county of Suffolk, State of Massachusetts, for perpetual use as a public road, a strip of land 25 feet wide, extending along the northerly side of the United States military reservation at Fort Banks, from the easterly side of Elm avenue to the easterly side of Winthrop street, town of Winthrop, in the county of Suffolk, Mass., and more particularly described as follows: "Beginning at the point of intersection of the northeasterly side of Winthrop street with the southeasterly side of the location of the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn Railroad Company's right of way, and running thence northeasterly along the southeasterly side of said right of way for a distance of 600 feet, more or less, to the northeasterly side of Elm avenue; thence southeasterly along the northeasterly side of Elm avenue for a distance of 25 feet; thence southwesterly along a line parallel to and 25 feet distant from the southeasterly line of the location of the Boston, Revere Beach and Lynn Railroad Company's right of way to the northeasterly side of Winthrop street; thence northwesterly along the northeasterly side of Winthrop street to the point of beginning," the said land being conveyed to the town of Winthrop in exchange for the land and easements comprised in Elm avenue, in the town of Winthrop, which was conveyed to the United States in 1891 and 1892 as a site for the construction of fortifications.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BAIL IN CRIMINAL CASES IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. CULBERSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10136) authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory, to report favorably without amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is a very short bill and it has been approved by the other House and by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. Section 1 provides that upon appeals in all criminal cases from inferior courts to the United States district courts, and from the district courts to the court of appeals, in the Indian Territory, the defendants shall be admitted to bail pending the final determination of the cases upon appeal except in capital cases; that the amount of bail shall be fixed and the bond shall be approved by the court trying the case or by one of the judges of the court of appeals; and that such bond shall be conditional for the appearance of the defendant at all times when required in the prosecution of the appeal, and that he will surrender himself in execution of the final judgment therein.

Section 2 provides that the provisions of this act shall apply to all cases now pending upon appeal in the courts of the Indian Territory.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD CONVEYANCES.

Mr. NELSON. I am directed by the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4769) validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company, to report it favorably with an amendment. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary was, in section 1, line 4, after the words "by the," to strike out "successor in interest of said company, the;" so as to make the section read:

That all conveyances heretofore made by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or by the Northern Pacific Railway Company of land forming a part of the right of way of the [illegible] Government by any act of Congress, are hereby [illegible] and confirmed: Provided, That no such conveyance shall have effect to diminish [illegible] of way to a less width than 100 feet on each side of the center of the main track of the railroad as now established and maintained.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, by mistake two papers have been referred to the Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, of which I am chairman. They properly belong to the joint select committee provided for under the disposition of useless papers in the Departments. I ask that they may be referred to that committee when it is raised, if it has not been raised.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The committee of which the Senator from Alabama will be discharged from the further consideration of the papers referred to him, and they will be referred to the joint select committee having jurisdiction of that subject.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, you have to a point that committee. Under the law, when a Department reports to Congress that they have papers no longer useful for current work or for historical reference, then the Chair appoints two Senators and two Members of the House of Representatives are appointed by the Speaker of that body to consider and determine the question and make their report. It has been done repeatedly heretofore.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is now made a select committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. COCKRELL. But I do not well see how you can make it a select committee when it is compelled to be a committee of both the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the consent of both bodies must be given to it. I think when the committee was appointed—with all due respect—that proper attention was not given to the language of the law, which authorizes the appointment of two members of the Senate and two Members of the House of Representatives, who shall examine and determine what papers shall be destroyed.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, will the Chair let the matter lie on the table until the naval appropriation bill can be disposed of?

Mr. COCKRELL. It will only take a minute to dispose of the matter; there is no controversy about it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will appoint the Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. LONG] members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate, as provided in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post-Office and Navy Departments.

Mr. COCKRELL. And notify the House of Representatives.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And notify the House of Representatives that the Chair has appointed those two Senators on such committee.

Mr. COCKRELL. Under that law. That is right.

Mr. HALE. May I inquire what has just happened? I could not hear [illegible].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A matter relating to the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments. The Senator from Maryland [Mr. COCKRELL] raised a point that the matter should be referred to a joint select committee appointed every time such a paper is reported, and the Chair has appointed the committee on the part of the Senate.

Mr. HALE. Is the Senate taking any new action at this moment?

Mr. COCKRELL. No; it is the action which has been taken every time when the law was enacted. That when a Department reports that papers are no longer useful for historical reference, it is provided that the Senate appoints two Senators and the House of Representatives two Members of that body and they examine the papers, and whatever papers they say in their written report to be useless and [illegible] are no longer useful, the Department destroys.

Mr. HALE. Then it is merely the execution of that law, and no new action to be taken under it?

Mr. COCKRELL. It is merely the execution of that law, and under it there can be no destruction of papers that any political party can say were of any importance.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a bill (S. 4837) to amend an act entitled "[illegible]," approved March [illegible], and [illegible] the Missouri River, near Council Bluffs, Iowa, and Omaha, Nebr., approved February 13, 1891," and acts amendatory thereof, so as to [illegible] January 1, [illegible] and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. [illegible] introduced a bill (S. 4838) to increase the efficiency of the [illegible] of the United States Army; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 4839) to carry into effect the treaty of the twenty between the United States and the Indians, dated July 4, A. D. 1868, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 4840) for the relief of [illegible], of Fremont County, Wyoming; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. [illegible] introduced a bill (S. 4841) for the relief of Frank [illegible]; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. [illegible] (for Mr. [illegible]) introduced a bill (S. 4842) granting an increase of pension to [illegible]; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming introduced a bill (S. 4843) for the relief of [illegible]; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BAILEY introduced a bill (S. 4844) for the relief of [illegible]; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I introduced a bill, which I ask may be [illegible], and then I wish to submit a few remarks [illegible].

The bill (S. 4845) regulating the erection of buildings on the Mall, in the District of Columbia; which was read the first time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no building shall be erected on the Mall of Washington, D. C., within 400 feet of a central line stretching from the center of the [illegible] Monument.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I object to the second reading of the bill, which will carry it over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine objects to the second reading of the bill, and therefore it will go over under the rule.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I wish to submit a few remarks in relation to the bill.

Mr. HALE. I hope the Senator will wait until the naval appropriation bill has been passed. It was agreed that that bill should come up the first thing this morning, and I have notified Senators to that effect. That is why I have objected to the second reading of the Senator's bill at this time. That will carry the whole thing over, and after the naval appropriation bill has been passed I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. BURROWS introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 57) relative to the colonial mortars monument at Washington Park, at the Soldiers of Marathon, in the State of Michigan, which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Library.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. DOLLIVER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $680.78 to reimburse William G. Malin, United States Indian agent, Sac and Fox Agency, Toledo, Iowa, for expenses incurred in defending a suit brought against him in his official capacity as said Indian agent, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TILLMAN submitted an amendment to enable A. H. Emery to prosecute property in the way of improving and erecting the 12-inch disappearing carriage and its [illegible] appurtenances heretofore made by him for the Government, as [illegible] Secretary of War, in his discretion, to advance to the said A. H. Emery, at time or times when it shall think best, any part of the $84,753.02, balance of appropriations now available for completing the construction of said gun, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the fortifications appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS.

Mr. WARREN submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Claims be, and the same is hereby, authorized [illegible] to pay for [illegible] such witnesses as may be summoned before said committee, to report such bills as [illegible] in connection with any matter or matters pending before said committee, and to have the same printed for the use thereof; and that the expenses of such hearings be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that such [illegible] in connection with the foregoing shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

REPORT OF GOVERNOR OF PORTO RICO.

Mr. FORAKER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

[illegible] be printed [illegible] of Senate Document No. 56, Sixty-first Congress, second session, [illegible] Report of the Commission of Porto Rico for the use of the Senate.

PURE FOOD.

On motion of Mr. HEYBURN, it was

[illegible] that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (S. 88) to prevent the adulteration, misbranding, and poisoning or spoiling of foods and drugs in interstate traffic therein, and for other purposes, with accompanying report.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 17355) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is an amendment on page 73, which was passed over.

Mr. HALE. That will not be called up now. I have one or two [illegible] amendments.

On page 73, after the word "than," in line 11, I move to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

[illegible] of the vessels provided for in this act shall be built by [illegible].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 30, line 24, in the amendment heretofore [illegible] the words "storehouse and storekeeper's offices, to [illegible],000," I move to insert "to cost in all not to exceed $[illegible]."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. On page 39, in lines 10 and 11, I move to change the total for "public works, Bureau of Navigation," to "$390,[illegible]."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. The other amendment which came over should be adopted—the one [illegible] to by the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment on page 73 is agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Mr. HALE. Let me state, Mr. President, that the bill was substantially finished on Saturday and all the amendments, with the exception of those adopted this morning, and at the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] the bill went over because he had one or two matters to submit. As soon as the Senator has concluded, I shall ask that a vote be taken on the bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. I move to add to the bill the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

Provided, That if contracts for the armor of the vessels herein provided for can not be made at a price which in his judgment is just and reasonable, he is hereby directed to expend so much of said $12,000,000 as may be necessary to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor plate, and to proceed therein to manufacture the armor for said vessels.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President. I had a conversation with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] this morning, and it is due to him for me to say that since that conversation the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] stated that it was his purpose to discuss the armor-plate matter. I gave the Senator from Maine to understand that, in my judgment, perhaps none of our friends on this side would discuss my amendment to the bill, but, whether I discuss it or not, it is the intention of the Senator from Georgia to do so.

Mr. HALE. Of course that rests with the Senator. I do not seek to interfere.

Mr. BACON. I did not know the Senator was going to make that statement. I did not know until after I came into the Chamber that he proposed to offer an amendment to the bill. I do not propose myself to offer an amendment, but there are some things in reference to armor plate about which I wish to ask the Senator from Maine.

Mr. HALE. At the proper time I shall make a point of order on the amendment, but I do not wish to cut off the Senator if he desires to discuss it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the purpose of the amendment is to place the Government, with reference to armor plate for war vessels, in the same position that it occupies with reference to the building of the hulls and machinery of the war vessels.

As the matter stands now, the Government is wholly at the mercy of unlawful trade combinations, and the testimony from the Navy Department discloses that at least since 1898 the Government has been letting its contracts for armor plate for the different vessels to a combination that has fixed prices and determined the bidders.

The Government is in no situation to resist a combination of the character I have mentioned. It has no armor-plate factory, and although armor plate for modern vessels costs about one-third of each of the vessels, it is utterly impossible, if these vessels are to be constructed, to escape a combination to extort an unjust price for armor from the Government.

Turning to page 74 of the bill, commencing on line 13, we find this provision with reference to the construction of the vessels independently of the armament and the armor:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may build any or all of the vessels herein authorized in such navy-yards as he may designate, and any of the vessels herein authorized may be built in such navy-yards, if, in his judgment, it is practicable to build them at such navy-yards, should it reasonably appear that the persons, firms, or corporations, or the agents thereof, holding for the construction of any of said vessels have entered into any combination, agreement, or understanding tending to the object, or purpose of which is to deprive the Government of fair, open, and unrestricted competition in letting contracts for the construction of any of said vessels.

That such a provision places the Government in an advantageous position nobody will question. If the shipbuilders of the country should combine for the purpose of extorting an unfair price from the Government for the building of the hulls, the machinery, and the like, then it becomes the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to resort to our own navy-yards, our own mechanics, our own machinery, for the purpose of building these vessels, quite independently of private shipbuilders.

But there is no such provision with reference to armor plate. All that the bill provides, indeed all that it can provide, unless some provision is made for the construction of an armor factory, is—

That the Secretary of the Navy be authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels authorized at such price as in his judgment is just and reasonable.

And that is the provision of this bill.

But he is directed to procure this armor, and if there is no Government shop to which he can go, if the vessels are to be built then the price of the armor combination must be paid.

The amendment I offer is simply to the effect that if the Secretary of the Navy shall be unable to contract for armor at prices that are just and reasonable then he shall use so much of the appropriation of $12,000,000 as may be necessary to construct an armor factory and proceed to manufacture therein the armor necessary for the ships of war.

Mr. President, that combinations have existed between the Bethlehem Steel Company and the Carnegie Steel Company since 1898 is testified to by the Departments. Admiral O'Neil, in a statement made to the House Naval Committee, gave us these figures:

The contract of 1898 with the Bethlehem Steel Company was $400 per ton. With the Carnegie Steel Company it was $400 per ton. The contract of 1899 with both the Carnegie and the Bethlehem companies was for $400 per ton. The contract of 1900 with the Bethlehem company was $430.20; with the Carnegie company it was $430.20. The contract of 1903 was $424.35 with one; it was $424.92 with the other. And the contract of 1904 was for $441.09 with the one, and $441.98 with the other.

Indeed, Department officials recognized the fact that until last year the only two bidders for the construction of armor plate were these two steel companies; also that they were in combination. They combined together unquestionably for the purpose of forcing from the Government such price as they were willing to exact for that which the Government had to have.

In 1900 there was added to the naval appropriation bill in conference a provision in effect the same as this amendment, and according to the testimony of Admiral O'Neil it was very efficient in bringing down the price of armor in the contracts under it; and we have a right to infer if it were not for that provision in the appropriation bill of 1900 a much larger price would have been then demanded and paid by the Government.

Under the call for bids for the year 1904, the contracts being let in 1903, a new competitor entered the field called the "Midvale Steel Company." In the biddings of 1900 the Midvale Steel Company had appeared; it made a bid; but by some process it was induced to withdraw its bid, and the contract was, as before, let to the two old companies that had been furnishing this character of material. But last year the Midvale Company bid to supply the entire 16,000 tons of armor that the Government needed at $395 per ton, while the Bethlehem and the Carnegie steel companies bid $453.07 per ton.

The Midvale Company proposed to supply all the armor at its lower price, but the Department instituted an inquiry and reached a conclusion that that company would be unable to supply all the armor that was needed as rapidly as it was needed. So instead of giving the Midvale Company the contract for 16,000 tons, it awarded it a contract for but 6,000 tons at $395 and awarded the rest of the contract, which was for 10,000 tons, to the Bethlehem and Carnegie steel companies at the rate of $453.07 per ton.

According to the testimony of Admiral O'Neil the Midvale company has commenced the getting out of the armor it contracted to supply under the contract of last year. That would indicate that there is a possibility of competition again. But who can doubt that just as soon as the Midvale company demonstrates its capacity and ability to supply armor plate in competition with the Bethlehem and the Carnegie companies the Midvale company will be taken into the combination, and soon, instead of two bidders fixing the price and distributing the contracts, we will have a union of three bidders fixing the price and determining the amount of armor each shall supply?

As I understand it, the Bethlehem and the Carnegie companies are members of the steel trust, and the putting in of bids and the fixing of a price is simply a scheme to deceive the public into believing that there is in reality competition, when in fact there is no competition.

It may doubtless be claimed that the price at which armor is being supplied is a reasonable and fair price, but if we take the testimony of those who are skilled in the manufacture of the article we must conclude that it is not a fair price, that, taking advantage of their ability to extort, these companies have resorted to extortion, and the United States, as a matter of course, suffers from the extortion.

I have here the statement made by Mr. Charles H. Cramp that is taken from his testimony as found in the report of the Industrial Commission of 1901, volume 14, page 420. I call the attention of the Senate to his statement upon the subject of armor of this character. He says:

The profit on armor making is something enormous. The people who make armor on their [illegible] them, or the jobs to which [illegible] enough to build a battle ship. * * * But the distinct [illegible] gave for the Government makes the money, and [illegible] would have had [illegible] in Europe they had the shops [illegible] the business [illegible] manage. Why, I would be willing to build a battle ship and hand the shop over to anyone for the profit on the armor. * * * That is what these businesses are in Europe.

A statement of that kind, it seems to me, should cause Senators to pause before new contracts for armor amounting to somewhere in the neighborhood of $8,000,000 shall be let without any power in the Government to protect itself.

There is no haste, Mr. President, in making contracts for the armor for these vessels, for according to the report of Admiral O'Neil there are unfinished now more than forty of the war vessels that are already provided for by previous acts of Congress. According to the showing in the report of the committee that reported the present naval appropriation bill in the House of Representatives, we find that there are twelve battle ships yet uncompleted, eight armored cruisers yet uncompleted, eight protected cruisers, two gunboats, two training ships, one training brig, six torpedo boats, and two steel tugs—forty or forty-one vessels in all; and they are in various stages of completion, ranging all the way from about 2 per cent of completion to 99.9 per cent.

The majority of these vessels are not yet half completed, so that if in letting the contracts for the armor for the vessels provided for in this bill the Secretary of the Navy shall feel called upon, if this amendment shall be adopted, to construct an armor factory, there will be ample time to construct it. It is estimated that it will require some $4,000,000 to construct such a factory, and the rest of the appropriation, the appropriation being $12,000,000 in all, may be used by the Secretary for the purpose of manufacturing the armor in the factory of the Government.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Has the Senator any estimate as to how long it would take to build an armor-plate factory and be ready [illegible] armor plate?

Mr. PATTERSON. I have not, but I know upon these terms——

Mr. HALE. I can say that we went over that years ago.

Mr. LODGE. It is a very old question.

Mr. HALE. It is an old question. It was then stated that it would take from three to five years to build an armor-plate factory and properly equip it and make armor with the same facility and with the same completeness that armor is made now in two or three private plants. I do not think that by hard pushing it could be done in less than three years. The Senator knows how the time in constructing all buildings runs out and takes longer than we expected them to take.

Mr. PATTERSON. Of course it is an old question. It has been debated in both branches of Congress for years and years, and the marvel of it is that the debate and the exposures connected with the debate have not resulted in something practical for the benefit of the Government.

But I wish to suggest to the Senator from Maine that, according to the united testimony and according to the estimates made by him in his exceedingly interesting and luminous speech upon the floor the other day, it requires at least five years to turn out a completed battle ship and a completed armored cruiser. If that is the case, three years of the five years may well be devoted to the construction of an armor-plate factory to be owned and operated by the Government. With forty-one vessels to be completed, with five years necessary for the completion of the armored ships provided for in this bill, three years might be devoted to the construction of an armor-plate factory and yet the vessels be ready for service at as early a date as they can be if no interruption of this kind should occur.

It seems to me, Mr. President, that the Government in a matter so important as this should not be left for all time, so far as any effort to have it otherwise has been seriously made, without providing itself with this absolute essential for the completion of its armored vessels. The evil will grow from year to year as Congress and the Departments and the people of the country become familiarized with the high prices that the Department is compelled to pay by reason of its inability to contest successfully with those who have a monopoly of this article. The country will become more indifferent, the Departments will also, and the injustice will increase from year to year, and no one can foretell where the injustice will end.

Therefore I ask the Senator from Maine, why is the amendment that I offer unacceptable? Why should he suggest that at some time hereafter he will make a point of order against the amendment? It puts it to the conscience of the Secretary of the Navy to say whether the price that is demanded is unjust and unreasonable, and if he is satisfied that it is, and not until then is he required to expend any of this appropriation for the purpose of putting the Government in a position to be independent of these unlawful trade combinations.

Mr. President, the amendment that should be offered is one appropriating a definite sum of money—in the neighborhood of $[illegible]—and making it obligatory upon the Navy Department to construct this armor-plate factory. I did not make the amendment in that form because I felt it would be subject to a point of order. I do not believe that the amendment as I have offered it is subject to a point of order.

Mr. HALE. I am not sure about that myself.

Mr. PATTERSON. I appeal to the Senator from Maine to allow this amendment to be annexed to his bill, because it does not impede in any way the construction of the vessels which the bill provides for.

Mr. HALE. I am not certain myself, in the way the Senator has drawn the amendment, whether it is subject to a point of order. Will the Senator have it read now in the form he has just alluded to?

Mr. PATTERSON. The Secretary has the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

The SECRETARY. After the word "reasonable," in line 21, of page 76, add the following:

Provided, That if contracts for the armor of the vessels herein provided for can not be made at a price which, in his judgment, is just and reasonable, he is hereby directed to expend so much of said $12,000,000 as may be necessary to erect a factory for the manufacture of armor plate and to proceed to manufacture the armor for said vessels.

Mr. HALE. I am by no means sure that the amendment is subject to a point of order. I am frank to say.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator a question, if he will yield to me just a moment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. ALLISON. As I understand it, the amendment of the Senator from Colorado provides that a portion of the $12,000,000 appropriated for armored vessels shall be used to build an armor-plate factory. There is no appropriation, I understand, in the bill for the vessels that are authorized to be built. The appropriations for armor and armor plate in the bill are for vessels already contracted for and possibly for armor contracted for—I am not sure.

Mr. PATTERSON. No. Mr. President, I think the Senator is mistaken. This is the language:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels herein authorized——

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PATTERSON (reading):

At such price as in his judgment is just and reasonable.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. That is to say, he is to make a contract; but there is no appropriation which accompanies the authorization to make a contract for these vessels.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, yes. It is the paragraph immediately preceding.

Mr. HALE. Yes; preceding that.

Mr. PATTERSON (reading):

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized, $12,000,000.

Then follows the paragraph I have just read, which authorizes him to use this $12,000,000 for the purchase of the armor and armament provided for in the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree, of course; but, if the Senator will allow me one word more—

Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $12,000,000.

Is that the only appropriation for armor or armament in the bill?

Mr. HALE. Yes; that is the only appropriation. Let me say to the Senator, we have always followed that rule; and it applies not only to vessels heretofore authorized, but authorized by the bill. Last year when we had inserted a clause of that kind the Secretary of the Treasury made contracts for the armor under that appropriation before the year expired. They do not do any actual work, but they make the contracts.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. Now, I should be glad to make an inquiry, because I think it is rather an important question. I see the phraseology does not quite bear me out in my understanding. I understood that there is in the bill no appropriation that would be made presently applicable to the vessels authorized now; that these appropriations are applicable to all the vessels already contracted for and authorized heretofore. If that be true, there will be no residuum from this appropriation to build an armor plant.

Mr. HALE. There may not be, but I will say to the Senator that while it is true that none of the $12,000,000 is likely to be expended during the next year, it will all go for the other ships, but it is applicable under the phraseology of the appropriation, if they could use it, and it ought to be applicable, because they want to have the power to go on and make contracts. But they will not spend any of the money and there will not be any overplus, of course.

Mr. ALLISON. But as I understand the situation as respects the Navy, the vessels already authorized and contracted for will largely more than take up this appropriation. There are already authorized vessels requiring armor and armament to a degree far beyond $12,000,000, without applying a dollar of it to the vessels herein authorized.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, there is nothing either in the bill or in the testimony before the House committee—I do not know whether or not testimony was given before the Senate committee—nor is there anything that the Senator from Maine has said which warrants the suggestion made by the Senator from Iowa. I take it that if the Secretary of the Navy were to use any of the money appropriated by this bill for the construction of others than the battle ship, the armored cruisers, and the minor vessels provided for, he would be proceeding in violation of law.

I do not suppose the $12,000,000 will be taken out of the Treasury and set aside as a purse for that particular purpose, but $12,- 000,000 are provided by this bill, and no portion of the $12,000,000 can lawfully be used for the construction of armor and armament for ships authorized under previous acts. The Secretary of the Navy, it seems to me, would be guilty of a very grave violation of law should he use money that would trench upon this $12,000,000 for vessels not authorized in this bill. In my opinion the language of the bill prohibits any other conclusion. It is clear; it is fixed; it is definite. It would be utterly impossible for the Committee on Naval Affairs to use language that would more definitely hold the $12,000,000 provided for in the paragraph I have read to the vessels, and the particular vessels, that are authorized in this bill.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. PETTUS. I desire to ask the Senator from Maine a question with reference to this matter. Was there not an appropriation of about $18,000,000 for armor plate with which to clothe the vessels that had been heretofore ordered to be built? Has not a contract already been made by the Navy Department for the armor that was authorized heretofore?

Mr. HALE. The contracts have all been made, even to and including the ships covered by the large programme of last year. There has not been any money yet expended, but contracts are already made for that. This provision of the Senator from Colorado, if it were put upon the bill, would apply only to vessels constructed this year, and it would not touch vessels provided for heretofore with respect to which contracts have been made. The Senator understands that we can not interfere with them.

Mr. PATTERSON. I have been very careful not to interfere with them, and I do not seek to interfere with them.

Mr. HALE. The Senator does not undertake to do that.

Mr. PATTERSON. Not at all. The purpose of the amendment is to secure for this Government an armor-plate factory if the Secretary of the Navy can not make satisfactory contracts, fair and reasonable contracts, for the armor that is used in the completion of the particular vessels provided for in this measure.

Mr. HALE. I so understand.

Mr. PATTERSON. That is the purpose, and no other. As a matter of course, if the factory is built, it will be at the command of the Government in all future years, and every law that may be passed for the manufacture of armor will be in view of its possible manufacture by the Government itself. The bill provides that armor plate will be made precisely as provided in the law for the construction of vessels themselves, namely, if the Secretary of the Navy can not secure an equitable and fair contract, then he will proceed to manufacture the vessels of the United States; and if it were the armor plate, he would proceed to manufacture the armor plate in the factory of the United States.

Mr. President, in view of what to me is a very plain admission by the Senator from Maine, that this armor is not immediately necessary; that it will be several years before the vessels will be in a condition to attach the armor to them, and since an armor-plate factory can be constructed within at least three years if the Government should proceed with the effort vigorously, I am frank to say that I can not see why it is the Senator from Maine will not consent to this amendment, that the Government may have the benefit of it while it is negotiating for armor plate for the vessels which have been provided for.

I am for many provisions against an amendment of this kind because I am not one who believes that additions to the Navy are going to cease. It is claimed, and I believe, that it is the purpose of the Senator from Maine, that when this programme is completed the United States will be, so far as its naval power is concerned, the second nation in the world—not in general tonnage, but in effective fighting tonnage. When this programme is concluded we will have passed Russia and Germany, and in fact almost every nation, and we will be next to France. But suppose this programme is completed, and the figures bear out the claim, that with this programme completed the United States will stand next to Great Britain.

My judgment is that American sentiment will not permit the United States at any time in the future to fall behind in its naval power any nation that it has once passed. If when this programme is completed we are in fact second to Great Britain, I have no hesitation in saying that American sentiment will not only justify, but it will require, that the United States shall continue second to Great Britain.

This Government has never taken a step in its naval programme that was a retrograde movement. It has never advanced beyond the naval power of another government and permitted itself at any time thereafter to fall behind that government. I believe, as firmly as I believe that I am standing here, that having passed France it means that the United States will keep in advance of France, and that an Administration would be held responsible for allowing the United States to fall behind a nation that it had once passed in the matter of the number and effective tonnage of its fighting ships.

Therefore, Mr. President, the construction of naval vessels is going to continue, and the pace that will be set by Germany and France is the pace that the United States will take and maintain, and Congress might as well understand that that is the standard by which it will judge the duties and responsibilities of the United States. Therefore millions and millions of dollars' worth of armor is to be constructed in the future. It is not merely with the completion of these ships that the necessity for armor will end. But it is the construction of additional vessels year by year not only to replace vessels that have gone out of service from age, but the construction of new vessels to maintain the status that the successful carrying out of the programme will secure.

One of the principal reasons for our large Navy and the more than doubling of the Army within the past ten years is the acquisition of the Philippines. The time has come when to discuss the breach of faith and the bad policy that accompanied the acquisition of those islands has little or no effect upon the American mind. As to the national immorality of the deed, as to the bad faith the acquisition of the islands developed in dealing with the people of those islands, as to the benefits that would accrue to the United States if the islands should be given their independence under some form of protectorate from the United States, I have never changed my views. But my views, in my opinion, are not now the views of the majority of the people of the country.

In 1898 those were the views of the country; in 1900 I believe the country entertained those views, but the progress of time has changed them. So I believe we will all have passed away and our children will have passed away and our grandchildren will have reached the age of manhood and stand with their feet upon the verge of the grave, by reason of accumulating years, and yet the Philippine Islands will be a part of the possessions of this country.

I recollect, Mr. President, the discussion in the Senate in 1898, not by reason of being present, but from reading, about the future of the Philippine Islands. Scarcely a word was then uttered by any Senator which did not indicate that it was his desire and belief that at some time in the near future the Philippine Islands would be given their independence and the United States would assist by their government in its early years. But all that has changed.

I well remember the eloquent and telling speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] and of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER]. I recollect in those early years hearing the speech of the junior Senator from New York [Mr. DEPEW]. Every one of these speeches breathed the spirit of the Declaration of Independence, and the provisions applicable in the near-by future to our then possessions. But how that has changed! The Senator from New York says that the CHAUNCEY DEPEW who made the speech which was quoted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK] is dead. The Senator from New York has received new light, and he says that now he stands for the permanent retention of the Philippine Islands. The voice of the Senator from Wisconsin is muffled when he presents this question to the public, so that it is scarcely heard.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. PATTERSON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean by that observation?

Mr. PATTERSON. The idea I intended to convey——

Mr. SPOONER. That is what I want.

Mr. PATTERSON. Is that he, like the rest of his colleagues, so far as I have heard them discuss the question, has about reached the conclusion that it is the duty of the United States to retain the islands for both commercial and humanitarian reasons, and that at least the day is far, far distant when the people of the Philippine Islands will enjoy any benefits from the principles of the Declaration of Independence.

Mr. SPOONER. That is what the Senator meant?

Mr. PATTERSON. That is what "the Senator" meant, and I have——

Mr. BACON (to Mr. PATTERSON). He has changed his mind.

Mr. PATTERSON. No; I will not say that the Senator from Wisconsin has changed his mind. It is simply a process of evolution. It has been gradual, but certain.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course we do not always know what processes change our mind. The mental operations are sometimes peculiar. But I am not conscious of having changed my mind or my position on the question of the perpetual retention of the Philippine Archipelago in the slightest degree, nor have I ever said, nor can the Senator find anything in the observations which I have from time to time submitted to the Senate upon which to predicate reasonably even any such imputation—a change of mind upon my part.

I said in the beginning that I would not take the Philippine Archipelago for trade, and that I would not vote for the treaty if, in my opinion, it involved the perpetual domination by the United States of the Philippine Archipelago. I have never failed to reiterate that statement in any speech which I have made. I have resisted all efforts to project into the future improvident pledges as to the Philippines. I have resisted any attempt—I resisted the efforts of the Senator from Colorado—to put a time limit upon the discharge of obvious duty by the United States in the Philippines. I have wanted the hands of the people of the United States left free upon that subject, and the ultimate determination as to what should be done with the Philippines and when it should be done left to the people. Has the Senator ever heard anything different from that from me?

I have expressed, and it came from my heart, the belief that when the time came, as I thought it would come, and I think now it will come sooner than I used to think it might, that the people of the Philippine Archipelago are capable of autonomous government, and they ask the people of the United States for it, they would receive it. I have no doubt of the liberality and the justice with which the people of the United States will deal with the people of the Philippine Archipelago. I have known, however, that only by control, as the sovereign, would the United States do any good thing for the people of the Philippine Islands.

I was not willing, as my friends seemed to be, that, having started the work of building up a people in the Philippine Islands, after having acquired the cession of the archipelago, the Government of the United States should run like a coward incontinently and fix a time two or three years hence, as the Senators on the other side thought wise to do, when that people should become independent and be abandoned by the people of the United States.

I have made many mistakes in my life, but I do not think now, and I never have thought, that I made any mistake in voting for the treaty, which could not have been ratified by the Republican membership of the Senate alone, and which had the support of very prominent Democrats on the outside of Congress. I have felt, and does not the Senator think, that we have made great progress in the Philippines?

Mr. PATTERSON. Whenever the Senator from Wisconsin concludes.

Mr. SPOONER. I beg the Senator's pardon for interjecting into his remarks a sane speech upon the Philippines. I forgot.

Mr. PATTERSON. Literally, perhaps, the Senator from Wisconsin is consistent. I do not desire to do the Senator from Wisconsin or any other Senator the slightest injustice, but my reference to him was based more on the spirit of the speech he made [illegible] that is evinced in his [illegible] upon that question.

I was impressed with the view, having read the first speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, that he was like many Democrats, who felt that the better way to solve the problem and to end the [illegible] to approve the treaty and then make speeches and effective arrangements to grant to the people of the Philippine Islands the independence that I believe they are entitled to receive and qualified to maintain. That was the spirit of the speech of the Senator in 1898; and if his [illegible] construed [illegible] favoring at some [illegible] of the Philippines [illegible] he nor I will live to see a consummation of it.

Mr. President, one of the most striking speeches to me on this subject was made by the present Secretary of War only Saturday night in New York at a banquet given by the Ohio Club in that city. I had always [illegible] Secretary Taft as entertaining the view that at some [illegible] early time the Philippine people should be given their [illegible] independence. I bear tribute to his administration in the Philippine Islands. As between the Philippine people and the American exploiters, he has stood for the Philippine people to such an extent that those who would despoil Filipinos of their land and franchises have designated Governor Taft, now Secretary of War, more of a Filipino than an American. But in his New York speech, from the Associated Press report, which seems to be correct in substance, I find these statements:

"[illegible] 'Are the Philippines capable of self-government?' [illegible] have; but they are utterly incapable and unprepared [illegible]

How far does that remove the people of the Philippine Islands from ultimate independence? They are utterly incapable, according to our present Secretary of War, late the governor of those islands, and unable to have the slightest franchise.

I can not conceive of a people possessing the qualities accorded to the Filipinos by ex-Governor Taft who are not capable of self-government, at least to the extent of maintaining a government that is sufficient for them and to give them the degree and quality of order that is necessary to secure a law-observing community. A brave people and a courteous people; and yet a brave people and a courteous people are declared by the Secretary of War to be utterly incapable of and unable to have the slightest franchise. Then again, says Secretary Taft:

> I am asked why I do not say we are going to give them their independence. I say no, with great emphasis. I wish to impress upon you that unless the present government is a success all success of other governments is gone.

These gentlemen have simply kept pace with the growing public sentiment in the United States, one that I deplore, but which the country must necessarily confront. There are logical and natural reasons for this change of attitude. The reasons are not of a noble kind, of an elevating kind. They are those that appeal to the commercial sense of the people of the United States and not to a high standard of morality.

Mr. President, the people of the United States consist of about 80,000,000 units. There are something less than 20,000,000 men. I think it would be safe to say that nine out of ten of those 20,000,000 will acquire property, if they can do so legally, and not stop to investigate the moral questions that are connected with the transaction.

We witness that in the stock-jobbing operations of the country; in the legal contests that are waged in the courts, in one city and another city; we witness it in the transactions of our friends and neighbors. If such is the disposition of nine-tenths of the units who make up the American nation, the American nation in dealing with the acquisition of property will be apt to act in conformity with the course pursued by the units. Therefore I look forward to the independence of the Philippines as not within the bounds of reasonable possibility.

There are other reasons for this change of sentiment. I should first refer to other evidences of it. The pulpit of the country, Mr. President, either favors the retention of the Philippines or is silent; the popular literature of the country either favors their retention or is silent; many of the leading periodicals of the party that has stood most strenuously for the independence of the Philippine Islands now favor their retention.

But in addition to that there are commercial reasons. Not a session passes but that Congress enacts legislation which grapples the Philippine Islands closer and closer in permanent bonds with the Union. The bill that is championed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], that extends the coastwise laws of the United States to the trade between the United States and the Philippine Islands, is another grip of that kind. Americans are engaged in securing vast property interests in those islands. Only the other day we read of a serious proposition—and I have no doubt it will be presented to Congress ere long—to guarantee the interest upon $40,000,000 of bonds for the construction of railroads in the Philippine Islands.

With Americans controlling the railroads which are to be built, the sugar, the tobacco, the rice, the hemp, and other plantations, the great timber concessions, the development of new agricultural possibilities, the establishment of manufacturing establishments, which will undoubtedly be found there in large numbers in the not distant future, it will be utterly impossible, no matter what the sentiment of the people of the country may be, to secure a vote in favor of the dissolution of the bonds that bind the Philippine Islands to us. Dollars never appeal in vain to dollars, and the commercial interests of the Philippines, the financial investment by Americans in the Philippines, will prevent the result that so many good people in the United States have earnestly desired.

We find the people of the country are appealed to from two standpoints—their commercial sense and their humanities. The humane people of the country as a body, or at least a very large proportion of them, have been led to believe that the future welfare of the Philippine people depends upon their being retained under American control. They believe that the American government of the Philippines is for the upbuilding, the enlightenment, and the civilization of the masses of the Filipino people.

Upon the other hand, we find such glowing appeals as that made by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] on Saturday, in which the Philippines were pictured as the threshold of the Orient and Manila as the point at which the interchange of the vast commodities of that vast section was to take place. You appeal upon the one hand to the cupidity and the commercial sense of the nonreligious people, and you use the language of cant and hypocrisy to the religious people of the country. The result of it is that both classes combine for the purpose of holding the Philippine Islands in subjection.

This can result in no good to the Philippine people, Mr. President. There can be no equality between the American in the islands and the Filipino. The Filipino is the negro of the Philippine Islands; the American is the white man who lives with but is not of the Filipino. The white man—the American—is to be the master and the Filipino the slave.

I read a letter in the statement, printed at the request of the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] but a few weeks ago, and it precisely describes the relation of the Filipino to the masterful and enterprising American in connection with his industrial enterprises. A large number of Filipinos were transported to a point at the end of a railroad track, the road being in process of construction. They went to work, only to find that the Filipino was receiving but one-fourth of the wages that were being paid to white labor. The Filipinos were confined in pestilence-breeding holes and shanties, the food with which they were supplied was wholly insufficient, and taxes to the point to which they had been brought to turn back other Filipinos who were being shipped in for the purpose that they had abandoned.

The Filipino is despised by the American in the Philippines. Talk with an American and he speaks of the Filipino with the utmost contempt. The end of it all is that the Philippines are to be a colony of the United States that will be populated with comparatively few Americans, owning the land and the timber and the plantations and the franchises, and living as did the barons of old with the masses of the Filipino people as their peons. That is the result as certainly, Mr. President, as time moves on, and that result has been determined upon by the dominating people of the United States upon its merits.

Much as I regret the retention of the Philippines and deplore the outcome as I have suggested, I have no doubt but that they will be retained. I perceive in all estimates and in all provisions for the Army and the Navy (Congress is now considering it), first, by the fact that we are second now to Great Britain in effective fighting naval force, and that we will maintain that position at whatever hazard; second, the Philippine Islands will continue to be a colonial possession of the United States, and their defense and retention must always be calculated upon when we are making provisions for our fighting forces.

Mr. President, the United States would spend as many dollars, would put as many lives in the defense of the Philippines against foreign aggression as it would to defend a State in the Union, and it would be equally as liberal in money and lives to secure such protection in the Philippine Islands if any leader with such power and influence could be found to cause Filipinos to rise, with whatever might and power, to secure their independence. The conditions are not as I would have them, and I have been led, as the result of very much reflection and deliberation, to speak with open mind my views upon these two great questions.

Coming back to the amendment which I have offered, I will say that I can see no reason why it should not be accepted by the chairman of the committee, because it is a means of future defense to the government against the aggressions and extortions of unlawful trusts and combinations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not care to discuss the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. PATTERSON], nor do I intend to enter into any general discussion of the naval appropriation bill. I have been on all occasions a friend of an American Navy. I have voted for it and advocated it from time to time, and I am still in favor of a measure commensurate with our wealth and commercial necessities. I believe we have reached a point where it would be a good policy to pause in the construction, at least, to provide for more ships until we have completed those already provided for. I am not one of those who think we ought to be governed in our expenditures by what some other nation may do.

If Great Britain finds it necessary to maintain a navy of remarkable strength, it does not follow, in my judgment, that we ought to do the same thing. Great Britain is differently situated from what we are. She is responsible upon her shipping for the existence of her people. She can have a blockade set up in connection with her ports, and her people may starve. Britain can be shut off by any hostile fleet. So it is necessary that Great Britain should have a great navy.

I think we were for many years without a proper Navy. I believe now, when we have completed the ships on the stocks that have been contracted for, that we shall have at least a sufficient number. I do not believe that we are justified in going on and increasing our Navy until we shall increase the taxes in such a way that they will become a great burden upon the people.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please suspend for one moment while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the title of which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 2259) to regulate shipping in trade between ports in the United States and ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, between ports or places in the Philippine Archipelago, and for other purposes.

Mr. HALE. I ask unanimous consent that that bill be informally laid aside, and that the consideration of the naval appropriation bill be proceeded with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maine asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be informally laid aside, and that the Senate continue the consideration of the naval appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I saw in a reputable newspaper either yesterday or this morning that the American people ought to demand a navy second to no navy in the world. The American people have been demanding of their legislative representatives a reputable and respectable navy, and I do not know but what that fever may attack the American people—the idea that we must have a navy as big as that of any other country.

I do not know now but what the American people would agree, if they had an opportunity for passing upon the question, that the present Navy is not big enough. But, Mr. President, I know no way of taking the expression of the American people on this subject, and so I must rely upon my own judgment. I myself can not see anywhere signs of impending trouble which require such a great navy as it is apparently the policy to build. This bill, carrying an appropriation of almost $67,000,000, is nearly one-seventh of the estimated the expected revenues of this Government for the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made. It is too large by a considerable sum, having reference to our expected revenues. When the ships for which we have already contracted are completed, our expenditures yearly must be much greater than they now are. I understand it will take between eighty and one hundred million dollars to complete the contracts already made, and it will take at least $120,000,000 next year to maintain the American Navy and provide for the carrying out of contracts which will then be existing if this bill becomes a law.

I listened with great interest to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. HALE]. I am sure nobody can question his interest in the American Navy. I believe that he sounded a proper warning to the American people when he stated that we had reached a point where we ought at least to halt and consider.

Mr. President, I am not going to vote for this great appropriation, and I presume I shall therefore be classed among those who are not in favor of the American Navy. Against that imputation I will place the votes that I have cast in this body during the last twenty-five years. Because I have been in favor of a respectable navy, a proper navy, it does not follow that I am to take the opinion of any commodore or admiral or anybody in the Navy Department as to what should be the size of the Navy. We are legislating with reference to the Navy, and have been for years in this body as to the character of the ships and the number of ships on information we have received from the Navy Department.

Mr. President, I am one of those who believe that we are sent here to legislate not upon their judgment, but upon our own. While I may not know how to build a ship, or what is the best type of ship to be built, I am as well qualified—or else I have been misrepresented—as any man in the Navy Department to determine these questions, and I do not intend they shall determine them for me.

Mr. President no one can tell what the development may bring on in the naval fighting world will demonstrate. So far as it has gone, I think, it demonstrates, Mr. President, that great battle ships are perhaps not so valuable as the world for many years past has believed, and that another and entirely different type of ship may be more dangerous to an enemy and more beneficial to the nation making the inquiry.

I have not been very much interested in the development of the submarine ships. I will admit that it is still an open question whether or not they will be a success; but I believe it would be very much easier for the Government of the United States if we would stop out the production of battle ships, and put out so many submarines, and turn our attention to the development of the submarine type of vessel, for which money is appropriated by the bill. If I had my way, if I could control it, I would provide that the Navy Department should not build any more battle ships for a number of years, and put them on the shelf for us to see in a few years what they are able to do with them and what we are able to do with them.

Mr. President, having said that much I am ready, so far as I am concerned, to vote on the bill.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, there are two or three things which I desire to have noted before we pass from the consideration of this bill.

I will not enter into any general discussion of the Philippine question, which has indirectly been brought into consideration by reason of its influence upon the appropriations for the naval establishment, but I very much hope that the anticipations of the junior Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] may not be realized. I trust that the time will come when, for one reason or another, the United States will cease to exercise sovereignty in the Philippine Islands. I am impelled to that hope by two very different reasons. I hope in the course of time the conscience, if I may so speak, of the American people will urge that as a course which I think is the proper course—the granting of self-government to the people of the Philippine Islands.

I think possibly a stronger reason will be that the time may not be far distant when the American people will come to a realization of the fact that the retention of the Philippine Islands is not a paying investment from the standpoint of dollars and cents, and I think that this debate and the disclosure of the enormous money expenditure which we have made and must continue to make on their account will have some influence in arousing public attention to the question whether or not it is a paying investment, the more particularly when experience shows, as it surely will, that no commerce which it is possible for us to have with those islands can ever amount to as much, or even nearly as much, as they will cost us every year. But I can not stop to elaborate and demonstrate that now, as easily as I think it can be done to the satisfaction of any unprejudiced and impartial person.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, just one word, if it will not interrupt the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. PATTERSON. I want to say, Mr. President, that I share in the hope of the Senator from Georgia that the conscience of the American people will be so aroused as that what I have suggested shall not in fact occur, but I fear and believe to the contrary.

Mr. BACON. The Senator will note that my hope is based upon both the conscience and the interest of the people of the United States, and I strongly hope that the former may be greatly quickened by the latter.

I was about to say, Mr. President, when the Senator asked leave to interrupt me, that I hope this debate will arouse to some extent the attention of the people of the United States and contribute to the conviction of the unprofitableness of the Philippines as an investment, and I think the statement of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, with reference to the influence which the retention of the Philippine Islands has upon the magnitude of naval expenditures, is a most important contribution to the information which it is necessary that the people of the United States should have upon this subject.

I very much regret that the very interesting and instructive speech of the Senator from Maine has not yet appeared in the RECORD, and for this reason I am compelled to refer to it simply from memory of some important statements made by him.

Mr. HALE. I will say to the Senator that I felt very mortified myself when I came to look at the notes to find how long my speech was. It was a longer speech than I ever before made in the Senate, and much longer than I ever shall make hereafter. It was so covered by interruptions, which were pertinent and just, and so many tables had to be adjusted, that I never got any opportunity—as I have been managing this bill—to look at it until yesterday. That is the reason it has not been published.

Mr. BACON. I am simply expressing my regret, because it was an exceedingly interesting speech and I should have been very glad to have looked it over carefully in print; but as I have not had as yet that opportunity, I will state, if I remember correctly, that the Senator from Maine, in response to an inquiry made by myself in a colloquy which he kindly permitted while he was on the floor, stated the fact that it was the retention of the Philippine Islands—the fact that because we were in possession of the Philippine Islands, and in consequence that the duty devolved upon us the duty and necessity of defending them and of being prepared for their defense—that that fact alone created the necessity now for an increase in the Navy. In other words, that but for the necessities and duties imposed upon us by the possession of the Philippines, our present Navy, as considerably increased under construction, would be adequate for our needs, and that the vast expenditure which we must make in continuing to increase our Navy must be charged up to the account of our possession of the Philippines. I say that is a most important contribution, Mr. President, to the question whether the Philippines are or can be a paying investment on the part of the United States, and one about the correctness of which there can be, I presume, no possible doubt. To that great annual expense, not only in building but maintaining a great navy, must be added an annual expense, even as now reduced, of not less than $[illegible] on account of the army we maintain in the Philippines, to say nothing of at least $500,000,000 we have already expended to maintain our sovereignty over them.

I do not propose to pursue the question which has been discussed here, it is true, only partially, but still with very much interest, as to the attitude which the people of this country will bear toward the Philippine Islands. I wish, however, to put in the RECORD in this connection what I consider to be a very valuable expression in relative thereto which was recently made by the distinguished senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I will premise by saying that the utterance of the Senator, which I am about to read, and also that which has fallen to-day from the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], have inspired me with renewed hope that we are not always to continue upon a policy which I conceive to be inconsistent with the traditions and principles of our Government, and which, I am thoroughly convinced, will not prove to our advantage from a commercial, political, social, or military standpoint.

The Washington Post of October 13, 1903, contained an extract from a speech made by the Senator from Vermont at a reunion of the "Association of the Vermont Civil War Officers" in the preceding week which I am very glad to have the opportunity now to read, in order that it may go into the RECORD as a most important contribution to the thought of the country at this time and, as I think, a very high tribute to the Senator who uttered it. I would particularly ask that the reasons for the faith of the Senator be marked, and I will particularly emphasize the fact that the reasons which he gives are equally as gratifying to me as the conclusions to which he comes.

The speech, the extract from which is found in this excerpt from the Washington Post, is as follows:

> The government of a people or a country by another people or country not contiguous is, at the best, experimental and temporary. Such a condition may last a long time, but it can not be permanent. With training and [illegible] human nature of the people to wish to govern themselves [illegible] We shall make some mistakes, of course, [illegible] but I believe we shall be able to carry ourselves true to the principles [illegible] We shall be our own judges in the premises. If I [illegible] the future people of the American [illegible] I would be a lifelong [illegible] the northern [illegible] reason it [illegible] Africa [illegible] the latter in God's good time. Franklin said in [illegible] he was wise man. But the other [illegible] the Atlantic, west to the Pacific and south by the Rio Grande and the Gulf. And within these boundaries may the historic Government of our country remain, its executive, legislative, and judiciary, and the voting population that makes that Government.

I alluded to the Philippine question more for the purpose of reading that extract than to express any views in connection therewith, and I shall not pursue it further. When two such leaders as the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Wisconsin express such views, I refuse to abandon the hope that the day is not far distant when we shall surrender to the Filipinos their sovereignty over their land, and that both on their account and our own as well.

Mr. President, I wish to say a word about the provision in this bill for the purchase of armor plate. I will premise what I have to say by reading the provision in the bill, which is the last one found in it:

> Armor and armament: To enable the Secretary of the Navy to contract for armament and armor of domestic manufacture [illegible] vessels herein authorized, [illegible]
>
> The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels herein authorized at such prices as in his judgment is just and reasonable.

Mr. ALLISON. "Herein authorized?"

Mr. BACON. "Herein authorized." I will read it again.

Mr. HALE. The appropriation precedes.

Mr. BACON. The appropriation of $12,000,000 for armor and armament precedes. The words "herein authorized" do not occur there; but in the subsequent clause of the sentence in the same paragraph the words "herein authorized" do occur, which relate exclusively to the contract to be made for armor:

> The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels herein authorized, at such prices as in his judgment is just and reasonable.

Mr. President, I have no hope, in anything I may say, to affect the action of the Senate upon this provision; but I have two purposes in view in calling the attention of the Senate to it. One is it is possible that the consideration of the fact that there is at least still some attention paid to the proposition, that there are still some protesting, may have some influence upon these armor-plate factories in the price which they shall fix and exact from the Government, because at last that is what it means. They fix and exact what they please. There may be some benefit in calling attention to it, which, of course, there will be none as to any influence upon the vote of the Senate.

The other consideration which moves me to say anything on the subject is to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that after one of the most determined contests Congress has ever made with any of those who have contractual relations with the Government, extending over a period of eight years, there has been on the part of Congress the most perfect and complete and unmitigated surrender of its contention.

In 1895 and 1896 I had the honor and the very great pleasure to serve upon the Naval Committee, of which at that time the present chairman was a most honored member. Although then not its chairman, he was the ranking member next to the chairman, who was Senator Cameron, of Pennsylvania. At that time the attention of the country and of Congress was aroused to what was conceived to be the enormous extortion of the armor-plate manufacturers in dealing with the Government, and thereupon the Naval Committee was instructed by the Senate to make investigation as to whether the armor-plate factories were dealing in good faith and in a good spirit with the United States Government.

A protracted hearing was had before the committee, at all the sittings of which I was present, I think, without exception. There were examined a number of witnesses, naval officers, the former Secretary of the Navy, and the then Secretary of the Navy, and the armor manufacturers themselves, the owners of these great establishments, including Mr. Carnegie in person and the head of the Bethlehem factory, whose name I now do not remember. The testimony taken in that investigation is in print and makes a book of probably one-third, if not a half, the thickness of that [illegible] a copy of the annual report of Secretary of the Navy with accompanying documents, in which the whole thing is gone through with most thoroughly.

Prior to that investigation Secretary of the Navy, who was Mr. [illegible], had himself instituted an investigation in which he [illegible] to be had through experts, including naval [illegible] in the manufacture of armor plate, and he had come to the conclusion, if my memory is not inaccurate, and if it is the Senator from Maine will, I am sure, correct me, that after allowing to the armor-plate manufacturers the most liberal profit $400 per ton was a proper estimate of the amount which should be paid by the United States Government for the armor. If I remember aright, in per cent profit upon the cost as it was then constituted was allowed to these manufacturers, and it included interest on the investment and a most liberal allowance for annual depreciation of the plant. The committee came to the conclusion that $400 was a proper price, and in [illegible] such a provision.

While I have Maine and Bethlehem in mind I am endeavoring to state it from memory to avoid the unnecessary consumption of time. I may not state it correctly, and if I am incorrect I know the Senator from Maine, who is entirely familiar with it, will correct me. If I recollect aright, in the next appropriation bill Congress stood upon the recommendation of the Naval Committee in which it said that $400 was a liberal provision, and it stipulated that in the contracts for armor that amount should not be exceeded. According to my recollection the armor-plate manufacturers refused to make any contracts at that price, and in the next Congress, in order that the ships, the hulls of which had been commenced, might not be unduly delayed, while there was no recession from the position of the Congress as to what was a proper compensation for armor, Congress authorized $400 per ton. It conceded that because compelled to do so, still contending, however, that $400 was a proper amount.

If I am not mistaken, in that debate, either that or the next year, the Senator from Maine himself, while taking a most conservative attitude throughout the debate, which will be remembered by all who were then here, said that these armor-plate manufacturers had taken advantage of the Government and that as soon as they had the opportunity of the Government, constructed there, [illegible] the Government was in their power. To use the language of the Senator, "they had proceeded to put the knife into us."

The extra $100 was allowed that year as a concession rather than [illegible] There was no other establishment in the country which could make the armor [illegible] and prior to that time, the amounts which [illegible] paid [illegible] The plain inference [illegible] Herbert in his report [illegible] which they contended, that their price must be paid or their shops should run and put them to the [illegible].

Mr. President, I am not stating this for the purpose of showing the struggle we have been through, and I am coming to the point where it will be seen how pertinently—and if I did not fear the term might be taken [illegible]—Congress has [illegible]

After various contests had been waged in this Chamber with the utmost earnestness and determination, in 1890 Congress finally came to the conclusion that if the armor-plate manufacturers would not come to terms and if they would not be reasonable the Government would erect a factory; and in that year this provision was put into the bill which passed June 7, 1900, which, I say, was the culmination of the fight.

There is where we came to what we said should be the parting of the ways. There is where we took our stand and said we are not going to be dominated by this great monopolistic concern, and I do not use the word monopolistic in any offensive or abusive sense. I mean simply to express a fact that they did have an absolute, unquestioned monopoly, and that they exacted their own terms from us. In the act of June 7, 1900, there is this provision:

> That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract armor of the best quality for any or all vessels above referred to, provided such contracts can be made at a price which in his judgment is reasonable and [illegible]

That was not a radical condition; that was conservative—

> In case he is unable to make contracts for armor under the above conditions

That is, at a price which is reasonable and equitable—

> he is hereby authorized and directed to purchase a site for and to erect thereon a factory for the manufacture of armor, and the sum of $[illegible] is hereby appropriated toward the erection of said factory

Now, Mr. President, I say that is the last stand we have ever made, and that even after we have [illegible] condition, [illegible] to the question of the price of armor plate.

The fact to which I wish to call the particular attention of the Senate is that, although less than at one time charged, we are now paying the prices which were the cause of the great struggle that the Senate made, and we are now paying the prices which were the cause of the insertion in the appropriation act of 1900 of that provision. In other words, we thought those prices were then such that they were an imposition upon the Government [illegible] on account of them, in order that the Government might be freed from such imposition, we would make a provision for the construction of a factory at the cost of $1,000,000 and with the same [illegible] we have not in the bill any provision under which the Secretary of the Navy would be justified in not contracting for armor at any price which they might seek to impose.

There is nothing in the bill which would [illegible] the Secretary to refuse to contract for the armor even if the prices exacted were nor in his opinion "reasonable and just." There is no condition and no recourse to any precautions for the future protection of the Government even in case the Secretary should [illegible] or Congress conclude that the prices exacted were unreasonable and extortionate. At one former stage in the struggle we did provide a precaution for the protection of the Government in case armor could not be obtained at a reasonable and just price, and in since failing to do so it is an utter, unconditional, abject surrender of the contest which the Senate and the House waged in a most determined manner for five or six years. It was a question who should yield—whether the United States Government should yield and submit to extortionate prices [illegible] who made the armor plate in their factories should themselves yield and make it at reasonable prices. We proposed [illegible] force them to reasonable prices by ourselves constructing [illegible] have absolutely abandoned the contest and without condition we have surrendered at discretion.

Mr. ALLISON. Has the Senator any data which shows the price now paid for armor?

Mr. BACON. Yes, sir; I have it here.

Mr. ALLISON. I would be glad to have the Senator state it.

Mr. BACON. I shall be very glad to state it. I have no information except that which is contained in the report of the Secretary of the Navy. I will state to the Senate before reading this that the price which was [illegible] that which would be satisfactory to it in the year [illegible] year when we put that provision [illegible]

The act of March 3, 1899, [illegible] they would not [illegible] it. [illegible] appropriation act [illegible] we would erect a plant, we would [illegible] rate or we would erect a [illegible] The plain inference [illegible] neighborhood of having a [illegible] between $400 and $500 [illegible] naval [illegible] the manufacturers [illegible] from thousands of Congress [illegible] armor [illegible] at we should leave it absolutely to the Department to determine, and that has been the direction given to it from that day to this.

Congress has ceased to talk about it, has ceased to make any effort about it, and after having for years made the struggle, after having gotten up to the point where we absolutely appropriated $4,000,000 for the construction of a plant, we have since [illegible] not even say to the Secretary of the Navy [illegible] at last it will be a question how much will these factories [illegible] and extort from the Government of the United States. [illegible] say in that regard we have got to comply [illegible]

Mr. President, I recollect that in that debate it was urged, and I think very truly, that if we put up this plant and were in a position where we could make armor it would be a paying investment [illegible] and of armor.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator stated a few moments ago that we are paying now the price we were paying in 1900 when we incorporated this provision in the law. Does the Senator remember [illegible]

Mr. BACON. I think it was $400 when we incorporated it, if I am not mistaken.

Mr. SPOONER. What is it now?

Mr. BACON. [illegible] the present price. I will ask the Senator from Maine if he can give us the information?

Mr. HALE. It is $398 now.

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, no.

Mr. BACON. It is not so stated in this book.

Mr. PATTERSON. That was the contract for 6,000 tons with the Midvale Steel Company. At the same time that they let the [illegible] to the Bethlehem and Carnegie Steel Company for $458 [illegible]

Mr. HALE. I was giving the lowest bid.

Mr. PATTERSON. That was the lowest bid. The Midvale Company bid for all of it at $398 and it only got 6,[illegible] [illegible] will permit me, [illegible] exclusive of royalty, for the [illegible] 3.07, making $458. For the [illegible] not paying the royalty. The [illegible] they will pay the royalty themselves. Our [illegible]

[illegible] N. They will pay the royalty, at $398 a ton.

[illegible] That is what they propose doing. They will [illegible] and it will result in a claim [illegible] the royalty on the plate [illegible] Senator from Georgia, because I was a [illegible] with him some five years since——

[illegible] well.

[illegible] £107, [illegible] ns of the [illegible] not supply two battle [illegible] much less we are paying for our [illegible] we would erect a plant, we [illegible] to our authorities [illegible] the manufacturers and our Government, and for that reason they did not exercise the power delegated to them in the act of 1900 to build a $1,000,000 work. It would have required [illegible]

[illegible] has said is in further illustration of the argument I have made as to the surrender of the Senate in that respect, because my recollection is that the Senator from California, who was then, as he states, a member of the committee, was one of the most active members of that committee in the contention that the prices charged were unreasonable.

Mr. PERKINS. I think so, Mr. President, and I would think so yet had I not investigated the matter thoroughly. I went to capitalists. I had a friend go to the Illinois Steel Company, who had a plant ample and sufficient for doing this work. It was proposed informally that they would take a contract from the Government at the rate fixed; but they said, "We have no assurance as to how much we shall get hereafter. The ballistic test of this armor plate is subject to the whims of your naval officers, who may reject it, and hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth be [illegible] armor plates." The last answer to pay friend from Georgia is that capitalists would not build an armor-plate plant to manufacture armor plate for the Government, and therefore until we [illegible]

Mr. BACON. What does the Senator mean by saying that they would [illegible]?

Mr. PERKINS. They declined to do it, because it did not offer them the same inducements that it did to manufacture steel rails and structural steel for buildings, bridges, and other works which require iron and steel. In other words, a manufacturer said to me, "I can make 10 per cent, aye, 20 per cent, more upon manufacturing structural steel for bridges than in making armor plate."

I dislike to interrupt the Senator, and I only interject here in justice to our naval officers, because they believe this price is [illegible] and fair, and judging by what Great Britain pays for [illegible] what Germany pays for the Krupp steel armor plate, and what Russia paid, our Government is doing better today than either of those countries in price.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, the question as to what is paid by [illegible] for the question. They may be subjected to the same [illegible] that we are. I suppose that when the question comes up with them they point to what we pay here for armor. So this thing is balanced [illegible] one side and then on the other. I do not know what steel costs now——

Mr. SPOONER [illegible]

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me just a moment——

Mr. SPOONER. I have not interrupted the Senator.

Mr. BACON. I beg pardon. Go ahead.

Mr. SPOONER. No; I am waiting for the Senator to finish [illegible] I only wanted to ask a question for information, [illegible]

Mr. BACON. The Senator is at perfect liberty to interrupt me, and I always yield to him with pleasure. I do not remember [illegible] what the price of steel is now, but I remember [illegible] was made the steel [illegible] was worth $17 a ton, and [illegible] was put through certain processes of manufacture [illegible] they required [illegible] ment. [illegible] in the neighborhood [illegible] of the United States.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. BACON. Now, in that connection [illegible] mit me. I will say that a ton of steel [illegible] desks. If I [illegible] hear the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator will allow me just a question for information. I advocated the incorporation in that law of the [illegible] at which was [illegible] the last armor plate after the [illegible] of the law which [illegible]

Mr. BACON. I do not [illegible] later [illegible] to [illegible] of the [illegible] that we [illegible] I do not recollect the fact that [illegible] to the discretion of the Department. I remember that the contention was that the [illegible] in turning the matter over to the [illegible] officer, reserving only to Congress the [illegible] ating whatever money this officer and the manufacturers agreed upon.

That view prevailed, and that was the last of it. That is what I say was the surrender. And from that day to this there has never been a condition in the appropriation; from that day to this Congress has virtually put it away from itself and said it would not consider the question, involving [illegible] whether the price was right or wrong, but would leave it to the Department.

I do not see how under the phraseology of this bill the Secretary of the Navy has any discretion whatever. He is not even vested with the discretion to take it or not as he may consider the price "reasonable and just." But it is said that he must get it at prices reasonable and just. What is the effect if a price is named to him which he thinks is above that which is reasonable? Is he authorized in this bill to reject it? We have no alternative——

Mr. SPOONER. What would happen if he did reject it?

Mr. BACON. Of course the ships would rust and rot on the stays. That is exactly the point I am after. I say that in making a provision of that kind we have surrendered all possible control over the prices which shall be asked, and it is simply a question as to how much they will exact. If we had a provision here such as was in the act of 1900, then, even if we went forward and paid the prices, there would be that restricting influence which would lie in the hands of the Secretary to bring these people to the proper figure. And if it did not have that influence we would only continue to submit to unreasonable prices during the time which would intervene until the Government could erect a plant to manufacture armor.

I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado if I have the opportunity to do so, because I believe it should be the policy of this Government, if it did not make a pound of armor plate, to be in a position to make it if proper prices are not granted by those who now have the exclusive power and opportunity.

Now, I wish to ask the Senator from Maine one question, simply for information. I do not know how to regard it. I have here a compilation of the annual naval appropriation laws from 1883 to 1903. I find in each act a certain amount appropriated, and I am unable to determine from the phraseology of these acts whether the total aggregate amount named in these various acts is the amount which has been appropriated, or whether it is true that in some instances the appropriations were not used and were covered back into the Treasury, and for that reason the appropriation had to be again made. I am unable to tell, and I should like to know for my own information which is the case.

Mr. HALE. There may have been cases where comparatively small amounts have been turned in, but generally speaking, the appropriations found in these different acts are the amounts which have been expended in after years by the Department upon those ships. The turning into the Treasury does not cut very much figure.

Mr. BACON. That being the case, I wish to read in this connection the appropriations which we have made for armor. I will state that in the last appropriation bill I think it covered armor and armament, but in previous ones, certainly in most, if not all, the appropriations are for armor only.

In 1897 the appropriation for armor was $2,407,500; in 1898, $2,052,800; in 1899, $4,000,000; in 1900, $4,000,000; in 1901, $4,000,000; in 1902, $9,000,000; in 1903, $10,000,000, and the present bill carries $12,000,000. I was uncertain whether those were each independent appropriations or whether there were some appropriations not used which had been covered in and again appropriated.

Mr. HALE. The large increase, and of course the Senator sees——

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon for a moment. I am told by the Senator from Colorado that I said the present provision is for armor alone. I certainly did not mean that. It is for armor and armor plate.

Mr. HALE. The large increase has come, as the Senator can readily see, from the fact that it is only within the last very few years that we have been confronted with an exceedingly large programme each year.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. HALE. The appropriations next year for this kind of work will be larger than this year, because the programme last year was exceedingly large, and the appropriation that will be needed to carry it out will, as I said in the remarks I made in presenting this bill, be more the second year than the first. After that they begin to diminish, and if we do not keep on with a very great programme they will gradually wind themselves up, so that there will not be these very large appropriations for continuing work.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. HALE. But that is why the figures the Senator read show so very largely in the last two or three years.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly. I appreciate the fact.

Mr. President, I desire to say one word, in reply to the Senator from California, as to whether or not these are reasonable prices. When I call attention to the fact that a ton of steel costing $17 is by processes purely of manipulation—of course there are some face hardenings, etc., which might be classified otherwise, but with that exception it is nothing in the wide world but shaping the iron—converted into a plate the size of the desk at which the clerks sit, and the $17 of material is converted into the neighborhood of $500 in value, it seems to carry a great deal with it in the way of conclusion as to whether or not that is a reasonable price; but still such a presentation might be regarded as the statement of one who knows nothing about it.

But what I wish to call attention to, in answer to the Senator from California as to whether or not this is a proper price, is the testimony read here to-day from Mr. Cramp. Does anybody contend that Mr. Cramp does not know what he is talking about? Does anybody doubt that Mr. Cramp knows the value of this process and whether it is true that the conversion of steel at $17 a ton into $450 or $500 steel allows a reasonable profit?

Does anybody doubt whether Mr. Cramp knows it or not? And yet what does Mr. Cramp say; and I will put what he says against all that may be done by other governments in payment for armor plate. Mr. Cramp says that if you will let him have the profit on the armor plate made by the manufacture of armor out of the Government he will furnish the armor plate at no profit. Who is to answer that statement; and who is to doubt, after that statement, that the price is exorbitant and extortionate unless you can convict Mr. Cramp of insincerity when he makes it?

Mr. PERKINS. As the question is propounded to me in a measure, I should like to answer it by saying that actions speak louder than words. Mr. Cramp has the privilege of taking a contract to manufacture armor plate—no one has any exclusive right or copyright upon it—if he pays the royalty to Krupp or for the harveyized process. Mr. Cramp has built a great many ships for the Government. We have paid that firm, through the votes of my friend from Connecticut [Mr. BULKELEY], and others, a large bonus for increasing the speed of ships which he has built for the Government under contract. He has performed the work well and faithfully. I have no criticism whatever to make. I say when Mr. Cramp comes here and says, "I can do so and so for such a price," why does he not do it? He can have the profit upon the vessel.

I want to ask my friend, as he dwells with such emphasis upon the large amount we appropriate for the armor for these ships, if he can tell me the number of tons that a battle ship has of this harveyized armor.

Mr. BACON. I can not. I possibly might have done so when I was on the Naval Committee, but my attention is not now on such matters, and I do not recall.

Mr. PERKINS. The armor on the Kentucky amounts to 2,[illegible] tons; on the Oregon, to 2,756 tons; on the first-class cruiser Tennessee, to 2,190 tons; on the second-class cruiser Maryland, to 1,908 tons. If we build these vessels and are to make them available, we must have the armor plate to protect them. It is therefore necessary that we should make this appropriation for these [illegible].

I am not setting up my judgment against that of experts, but the question was asked by my friend why the $17 a ton steel, by a little manipulation, by running it through [illegible] and the rolling mill, is sold for $400. He stated $500, but we have not paid to exceed four hundred or four hundred and twenty dollars for Krupp and four hundred for the harveyized. I may say that same ingot of steel, selling for $18 a ton, when manufactured into knife blades and razors would be worth $5,000 a ton.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. PERKINS. Manufactured into watch springs it would be worth $20,000 a ton.

But that does not apply to this case. The question here is what will private capital do? Will my friend the Senator from Georgia, associated with capitalists, build works and furnish this Government twenty or thirty thousand tons of armor plate per annum? That is business, and that is what we have been trying to do. It was true when he was on the committee.

I have said what I have about this matter in justice to the Navy Department. It requires no defense. Compare the price we pay with the price Great Britain is paying the great Armstrong Manufacturing Company. They pay £107 for the harveyized steel and £117 per ton for the Krupp steel.

Mr. BACON. I hope when the Senator makes a point he will permit me to answer it, and then make another. I can not answer a dozen at one time.

Mr. PERKINS. I thought the Senator was through. He addressed his question to me. We have the same object in view. We want to do the best we can for our Government, for we are stockholders in this great Government.

As I have stated before, we devoted days and weeks and months to investigating this question. With the mere building of a $4,000,000 plant, you have just commenced your work. You have to have $2,000,000 worth of iron and steel on hand before you commence your work.

We can manufacture some kind of materials, where we have our navy-yards and have our gun factories, as cheaply, perhaps, and more cheaply even than private concerns; but the manufacture of armor plate is a specialty in itself, and, as I stated before, only about 34 per cent of each ingot of steel is used for the armor plate. Actual experience has demonstrated that it will not stand the ballistic test if they use the whole ingot of steel. That is one reason which brought the Navy Department to the determination that the price of $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds for this armor is reasonable and just and fair.

Mr. BACON. Of course, Mr. President, it is no answer to the argument to say that because a ton of steel worked up into watch springs [illegible] a hundred-dollar sum, therefore a ton of steel the size of this desk, when put into different shape, is worth some twenty-five or thirty times what it was in the original shape. That is the thing—that without a change in the character of the material, except as to face hardening simply putting it into a different [illegible] value [illegible] over. I say that [illegible] a ton of steel, when worked into watch [illegible] is of [illegible] value, can not be used as an argument [illegible] the proposition that the iron, when put into [illegible], is worth [illegible] five to thirty times as much as it was [illegible].

[illegible] tion, the Senator seeks to get away from it upon the [illegible] that if it is so profitable Mr. Cramp has [illegible] put up a plant if he wishes to do so. [illegible] It takes a large amount of money, several million dollars, to build one of these plants, and while Mr. Cramp could command that amount of money without any trouble, he does not desire to put up a plant at that cost which would [illegible] him into ruinous competition with [illegible] who, by reason of the fact that [illegible] money for fifteen years, have already paid for their plant and [illegible] drive any body out of the business [illegible] to compete with them, but [illegible] have no competition, can thus exact from [illegible] fit of this immense amount, as stated by Mr. Cramp—so great that he, a shipbuilder, knowing all about shipbuilding, and [illegible] knowing just as [illegible] about armor plate, says that if he could make the profit on the armor plate [illegible] the ship he would agree to make the ship for the Government without a cent [illegible].

Mr. PERKINS. I am [illegible], as the Senator from California [illegible] seem to [illegible], proposing to refuse to give this money for the armor plate. We are in a position where we are compelled to do it. But what I am contending for is that we should get into a position where we will not be compelled to do it hereafter.

I am very much impressed, as I stated the other day, with the suggestion of [illegible] from Maine that we ought, as we have to go to this immense expense in the building of war vessels, to look to the construction of ships which, while their efficiency and fighting power shall not be impaired, shall be of [illegible].

The Senator from Maine says that a ship of a certain class—I have forgotten the type he mentioned—can be constructed for $5,000,000, which, while it may not be so luxurious in its appointments, will have all the fighting qualities of the ship which by this bill is to cost $8,000,000. I do hope the time is at hand, if we can not do it in this bill, when in the future we will recognize [illegible] expense amount, [illegible] amount, that is now being expended upon our naval construction, and that attention will be given most closely to the suggestion of the Senator from Maine, that, so far as we can without impairing the fighting qualities we will endeavor to decrease the cost of the ships.

There is one thing which [illegible] to my mind a greater realization of the cost of a battle ship than anything else that has been [illegible]. We all know the magnificent building across the Capitol grounds, the Congressional Library, upon which this Government spared not a dollar to construct the most magnificent building of the kind in the whole world. It covers four acres of ground. It is a great palace worthy of the thrice worthy purpose for which it was designed. It is a triumph of architecture; it is a triumph in decoration; it is a triumph in everything which makes it the admiration not only of this country, but of all foreigners who come here; and yet it is a fact that that magnificent building, the triumph of art, the subject of lavish and unstinted expenditure, this pride of the country, did not cost [illegible], which one ball may send to the bottom of the ocean.

Not only so, but it did not cost as much as the battle ship contemplated by the Senator from Maine—the $5,000,000 battle ship—for if I correctly recollect the cost of the Library it was something under $5,000,000.

Mr. CULLOM. Six million dollars.

Mr. HALE. About six million.

Mr. BACON. Very well. I stand corrected as to that. It certainly did not cost as much as the battle ship provided for in this bill, by [illegible].

We look at figures upon a paper and we see $5,000,000 and $8,000,000 and a hundred million dollars and we hardly have any realization of what it means, but there is an object lesson for all men to look at and realize that that great Library, upon which there was no stint of expenditure, did not cost within $2,000,000 of what the one battle ship provided for in this bill will cost.

Mr. President, much as I regret and deprecate this enormous expenditure, I am going to vote for this bill. I intend to vote for it because we are put in a position where we can not do otherwise. If it were an original proposition and our situation in the Far East were different, I would seek to have the bill cut down, so far as I might have any influence to accomplish that end. But the ships which have already been provided for to meet the necessities growing out of our possession of the Philippines must be constructed and the armor must be provided, and the only office of any value that this debate can accomplish is not in cutting down this appropriation, but is in bringing home to the Congress and to the people of the United States the realization that we have already spent $300,000,000 for the privilege of holding the Philippines, and that in the increased size of our Navy made necessary thereby and in the expense of Army and Navy required on account of the Philippines we are to spend from seventy-five to a hundred millions of dollars a year, and, further, in impressing upon Congress the great necessity of bringing future appropriations within the lowest practicable limit.

Sir, take the army bill of seventy-odd million dollars and the naval bill of ninety-odd million dollars, making about a hundred and seventy million dollars for this year, and let any Senator here calculate what is the amount of money which the people of a single State pay as their part of that enormous bill for the army and navy establishment. If I am not mistaken in the calculation, [illegible] the population of his State, and when he has doubled it he will find about the number of dollars that his State is paying toward this army bill and the navy bill. The State of Georgia and the State of Iowa each has about two and one-half [illegible] inhabitants. Upon this navy bill and the army bill for this year Georgia is to follow the people of Iowa will pay about [illegible], and upon these same two bills for this year the people of Georgia will also pay about $5,000,000.

And a State which has 4,000,000 inhabitants will find itself paying about $8,000,000 of this money. And so as to the people of other States according to population. Federal taxation is paid on the assumption of the people, and the amount gotten from the people of each State is about in the proportion of population. We get our money for the Government in a way that our people do not realize that they are paying it, but it is all folly to contend or think for a moment that it does not come out of the pockets of the people just as certainly as if a man put his hand in his pocket and took out the dollars. The money spent by the Government does not drop from the skies. It is not given to us. It is not found by the roadside. It is the product of the labor and the toil of the people of this country, and we are just that much poorer when that money is paid.

If that be not true, why should there be any consideration of economy in the public expenditure? If the people do not pay the money spent by the Government, why should we care how much money we appropriate here? The safeguard against public extravagance and waste is the realization by the people that they furnish the money that the Government expends.

Mr. President, I am sure there is no one in this Chamber who is more impressed with the necessity and the importance of the view which I have endeavored to express than the honorable Senator from Maine. There is no Senator who stands in a greater degree the confidence of the Senate and of the country for his personal conservatism and good judgment, and I believe that in the future there will be an earnest effort upon the part of the Senator from Maine and of the honorable committee over which he presides to keep down such expenditures for naval construction as we shall be able in the future as we must have this year.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I wish to say only a word or two in relation to this amendment. I understood the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] during the reading to say to him that as I understood the purport of this particular paragraph, which appropriates for armor and armament, it was not intended to apply to the appropriation bill now under consideration. Afterwards, in commenting upon what I stated, he said that the Secretary of the Navy would be guilty of a palpable violation of the law if he used any portion of this money for any other purpose than that of construction under this bill.

If I can have the attention of the Senator from Colorado, I think I can show him that this provision for armor and armament does not only apply to this bill, but it applies to all the ships that are now under consideration, and that it is nothing more or less than a general appropriation for the purposes of armor and armament.

In the first place, it would be folly to put this provision in the pending bill if it was intended to apply only to ships authorized by this bill. It has been stated here over and over again, and it is well known to us all, that, especially as respects battle ships, it requires four or five years for their completion, and as to even the armored cruisers, they require two or three years for completion. And yet, under the construction put upon this paragraph by the Senator from Colorado, here is $12,000,000 for armor and armament, and only armor and armament for the ships provided for in this bill. There is only one battle ship provided for in this bill. The armor and armament for that battle ship will cost about $3,000,000. The armor and armament for the cruisers will cost less than $1,000,000 apiece. And yet the Senator from Colorado tells us that not one cent of this money can be used except for the ships authorized in this bill.

I want the Senator to understand that these bills are not constructed upon that idea at all. They are constructed with reference not only to the ships which are authorized in the bill, but as to ships which have been hitherto authorized and are in the course of construction.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. ALLISON. I yield.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Iowa that, if I recall the details of the cost of the different parts of battle ships and armored cruisers, the armor for the battle ships and armored cruisers costs about the same—there is very little difference—and that the cost of the armor for each is but a small amount under $2,000,000. The armor alone for the three vessels which are to be armored will cost in the neighborhood of $6,000,000. How much the armament will cost I do not know. I have not informed myself as to what is the cost of those great guns and other guns, but I would assume that they would cost about the same amount.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I understand that the expenditure for the armor and armament of those great ships represents about 40 per cent of the total cost of construction. In his elaborate and most excellent discussion of this question, for which I as one Senator want to thank the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] for giving us all the information in detail with respect to the present condition of our Navy, the Senator stated that one of these 16,000-ton battle ships would cost, in round numbers, about $7,750,000.

Then there is appropriated in this bill for the construction of hulls, outfits, and machinery of vessels, etc., $19,826,860. Is it possible that the construction and machinery of those ships authorized in this bill will cost, in round numbers, $19,000,000? And yet, if the construction which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] puts upon those paragraphs taken together, or if even the construction put upon these paragraphs by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] were proper it means that we have appropriated here, in round numbers, $31,000,000 for the building of one battle ship, two cruisers, and some torpedo boats. I do not for one want it to go out unchallenged that we have made these extraordinary appropriations for those purposes in this bill.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, the fact is that for the battle ships and the armored cruisers, for the hull and machinery, for everything except armor and armament, there is appropriated $[illegible]. The cost of the armor and armament, which will amount to $3,600,000 for each, must be paid for the armor and armament.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall see about that. I call attention to the first paragraph here of the appropriation.

To carry out the purpose aforesaid—

That is, the construction of the ships which we have authorized—the sum of $[illegible] is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not [illegible]

That [illegible] marine torpedo boats, etc., which are provided for here. Then comes the [illegible]

[illegible]

Which of course relates [illegible] this bill but to other bills—there is appropriated—

[illegible]

The next provision is on page 76, line 15.

Armor and armament [illegible] and armor of domestic manufacture [illegible]

My contention is [illegible] it is susceptible of absolute demonstration—that this phraseology applies not only to the ships here authorized, but also to the ships heretofore authorized. Otherwise the appropriation is largely beyond what is needed; and not only largely beyond what is needed, but it is an appropriation for armor and armament for ships [illegible] least three years [illegible] appropriation can be used in any way.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator pardon me a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. I call his attention to the provision in the law of March 3, 1903, which I have before me, in which there is similar language, which I shall now read to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I have the act before me and was about to call attention to it.

Mr. BACON. Under the head of "Construction and machinery" there is this language:

Construction and machinery, on account of the hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $15,025,833.

If I understand the Senator correctly, his proposition is that that appropriation is intended to cover the amount of expenditure which will be anticipated for that particular year on the ships then under construction. Am I right in that?

Mr. ALLISON. On all of the ships under construction.

Mr. BACON. In other words, that that expenditure is not intended for the particular ships authorized in this bill, but it is for the expenditure which it is anticipated will be required in the progress of construction of that year, the next sentence, under the head of "Armor and armament," using this language:

Toward the armament and armor, of domestic manufacture, for the vessels authorized, $10,000,000.

The Senator understands that also to make provision for the appropriation for the amount which the armor and armament required for that year will cost.

Mr. ALLISON. For the amount necessary for all naval purposes [illegible] armor and armament expended or to be expended during the year.

Mr. BACON. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. That is exactly what this bill provides for. I do not know why the phraseology was changed. Hitherto, until last year, the bill provided not only for the ships heretofore authorized, but for the ships herein authorized. Then, going further back—I have the statutes before me—the laws making the appropriations provided for expenditures under several laws [naming them].

Mr. BACON. That is true. I have several of them here [naming the years].

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; and now for convenience in phraseology there is no doubt but that the [illegible] language; that is, for all ships authorized, [illegible] so many million dollars are appropriated.

I [illegible] that there may be no mistake about it, let us go back to the law of 1902, which I have here, wherein we authorized the construction of several ships and the appropriation [illegible] another year it was [illegible] were intended to cover the estimates of expenditure. The criticism I make on the observation of the Senator from Colorado is that he insists that this money can not be used except for the purposes authorized in this bill.

I object to the statement going to the country, as a matter of [illegible] sed during the next year for ships necessary in the course of construction, for if those ships in the course of construction have not had a sufficient amount appropriated to finish their armament, and if they do not get it here, they do not get it at all. So I object to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado diverting this appropriation from its purpose and intent, which is to allow the ships now under construction to be carried forward, and not to stop their construction and use $4,000,000 of [illegible] the purpose of building an armor plant. If [illegible] —and I do not [illegible] a Government plant for armor construction, let him do as we did in 1900 and also in 1893.

We did not then interfere with the construction of [illegible] contracted for, but we provided that there should be appropriated for the building of an armor plant the sum [illegible] provided for it in 1900. I remember very well [illegible] cupy a moment to state my recollection [illegible] we had a debate here, both in 1900 and in 1899, [illegible] many days, under the leadership of an active member [illegible] the Navy should not contract for armor plate at a price [illegible] than $300 a ton. The provision was added to the appropriation for building an armor plant.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to correct him.

Mr. ALLISON. [illegible]

Mr. BACON. I have the act before me. It did not in that case limit the amount to be paid for armor to $300 a ton. The act is found in Senate Document No. 100, which I have here, on page 332. The proviso is as follows:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby [illegible] [illegible]

I simply interrupted the Senator to show that in that year there was not a limitation of $300 per ton; but there was the year before.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator and I have different years in view. I have before me the law of March 3, 1899, which contained the appropriations for the fiscal year 1900. I will read it.

Mr. PATTERSON. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BACON. I misunderstood the law to which the Senator referred.

Mr. ALLISON. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PATTERSON. I infer from what the Senator from Iowa has said that if my amendment was in different shape, if it was so framed as not to impinge upon the $12,000,000 appropriated, he would probably favor the construction and ownership of an armor-plate factory by the Government of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President——

Mr. PATTERSON. I was going to say, Mr. President——

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will not infer from anything I have said that I propose in advance to say what particular amendment I shall vote for. I only stated to the Senator that I would not discuss that question, and I was endeavoring to speak historically on the subject of the statutes having reference to this subject. So it is not necessary for the Senator to spend much time on that matter.

Mr. PATTERSON. I was going to say that it will gratify me if the Senator from Iowa will induce the Senator from Maine not to make a point of order against the amendment I offered, and I will substitute the following:

But in case he is unable to make contracts for armor under the above con- [illegible] th [illegible] hereby appro- [illegible] said factory.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will consent to take a vote on that amendment now, and the Senate will consent, I shall not make the point of order against it. I will risk it with the Senate.

Mr. PATTERSON. Yes.

Mr. HALE. The Senator may change his amendment as he proposes, and I shall not make the point of order if we can have a vote upon it at once.

Mr. PATTERSON. That would be rather unceremoniously disposing of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HALE. I will leave that to his discretion.

Mr. ALLISON. I will exercise it by [illegible] my observations.

[illegible]

I only wanted to call attention to this particular subject, so that the Senator from Colorado, who is usually accurate, will not be misled. I want to say one other thing, as we are about to have a vote, which, I understand, is to take place when I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. HALE. I hope so.

Mr. ALLISON. The next year—and I only want to speak of history as it existed at the time—we came back here and had a new struggle on the question of armor plate.

While Mr. Herbert was Secretary of the Navy—and I have some recollection about the subject, because the naval appropriation bill was then in the hands of the Committee on Appropriations—Mr. Herbert stated that he was willing to pay $400 per ton for armor plate. It was after the debates on that question that discretion was given the then Secretary of the Navy in 1900, who was Mr. Long.

I want to say just a few words more on this subject. I have been confused somewhat, as other Senators have been confused perhaps, as to the precise situation of the Navy. I listened most attentively and most carefully to the Senator from Maine, who gave us the information we all needed upon that subject; but before hearing him I had made a request of the Secretary of the Navy for information in regard to two matters which troubled me in the examination of these reports. The first was how many vessels had been completed since 1884, when the new Navy was begun, and how many were in course of completion, the cost of those completed, and the cost of those still uncompleted, including armor and armament. I received from the Secretary of the Navy a reply upon that subject. I shall not stop to read it. I ask that it may be printed as part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March 5, 1904.

Sir: In reply to your [illegible] what [illegible] counts containing the desired data.

The only vessels authorized and not yet contracted for, except those built or building by the Government, are gunboat No. 16, authorized by act of May 4, 1898, with a limit of cost of $200,000, and submarine torpedo boats authorized by act of March 3, 1903, with a limit of cost of $800,000.

Very respectfully,

W. H. MOODY, Secretary.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

STATEMENT SHOWING AGGREGATE CONTRACT PRICE OF ALL COMPLETED VESSELS FROM 1883 TO 1904, INCLUDING COST OF ARMOR AND ARMAMENT; ALSO CONTRACT PRICE OF ALL VESSELS IN PROCESS OF CONSTRUCTION, WITH ESTIMATED COST OF ARMOR AND ARMAMENT.

Completed vessels.

Contract price for hull and machinery of vessels built by contract	$75,326,602
Amount authorized for vessels built by the Government	11,136,564
Cost of armor and armament of completed vessels	37,985,027
Total	124,447,593

Uncompleted vessels.

Contract price for hull and machinery of vessels in process of construction by contract	$90,374,016
Amount authorized for vessels being built by the Government	5,002,000
	95,376,016
Estimated cost of armor and armament of uncompleted vessels (as furnished by the Bureau of Ordnance)	57,948,709
Total	153,324,725
	124,447,593
	277,772,318

H. T. B. HARRIS,
Paymaster-General United States Navy.

BUREAU OF SUPPLIES AND ACCOUNTS,
March 3, 1904.

Mr. ALLISON. Having made that examination, I saw perfectly well that this appropriation must apply, in the very nature of things, to work now under construction and not to work to be constructed hereafter.

Mr. BACON. I want to say that I think the Senator is eminently correct in that position.

Mr. ALLISON. Therefore, I made the point upon the Senator from Colorado as respects his construction of these particular statutes.

I want to apologize for taking the time of the Senator from Maine or of the Senate in discussing this question. I had no intention to do so, and I should not have done so had not the Senator from Colorado placed what I consider a very erroneous construction upon those statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON].

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I am not willing to let the matter rest where it is with reference to what the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] has just said, because I read the entire seventy-seven page of the bill before making the criticisms I did, and it was by reason of the difference in the language contained in the first paragraph read by the Senator from Iowa and the last that I concluded that the $12,000,000 were appropriated for the vessels provided for in this bill. There is a very marked difference in the language. The first paragraph says:

Construction and machinery: On account of the hulls, outfit, and machinery of vessels, and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $15,025,833.

The next paragraph makes no reference to vessels "heretofore authorized;" and, in my opinion, it would not be a forced construction, but a natural construction, to hold that it referred to the vessels provided for by the bill.

Mr. HALE. Undoubtedly.

Mr. PATTERSON. It reads:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized—

Not heretofore authorized, but—for the vessels authorized, $12,000,000.

Mr. HALE. It does not need to say "heretofore authorized" to confine the appropriation to the past, nor "herein authorized," which would confine the appropriation to this bill, but it says "authorized," and therefore includes both.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, if you have got to supply words, it is more natural to supply the words "herein provided for" than it is to supply the words "heretofore provided for." You must supply words to give it either the one or the other construction.

Mr. SPOONER. The language evidently means "authorized by law."

Mr. PATTERSON. It does not say "authorized by law." It says:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized, $12,000,000.

But I can well understand, Mr. President, how the Secretary of the Navy would be justified in putting the construction upon it contended for by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and I have no desire in the least to interfere with the proper appropriations for the armor for vessels already under way.

I will take advantage of the suggestion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to substitute the following language for the language of the amendment which I sent to the desk and which [illegible] been already read. After the provision of the bill which [illegible]

[illegible] of the Navy is hereby authorized to procure by contract [illegible] herein authorized at such [illegible] are not reasonable.

I move to insert the following:

[illegible] tracts for armor under the above con-[illegible]

Mr. HALE. That is clearly subject to a point of order, but, as I [illegible] the Senator, I will not make it. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is this a modification of the amendment [illegible] from Colorado?

Mr. PATTERSON. It is a [illegible]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] to lay the amendment of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] on the table.

[illegible]

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer an amendment to follow the words "[illegible]" the last words of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following proviso:

[illegible] the Secretary of the Navy shall not pay more than $[illegible]

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. PATTERSON. Mr. President, I desire to occupy a few minutes in connection with the amendment.

The cost of the armor is the [illegible] the cost of the armor to the Government, and in this connection I desire to read a short extract from the testimony of Admiral O'Neil before the Naval Committee of the House on the 7th of January of this year. The following questions were asked:

[illegible] and armament?

[illegible] dollars'

[illegible]

Mr. [illegible] the Carnegie people?

[illegible]

The CHAIRMAN [illegible]

Admiral O'NEIL. [illegible]

Mr. LAWLEY. [illegible] bill?

Admiral O'NEIL. The Carnegie [illegible] dollars a ton for the armor.

Mr. LAWLEY. For the same class of armor?

Admiral O'NEIL. Yes, sir, and it, they guarantee the same results at the proving ground.

Mr. LAWLEY. They do not take into account the royalty.

Admiral O'NEIL. [illegible]

Now, then, with reference to the question of royalty. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. PATTERSON] mentioned the fact that the bid of the Midvale Steel Company did not [illegible] time in the future the United States would be [illegible] the royalty on the armor manufactured [illegible] Mr. [illegible] I take the following from the testimony of Admiral O'NEIL:

It will be seen from the foregoing that the Midvale Company [illegible] the Carnegie Company [illegible] the Midvale Steel Company [illegible] best [illegible] $[illegible] of armor [illegible] assumes responsibility for any results [illegible]

Now, Mr. President, I submit that if the Midvale Company, a responsible company that has already manufactured a large quantity of armor under this contract of last year, will furnish the best of armor for $400 a ton, and will itself take care of the royalties, if any are to be paid, there is no reason why the [illegible] is put upon the price of armor should not be $400 a ton, or $[illegible] more than the Midvale Company calls for.

Mr. SPOONER. There is no limitation in the bill?

Mr. PATTERSON. There is no limitation whatever in the bill. I submit, Mr. President, that in view of the fact that steel of all kinds has lessened in price during the past year, since this contract was entered into, and labor is less, no injustice whatever is done to those who produce armor for our battle ships and our cruisers by limiting the amount that is to be paid for the armor at $400 a ton, when we are receiving the very best quality of armor now from one of the companies contracting to supply it at $[illegible] ton less.

Mr. HALE. There is where the Senator is wrong. If we live long enough to come here next year, we shall find that the Midvale Company [illegible] was unadvised that they have not a plant; that they [illegible] them, they have not delivered any, and are not likely to deliver any for some time; and it will involve us in a lawsuit or a claim with the contractor. The Secretary has tried all that. I wish the Senator, before he began, had read what the Secretary said. Secretary Moody said:

[illegible] in any country. The plant [illegible] now commenced to be satisfactory in point of time. The situation [illegible] to me, is a satisfactory one.

That is the basis on which [illegible]

Mr. PATTERSON. Oh, Mr. President, the contract was given to the Midvale Company but two weeks before the 7th day in January; on the 7th day of January it was [illegible] in turning out the armor under the contract, and Admiral O'Neil said he was satisfied with the [illegible]

Mr. President, it is [illegible] to believe that this company bid a price that it [illegible] armor for, and [illegible], in the face of everything that is [illegible] by the Bureau of Ordnance, that there [illegible] any inability on the part of the Midvale Company to comply with its [illegible] of the [illegible] ly the company [illegible]

As to the cost of armor, Mr. President, I wish to read to you from a report as to what armor in reality cost when material of every kind was higher than it is to-day. [illegible] the question [illegible] up, and this is a part of [illegible]

Mr. GALLINGER. [illegible] tor?

Mr. PATTERSON. I do [illegible]

[illegible] per ton ..... $[illegible]

Add for maintenance of plant ..... [illegible]

Thirty-three and one-third per cent profit ..... [illegible]

Add for nickel ..... [illegible]

Making the price for armor ..... [illegible]

Making the total cost, under those more than liberal allowances for the manufacture of ship armor, $390 per ton.

[illegible] re, it will fix a [illegible] States for the [illegible] law. The [illegible] govern-[illegible] made the statement, $[illegible] per ton.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

[illegible] I have [illegible] read. [illegible] bill the following proviso:

[illegible] the price of such armor, in [illegible]

Mr. HALE. I move to lay the amendment on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PATTERSON. I offer the following amendment.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

[illegible] laborer and mechanic employed in the construction of the armor and its parts thereof, and that no laborer or mechanic engaged on said construction shall be required or permitted to work for any greater length of time than eight hours per calendar day pursuant to such contracts that may be so made: Provided, however, That in case of great national emergency or when war is imminent or in time of war the Secretary of the Navy may modify this provision of the contract.

Mr. HALE. I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. PATTERSON. Let me say just a word. I have not called for the yeas and nays on these amendments, because I am convinced that unless they meet the approval of the Senator from Maine it would be taking up the time of the Senate, and I know how anxious the Senator from Maine is to conclude the bill. I had hoped that at least some of these amendments would meet the approval of the Senator, but as they do not, and as his attitude would clearly be sustained by the majority, I have been [illegible] with presenting the amendments, that they may go before the country [illegible]

Mr. HALE. The Senator has been very fair. I make the point of order that the amendment is general legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the vote be taken in the Senate on the amendments in gross? The Chair hears no objection.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF PUBLIC LANDS COMMISSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

I submit herewith the preliminary report of the Public Lands Commission [illegible]

[illegible] sideration of the Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1904.

AFFAIRS IN INDIAN TERRITORY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and, on motion of Mr. PLATT of Connecticut, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Congress:

[illegible] upon their private business, even [illegible]

I w[illegible] advisable, and invite the attention of the Congress to the [illegible]

[illegible] see a memorandum of work of the Commission to the Five Civilized [illegible]

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1904.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 5755) for the relief of small-holding settlers within the limits of the grant of land to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company in the Territory of New Mexico was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 12684) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The bill (H. R. 13480) to authorize the Southern Indiana Railway Company to construct a railroad bridge across the Wabash River in Vigo County, Ind., was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the army appropriation bill, House bill 10670, be now taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the army appropriation bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the formal reading be dispensed with and that the bill be read for action on the committee amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with, that it be read for amendment, and that the committee amendments shall first receive consideration. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 1, after line 6, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF.

[illegible] the contingent expenses of the office of the Chief of Staff, in his discretion, $[illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for "Contingencies of the Army," on page 2, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be used by the Chief of Staff in the office of the executive department of the War Department at Washington.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Under the Chief of Artillery," on page 2, line 19, after the word "including," to strike out "rail, hints;" and in line 25, after the word "laborers," to strike out "repairs of and for material to repair public buildings, boats used in connection with the school;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] N. Y.: For incidental expenses [illegible] stationery, hardware, extra-duty [illegible] photographers, engine drivers, telegraph operators, teamsters, wheelwrights, [illegible] tures, machinery, and unforeseen expenses, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 19, after the word "books," where it occurs the first time, to strike out "professional," in the same line, after the word "reference," to strike out "professional and technical;" and in line 20, after the word "newspapers," to insert "for professional use;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] at the [illegible] of the [illegible] papers [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Office of the Chief Signal Officer," on page 5, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For completing the purchase, installation, operation, and maintenance of a [illegible] Alaska, as authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1903, $[illegible]

So as to make the clause read:

Signal Service of the Army: For expenses of the Signal Service of the Army, as follows: [illegible] and other [illegible] ments for [illegible] of [illegible] and Paperer for [illegible] and other expenses [illegible] and [illegible] for the Army, [illegible] $[illegible]; [illegible] and maintenance of a [illegible] Alaska, to Point Barrow, Alaska, connecting by an all-American route the headquarters of the Department of Columbia with the military garrisons in southeastern Alaska, as authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1903, $221,580.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 6, to insert "Pay Department."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of officers

[illegible] of the line," on page 6, line 2, before the word "five," to strike out "Five per [illegible] of the line;" so as to read "$5,000,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 4, before the word "For," to strike out "For pay of officers;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] with their current monthly pay, $1,071,428.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay of enlisted men," on page 6, line 8, before the word "Of," to strike out "For pay of enlisted men;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, after line 12, to insert:

[illegible] Military Academy, $[illegible] [illegible] quartermaster's department, $[illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

[illegible] out "[illegible]" and in line 9, before [illegible]

[illegible] and fifty quarter[illegible] sergeants, at $408 each, $[illegible]

[illegible] me where he is [illegible]

[illegible] AT. At the bottom of page 7.

[illegible] the bill quite so fast. [illegible] on.

[illegible] I. We [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to. The next [illegible]

[illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Pay to clerks and messengers," on page 8, line 11, after the word "[illegible]" and in line 12, after the word "dollars," to insert "per annum;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] the Chief of Staff, $2,000 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 13, to increase the number of clerks at $1,[illegible] per annum from four to seven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 15, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each per annum from ten to eleven.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 17, to increase the number of clerks at $1,400 each per annum from twenty-[illegible] to twenty-six.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 19, to increase the number of clerks at $1,200 each per annum from sixty-five to sixty-nine.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 21, to increase the number of clerks at $1,000 each per annum from eighty-six to ninety-four.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 23, to increase the number of general-service messengers, at $720 each per annum, from sixty-eight to seventy-one.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 10, line 2, to increase the total [illegible] quarters, [illegible]

The [illegible] line 10.

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible] it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible] I wish to move an amendment [illegible] then it can be passed over.

Mr. SPOONER. It can be [illegible]

The Secretary read the amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs, which [illegible] line 16, to insert the following:

[illegible] ral, as now provided by law and in the order [illegible]

[illegible] out the last clause as it has [illegible]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment [illegible]

The [illegible] It is proposed to strike out, beginning in line 8, [illegible] ng words:

[illegible] or [illegible] are merely [illegible]

The [illegible] is most clearly [illegible]

Mr. PROCTOR. It is [illegible]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair has no doubt about [illegible]

Mr. [illegible] ment. I will [illegible]

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. [illegible]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Unacted upon.

Mr. [illegible] The point of order is reserved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is reserved by the Senator from Ma[illegible] has been agreed to. The amendment as amended will [illegible]

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 12 on page 11.

Mr. CULLOM. Is an amendment in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments are to be first considered.

Mr. CULBERSON. The bill is simply being read at this time for action on committee amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. For action on committee amendments.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Retired officers," on page 15, line 18, after the words "cents," to insert:

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, [illegible] who served during the civil war, shall, when retired, be entitled to receive the pay of the next higher grade, [illegible] War may assign them to command in the Army, and their commissions [illegible] in recognition of service in connection with the organization [illegible] Territories upon the request of the governors of [illegible], as military commissions, upon courts-martial, courts of inquiry, boards, and [illegible] involving service with troops; and [illegible] shall receive the full pay and allowances of their respective grades.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 10, after the word "cents," to strike out the following proviso:

[illegible] be [illegible] account [illegible] employees in any of the departments of the Government.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Retired enlisted men," on page 16, line 18, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That hereafter in computing the length of service for retirement, credit shall be given soldiers for [illegible] the actual service [illegible] and Panama, but double credit shall not be given for service hereafter rendered in Porto Rico or the Territory of Hawaii.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 11, before the word "fifteen," to strike out "section" and insert "sections," and in the same line, after the word "[illegible]ten," to insert "and twenty-one;" so as to make the clause read:

[illegible] and are hereby [illegible] for paying the [illegible] any State, Territory, or District of Columbia participating in joint encampment, maneuvers, and field instruction [illegible] of the act [illegible] "An act to promote the efficiency of the militia, [illegible]

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

[illegible] of which to be immediately available [illegible]

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to make some explanation of this provision.

Mr. PROCTOR. At the maneuvers at West Point, Ky., this fall, where a large body of militia met with the forces of the Regular Army, there were various claims presented, amounting to quite a considerable sum. They were cut down by a board, so that the amount only to a little over $2,000, I believe. There is another set of claims——

Mr. SPOONER. Allow me to ask, claims of what sort, of what nature?

Mr. PROCTOR. For damages to fences and crops by soldiers who were off duty and out of sight of their officers.

Mr. SPOONER. That is, predatory operations?

Mr. PROCTOR. Yes; of that nature.

Mr. SPOONER. Not incident at all to the actual maneuvers?

Mr. PROCTOR. No, not necessarily; but quite common.

Mr. SPOONER. Does the Senator think it is good policy for the Government to pay for the tortious acts of soldiers when they are away from their commands?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think it is questionable, and if paid at all it should be kept at the very lowest sum. It is urgently asked for by the War Department, and the amount requested was cut down.

There is another class of claims which have arisen from firing heavy guns in practice at coast-defense forts. It has done damage to some houses, breaking glass, etc. I think the aggregate of those claims received and passed upon by the board of examination is about $2,000.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there should be some discrimination exercised as to the nature of the claims and the circumstances out of which they arise. I should dislike very much to see incorporated into the law a precedent for the payment of damages caused by the tortious acts of soldiers away from their commands.

Mr. COCKRELL. If the Senator will yield, I will say that the matter was fully discussed with the army officers, and they scouted at the idea that they were to allow anything of the kind. They understand it perfectly. Not a member of the committee would have voted to pay for the result of any wrongful or tortious act of a soldier, and that is the understanding. In one of these cases a claim for a large amount was presented, and it was reduced to a few thousand dollars. I forget the exact amount, but it was a considerable amount. The committee would not have sanctioned anything that looked to paying for mere trespass or a wrongful act or an unauthorized act.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the acting chairman of the committee to say that there were some claims of that nature.

Mr. COCKRELL. They were presented.

Mr. SPOONER. And that they were passed upon by a court.

Mr. COCKRELL. And all were rejected.

Mr. SPOONER. Rejected?

Mr. COCKRELL. Yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. They were passed upon by a board. They amount to only a little over $2,000.

Mr. SPOONER. What is the nature of the claims? Are they claims for damages as the result of predatory operations?

Mr. McCOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, I can tell him one instance which must be within the scope of this amendment. At Fort Armistead, below Baltimore, they fired repeatedly a 15-inch gun. Close to the fort is a [illegible] factory. There was a great deal of glass containing that product and in the machinery much glass is used. The plant was worth about six or seven hundred thousand dollars, and they say the firing of the gun was rapidly destroying the property. It was being fired in practice. After the destruction had occurred somewhat, on [illegible] Department suspended the firing of the [illegible] from a loss of some thousands of dollars to this property, which is close to the fort.

Mr. SPOONER. That is an entirely different proposition from the one I am trying to get at.

Mr. McCOMAS. The question of "firing in practice."

Mr. SCOTT. That is the nature of the claims included in this appropriation.

Mr. McCOMAS. Practice firing.

Mr. SCOTT. The same is true at Jamestown, N. Y., where, in exercising with a large gun, they broke a number of windows in private houses.

Mr. GALLINGER. It is manifest that $2,000 will not pay them, if claims of that character are presented.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator's statement may be true as to the facts, but he is not sustained by the language of this bill:

[illegible] of this sum may be used for payment of [illegible] militia or Regular Army, during maneuvers [illegible]

Mr. McCOMAS. That is the case I speak of.

Mr. SCOTT. That is the case.

Mr. SPOONER. That is another thing.

Mr. SCOTT. "Firing in practice."

Mr. SPOONER. There are two things. We begin by paying for damages done by the militia in maneuvers. What sort of damages?

Mr. QUARLES. If I may be permitted, I will suggest to my colleague that the commanding officer at West Point had very great difficulty in getting leases of land from the farmers living adjacent to the grounds because of the anticipated damages, and I think there was an assurance given by the officer commanding there that the damages would be paid. But the committee in looking into it found, just as the Senator suggests, that there were a lot of speculative claims which no court would entertain for a moment, and among the rest some very laughable claims for injuries to calves and loss of weight in cattle by reason of their being frightened, and the like of that. Of course, the committee did not entertain any of those propositions. But there were certain legitimate claims. For instance, a troop of cavalry at exercises goes across a field of hay and tramples it down.

Mr. PROCTOR. Breaks down fences.

Mr. QUARLES. And, under the contract of the general who was in command of that encampment, those people would be entitled to the payment of claims of that kind as a legitimate payment of damage. So we cut the amount down to what we thought would fairly cover the actual, legitimate claims of both kinds and exclude necessarily these fanciful and prospective claims.

Mr. KEAN. Do I understand that a point of order has been made against the amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There has not been.

Mr. KEAN. I make the point of order against it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order on the ground that it is a private claim really.

Mr. KEAN. It is nothing but the payment of private claims.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," on page 18, line 17, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That appointments shall be for periods of three years each, subject [illegible] an increase of 5 per cent in their pay: Provided, That the leave with pay now allowed by law to nurses may become cumulative.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the acting chairman of the committee precisely what is the purport of the amendment and whether or not it has been recommended by the Department? I had something to do with getting through the bill for army nurses. I thought we had legislated very liberally, and I do not want that law to be enlarged unless there is some valid reason for doing it. I presume there is, if the Senator will explain it.

Mr. PROCTOR. It was thought to be a very small increase. The pay is $30 a month, and the increase is $[illegible] after three years of service, which is regarded as a very moderate increase and one to which they were fully entitled.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. They are worth that much more.

Mr. QUARLES. By their experience.

Mr. PROCTOR. They are worth that much more. It would be impossible for them to return from the Philippines, if they were obliged to take their leave every year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 19, after line 19, to insert:

For refunding to Maj. E. W. Halford, paymaster, United States Army, money disbursed through error and without fault on his part, for travel pay to an enlisted man on discharge, $165.44.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 23, after the word "men," to insert "serving in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska, and Panama;" so as to make the clause read:

For additional 40 per cent increase on pay of enlisted men serving in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska and Panama [illegible]

Mr. PROCTOR. After the word "Alaska" I move to insert "China."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 4, after the word "officers," to insert "serving in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska, and Panama;" so as to make the clause read:

For additional 40 per cent increase [illegible] in the Philippine Islands, the island of Guam, Alaska and Panama [illegible]

Mr. PROCTOR. After the word "Alaska," in line 5, I move to insert "China." We find there are some troops now serving in China.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 21, line 11, before the word "battalions," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" and in line 11, after the word "each," to insert:

to enable the enlisted men of the regiment who may be in the service [illegible] to re-enlist [illegible] of the Philippine Islands [illegible] Regiment [illegible] who may be discharged by the President by reason of expiration of term of service [illegible] of enlistment [illegible] Regular Army [illegible] Regular Army [illegible] as now provided by law.

Men hereafter enlisted in the regiment [illegible] shall be organized [illegible] of three battalions [illegible] the present regiment was [illegible] service June [illegible], etc.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the senior Senator of the committee a question as to the proposed amendment. Is there an army now in Porto Rico?

Mr. PLATT. We have a two-battalion regiment in Porto Rico. The new organization of a set of Philippine regiments [illegible] were organized. This provides for the reorganization of the other.

Mr. TELLER. I ask the Senator what is the necessity for an army in Porto Rico?

Mr. SPOONER. As constabulary.

Mr. KEAN. It is only a militia, like they have in Colorado.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think there is only a single battery of the Regular Army in Porto Rico; not more than two, and I believe but one, at San Juan. A part of these are stationed at San Juan and a part of them in the center of the island, at Cayey, on the top of the mountain between San Juan and Ponce, and they go at various times to various places in the island.

Mr. TELLER. What I am trying to find out is what use, what need, we have for an army in Porto Rico. For what purpose is this army established down there?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. It is like the National Guard, is it not?

Mr. PROCTOR. It was thought advisable that we should have a command there, and these two battalions have rendered excellent service, and their improvement is wonderful. One battalion was here, as the Senator will remember, at the inauguration of President McKinley.

Mr. TELLER. I do not remember anything about it.

Mr. PROCTOR. And it was the special feature of the day. I saw both battalions drill last spring, and I think they are as well drilled as any command in the Army. They have been noted for their good order and good behavior, and educationally it has been an excellent influence. We had before us Major Swift, who has had command of both of the battalions, and who is now an officer in the Adjutant-General's office. He is a very able officer. We had other means of information. From personal inspection I can speak very warmly of the command. Governor Hunt is very strongly in favor of it, and he speaks in very strong terms in respect to its effect upon the people of the island as a whole.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I have no doubt that these Porto Rican soldiers are entitled to all the eulogy which can be passed upon them, but that is not the question about which I wanted to inquire.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator from Colorado yield to me?

Mr. TELLER. In a moment. I want the Senator who undertakes to answer my question to understand what it is. The acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs evidently did not understand what I asked, or if he did, he certainly did not answer the question.

I have not any doubt but what those people are well drilled and that they made a fine display when they came here to the inauguration of President McKinley; all of which was done, I suppose, at the expense of the United States, though I do not know about that. I do not know but what it would be a good thing, if we could do so, to put all of these new populations into the Army for training. I suppose if we could put the whole Philippine population into the Army perhaps it would make better citizens of them in due time. But I want to know for what purpose [illegible]? If it is for civilization and education, that is one thing; if they are used to maintain the peace in Porto Rico, that is another thing. If they are to be kept there for fear that there may be an attack by somebody, and it is a matter of defense, that is another thing. If they are there as a [illegible] to me, not to the Senate—that is another thing. I did not myself understand that there was any necessity for an armed force down there. If there is, I should like to know it.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator from Ohio, who seems to want to speak, knows anything about the matter, I am quite willing to hear him.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I do not know much more about it than the Senator from Colorado does.

Mr. TELLER. I do not pretend to know anything about it.

Mr. FORAKER. But I have been the chairman of the committee that has had charge of legislation in regard to Porto Rico ever since the island was annexed, as the Senator knows, and that has led me to study the conditions down there and to take an interest in everything that has been done with respect to Porto Rico.

I have favored the beginning up of the organization which was established at the beginning of our occupation of that island. I have favored it, in the first place, because, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], I think a very good purpose is conserved by having an organization there composed of the people of the island. It gives them an opportunity to enlist; it gives them an opportunity to serve the United States; it identifies them more and more, in a way they are very proud of, with the United States.

I do not know what necessity there may be for maintaining [illegible] organization—but it has been thought [illegible] maintained in that island. Nobody is anticipating an attack from any foreign power, of course, I imagine, and there is no threatened danger from disturbances among the people in that island, but it is thought that this is a useful and a good purpose.

Then, aside from that, at this time it does seem to be a proper thing to maintain that organization there. We have just acquired, although it does not seem to be quite completed, or we shall acquire, if we have not already done so, the transit across the Isthmus of Panama, and it may become necessary [illegible] some troops there. It will be much better, I think, to send some Porto Rican troops over there to defend that Isthmus than to send our troops from here down there.

I do not know what the Administration or the War Department may think about it, but in the Committee on Military Affairs that question was raised, and it seemed to be the general opinion of the committee that it would be very convenient and very wise to have an organization of this character. The soldiers in that organization are already acclimated and accustomed to the Tropics; and so would save us from sending our own troops from the States of the United States down to the Isthmus, where, it is said, it is very unhealthy, and where they might be stricken with disease to which the Porto Ricans would be immune. I think it is the part of wisdom to continue that organization, at least for the present.

I think, aside from the possible necessity of using these Porto Ricans on the Isthmus and using them anywhere in the Tropics, thus saving our own troops from going into an unhealthy climate, that it would be well to keep this organization there because of what I suggested at the beginning of my remarks, to give them an opportunity to identify themselves with the United States and feel that they are really a part of it.

I remember when Bishop Blenk, of the Roman Catholic Church of Porto Rico, was here he hearing that there was some agitation to the effect that we were disbanding that organization, wrote me a letter very strongly urging that we do not do it, as the organization had a splendid effect on the population of Porto Rico; that it gave them pride; that the young men who enlisted were disciplined and trained, and after their term of service they went out into the community and were better and more capable and more efficient citizens.

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] has just handed me a communication from Governor Hunt, of Porto Rico, from which he asks me to read an extract. I do not know what it contains, but I shall read it. It is addressed to Hon. William H. Taft, Secretary of War, and is dated "San Juan, January 27, 1904."

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: As you doubtless know, there is a provisional regiment of native Porto Ricans here in the island, which was established several years ago. [illegible] national work which has been accomplished. It has taught the men habits of discipline, self-control, and self-respect. I should be very sorry to see it disbanded, because of its usefulness in the way I have just spoken of.

I have other communications here, but they are all to the same general effect, and I shall not stop to read them.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator might put them in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAKER. There are a million people living in the island, I will say in answer to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS], who has inquired about the population.

Mr. CLAY. I will ask the Senator, is it not true that these soldiers are not Americans, but are Porto Ricans?

Mr. FORAKER. They are native Porto Ricans.

Mr. CLAY. How are they officered?

Mr. PROCTOR. These troops are under American officers, but their sergeants are native Porto Ricans. This measure provides that the President may appoint native Porto Ricans——

Mr. CLAY. Making the number about seven or eight hundred?

Mr. FORAKER. There are two battalions, and this complete the regiment that is authorized by adding one battalion.

Mr. TELLER. Has the Senator from Ohio finished?

Mr. FORAKER. I have suggested the main points in the matter as they have occurred to me, but I have not elaborated them, and I do not suppose at this late hour the Senator desires me to do so.

Mr. TELLER. I think the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], who is a member of the committee, desired to say something.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I do not know that I can add anything to the suggestions made by the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico [Mr. FORAKER], but as a member of the subcommittee who considered this appropriation bill, it may be proper for me to say that the showing made before us as to the beneficial effects upon the people of the islands by the maintenance of this force can hardly be exaggerated.

There occurs to me just one illustration that was given, among many others. For instance, the number of the native Porto Ricans who have served two or four years in this regiment are kept, and it is like a roll of honor. The young men from the best families in Porto Rico consider it an honor to be enrolled in this regiment. They go into it and are disciplined. Then the merchants and employers of clerks throughout that island go to this roll of soldiers of this regiment and employ those people because of the discipline and the education they have had and the acquirement of English, which the officers say is rapid among these troops. So they readily obtain employment down there by reason of having served in this regiment. It is a great recommendation for them and is working great good throughout the island.

The Senator will notice that the committee has recommended that, instead of four years, the enlistment be limited to two years, so as to pass these educational facilities around as far as possible. But the controlling reason, I may say, Mr. President, with the committee was this: It is known that during the building of the isthmian canal we shall require a force—a military force or a constabulary force—to protect the property that will necessarily be exposed there during that time. At present it is very unhealthy on the Isthmus, as everybody knows, and we thought it a matter well worthy the attention of Congress that these people, well drilled—as well drilled, perhaps, as any battalion in the Regular Army—would be glad to go down there and serve, that it would save the lives of a great many members of the regular regiments, who would die like flies if they went from this cool climate down there, if the President would send down two battalions of this regiment and let them do that work.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it is somewhat of a relief to know that this army down there is not there for either offensive or defensive purposes, but I am somewhat surprised to hear it stated that it is for purely educational purposes. My education has not led me to suppose that the way to reach the people in the line of education was through military establishments, but I suppose that is because I was born too long ago and have not kept up with the progress of events.

Mr. President, it strikes me that if you want to spend money for educational purposes you had better spend it for schools than for armies. If there is not any necessity for a force to keep the peace or to defend the island in case of attack, you had better disband this army and put that amount of money, which is a considerable sum, into the schools down there.

Mr. PROCTOR. These men attend school regularly.

Mr. TELLER. The class of people I am anxious to see educated down there is not the adults, but the young people who are coming up.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. I see the Senator from Ohio wishes to say something; and I yield to him.

Mr. FORAKER. I started to read some of these letters, and I have many of them here. One is from a prominent Porto Rican.

Mr. TELLER. I hope the Senator will put it in the RECORD.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to read an extract from it. It expresses the feeling those people have with respect to this matter.

We want a full Porto Rico regiment, with officers who will live with it, fight with it wherever necessary, and die with it.

[illegible] of this regiment, and the men, [illegible] American ones, are an object lesson to all others, and thus the [illegible] to the island derives from this organization can not be appreciated too [illegible].

That is from Jose C. Barbosa, of Porto Rico, who, I think, expresses how the people of Porto Rico feel about it.

In answer to the Senator's suggestion—if he will bear with me a moment—about schools I will say they are being established very rapidly, and they are for the benefit of the children. We are trying to reach all the children, and the school system is being extended all over the island. Schoolhouses are being built, and there is really very wonderful progress in that respect. This is a different kind of education—and the Senator wants to put more emphasis on that word than I had intended—but my idea about it was that it is educational in the sense that they learn discipline, they learn good habits, and when they are discharged out they go back among the people improved and better men, as a rule, than they were before. That is the testimony of everybody, and they are, as the Senator, I think, can see, naturally very proud to have such an organization on the island. I think the effect of it is good. We never know when we may have need of troops, and if we should have need of any we have them there, just as we have them elsewhere, to be used when needed.

Mr. SCOTT. As a member of the subcommittee, I should like to say a word, if the Senator from Colorado will allow me.

Mr. TELLER. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. We had Major Swift before us, a very intelligent officer, who, in making his statement, said that the very best families on the island were very proud of the fact that they had sons or other relatives in this regiment. The reason we reduced the term of enlistment from four to two years was because the Major said these young men would stay in the service just as long as we would allow them to stay. As the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] very truly said, the business men there sought these young men as soon as they were mustered out to employ them as clerks and to help them in their business.

In addition to that, Major Swift said that service in the regiment made them better American citizens. Of course we want to make good American citizens out of them. He said that the fact that they had served in this regiment made them good Americans. I know the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] wants to improve them in that direction, and I am sure that the very best thing we can do will be to increase this regiment and keep it in service. Governor Hunt and all the other officials in Porto Rico recommend it very highly.

Mr. TELLER. I have no doubt Governor Hunt recommends it, and that all the officials and all the people who want the Government to spend money down there will be glad to have it done; but what I am interested to know is whether we are spending money to meet a necessity or whether it is simply for a whim?

The junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES] suggests that we want this Porto Rican regiment on Panama business. Well, I think Porto Rico may be a little nearer the Panama region than some of our own shores, but it is not very much nearer.

I observe by the letter which was read by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] that they are anxious to have the soldiers who live down there to die there. They do not want soldiers from the United States to go to Panama to die. I do not know whether we would be treating those wards of ours just right if we should select them for the hazardous enterprises we do not care to have our own troops perform.

Mr. QUARLES. Will the Senator pardon me just a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. QUARLES. We had before us, among others, the major of this regiment. We asked him concerning the feeling of the soldiers down there regarding the trip to Panama or to the Philippines if it were thought desirable to send them to either of those places, and he said they are good soldiers, thoroughly imbued with the esprit du corps of the service, and that if we chose to send them they would all be delighted to go; they would all be glad to do some service for this country, which they have learned to love.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say a word about their being immunes. They are not immune if you send them to Panama. My knowledge of Panama, which, as I have said two or three times here, is of long standing, teaches me that you can not send from the island of Porto Rico anybody to Panama who will be immune in that climate, nor can you send them from some of the neighboring States to the Isthmus either. The only people of whom I have ever heard who, without great danger to their lives, could go to Panama are the negroes of Jamaica. They have done pretty well there. If you are to build the Panama Canal, Jamaica will be the place to call on for labor; and if you want to have an immune army, you had better organize it from the negroes of Jamaica than from the Porto Ricans.

Mr. President, I only wanted to know something of the purpose of this amendment and to say that in my judgment it is an unwise appropriation of money.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. What has become of this paragraph?

Mr. SPOONER. Has the amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment has been agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I desire to be heard a moment on the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] will pardon me a moment, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR], in charge of this bill, what is the effect of the language on page 22, beginning in line 9, as follows:

[illegible]

I should like to ask the Senator whether that will not have the effect to detail an officer, for instance, to this regiment, and then have his place in the line filled by another officer, and thus deprive him of the promotion to which he is now entitled in the line?

Mr. PROCTOR. It will not deprive him of any promotion. When he comes back to the line, another will take his place. It is just precisely the same system that is now adopted with reference to details to the staff. As the Senator will recollect, the vacancies in nearly all the staff departments are filled now by details from the line, and the place in the line is filled by promotion, by appointment at the foot of the list; but when another vacancy occurs, as the Senator can see, they go back.

Mr. SPOONER. Then does a detail operate to reduce an officer?

Mr. PROCTOR. No; it will not operate to reduce an officer or to increase his rank; it will not affect his rank in any way.

Mr. SPOONER. A detail, then, does not create any vacancy. What is it you fill by promotion if there is not a vacancy?

Mr. PROCTOR. It does create one and, Mr. President, it increases the officers of the Army just so much by a few minor officers to supply the vacancies made.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, if that is the law respecting the line and the staff I should prefer not to be detailed to the staff and have some other officer take my place in the line, for it might possibly be that within that four years, if I remained in the line, I would be promoted, and I would not be promoted if I entered into this Porto Rico regiment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, the detail of the staff to this regiment does not affect promotion a particle. The officer just preserves his rank and number, and is promoted when his turn comes precisely as if he had remained in the line. That is all provided for in the reorganization act, which provides for details and has been in operation for three years.

Mr. HOAR. May I ask the Senator if a man is detailed does he either lose his old place or get a new one? If he has not either lost his old place or got a new one, this place filled by promotion will be taken out. I should like to ask the Senator in regard to that.

Mr. PROCTOR. He has not lost his old place. He holds his rank there just the same. He is temporarily employed in another position.

Mr. HOAR. Then, if he has not lost his old place, and is temporarily employed in another position, how is his place filled by the promotion of somebody else? Then there are two officers for one place. It is a mere question of expression; it is not a question of substance of what the Senator desires to do. But suppose, for instance, you say that a member of the Supreme Court is detailed to hold court in Boston, detailed to do this, that, or the other thing. That is all right; it has been often done in former times in other courts. Very well, then, he has not lost his place or lost his old one. Then you add that the place of that judge who has been detailed to hold court in Boston shall be filled by promoting somebody from the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course it is a mere question of the criticism of the phraseology, not the substance. But it is said that it is the same to detail a man from one place to another; it is that it shall be filled by sending somebody else to that place to do duty there, but it shall be filled by promoting somebody to the office. That is the criticism.

Mr. PROCTOR. The illustration of the court in Massachusetts is a very good one. Suppose when they pass the law providing for a detail to hold some other court they increase the number of judges by one, and so provide that one may be detailed for that place; when his detail has expired he goes back to his regular service, while the added one or some other member of the court fills the detail.

Mr. HOAR. If that is done you would have used the phrase that you are filling the vacancy made by the other. If you have nine judges of the Supreme Court of the United States and want to make the number ten, you do not add a tenth by filling a vacancy of one of the nine who [illegible]. That explanation by the Senator is not consistent with the phraseology of the amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish to put a concrete case to the Senator. Suppose it shall happen that A B, who is a first lieutenant, shall be detailed to this Porto Rican regiment. He has no volition about it. He receives an order from his superior officer that he is detailed to the regiment. This law says when that is done some one else shall be promoted to the place which he has left.

Mr. SPOONER. Promoted or appointed.

Mr. ALLISON. Promoted or appointed.

Mr. HOAR. And that is a vacancy to be filled.

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. Now, this detail lasts for four years. In the meantime there is a vacancy in the lieutenancy of the particular company. Who gets that promotion? Is the detailed man made a captain or is the first lieutenant who has not been put in the place promoted to it?

Mr. PROCTOR. There is no promotion by company or by regiment. It is all by arm of the service. There is a lineal list, and all the first lieutenants, second lieutenants, and all other officers are on one [illegible] hundred.

Mr. ALLISON. So I know.

Mr. PROCTOR. Now, that man, wherever he is detailed, on whatever service, when there is a vacation above him, goes up one number.

Mr. ALLISON. What becomes of the man who has been already promoted? He goes up a number in a lower.

Mr. QUARLES. When his name is reached.

Mr. PROCTOR. When his name is reached. That just follows the principle which was adopted in the act of February 2, 1901, and which has been in operation without any friction or question.

Mr. ALLISON. Then this is only to add so many additional officers to the Regular Army?

Mr. PROCTOR. As may be detailed.

Mr. ALLISON. As may be detailed? Of course that is a very convenient thing to do, but you will of necessity have at some time more army officers than you will need under that detail.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator in charge of the bill to another provision in this amendment. There are now, I think, three battalions.

Mr. QUARLES. Two at present.

Mr. SPOONER. There are two battalions, and by this amendment three.

Mr. QUARLES. Three by the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Three were authorized by the act of February 2, 1901.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand; three battalions of four companies each—

To include the enlisted men of the present regiment who may be in the service June 30, 1904, and officers as herein provided. The field officers shall be detailed from the officers of the Regular Army of the same grade and shall receive the pay and emoluments of their grade.

There is no objection to that that I know of.

The present officers of the regiment below the grade of field officers who are mentally, morally, and physically qualified and have proved efficient in their respective positions may be reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a provisional term of four years.

Why is that provision inserted in the bill?

Mr. QUARLES. Their time expires next June, I may say to the Senator.

Mr. ALLISON. I know; but we are extending the time provisionally for four years. Why should they not be continued in their offices by reappointment when they shall have been found to be mentally, morally, and physically qualified and have a record of efficiency in the service in their respective positions?

Mr. PROCTOR. Do I understand the Senator to wish to take all the officers into the Army approximately by legislation, without reference to their qualification?

Mr. SPOONER. If the Senator puts that question to me, I do not.

Mr. PROCTOR. I did not understand whether that is what the Senator wishes or not.

Mr. SPOONER. No; that is not what I wish.

The present officers of the regiment below the grade of field officers who are mentally, morally, and physically qualified and have proved efficient in their respective positions may be reappointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

Now, where upon examination these officers are found to be morally, mentally, and physically qualified and to have made efficient records, why not continue them for this extended term of service without any reappointment and confirmation by the Senate? Those men who can not pass the examination may be displaced, and ought to be displaced, if they have not made a record for efficiency, if they are not mentally and morally and physically fit.

Mr. PROCTOR. As the law now stands they all go out, officers and all, June 30. They stand on a par and under the same principle with volunteer regiments. They have never been subjected to the requirements which apply to officers of the Regular Army. Continuing them indefinitely would make them practically officers of the Regular Army. That they do not ask, and all the authorities of the War Department are very much opposed to it. I think that would be unwise.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, if continuing these officers, who are not officers in the Regular Army, for a term of four years would constitute them indefinitely officers of the Regular Army, I am very greatly surprised.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not say that it would.

Mr. SPOONER. It obviously would not.

Mr. PROCTOR. But indefinitely it would put them practically on a par with officers of the Regular Army.

Mr. SPOONER. This does not provide for any indefinite continuance. Suppose an officer is sent to a regiment there, qualified, as in the language of the bill, mentally, morally, and physically fit, and has made a good record for efficiency, why, if you are continuing the term of service of the provisional regiment for four years, should not such a man be continued in his position?

Mr. FORAKER. Would it meet the Senator's view if the word "may" should be changed to "shall," so as to read "shall be appointed?"

Mr. SPOONER. I have some doubt about the power to require the President to appoint; but it does seem to me that it might as well be provided that there should be an examination, and that officers found to be mentally, morally, and physically qualified, who have proved efficient in their respective positions, shall be continued in said positions, or during the provisional term of four years.

Mr. FORAKER. They would have to be recommissioned, I suppose.

Mr. SPOONER. Not necessarily, in a continuance of the term of the existing regiment in which the officers are serving and have served for some years.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know how their commissions read about that. When they read that they shall expire the 1st of July next, of course an act of Congress may continue them and give them another commission; but I suppose it was the view of the subcommittee that framed this amendment—I did not take any part in it—that inasmuch as they would have to be reappointed, there should be that kind of a provision authorizing the reappointment, and they said the President "may" appoint, instead of the President "shall" appoint them, with a view of not having an appearance of compelling the President to appoint certain officers.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is the same provision that is used in regard to the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. SPOONER. That is not a parallel case. I ask that this amendment be reconsidered and that it may go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair regards it as an open question.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that it be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, at the top of page 23, to insert:

Pay of officers of the line, $76,200.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 13, page 23.

Mr. PROCTOR. I move to strike out from line 14 down to and including the word "purposes," in line 24, and to insert:

All the money hereinbefore appropriated for pay of the Army and miscellaneous shall be disbursed and accounted for by officers of the Pay Department as pay of the Army, and for that purpose shall constitute one fund: Provided, That hereafter all payments to be made under the provisions of section 23 of the act of Congress approved January 21, 1903, and all allowances for mileage shall be made solely from the sums herein appropriated for such purposes: And provided further, That all the accounts of individual paymasters shall be analyzed under these several heads of the appropriation and recorded in detail by the Paymaster-General of the Army before said accounts are forwarded to the Treasury Department for final audit, and a statement of the amounts so disbursed shall be furnished to the chairmen of the Military Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the reassembling of Congress at its next session.

Mr. GORMAN. What is the object of that amendment?

Mr. ALLISON. Let me ask the Senator, as this seems to be a novel change, why are these several accounts required to be sent to a committee or to committees of Congress?

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment was sent here from the Pay Department, and I thought it was harmless.

Mr. ALLISON. It is reasonably so, but that detail would undoubtedly be a very large document to send up. It would embrace a number of details of no value.

Mr. PROCTOR. They are of no value. I am perfectly willing to strike off that part of the amendment.

Mr. COCKRELL. Let the clause be read. I did not hear it.

Mr. GORMAN. Let it be read again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the last clause of the amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

And a statement of the amounts so disbursed shall be furnished to the chairmen of the Military Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives on the reassembling of Congress at its next session.

Mr. ALLISON. It covers all the appropriations hereinbefore appropriated, including pay of Army and the entire amount disbursed.

Mr. GORMAN. Let the whole amendment be read again.

The Secretary read the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I can state in a moment the purpose of this change. The wording as it came from the House was different from what it had been heretofore and would require each individual paymaster to keep an account with every item of appropriation. It would require every paymaster to keep nineteen different accounts with different items of appropriation. The wording of previous acts was changed by leaving out the words "the Army and miscellaneous" and the words "and accounted for."

It would also require them to carry very much more money, because they must have enough funds appropriated for each particular purpose to answer any probable requirement for that purpose. So, instead of using it as one fund, they would be required to have nineteen different funds and a surplus, of course, of sufficient amount to surely cover each one. Some of the funds they can not calculate accurately. Of some of them the whole would not be used. If used as one fund, they can save carrying a large amount of money and save a very great amount of clerk hire. The Pay Department say that it would be utterly impossible to do the business of the department without a large increase of clerks, if the provision passes as it came to the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I of course do not want to interfere with the Senator in this plan, but some years ago all the pay of the Army, both of officers and enlisted men, was created into one fund in the accounting and in the disbursing; that is to say, the pay to the officers and men in the active list, etc., shall be disbursed. As I understand the amendment the Senator has sent to the desk, it provides that all appropriations, including miscellaneous appropriations, shall be treated as one fund.

Mr. PROCTOR. That has already been the law.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, no.

Mr. ALLISON. Not always.

Mr. PROCTOR. I mean of late years.

Mr. ALLISON. It may have been of late years. I prefer that the amendment shall go over until to-morrow, if the Senator will allow that course to be taken.

Mr. PROCTOR. Certainly; I have no objection to its going over.

Mr. ALLISON. And if the Senator will allow me now to move an executive session, I will be greatly obliged to him.

Mr. PROCTOR. All right.

Mr. ALLISON. I make that motion, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, March 8, 1904, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 7, 1904.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. La Vergne L. Gregg, Twenty-second Infantry, November 27, 1903, vice Gunn, Twentieth Infantry, retired from active service.

Second Lieut. Oliver F. Snyder, Eighteenth Infantry, November 28, 1903, vice Tillman, Seventh Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Edward L. Rains, Twenty-fourth Infantry, December 2, 1903, vice Lyles, Twentieth Infantry, deceased.

Second Lieut. Charles L. Woodhouse, Twenty-eighth Infantry, December 10, 1903, vice Holden, Tenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Bertram P. Johnson, Twenty-fourth Infantry, December 17, 1903, vice Bates, Twenty-fifth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Gustave A. Wieser, Fifteenth Infantry, December 26, 1903, vice Cranston, Seventeenth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Charles R. W. Morison, Fifth Infantry, January 2, 1904, vice Toffey, Fourth Infantry, promoted.

Second Lieut. Walter L. Reed, Tenth Infantry, January 8, 1904, vice Winship, Sixteenth Infantry, appointed judge-advocate.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Commander William H. Everett to be a captain in the Navy from the 17th day of February, 1904, vice Capt. Caspar Goodrich, promoted. This nomination is submitted to correct an error in the date of Commander Everett's promotion as confirmed on February 26, 1904.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Louis Shane to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of February, 1904, vice Lieut. Clarence S. Williams, promoted.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Edward W. McIntyre to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 4th day of February, 1904, vice Lieut. Roger Welles, jr., promoted.

Ensign William S. Miller to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 28th day of January, 1904, having completed three years' service in his present grade.

Paymaster John C. Sullivan to be a pay inspector in the Navy from the 4th day of November, 1903, vice Pay Inspector Hiram E. Drury, promoted.

Ensign Edgar B. Larimer to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 28th day of January, 1904, having completed four years' service in his present grade.

First Lieut. John G. Muir, United States Marine Corps, to be a captain in the United States Marine Corps from the 27th day of December, 1903, vice Capt. Ben H. Fuller, promoted.

JUDGE.

Henry Thomas Reed, of Iowa, to be United States judge for the northern district of Iowa, vice Oliver P. Shiras, resigned.

POSTMASTERS.

IDAHO.

Mary A. Wall to be postmaster at Blackfoot, in the county of Bingham and State of Idaho, in place of Fred S. Stevens. Incumbent's commission expired December 13, 1903.

Austin B. Cochran to be postmaster at Atlanta, in the county of Hamilton and State of Indiana. Office became Presidential January 1, 1904.

INDIAN TERRITORY.

James E. Elliott to be postmaster at Duncan, in the Chickasaw Nation, Ind. T., in place of James E. Elliott. Incumbent's commission expires March 20, 1904.

KANSAS.

Joseph H. Smith to be postmaster at Downs, in the county of Osborne and State of Kansas, in place of Joseph H. Smith. Incumbent's commission expired March 6, 1904.

MAINE.

Eugene A. Fairfield to be postmaster at Kennebunk, in the county of York and State of Maine, in place of Eugene A. Fairfield. Incumbent's commission expires March 20, 1904.

MINNESOTA.

George E. Carson to be postmaster at Bemidji, in the county of Beltrami and State of Minnesota, in place of Eva Kaiser. Incumbent's commission expires March 20, 1904.

MONTANA.

Charles D. Howell to be postmaster at Havre, in the county of Chouteau and State of Montana, in place of Jesse C. Ricker. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1904.

NEBRASKA.

William Royer to be postmaster at Seward, in the county of Seward and State of Nebraska, in place of William Royer. Incumbent's commission expires March 31, 1904.

NEW YORK.

James Fox to be postmaster at St. Johnsville, in the county of Montgomery and State of New York, in place of James Fox. Incumbent's commission expires March 20, 1904.

Merrill Hosmer to be postmaster at Potsdam, in the county of St. Lawrence and State of New York, in place of Merrill Hosmer. Incumbent's commission expires March 31, 1904.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Ellef K. Myhre to be postmaster at Valley City, in the county of Barnes and State of North Dakota, in place of Ellef K. Myhre. Incumbent's commission expires March 23, 1904.

OHIO.

Frederick T. Miles to be postmaster at Salem, in the county of Columbiana and State of Ohio, in place of Frederick T. Miles. Incumbent's commission expired March 6, 1904.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Lawrence O. Harper to be postmaster at Honea Path, in the county of Anderson and State of South Carolina. Office became Presidential January 1, 1904.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Casper Kennedy to be postmaster at Sisseton, in the county of Roberts and State of South Dakota, in place of Casper Kennedy. Incumbent's commission expired January 23, 1904.

WASHINGTON.

Henry A. Rathvon to be postmaster at Marysville, in the county of Snohomish and State of Washington. Office became Presidential July 1, 1903.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 7, 1904.

DISTRICT JUDGE.

Henry Thomas Reed to be United States judge for the northern district of Iowa.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Commander Walter S. Hughes to be a commander in the Navy from the 4th day of February, 1904.

Lieut. Walter O. Hulme to be lieutenant-commander in the Navy from the 17th day of February, 1904.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Oscar D. Duncan to be a lieutenant in the Navy from the 1st day of January, 1904.

Ensign Alexander F. H. Yates to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 28th day of January, 1904.

PROMOTIONS IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

Second Asst. Engineer Byron A. Minor to be a first assistant engineer, with the rank of second lieutenant, in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States.

Second Asst. Engineer Charles S. Root to be a first assistant engineer, with the rank of second lieutenant, in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States.

POSTMASTERS.

IOWA.

William A. Grummon to be postmaster at Rockwell, in the county of Cerro Gordo and State of Iowa.

A. M. Loomis to be postmaster at Wyoming, in the county of Jones and State of Iowa.

NEBRASKA.

Theodore A. Gierens to be postmaster at Arlington, in the county of Washington and State of Nebraska.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Samuel B. Montgomery to be postmaster at Tunnelton, in the county of Preston and State of West Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, March 7, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

SELECT COMMITTEE TO INVESTIGATE USELESS PAPERS, POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair calls the attention of the House to a letter from the Postmaster-General reporting that the files of his Department are burdened with useless papers and asking for the appointment of a committee under the statute providing for their examination. The Chair will appoint as members of the joint select committee Messrs. BATES and BASSETT.

CHANGE OF COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOSEPH G. CANNON, House of Representatives.

Mr. SPEAKER: I have the honor to tender you my resignation as a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Interior Department.

Very respectfully,

E. S. CANDLER, Jr.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, Mr. CANDLER will be excused from further service upon this committee. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Chair appoints Mr. PINCKNEY to the place made vacant by Mr. CANDLER's resignation.

JANE I. LONG.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following Senate bill, amended by the House, returned with the amendment of the House disagreed to, and asking for a conference. The Clerk will report the same.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House do insist upon its amendment and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. SULLOWAY.

WILLIAM W. JACKSON.

The SPEAKER. The Chair also lays before the House the following Senate bill amended by the House, returned with the amendment of the House disagreed to and asking for a conference, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1543) granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to a conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House insist upon its amendment and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees Mr. GIBSON, Mr. MIERS of Indiana, and Mr. SULLOWAY.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill went to the Speaker's table under the rules on Saturday afternoon. I desire to call up the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania submits the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, and asks unanimous consent that the statement may be read in lieu of the report. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make the point of order on the conference report.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's point of order?

Mr. MANN. The report states, in regard to amendment No. 235, "That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate No. 235, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Insert after the word 'personal,' in line 10, page 151 of the bill, the words 'or official;' and the Senate agree to the same." Mr. Speaker, the amendment is to section 3 of the bill which passed the House.

The SPEAKER. Has the gentleman the number of the amendment?

Mr. MANN. Two hundred and thirty-five and 236. The amendment as it passed the House provided that "no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer provided for." The Senate added an amendment, 235, so as to read "no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act." Upon that amendment the conferees proposed to concur with an amendment inserted in another portion of the text, entirely separate from the amendment, with no regard whatever to the subject-matter of the amendment of the Senate, the words "or official" after the word "personal." The House passed a bill saying that "no part of any money appropriated by this act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer provided for." That is the way the bill passed the House. The Senate passed the bill in the same shape; the conferees added, not to any amendment in the bill, but to a portion of the text of the bill which had been agreed upon by both Houses, that after the word "personal" insert the words "or official."

Now, Mr. Speaker, so far as the ruling has been made on this subject, the identical question was before the Committee of the Whole House on the oleomargarine bill. The House passed the provision reading "any coloration or ingredient." The Senate struck out the words "or ingredient" and made the bill read "any artificial coloration," so that the amendment to the bill came before the word "coloration." In the Committee of the Whole, when that bill was considered, the chairman ruled upon consideration that because the word "artificial" came before the word "coloration" the House could not concur with an amendment adding a word after the word "coloration." The chairman said, on page 4595 of the RECORD of April 23, 1902:

> But the Chair is still of opinion that the amendment, coming as it does in the text of the bill after the word "coloration," although it is only one word beyond the Senate amendment, the effect is just the same as if it were ten words or ten lines, and the Chair therefore adheres to the ruling that the text of the bill which has been agreed to by both Houses is sacred and can not be amended in Committee of the Whole.

Of course, so far as the Committee of the Whole is concerned, the conferees can have no greater power than the House itself could have; so that if the Committee of the Whole can not add a word in the text of the bill apart from the amendment of the Senate, then the conferees have no power to add to the text of the bill. That matter in the committee at that time was considered exhaustively, or at considerable length. There was quite a controversy in the House, and there was a great effort being made in the committee to amend the Senate amendment.

The subject-matter was precisely the one before the House, and the Chairman then ruled that although it was germane to the subject-matter, you could not add in the bill an amendment to the text which had been agreed to, in a different place, although only one word away from the amendment of the Senate.

Now, here is a proposition to add as an amendment the words "or official," which have no relation whatever, so far as the subject-matter is concerned, to the Senate amendment and not in connection with the amendment, words which could not possibly be used along with the Senate amendment and which do not relate to it. It seems to me that the conferees in that respect have exceeded their powers, and I make the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not quite understand the exact point of objection. The Chair has the bill before him.

Mr. MANN. The Chair will see that the Senate amendment in line 3, page 161, adds the words "or any other." Senate amendment inserts the words "or any other." Now, the conferees propose to insert in line 5, the same page, after the word "personal," the words "or official," making a change of the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands the gentleman, his point is that this matter agreed to was not in conference; that in the printed bill, in amendment 235, in line 5, after the word "personal," the words "or official" were inserted by the conferees, according to their report, as a part of this report.

The gentleman refers to the language that "no part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be available for paying expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer," and the gentleman complains that the conferees insert the words "or official" after the word "personal," so that it reads "personal or official use." The gentleman claims that the conferees did not have jurisdiction ——

Mr. MANN. To change the text of the bill.

The SPEAKER. To insert the words "or official."

Mr. MANN. That is it.

The SPEAKER. In other words, that there was no disagreement between the House and the Senate touching the use of horses and carriages for official purposes. The Chair will hear from the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, the subject-matter of this provision of the bill was the use of carriages by officials of the Government. The House sought by this provision of the bill to prevent the use of carriages by other than the President or the Secretary to the President and the heads of Departments. That was the provision as it passed the House. That was what the House sought to do. When the bill went to the Senate, the Senate amended by adding, at the end of line 3, the words "or any other," and again, in line 6, it amends by adding the words "by this or any other act." The amendments of the Senate, we insist, leave the whole item open for conference. The conferees seek to reconcile the difference between the two Houses by adding after the word "personal" the words "or official." The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] cites a conference report where the conferees, I apprehend, sought to add a word to a section that was not open and which had not been amended by the Senate.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, Mr. Speaker, in the case which I cited the Senate added the word "artificial" before the word "coloration," and the ruling was that, that being added in the Senate, we could not add after the word "coloration" the words "except colored butter." That was the ruling.

Mr. HEMENWAY. The gentleman changed the whole scope of his provision by adding that.

Mr. MANN. Not at all.

Mr. HEMENWAY. This simply makes it more definite.

Mr. MANN. "Artificial coloration" meant one thing. An amendment was proposed to make that read "artificial coloration, except colored butter," and the ruling was that it could not be done, because it inserted an amendment in the text of the bill one word away from the amendment.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Let me suggest this to the gentleman: The House passed this bill with a provision intending to prevent the use of money appropriated in the bill for carriages for anyone except the President, his secretary, and the heads of the Executive Departments. The Senate thought the House had not gone far enough. It added the words "by this or any other act." The conferees, in order to reach an agreement, have simply amplified the restriction proposed to be put upon the use of certain public property. The character, quality, and extent of the public property in question are not affected by the action of the conferees.

The conferees on the part of the House insisted that if the restriction, applying to money in one bill only, was to be applied to moneys appropriated in all other bills, as proposed by the Senate, then the restriction should be amplified as stipulated in this report, and the effect is simply to do what both Houses have all along proposed to do—that is, provide that no one shall have the use of a carriage excepting the President, his secretary, or the heads of Departments. Therefore, by the action of the Senate as modified by the action of the conferees in agreeing to an amendment, the legislation intended by the House and the Senate is in no wise changed, but, on the contrary, is made more definite, so that the intention of the House and the intention of the Senate will be carried out in the enactment of this provision in the bill.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, he is making the same speech which I made to the Chair on the oleomargarine bill. I thought the ruling of the Chair to be wrong, but I take it that a ruling made by the Chair constitutes a precedent for the government of the House. I read from the RECORD:

Mr. SCOTT. I understand the Chair to hold that the text of the original bill, which has passed both Houses, is sacred and can not be touched in this committee.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the opinion and ruling of the Chair.

Now, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I insist, notwithstanding the statement of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], that the committee of conference have not exceeded their jurisdiction or violated the rules and practice that obtain in conferences.

The proposition is just this: The House proposed a restriction on the use of such carriages and horses as are procured with money appropriated in one particular act; the Senate extended the proposed restriction to carriages and horses procured with money appropriated in all acts; to which amendment the House disagreed and referred the controversy or disagreement between the two Houses to the conference committee for the purpose of reconciliation. Assuming, as the conference committee did, that the real controversy between the two Houses was the question of the use of carriages and horses belonging to the Government, and in order to bring the two Houses together on the question, they have recommended, first, that the House agree to the proposition of the Senate to extend the proposed restriction to all moneys appropriated by Congress, and, second, that the Senate agree that the use of such carriages and horses shall be restricted both to personal and official purposes.

Mr. MANN. There can be no doubt that the ruling on the oleomargarine bill covered identically this case.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the conference report that while the Chair, as now advised, could rule upon this point of order, yet it is matter of such importance that the Chair would be glad to have until a later hour to-day or possibly to-morrow morning to consider this question.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I ask unanimous consent that the matter go over until to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [A pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

LEASES FOR POST-OFFICE PREMISES.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to report to the House the privileged resolution which I send to the desk.

The resolution (H. Res. 118) was read, as follows:

Whereas Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General J. L. Bristow, in his report to the Postmaster-General dated October 24, 1903, and which report has been transmitted to a committee of this House, has charged that "long-time leases for post-office premises were canceled and the rent increased upon the recommendation of influential Representatives;" and

Whereas it is charged in the same report that "if a Member of Congress requested an increase in the rent the rent was increased, a postmaster Beavers usually complied, regardless of the merits of the case;" and

Whereas certain cases of an aggravated character are cited on pages 133, 134, and 135 of said report to sustain the above charges; and

Whereas on page 136 of said report it is charged that Members of Congress have [illegible] of the Revised Statutes, and that in the face of this statute Beavers has made contracts with Members of Congress for the rental of premises either in their own names, the names of their agents, or some member of their families; and

Whereas these charges and others contained in said report reflect upon the integrity of the membership of this House, and upon individual Members of this House whose names are not mentioned; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate said charges, and in connection therewith any frauds or irregularities in the conduct of the Post-office Department; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, frauds, and irregularities, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

In lines 3 and 4 strike out the words "and in connection therewith any frauds or irregularities in the conduct of the Post-office Department."

In line 10 strike out "frauds, and irregularities."

Mr. OVERSTREET. The Clerk is mistaken in the reading. The words which the Clerk has just read as if stricken out by the committee were stricken out before the resolution was referred. That is not the recommendation of the committee. I ask that the Clerk read the language of the resolution, omitting the parts stricken out, which were stricken out upon the suggestion of the author of the resolution when it was originally submitted.

Mr. HAY. Those words were stricken out not upon my suggestion, but upon a point of order raised by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. OVERSTREET. At all events, those words are not a part of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. Of course, this is a departure from the usual custom; but with the explanation made, the Clerk will report the resolution, omitting the words which have been erased.

The resolution was again read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Speaker of this House appoint a committee, consisting of five Members of this House, to investigate said charges; that said committee have power to send for persons and papers, to enforce the production of the same, to examine witnesses under oath, to have the assistance of a stenographer, and to have power to sit during the sessions of the House, and to exercise all functions necessary to a complete investigation of said charges, and to report the result of said investigation as soon as practicable.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, the committee has unanimously directed me to report a recommendation that this resolution lie upon the table. Before I make the formal motion, however, that the resolution be so disposed of, I wish to submit to the House a proposition for unanimous consent for general debate on the resolution, which has been agreed upon, so far as the committee membership of both parties could control this matter. The proposition is that notwithstanding the motion to lay the resolution on the table the subject-matter may be debated generally for two hours, one hour to be controlled by myself and one hour by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], and that at the end of those two hours——

Mr. MADDOX. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I should have preferred to submit my proposition before yielding; but I yield.

Mr. MADDOX. Why can we not get copies of this report before we begin this discussion?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will explain that.

Mr. MADDOX. Why should we begin the discussion upon this very short notice, when nobody here has ever seen the report? We should like to see the report, so that we may know something about it before we begin the discussion.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Answering the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. MADDOX] before I complete my first statement, I will say that we had no authority, in fact, to order this report printed. However, for the purpose of accommodating the membership of the House, I have stretched my authority somewhat by ordering it printed in advance, subject, of course, to the ratification of the House, in order that Members might have the document upon their desks. The Printing Bureau promised to have copies of the report sent directly to the Doorkeeper's desk on this floor for the use of Members. If that promise is kept, the copies should be in the possession of Members within a half hour at the furthest. I did the best I could. I made that request on last Saturday, immediately after the committee authorized this report. Naturally it has taken some time to prepare the document. I think, however, that the suggestion of the gentleman from Georgia will be complied with before the conclusion of the time I have indicated.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In view of the fact that this report ostensibly reflects on the membership of this House, does not the gentleman think it would be fair and proper toward Members to ask that the report be printed and then call the matter up to-morrow or the next day, when Members will have had a chance to read the report and know what is in it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say to my friend from Alabama that "ostensibly this report reflects on Members" is a statement that the committee is in no wise responsible for, nor will the report [illegible] statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand that; but the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General, as I understand, has reflected on the membership of this House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Quite to the contrary. The report of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General in no way says that a Member of this House has violated any law, except in the case of leasing their individual property for post-office purposes. There are but three of those cases, and the committee explains all of them fully.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. As I understand the matter, I have been under the impression all the time that there was a report that was covered by the Hay resolution, that did reflect on the membership of this House; and I understand that the Post-Office Committee have called for the facts and propose to report those facts to the House. Now, I do not mean to say he has reflected on the membership of this House, but I have understood all the time the report did. If it has not been found that there was such, and if that has been investigated and considered, what is the use of discussing it at all? But if there is something there that might reflect on the membership of this House I think it but just to the membership of this House, and not only to the committee, because they are informed, while the balance of us are not. This is a matter that is personal to the membership of the House, and I do not think the gentleman would want to push the question until the membership of this House, each man, has had an opportunity to read that statement made by Mr. Bristow.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, let me explain briefly, by unanimous consent, of course, that the committee has felt so strongly that there is no reflection upon the integrity or conduct of the Members growing out of their various recommendations in the Post-Office Department that it was fair to the membership and the country to give the facts publicity, willing to give it out in a proper and lawful way rather than to appear to suppress something which might be magnified and exaggerated from what the truth is.

Now, then, in view of the unanimous report of the committee, representing both of the parties upon the floor, that this resolution ought to lie upon the table for the reason that the facts before the committee did not warrant any investigation of Members, it was thought that the Members could well afford for a short time to consider the question without going into the detail of reading the several hundred cases which are given in this report.

Speaking for myself, I do not believe there is an instance in all of these cases which in any wise reflects upon the conduct of Members, other than a construction which some person might make as to the motive which prompted the constituency and the public officers were discharging their legitimate duty; but in view of the overwhelming sentiment, which has been to a large extent engendered by the press, that we were keeping something from the open light of day, the committee unanimously recommends to the House that the House show to the country an abstract of each one of these cases, which makes a complete exoneration, in my judgment, of the attitude of Members and will intrench them in the respect and honor of the country, where they have been prompted by the honest efforts of their constituencies to make recommendations for consideration by a great Department, because——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will permit me.

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). Because I think it due to the interests of the country to carry out their duty to their constituencies. I am not disposed at all to force this upon the attention of the House at this time if they feel, or any considerable number feel, we should consider it at some other time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will allow me just a moment. I am glad to hear what the gentleman says, that this difficulty which was stated by the press, as containing a reflection upon the membership of this House, has no warrant; and I am glad to know that the committee is giving a report containing all the facts and testimony, and that they are giving it out fully. We are not, by allowing this matter to go over until to-morrow, suppressing anything from the press. When that report comes here they can get it, and take it, and send it out to-day; but I do think that it is due to the membership of this House that the report should be brought in and published that was supposed to reflect upon them. In fact, I saw an editorial or a statement in one of the morning papers of to-day saying that this report, involving over one-half of the membership of this House, was to be brought in.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is not true.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course it is not. I recognize that from what the gentleman says. I think this matter ought to go over until to-morrow and give every man on the floor of this House an opportunity to read that report from the Postmaster-General before we are brought to a vote on the matter. We should know the facts of the matter on which we are voting.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman yield to me?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan?

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 10136. An act authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory; and

H. R. 1909. An act to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 48. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington;

S. 4387. An act to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Gilbertsville, Ky.;

S. 3596. An act to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands;

S. 1974. An act amending the act of Congress approved January 26, 1895, entitled "An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to correct errors where double allotments of land have erroneously been made to an Indian, to correct errors in patents, and for other purposes;" and

S. 3. An act to regulate electrical wiring in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the President pro tempore had appointed Mr. PETTUS and Mr. LONG members of the joint committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post-Office and Navy Departments.

LEASES FOR POST-OFFICE PREMISES.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I understood the gentleman from Indiana to say that he had investigated the matter and to say that there is no evidence reflecting upon any Member of the House.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is my personal judgment.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, I would like to know whether the minority concede as much?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The minority, I will say, hold that there are some few instances which are susceptible of construction whether a Member has not exceeded his right as a Member in exercising his influence, but not in violation of any law.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do they distinguish between these cases?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am perfectly willing to leave it to the minority members of the committee to answer the question, because I have the utmost confidence in them.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I would like to make this suggestion to the gentleman, that you ask unanimous——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Excuse me just a moment. On that proposition, if you will let me state a proposition before you ask the question, I may meet your desire. I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that I am disposed to believe that the request of Members is fair, and there is no disposition upon my part to object, and without any objection from any member of the Post-Office Committee, which was expecting this matter to be brought up to-day, I will ask unanimous consent, when we have this morning fixed the time for general debate, that then the matter may go over until Wednesday.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I will suggest this, that you ask unanimous consent that upon Monday, immediately after the reading——

Mr. OVERSTREET. This is Monday.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I mean Wednesday—that immediately after the reading of the Journal we shall then take up this matter, and that you couple with it your former request for general debate, etc.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is a privileged resolution, and could be called up at any time. But I do not, however, wish to interfere with the regular order which has heretofore been determined upon. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I submit this proposition for unanimous consent, that the matter be taken up for consideration immediately after the reading of the Journal on Wednesday, and that two hours general debate be had upon the proposition, one hour of the time to be controlled by myself and one hour to be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], and at the end of that time the vote be taken upon the motion to table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And, Mr. Speaker, that in the meantime the report be printed and distributed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; and that the report be printed as submitted to-day.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That there is a feeling about me among a number of gentlemen, and I include myself, that two hours will not be sufficient. Is the gentleman from Indiana not willing to say four hours, two hours to a side?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will compromise with my friend and give as my reason that the post-office supply bill will be before the House, and I do not want to take up too much time to its disadvantage. Suppose I would modify that and say three hours—an hour and a half on each side?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. For a question.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, I think the gentleman is asking a great deal of this House. Before anybody has had a chance to read this proof, to say we shall only be permitted an hour to a side to consider this matter. I understand this report contains a thousand pages of printed matter. I shall not consent myself to limiting this debate to one hour to a side.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I said an hour and a half to a side.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Why not give us two hours and a half on a side?

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Tennessee doubtless recognizes the fact that no debate is in order upon this proposition, this being a report to lay on the table.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Certainly the gentleman ought to give more than an hour to a side.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am willing to give an hour and a half on a side. I think that the gentleman will have no difficulty in getting recognition.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that on Wednesday next, after the reading of the Journal, this subject shall be taken up, and that an hour and a half of debate be had on each side, one-half of the time to be controlled by the gentleman from Indiana and one-half of the time by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], when a vote shall be taken upon the motion that the resolution be upon the table.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I understand the gentleman coupled with that the request that in the meantime the Bristow report shall be printed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I expect to submit the report at once, and it will be printed as a matter of course.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand the arrangement to be that after general debate was closed and before the motion was made to lay upon the table this question could be presented to the House by way of an amendment to the resolution for a general investigation of the Post-Office Department, subject to the objection by the gentleman from Indiana under a point of order as he saw proper to make it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is quite correct, Mr. Speaker. I omitted that, although I think that they would have the right to do that without unanimous consent. The proposition is that at the close of the general debate and before a vote is taken upon the motion to lay on the table a substitute may be offered, I reserving a right to interpose an objection that it is not germane.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. An amendment or a substitute?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Either.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit the report of the committee and ask that it be printed under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana, chairman of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, by direction of that committee, submits a report, with the resolution that has already been reported, and asks that it be printed. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, but under this order they would go to the document room?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I believe so.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. How many copies will be printed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know.

The SPEAKER. The usual number of copies.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know what the usual number is.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Congress has been indicted by the press, and I ask the gentleman from Indiana to couple with his motion a request that the report also be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can not agree to that, Mr. Speaker. It is too cumbersome to be printed in the RECORD and would be a needless expense. I have no objection to double the usual number of copies being printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman also make the motion that one-half go to the folding room and one-half to the document room?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I understand that the usual number is 1,682. Now, I ask that 4,000 copies be printed, one-half to go to the folding room and one-half to the document room.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BOUTELL in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill, the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 18521) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, before entering upon an explanation of the bill, I wish to state to the committee that I did not think it advisable to-day to undertake to fix the limitation of the discussion under general debate. But I do trust that until that limitation shall be fixed by the House it may be divided equally under the suggestions made by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON], the minority leader of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that the time may be controlled by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] on behalf of the minority, and by the chairman of the committee on behalf of the majority until further order by the House. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, the bill now before the committee authorizes the expenditure during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, of $169,996,588.75, carrying $16,484,039 more than the bill for the current fiscal year, which appropriated $153,511,549.75. The increased appropriation authorized by this measure over the current law is 10.8 per cent. It reduces the estimates submitted by the Department by an amount equal to $[illegible], anticipating of the estimates submitted an amount less by just sum. Nevertheless the bill carries $1,910,818.75 more than the estimates, and I desire to explain what otherwise would appear a mathematical inaccuracy. The regular estimates did not provide for complete estimates in the rural-delivery service.

While the report of the Department contained certain recommendations, the estimates submitted did not include complete estimates to cover the recommendations concerning the rural service, and the committee has authorized in this bill an appropriation of $5,200,000 for rural services more than the Department estimates. Gentlemen will then see the apparent discrepancy in the figures.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will ask the gentleman, Mr. Chairman, if he intends to raise the salaries of the rural carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much?

Mr. OVERSTREET. One hundred and twenty dollars.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that is enough?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do; as I think the gentleman will believe when he takes into account all of the conditions.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in order to bring to the attention of the committee the conditions of the postal service and the appropriations for it, I wish to call attention to the receipts and expenditures, as compared with the appropriations for the past few years, as appears from the following statement:

Analysis of appropriations—History of recent years.

Appropriations for 1902	$123,787,688.75
Expenditures for 1902	124,685,731.00
Revenue for 1902	121,[illegible]947.00
Deficit for 1902	2,817,684.00
Appropriations for 1903	153,416,[illegible]
Expenditures for 1903	152,[illegible]
Revenue for 1903	134,224,448.00
Deficit for 1903	4,[illegible]86,[illegible]85.00
Appropriations for 1904	15[illegible]
Expenditures for 1904 (estimated)	154,[illegible]
Revenue for 1904 (estimated)	147,[illegible]
Deficit for 1904 (estimated)	7,[illegible]
Appropriations for 1905 (authorized)	169,996,588.75
Expenditures appropriated	170,000,000.00
Revenue for 1905 (estimated)	160,000,000.00
Deficit for 1905 (estimated)	10,000,000.00

There is a constantly growing deficit in the postal service because of two principal features, one of which is the ever increasing demand for promotions and increases of salaries, and the other the demand for increased facilities that are constantly being experimented with and which later ripen into a permanency and involve a higher expenditure for the benefit of the postal service, resulting in both cases in an increased outlay, while the receipts do not increase in the same proportion. In a business transaction the rule usually obtains to first look to the amount which your business will receive before you determine exactly the expenditures. It has, however, in the postal service been quite the reverse. The demands for expenditures have been made without considering the receipts from the various channels provided for by law.

For the purpose of more clearly fixing in the minds of the committee the entire service and the relation of one branch to another, I propose to suggest a method which will enable all to carry more clearly in mind the expenditures of the various branches. The postal service is organized for equipment by the appointment of postmasters and their assistants; by the rent of buildings for post-office purposes; for the transportation of the mail by rail and water; by the star service, which supplements the water and rail transportation and connects the different communities; by the wagon service, which hauls the mail from depot to depot and from depots to offices, and by the mail messenger service, which supplements that portion where the post-offices are beyond the limit under the railroad contract for the delivery of the mail. That I classify as the group for the organization of the service. That organization must be equipped and put into operation whether a single letter is dispatched or not.

It is true that in the case of the transportation of mail the quantity controls the amount of pay, but the contracts for the service must be entered into whether there is any mail distributed or not. In the second group I place the facilities or aids to the promotion of the service, the dispatch of the mail—so that it may be delivered more promptly to the points of destination. Those facilities are the street-railway service, which carries the mail by cars within the large cities; second, the pneumatic tubes, which assist in the rapid dispatch of first-class mail matter; and, third, the canceling machines, which aid in the stamp cancellation for the quicker dispatch of the mail of the first class. That I call the second group, the first being the equipment or organization, and the second the facilities.

The third group is that of the supplies of the service. Each one of the four Assistant Postmasters-General carries his own supplies. Those supplies must be provided for, in a limited number of cases at least, regardless of the receipts of the service.

The fourth group is that of the employees, over 90,000 of whom are carried in this bill—the letter carriers numbering 22,000; the post-office clerks in first and second class offices numbering 24,000; the railway mail clerks numbering 12,500, and the rural carriers numbering 30,000 as provided for in this bill, and other employees of a miscellaneous character aggregating approximately 4,000. Those employees are provided for and their compensation fixed, whether a single letter is dispatched or not; and the same is true of the last group of the miscellaneous subjects, which cover a few items of a miscellaneous character.

In considering these various groups of appropriations carried in this bill, the question whether the receipts of the mail service are sufficient to meet the expenditures is a matter calling for some consideration at the hands of Congress with a view to the proper exercise of economy. The public demand for mail facilities, the demand within the service for increased salaries, the demands for higher rates of contracts, are, like the poor, "always with us." But when the Government looks at the question of appropriations from the standpoint of economy as well as efficiency in the service it is compelled, as any individual in his individual transactions would be forced to do, to consider both sides of the ledger.

I submit at this point a statement I have prepared which shows the sources of revenue in the postal service, and also the appropriations authorized by this bill, arranging these appropriations by the groups I have named.

POSTAL REVENUE.

Sales of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and postal cards; second-class postage (pound rate) paid in money; postage from foreign countries; fines and penalties; receipts from unclaimed dead letters, miscellaneous receipts; money-order business.

APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZED.

Group 1.—Organization.

Postmasters, $22,250,000. First class, 270; second class, 1,225; third class, 3,656; fourth class, 69,000. Total, 74,145.

First-class offices are all offices whose receipts are $40,000 and over. Salaries range from $3,000 to $8,000.

Second-class offices are all offices whose receipts are $9,000 and up to $40,000. Salaries range from $2,000 to $3,000.

Third-class offices are all offices whose receipts are $1,900 and up to and not exceeding $9,000. Salaries range from $1,000 to $1,900.

Fourth-class offices are those with receipts less than $1,900. Their pay is based upon cancellations of stamp revenue, all box rents, and disposition of waste paper, etc. On $50 cancellations per quarter they get 100 per cent; on the next $100 cancellations they get 60 per cent, the next $200 cancellations 50 per cent, and all the balance 40 per cent, until the compensation reaches $250 for four consecutive quarters, when the office becomes third class. These amounts do not include the money-order commissions—3 cents per order—that not being taken into account in reckoning the compensation.

Assistant postmasters, $2,000,000. Assistant postmasters are paid on the basis of 50 per cent of the postmaster's salary. Number, 1,654. Rent, light, and fuel, $9,550,000. Third-class offices get $400 rent and $80 fuel and light.

Transportation, $50,000,000. This includes—Railroad, $[illegible],000,000; railroad post-office cars, $5,796,000; foreign mails, $[illegible]; inland transit, $[illegible]; special facilities, $[illegible]. Star service, $[illegible]. Wagon service, $1,200,000. Mail-messenger service, $1,300,000. Total, $[illegible],000,000.

Group 2.—Facilities.

Street railway and suburban service	$600,000
Pneumatic-tube service	500,000
Canceling machines	200,000
Marine service at Detroit	4,500
Total	1,304,500

Group 3.—Supplies.

First Assistant Postmaster-General, including Supply Division, $707,500. Supply Division alone is $482,500. Principal items: Stationery, $85,000; wrapping twine, $140,000; wrapping paper, $90,000; blanks, etc., for the mail order service, $125,000. Second Assistant, $405,000. This includes the mail-bag and mail-lock shop and the miscellaneous supplies.

Third Assistant, $1,700,000. This is the supplies for the raising of revenue, covering the manufacture of postage stamps, stamped envelopes, newspaper wrappers, and postal cards, etc.

Fourth Assistant, $400,000. Three hundred thousand dollars of this is for supplies for the free-delivery service and $150,000 for supplies for the rural-delivery service. Total, $3,[illegible]

Group 4.—Employees.

Letter carriers, $20,500,000; number, about 22,000. Post-office clerks, first and second class offices, $30,000,000; number, about 24,000. Railway mail clerks, $12,000,000; number, about 12,500. Rural letter carriers, $[illegible]; number, about 30,000. Other employees, $1,511,000; number, about 4,000, as follows: Three thousand special-delivery boys, $120,000; 216 inspectors and per diem, $540,000; 288 mail bag and lock shop, $285,000; 64 clerks, rural free delivery, mechanics, etc., $164,000; 15 superintendents rural free delivery and rural agents, per diem, $56,000; 39 distributing agents of the Third Assistant, $38,000. Totals, 3,722 employees, $1,511,000.

Total number of employees, 92,500.

Additional money used for employees, but number not known:

Clerks in 10,000 "separating" offices	$1,000,000
Temporary post-office clerks	150,000
Substitute post-office clerks	100,000
Substitute railway mail clerks	150,000
Temporary railway mail clerks	50,000
Total	1,450,000

Total for employees, $75,500,000.

Group 5.

Miscellaneous subjects, $1,000,000; including horse hire, allowances for carriers in cities, car fare and bicycle allowance, payment of rewards, indemnity loss of registered matter, advertising for supplies and unclaimed letters.

RECAPITULATION.

Group 1—Organization	$38,000,000
Group 2—Facilities	1,304,500
Group 3—Supplies	3,200,000
Group 4—Employees	76,500,000
Group 5—Miscellaneous	1,000,000
Total	120,004,500

Mr. Chairman, I shall briefly call attention to some of the more important items of appropriation and bespeak from Members in their action on this bill the exercise of the same economy which they would hope to give to their individual affairs.

The item of postmasters' salaries alone carries twenty-three and a quarter million dollars. There are over 74,000 post-offices in the country. The salaries are fixed differently by the law, but the postmasters must be provided for, regardless of the receipts of their offices. The committee has exercised as much care as possible in view of the demands of the country for the facilities of the various offices, and has taken all possible precaution to limit the appropriations to the actual needs of this particular branch of the service.

In the item for assistant postmasters, as well as for rent of buildings, we have shown the same effort to economize, limiting amounts as nearly as possible to what we thought should suffice upon a very careful calculation of the actual needs of the service.

The item of transportation carries $50,000,000. This, Mr. Chairman, is a fruitful subject of attack on the part of people who are of the opinion that great extravagancies obtain in the administration of this service.

The item for railroad transportation alone is approximately $40,000,000. The committee, however, while not pretending to be absolutely informed upon all the details and intricacies of that service, have found a safe harbor of refuge in the very exhaustive report upon the subject made within recent years by a commission of the very highest integrity, and in view of the report of that commission we have felt disposed strongly to follow the recommendations of the Department with reference to that great service upon which so largely depends the prompt and accurate dispatch of the mails.

The star service carries over $8,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Before the gentleman leaves the subject of railroad transportation I wish to call his attention to the item of $142,000 for carrying the mails from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, and also to the item of $25,000 for transportation upon another line of railroad to Kansas City and Newton, Kans. The gentleman has said that he read the reports and heard the statements as to the question of railroad transportation. Before we come to that point in the bill I wish he would state anything which, in his opinion, justifies the committee in reporting a subsidy for those two railroads, which are performing only the same class of service that various other railroads of the country are performing and getting no subsidy.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The committee recommends the item referred to by my colleague [Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana], which is in the present law and has been in the law for a number of years.

Mr. BARTLETT. At least fifteen years.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was not sure as to the time. There is, however, some question, I confess—some difference of opinion within the committee on that matter. But the committee felt, in view of all the circumstances—and I have no doubt their view will be fully justified when we reach the item in the bill—that they were warranted in recommending this appropriation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I am in sympathy with the gentleman's idea of economy; but I can not understand the rule that justifies a subsidy—a plain subsidy—to railroads, in one case of $142,000 and in another case of $25,000. I do not see how the committee can justify that item of appropriation; and I ask the gentleman to explain why that unprecedented special privilege has been given to these railroads.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am familiar, to some extent, with the history of the debate upon that particular item. I think no Congress has ever authorized this expenditure within recent years without considerable debate upon the item. In view of that fact I feel safe in predicting that the item will not escape the notice of the committee when it is reached in the reading of the bill; and at that time it will be more proper to undertake an explanation than it would be at this time. The committee felt, however, as we shall state when the item is reached, that the facts did justify the recommendation of that expenditure.

Mr. Chairman, I suggested that the appropriation carried in the bill for star service is approximately $8,000,000. In some localities it has been expected—and this expectation has been shared in many instances by Members of this body—that as the rural-delivery service was extended the star service would naturally be decreased. But the conditions under which the star service has been maintained in very recent years necessarily calls for higher appropriations and larger expenditures.

The time was when anybody, regardless of residence, could bid upon the contracts for star service. Under recent rulings, however, of the Department no one is permitted to be contracted with for this service unless the contractor resides upon the line of the service. By reason of that limitation fewer bidders enter the field, and this results in higher prices under the contracts than have obtained before, when one individual might secure a contract for a great many lines of star service.

Furthermore, in very recent years the Department, under the authority of Congress, has provided in the star contracts that patrons residing along the line of the service may receive their individual mail at the hands of the star-route contractor wherever they choose to maintain a box for that purpose, from which the contractor is obliged to collect such mail as they deposit.

The demands, therefore, involving upon the contractor more frequent trips and higher service naturally and necessarily result in increased bids and higher expenditure for this service. More than that, these contracts are restricted by limitation in the contract where the service must be on schedule time, and if the carrier, who is the contractor, violates that restriction he is subject to a fine. The natural tendency, therefore, among bidders is to exact higher prices when offering their bids where they are open to fines for a violation of the regulations.

The third provision which has resulted in a larger cost for this service is the more frequent trips provided for by the contracts. Heretofore the star service was a weekly service, later biweekly, and then a triweekly service. Now rarely is there an instance but what it is a daily service. The more frequent service necessarily involves higher expenditure. The division of the Government for these contracts separates the entire country into four divisions. Letting the contracts every four years, for at least one of these divisions, has demonstrated the higher cost in equipment, the maintenance of the equipment at the hands of the contractor, better service, better horses, better harness, better wagons, and better men. These four conditions which have arisen in the Department require higher outlay of expenditure in the star service. It is, therefore, Mr. Chairman, not quite correct, indeed far removed from accuracy, to maintain that the extension of the rural free-delivery service has resulted in a less expenditure for star service.

The same is true in the item of wagons and mail-messenger service. The rapid and constant tendency is for higher contractural service in this line. Despite the honest and persistent efforts of your committee to maintain the lowest possible point in economic administration, we have been obliged, in view of the investigations which we have made and the facts there presented, to accede to higher appropriations in nearly all of these lines.

In the third group of facilities the committee have made some reductions in the appropriation for pneumatic-tube service and canceling-machine service. In the item for pneumatic tubes we have reduced the appropriation, notwithstanding the service is made in line with contracts which are already in operation, the committee feeling that it is unfair to fail to appropriate when it knows the contract is already in existence under a former statute.

The canceling-machine item is one where we thought the Congress could afford to make a reduction in the appropriation. Under existing law the Department was asked to submit to Congress a statement, based upon an investigation by the Post-Office Department, carrying an opinion concerning the value of the various canceling machines and the relative wisdom of rental or purchase of those machines. This report had not reached the committee when the bill was completed for the consideration of the House. The committee felt, however, that in view of recent expenditures in that item of appropriation we could well afford to reduce it to the basis fixed by the rentals, and therefore recommend $200,000 for the ensuing fiscal year. Since the completion of the report the Department has submitted its recommendation, and I am pleased to say that, while we anticipated the report by our recommendation, the opinion of the Department is exactly in line with the recommendation of the committee.

The third group covers the appropriation for supplies. These supplies are so divided that each of the several four Assistant Postmasters-General has his individual supply account. I am pleased to announce that the committee, on the recommendation of the Department, upon the item for supplies, recommend a reduction from the present allowance under the current law. The committee has been exceedingly careful in its inquiry from the various supply chiefs to ascertain the real need of the appropriation for the various items of supplies. In our bill we recommend a statute which authorizes the Postmaster-General to consolidate these four supply divisions, to put them under one supervisor—a purchasing agent—who shall be under the direct control and subject to the direct order of the Postmaster-General. Your committee is of the opinion that this will result in economy in expenditure and in a better administration of the service.

In the group covering employees comes the heavy appropriation of $76,500,000. This is the group referred to briefly a moment ago as the manning of the organization of the service. You must equip the service with men for the dispatch of the duties of the offices, regardless of what the receipts may be; and if, perchance, during the year, for some cause now unforeseen, those receipts should be greatly decreased it would be most difficult to reduce the number of employees, notwithstanding the fact that such authority would remain in the Department. We carry twenty and a half millions of dollars for the 22,000 letter carriers of the country. That in its inception was an experiment, instituted originally with a view of expediting the delivery of the mails in one of the cities of the Union. It has grown with steadiness, and it has already been urged that it be extended to communities of 5,000 inhabitants, 10,000 being now the limit.

The committee is unable, in view of the increasing demand for the letter-carrier service and the maintenance of the present compensation for that service, to reduce the item below the recommendation of twenty and one-quarter million dollars. The item of post-office clerks in first and second class offices, carrying in round numbers 24,000 clerks, carries $20,000,000. This particular field has been most fruitful in the demand for promotions. It is embarrassing, as gentlemen would appreciate if once they were placed in a similar position, to be constantly criticising an ever-trending effort for higher salaries in the service; but in view of a business-like administration of the service, with an eye to proper economy in line with proper administration, we are compelled to challenge the correctness and the necessity of such heavy increases of salary, especially because of the demands upon the Treasury for the extension of necessary service in various lines for the good of the entire country.

I will say, however, that in this item the committee makes some provision for promoting the post-office clerks, but it limits its recommendation to the clerks of the lower grades. There has never come a time, and I question if it will ever come, when there will be an absolute and correct adjustment of all salaries of Government employees, notwithstanding there is a constant effort to so adjust the salary to the service that the employee may receive a compensating wage for the service that he performs. The committee, therefore, in line with these efforts for a fair and equitable adjustment of the salaries, recommends some money which may be utilized and will be utilized in the promotion of post-office clerks of the lower grades.

I refer to the grades below $1,000. In some instances there are promotions above the thousand-dollar grade, but the great bulk of the promotions go to the grades below $1,000. There are to-day, or will be as we authorize in this bill, 12,500 railway postal clerks on duty in the country. The item for this class of employees is, in round numbers, $13,000,000. There has been the same effort for adjustment of salaries in that service as in the other departments of the post-office service. The committee undertakes in this instance to provide for some reasonable promotions of clerks in the grades of $800, $900, and $1,000, but it does not believe that there is a justification in the increases of the salaries of the clerks in the higher grades of that service.

In the miscellaneous employees' service, such as delivery boys and clerks under the heads of divisions, superintendents, etc., there are approximately 3,700 employees, for whose pay the bill carries in round numbers one and one-half million dollars. The remaining classification of employees is the rural-delivery carrier. There are to-day approximately 22,000 rural carriers in the country. The Department estimates that within the year ending June 30, 1905, there will be 30,000 rural carriers in the country; therefore we recommend for these carriers' pay, $20,000,000. I will in a moment, in addressing myself directly to the rural service, comment upon the recommendation for increased salary for that class of employees.

I merely wish to say, however, at this point, that the present fiscal year is the second year of the permanency of the rural service. It was experimental entirely prior to last year. That service, however, has come to stay. It is being very rapidly extended. The demand for the service in the rural districts where it has not yet been inaugurated does not fall far below the demand which has obtained for several years last past. It must be remembered, however, that in the effort of the committee to deal in all fairness with the proper demands of the service for a proper and equitable administration of the fund, it takes into account that we can not give all communities at once the rural service, but that it will yet require several years. It is only a speculation as to how many before the service will have been completed.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you fix any figure upon that service?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Do you fix any maximum amount to which this service will ultimately go in the next few years?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, we undertake in no wise to determine the extent or completion of this or any other service. We only seek to make such appropriations as we believe will meet the demands for the respective services within the fiscal year for which we are making appropriations.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is, the present demands?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Nevertheless there are a large number of communities yet unserved with rural delivery just as anxious for the service as those which to-day enjoy that service. The committee believes, therefore, that with a proper administration of the service it is more in line with a business administration to consider fairly the proper demands which will arise within the next fiscal year for the extension of the service before we seek to complete the service where it is already being enjoyed.

I suggested a while ago that in round numbers there are 92,000 of these postal employees. Members must remember that in the appropriation for the postal service no account is taken of the Department at Washington, which entails a heavy expense on the Treasury. Neither is any consideration given to either the expenditures for the construction nor for the maintenance of the great post-office buildings throughout the country which are owned by the Government. If we were to undertake to make an accurate balance sheet to show the expenditures of the Treasury due solely to the postal service, it would be necessary to place in the item of expenses not only the Department of postal service at Washington, with its many, many clerks and officers, but the draft upon the Treasury for the original construction of Federal buildings occupied for post-office purposes, as well as the maintenance of such parts of these buildings as relate strictly to the postal service.

But outside of the maintenance of post-office buildings owned by the Government, outside of the Department at Washington, there are over 92,000 employees of the postal service cared for by the bill now before this committee. When you undertake, as a public legislator, to discharge your duty as you are doing, with an eye to the economy of expenditure, you are compelled to listen to the Government's side of the case when you insist upon constant increases of salaries for these 92,000 employees.

I do not question but that in many of the cases these demands are based upon equity. I concede that a great government should not exact of its employees a service that is greater than the wages which it provides him. But in fairness to the Treasury, in fairness to the deficit in the service which every Member must accept and which stares us in the face, it is not a good time now to insist upon increase of salaries for all of these employees, especially in view of past liberality. I do not ascribe to them any unworthy motive in their demands.

I do not deny that it is proper for any individual to desire higher compensation from his employer than he receives, but I feel it the duty of this committee to call the attention of the House and of the country to the great demands upon the public Treasury for the increase of these salaries. The committee has undertaken in the cases to which I have directed attention—the post-office clerks, and the railway mail clerks, and the rural-delivery carriers—some provisions for their promotion and increase of their salaries; but unless Congress shall exercise a firm hand in providing appropriations for promotion purposes solely, the deficit in the postal service must necessarily increase in the same proportion as we authorize the increase of these salaries.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. I would like to ask the gentleman what the deficit for the last year was compared with the deficits of the previous two years?

Mr. OVERSTREET. In my introductory remarks I called attention to the fact that the deficit in the service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1902, was over $2,000,000 and under $3,000,000. The deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1903, was over $4,000,000, and the estimated deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, is over $7,000,000; and basing our expenditure on the appropriation which this bill authorizes, the deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, will be in excess of $10,000,000.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. Was not the deficit several years ago as great as $11,000,000?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It was over $12,000,000 at one time. As a general proposition it may be accepted that wherever a new facility is inaugurated for the benefit of the postal service—a new expedition facility—there invariably occurs an increase in the expenditure, and naturally an increase in the deficit.

This second proposition may be accepted as true, that there never occurs a time when the revenue of the service approaches the expenditures, so that there is an apparent balance nearly, but what the demand for increased facilities is increased. This fact it has not occurred in many years that the receipts of the service have ever equaled the expenditures. No sooner do the receipts approach the expenditures under the 2-cent postage rate than the demand for a lower postage was acceded to, and the year following the falling off of the postal receipts was so heavy that the largest deficit then known to the service occurred, the deficit that year being about $7,000,000. There is no question but that the lower rate of postage on first-class matter resulted ultimately in larger receipts of postage.

There is no question but when the letter-carrier service was first inaugurated, it resulted in a heavy draft on the Treasury and the deficit was increased, but just as true as in the change in postal rate, so in the adoption of the letter-carrier system, it resulted, by the rapid-delivery system, of a larger supply of letters for the service and hence a larger revenue, and then the deficit was reduced.

When the postal car was inaugurated for the quick distribution of the mail while in transit before it reached the point of destination, the expenditure was increased and became a heavier draft upon the Treasury, and the deficit again increased.

But, as in the case of free-delivery service, the letter carriers effected a more expeditious delivery of mail, so the postal-car service resulted in a betterment of the service and a more rapid distribution and delivery of mail. It stimulated business, which resulted in an increase in the purchase of stamps, and the revenue again increased, and we were approaching again a balance between receipts and expenditures when the rural service came under consideration. The rapid development of that service, beneficial as it is to the country, has unquestionably resulted in such increased expenditure that it is largely—almost entirely—responsible for the present deficit and that which bids fair to occur in the next fiscal year.

In view of the increasing deficit occasioned by the rural service, the committee feels that it is proper to consider most carefully the wisdom of increasing the expenditures of that service beyond a point of equity and fairness to the employees of that service. I am informed that the Secretary of the Treasury estimates a large deficit in the general revenues of the country—not a deficit in actual money on hand, but that the receipts compared with expenditures will result in a general deficit in the Treasury. I am informed that the estimate calls for approximately $22,000,000 of a deficit. If every item of this bill now under consideration shall be approved by this House and become a law, it will carry enough expenditures to cause almost, if not quite, one-half of the deficit of the entire revenues of the Government. I do not therefore criticise the rural service when I suggest the propriety of caution and conservatism in our appropriations for that service.

I said a moment ago that on the 1st of March of this year there were in operation, approximately, 29,000 rural routes, and that in the second year of its permanent organization. It is estimated by the Department and believed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads that 600 routes a month is about all that the Department can inaugurate during the next fifteen months. The petitions that are being filed for this service have not in the past few months exceeded 500 a month. There will be remaining on the 1st day of April of petitions unexamined, approximately, 5,000. With the force now in operation in the Bureau, those 5,000 petitions can be examined, and if the examination warrants the service inaugurated, and all of the petitions to be filed during the next fiscal year at the rate of 500 a month can be taken care of, with the additional increase in rural agents and the appropriation recommended by the committee. This is a popular, but also expensive service.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. COWHERD. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he made any estimate of the probable number of rural carriers that would be in the service when it was extended over all of the territory that is properly situated for a service of that kind?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I did not make any such estimate. I hesitate to make even a guess at it. The difficulty is this, that in the first place it is hard to tell what portions of the country are to-day sufficiently populated to justify the increase of rural service, and in the second place it is even more difficult to approximate how rapidly communities at present sparsely settled may develop into such density of population as to justify the inauguration of the service. I can see no time, however far in the future my feeble sight may go, when there may not be an extension of the rural service, just as I can not foretell how many communities of small population to-day are ripening into cities of the second and first classes, which will demand letter carriers and all of the other facilities which the postal service now extends to cities of those classes.

Mr. COWHERD. The reason I asked the gentleman the question is that I remember that Postmaster-General Smith estimated there were only about 1,000,000 square miles of territory in the United States which was fit for a service of that character, and he estimated that about 41,000 carriers would fully complete the service. I ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that we have gotten far enough along to know that that is a very great underestimate of the number needed?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Most certainly, and because better calculators than I claim to be have so far erred in their estimates of the extent of this service, I hesitate to even make a guess of its final extent. I believe, however, that although we have gone but little more than halfway through the second year of the permanency of this service, we have seen enough to challenge our attention to the importance of exercising great conservatism respecting the appropriations for that service, before it shall have gone so far as to become unwieldy and greater than the National Treasury can provide for.

Naturally the extension of the service in one community stimulates an adjacent community. Naturally the extension of the county service intensifies the demand for such service in neighboring counties. If you make a mathematical calculation that within a limit of 25 miles 100 families may reside who shall have the service, and that all counties where similar conditions exist throughout the county to those existing upon half of its routes shall be provided with county service, then you have covered your map with rural-delivery service without taking into account where the money is to come from with which to pay for it.

Considerable guesswork has been engaged in concerning the revenues of the rural service. I do not like to assume that the proper way to estimate the benefits of that service is in dollars and cents. I believe the greatest benefit comes through the promotion of contentment and enjoyment in rural life. This system of rural delivery will, I trust, make possible the withdrawal from the congested settlements of largely populated cities a population which will add to the improvement and enjoyment of country life. Nevertheless, we are obliged, in fairness to ourselves and the Treasury, to consider the dollar-and-cent side of this appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, in considering the revenue from the rural service we have no other way to judge of its extent than that which obtains in considering the revenue from any other of the branches of the postal service. Calculating, however, the receipts and expenditures of the rural service by routes as we do by post-offices, crediting to each route the amount of money received in cancellation of stamps and other postal receipts, and charging each route with the legitimate expense which it entails, we are confronted with the amazing fact that the Government to-day is suffering a loss in excess of $400 on each rural route in operation.

Now, there is a very proper suggestion to be made with reference to the accuracy of that statement. Unquestionably the rural service has stimulated mail for delivery to the residences on the rural routes, where the postal receipts are credited to the offices where that mail is originally deposited. It is utterly impossible to determine how much of the receipts of the postal service generally is attributable to the stimulus given to the mail service by reason of the quick and frequent delivery in the country districts. But that can be estimated in a reasonable way. Count the number of pieces collected on each route and compare that with the number of pieces delivered on each route, and of course the deliveries greatly exceed the collection.

The patrons of the rural districts receive more mail than they dispatch. But looking at this matter from the standpoint of the Government receipts and expenditures for postal service, we must group all the receipts from whatever sources received and put in one item all the expense on whatever part of the service it may fall, and subtract one from the other. In this instance the result shows clearly a general deficit exceeding $10,000,000, while a few years ago there was less than $2,000,000 deficit chargeable to the service.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. PERKINS. I see that in one provision of the bill the pay of rural carriers is raised to $720, and there is a provision permitting them to do certain classes of work. Now, in the district where I reside, and I presume in many others, the carriers do certain work for the newspapers. From this source carriers in my district make on an average from $75 to $100 a year.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was approaching——

Mr. PERKINS. I wish the gentleman would be kind enough to state (because I can not ascertain it for myself) whether work of that kind is forbidden by this bill; and if so for what reason.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will explain that, I trust, fully.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will announce that the gentleman from Indiana has consumed one hour.

Mr. MANN. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The time is entirely at the disposition of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I thank the committee, and I think I will conclude very soon.

I desire to call attention to the fact that while it is quite impossible to determine exactly the revenues as compared with the expenditures, nevertheless the fact manifests itself, by comparing the receipts and subtracting those receipts from all expenditures, the deficit in the receipts as against the expenditures is rapidly increasing and next year will be $10,000,000 or more, while very recently the deficit was greatly less than that amount.

The rural service unquestionably has up to the hour entailed a much greater expense than it has stimulated receipts. How far the service may in time reach the point where it will stimulate greater receipts, as in the instance of other facilities, like the letter carriers and Railway Mail Service, I do not know. But now it is in its infancy, and we are obliged to call attention to the condition of receipts and the expenditures entailed by the service. I mention that with a special relation to the demand for an increase in the salaries of the rural carriers. In the experimental stage of the service the carriers were paid but $300 a year and required substantially to furnish the same equipment they furnish to-day.

For the specific reason that the service was then experimental, as the Department could not tell how far it should be extended nor at what rate of expenditure for the carriers, the rural carriers were specifically exempted from the restriction of letter carriers generally who were denied the privilege of doing an express-package business. Congress believed at that time that because of the small pay given the carrier it was proper and fair to allow him to make money upon a side line which might compensate him where the Government service had failed to do so. But we are now entering the permanent establishment and operation of the service.

The time has come, in the judgment of the Post-Office Committee, when the carrier in the rural community should be given his particular official status. We believe it is time now to define the carrier in the country communities the same as in the cities. We believe he should not be made a part huckster for the country district, part agent for bookstores, part solicitor for newspapers, but that we should give him his particular status, as every other Government employee is given in the postal service, and classify him, if you please, as a rural carrier, along with his brothers who are known as "city carriers."

We realize that in restricting him from these various privileges we are, perhaps, taking from him some of the compensation which he might have received heretofore from these side lines. We believe, also, that in the expenditure for his equipment and the maintenance of his horses and wagon that he is entitled to fair and proper consideration in view of his service and his official position, and that he should be given a compensation somewhere commensurate with his duties. The committee, therefore, recommends an increase in the rural carrier's salary to straight $60 a month—$720 a year.

A year or two years ago, two years ago, I believe, Congress gave the carriers $300 increase in the year. Starting with $300, it gradually increased $100 a year at a time, reaching the point where it is now, $600 a year. The committee therefore recommend another step in the increase by $120, making the salary $720 a year. It must be remembered that in Government business, neither the Government nor the Post-Office Department should be privileged to authorize an individual employee to be the gate keeper or the doorkeeper of business houses along the line of the road of his service. City letter carriers at one time were permitted to carry packages for hire for the patrons upon the line of their service.

In connection with our recommendation for $120 straight increase of salary to rural carriers, we ask the House to fix the status of such carrier by denying him the privilege of being the solicitor or agent for any person, firm, or corporation. To illustrate, this instance came to our notice: A carrier on a certain route received a circular and price list from a great department store in Chicago, with instructions and authority to solicit for the sale of any article mentioned in the price list and catalogue, and when he obtained his orders to send them to the main house in Chicago.

Upon receipt of these orders for these various articles which that house has for sale, they bundled them up in one package, wrapped each order separately, labeled it with the name of the purchaser, and shipped the full package either by freight or by express to the carrier, who in turn delivered it by hand without charge to the patron, and without the Government receiving a penny of postage upon it.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Do you seek to deny to the carrier the privilege of carrying packages to the farmer?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir; I will reply that we do not. We explicitly grant that privilege. I believe it is directly class legislation, but we grant it. Another instance I desire to illustrate is: A publishing house prints books for sale to wholesalers as well as retailers—advertises the book, for instance, for a dollar and eighteen cents, to be delivered to the purchaser by mail. The cost of postage upon that one-dollar-and-eighteen-cent book is 22 cents. When the publisher mails it to the purchaser upon a rural route he prepays the postage and delivers the book by mail to the purchaser at an expense to him of a dollar and eighteen cents, paying to Uncle Sam 22 cents for its carriage.

The mail-order house in another city buys of that same publishing house books by the carload. It sends its catalogues of these books to the same carrier who carries to the patron who purchased the books of the retailer; that carrier solicits sales of books delivered at $1.18, and if, perchance, he secures twenty-five orders upon his route the twenty-five books are sent to him by the mail-order house from Chicago by express or by freight and he delivers them under instructions and contract with the mail-order house at 5 cents a copy.

Now, in the first place, that is unfair to the publisher, who has the right to be protected against the Government favoring a man who has bought the books from him by licensing a Government employee to stand at the gateway of his patronage and solicit the sale of the same book in competition with another Government citizen who is paying postal rates under the law. In the second place, that practically results in a large loss of revenue to the Treasury. If the mail-order house failed to mail the books which had been solicited by the carrier, but sent them either by freight or express when otherwise they would go by mail, the Government loss is equal exactly to the aggregate amount of postage which the books delivered would have brought. We have reached the time when the Government must tell the employee that he has no authority of the Government to stand between two of our citizens and give one preference over the other.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield?

Mr. PERKINS. I do not want to disturb the gentleman if he prefers not to be disturbed.

Mr. OVERSTREET. You will not disturb me at all.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to ask the gentleman this question, whether he does not think that some distinction can be fairly drawn between a carrier who acts as agent for some business house, the evils of which the gentleman has pointed out, and a carrier merely distributing along his route a daily paper or a weekly paper that is published in the place from which he starts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will answer the gentleman's question when I have given one additional illustration. My third illustration will be a reply to the gentleman's question.

A carrier acts as agent for a butcher in a town out of which the route starts. He solicits orders from his patrons for meat, giving a distinct preference to the merchant who sells the meat in whose employ the carrier happens to be. The same thing is true of grocery and of other stores. The same thing is true of newspapers where one newspaper puts upon its list of agents a carrier upon a rural route who solicits for that particular paper and prefers it with his patrons to all other papers which have the right of free competition within that particular territory.

Answering the gentleman's question now, there is nothing in the law to-day nor proposed in this bill which would interfere with the delivery of a newspaper to be printed and delivered at the post-office where the route emanates. It does not affect the delivery of newspapers at all through the mails under the law. Under the present law a newspaper, published at a town out of which the carrier carries that paper, has a right to deliver it to the postmaster to be delivered to his patrons without specific addresses being placed upon those newspapers, but a newspaper printed in a town other than the one where the carrier receives it at the office must have printed or written upon it the name of the addressee, the same as every other piece of mail must have written upon it the name of the addressee, otherwise it can not be carried through the mails nor delivered by either the postmaster or the carrier.

Therefore the committee can not—and I doubt if the House can—make a distinction between a newspaper and a mail-order house, either of which may to-day make an agent or solicitor out of the carrier. It can not make a distinction or discrimination between either of these and the grocer, the butcher, or the merchant. If you undertake to make an exception and permit letter carriers in the country districts to become soliciting agents for newspapers, breaking in on the free competition which the Government undertakes to guarantee all of its citizens, why should you not discriminate in favor of the butcher and in favor of the mail-order house?

Therefore the committee believes that you should discriminate against all, so that the Government agent, he who stands as the officer or the employee of the Department, who is gate keeper and doorkeeper of the route over which he goes, shall in no wise interfere with the open competition between citizens of all classes of business who seek to do business and obtain orders from patrons of their respective routes.

But the committee at this point make a specific exception to the general rule. It provides that while carriers shall not solicit business for or receive orders from any person, firm, or corporation, or carry merchandise for hire during the hours of their employment, nevertheless they may carry merchandise for hire for and upon the request of patrons resident of their respective routes whenever it does not interfere with the proper discharge of their official duty and under regulations to be provided by the Postmaster-General.

That exception is plainly made in the interest of the farming community. It is made to permit the farmer patron to engage the carrier, even for pay, to do an errand for him, to bring something out from the town for him, to stop at the drug store for medicine, or take a request for a physician to come to visit the patron, or to take in a piece of machinery which needs repair and bring it out when it has been repaired, and to do a large number of little errands which are of great importance to the farmer patron of the service, providing it does not interfere with the proper discharge of the duty of the carrier in the delivery of his mail.

The committee believes, therefore, that while that may be a discrimination in favor of the country patrons, it is justified on the ground that the service is clearly for the benefit of the country patrons. It is intended for their accommodation. When we give the power for solicitation and agency to the different business concerns, we depart entirely from the original theory for which this service was established, and make of the Government employee a distinct gate keeper for the merchants who will be discriminated in favor of by the carrier, who may perchance be in their individual employment.

Mr. HINSHAW. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. HINSHAW. I would like to know whether the proviso on page 36 of the bill will allow the carrier to take from the express office of the town from which he carries the mail for the farmer upon his route, at the farmer's request, express packages that must necessarily terminate the line of transit at the town?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I see the difficulty in view of the gentleman's question. It is not a new question. However, plainly, the spirit of that proviso, if not the letter, intends this request of the farmer to be for his accommodation in matters which are of individual moment to him at the time.

I believe that under the strict construction of that proviso the answer to the gentleman's question would be yes, that it would permit him to do that; but I have that confidence in the regulations of the Postmaster-General that I believe he certainly would restrict the accommodation by the carrier to the farmer's personal benefit. He wants to send in for some binder twine during harvest; he wants a piece of machinery to be delivered on the morrow; he wants to send for matters of particular and special benefit to his family; and these are the things that the proviso seeks to allow.

But, under the regulations of the Postmaster-General, I should hope, and I should expect, that every effort of a mail-order house that would take advantage of the proviso by sending to the carrier, by freight or express, a package which should come by mail—that the Postmaster-General's regulation would be so clear that he would be denied that privilege, which would be a clear and palpable evasion of the postal laws.

I believe, Mr. Chairman, that while there has been great insistence with reference to rural service, Members can easily take upon themselves the consideration of this situation.

It is a new service; it is growing; it will not be completed for many years. It is intended simply for the benefit of the rural districts and not for the benefit of the merchants in any character of business. The carrier should be given that definition of status which would clearly remove him from the position where he could give the preference to one of the Government's citizens against another in the open field of business transactions. In fairness to the condition of the revenues of the entire Government, in fairness to the great increase of expenditure for this particular service, the committee believes that it is not warranted in recommending a higher rate of compensation at this time than $720 a year. What may be done at a future time I will leave for the future to determine.

Mr. FITZGERALD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do.

Mr. FITZGERALD. This is the second time in two years that the rural carriers' compensation has been increased, as I understand it?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is correct.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Will the gentleman state what consideration his committee has given to the question of increasing the compensation of the city carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The committee has not considered that in this bill. The committee intends giving a hearing to the letter carriers on the bill which provides for their increased compensation. I can not anticipate the action of the committee. The committee believes that there is far greater urgency with respect to the increase of salary for rural carriers than of city letter carriers, and in view of that fact thinks it is justified in making the recommendation for the increase in pay of the rural carriers even before it has considered the request of the city letter carriers respecting their increase.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman will pardon me, I hope, for asking whether that opinion of the committee is based upon the fact that most of the Members represent rural districts?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know. I represent a city district myself.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman if he can give any reason for the increase in the salaries of the rural carriers upon this bill and the requirement that compels the city carriers to have a special bill to take care of their increase, which we all know there is no chance of passing?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will say this, that it is very questionable whether the condition of the revenues would justify the granting of any increase in the salary of city letter carriers. The letter carriers of the city do not furnish horses or wagons. So far as the item for horse hire is concerned, the city carriers are allowed extra compensation. The pay of city carriers is more nearly equal to their service than is the pay of the rural carriers, and we believe that in view of the fact that we have determined officially the permanency of the rural service it is proper that we should increase their salaries to a more equitable point on account of their expense and service.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I would like to ask the gentleman this question, whether he is not aware of the fact that the rural carriers, by means of their organizations, have already declared that in their opinion they should have $1,000 or more as compensation?

Mr. OVERSTREET. What organizations?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The rural carriers through their different organizations.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, I have here a communication from a rural letter carriers' association, in which they say, "The great majority of all rural people are agreed that their pay should be $1,000 or more per year."

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be true in New York. It certainly is not true concerning the national organization.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I ask the gentleman if, under the conditions in which the city carrier finally obtains a permanent appointment after practically, I think, in my city, four years of substituting, when he can do nothing else and when the amount he earns is a very trifling sum, he thinks it puts him on an equality even to start at $600 a year while the rural carrier commences his term with $720 a year, under this bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will answer that by calling the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the city carrier who starts with $600 furnishes no horse and wagon, while the rural carrier is obliged to furnish two horses and in some instances three and four; and, further, the city carrier has the expectation of an increase in salary when he has served a given time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the conditions of living more than equalize the difference in that increase.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is a perplexing question and one quite pertinent to the suggestion that I made some moments ago, in view of the demand of the more than 90,000 post-office employees cared for in this bill for increases of salary.

But we believe, and are willing to put it to the House for its ratification or rejection, that in view of the fact, first, that the rural service is now fixed officially as a permanent service, and, second, that the rural carrier is obliged to furnish equipment that no other carrier furnishes, and, third, that we are undertaking to give him an official status and taking from him certain privileges which give him side lines for compensation, we are justified in giving especial preference to the item of promotion for that service before we recommend or consider it for the other branches of the service.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana whether he thinks that by this bill he will increase the income of the rural free-delivery carriers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, unquestionably.

Mr. PERKINS. Why?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Because this increase gives the carrier $120 a year more.

Mr. PERKINS. But you cut off sources of income that in many cases exceed $120.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be true in certain localities. I can best answer the gentleman by quoting from a letter that I have from a carrier, who says that in his two years' service the total amount which he has received aside from his salary from the Government is 10 cents. I am informed that there are carriers whose service aside from the service to the Post-Office Department brings them incomes almost equal to the Government pay. It is just for the purpose of striking a line of demarcation between a private business and a public business that we recommend a change of the status of the carrier.

One of the Members from the gentleman's State informed me yesterday that there was a vacancy in a rural carriership in his district, and one mail brought five applications to fill the vacancy. I myself recently had occasion to recommend the establishment of a route before we had recommended an increase of salary, and there were fifteen applications for the position. That would not occur, in all probability, where the carriers were not getting enough pay. There is no protest from either of these points by which I have illustrated on the ground that the pay of the carrier in those communities is supplemented by side lines. I know it is not true in the instance in my own district, because that carrier gets nothing from side lines.

Mr. PERKINS. The question which I asked the gentleman was whether he regarded the provision of the bill as an increase of salary, because in many districts in the State of New York to say that the carrier, on an average, makes from the newspapers which he distributes $100 a year is certainly an overstatement. The gentleman says that he wants to cut off these outside sources of income. If he does so, the result is that the carrier's salary is no better than it was before.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That may be true in some cases.

A MEMBER. And in other cases it may not be.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is not true as to the country generally; it can not be.

Mr. PERKINS. It is true as to the State of New York.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I doubt whether it is true as to the entire State.

Mr. PERKINS. Perhaps not as to the whole State.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Of course we can not fix here the basis of pay or the official status of 30,000 carriers by taking one or two instances any more than you could undertake to adopt as a basis of action the instance which I stated where the carrier made nothing beyond his salary.

Mr. PERKINS. But the gentleman must know perfectly well that if these outside sources of income are cut off the Government will sooner or later be obliged to make up the difference by increasing the salary of the carrier. We may as well meet that matter now, because we are coming to it.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I say frankly to the gentleman that the proper policy, as I view it, is for the Government to pay its letter carriers, its post-office clerks, its railway mail clerks, its rural mail carriers, according to their service to the Government, and deny them the right to act as agents or solicitors for any individual or firm where this outside employment conflicts with the open competition of business transactions.

I do not know whether $720 is the full amount which should be allowed in all fairness for this service. I do not claim that it is. But I want to say that in view of the infancy of the service, in view of the heavy expense of the service, in view of the reductions of the revenue of the Government, we can not in fairness recommend a greater allowance at this time. But because the present status is not altogether satisfactory that does not justify us in giving the carrier a partial compensation by Federal law and to supplement that by compensation from outside business transactions when such business transactions enter into competition with other citizens and act as a species of favoritism.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does not the same argument as to competition with outside business houses apply to the case of postmasters where they are allowed to deal in stationery or to carry on other lines of business in competition with their neighbors? Yet you do not impose any restriction in that case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In the case of a fourth-class office, because of the smallness of the pay, we allow the postmaster to carry on the Government business in his own house or store.

My own judgment is, just as I have expressed it before, that the Government can not afford to be maintaining by law favoritism among its citizens. When we gave to the fourth-class postmaster the privilege of holding his office in his store, that might possibly inure to his benefit, but it does not allow him to become the agent and solicitor for any other stores or line of enterprise.

Mr. PERKINS. Yes; but does not it——

Mr. OVERSTREET (continuing). Nor does it deter his patrons from going to other stores at all, but it simply is in a measure for the benefit of his particular store.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I understand the gentleman to say that in many of the routes, some of which were known to him, there were several applicants—fifteen in one case—who were willing to carry it at the old price. What I want to ask the gentleman is if the committee were moved to the adoption of the report by the fact that they could get men to carry mail for less money than carriers are now receiving?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Not at all. That was merely a circumstance, a mere factor.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is it not a fact that there is not a salaried office in the United States that you could not get men who would hold or accept for one-half of the salary that is now paid?

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is true, not excepting Members of Congress.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not excepting Members of Congress.

Mr. OVERSTREET. And for that reason that would not be a proper basis.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Then I want to ask the gentleman if the committee believes that, after reducing the source of revenue that the carriers had heretofore, $720 is sufficient compensation for these men, having to provide horses and things which he has stated they have to provide?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The committee believes that the compensation authorized by the bill is perfectly proper and fair at this time in view of the condition of the revenues as well as of the cutting off of these privileges. It is just as unfair for the Government to permit a carrier to become an agent where he gets a full salary as where he gets a meager salary.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am not finding any fault with the committee on that. I do differ from the committee on the amount of compensation they have allowed. I want to ask the chairman this: Have any of the patrons on any of the routes throughout the United States ever petitioned that these salaries should be increased to at least $800 a year?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I have no doubt; why, certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Have you had a petition from any people in this country to reduce the salary, or statements that the present salary is too large?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will relate two instances where we have. One where a person wrote me that he had lived on that route for twenty years; that he knew every man, woman, and child on it; he knew of his own knowledge the expense of living and the maintenance of horse, etc., in that community, and that $600 was ample, and he said it would be unfair to the Government to increase the salary.

Another wrote to this effect: That there were small landowners and renters along that line of route, with which he was familiar, who are making far less money in a year than the carrier was making, and that an increase to a Federal officeholder in that community to a greater salary than the salary that was now being paid would bring more discontent than contentment to the people of that community. Now, I do not pretend to say that either of these instances is a sufficient warrant. Let me say to the gentleman that this bill carries three and a half millions of dollars for increase of rural carriers' salaries alone.

I do not pretend to say that $720 is all that they should have. I do say as a legislator it is my duty and yours, before we undertake to swamp the Treasury by appropriations for a service yet in its infancy, that we should give account to the demands of those communities where there are individuals willing to do the service for less compensation. We have no more right to act entirely upon petitions which ask for greater compensation, for greater increases, than we have to act entirely upon petitions which protest against any increase.

I average it, and I say, in view of the condition of the service itself, in view of the demand for the extension of the service, in view of its infancy, and in view also of the condition of the revenues, I hesitate to recommend more than three and a half millions for increase of salary alone in a single service. The increased appropriation for the rural service alone carried in this bill is a fraction in excess of 64 per cent, and 97 per cent of the appropriation goes to carriers alone.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Now, the gentleman stated that he had these two cases. I will ask if he has not received thousands of requests from the people of this country who receive this service, asking that their carriers' salary shall be increased?

Mr. OVERSTREET. No, sir. Now, I will tell the gentleman what I do understand and what I have heard in the abstract, that the officers of the Rural Carriers' Association, with headquarters in Washington, have been in this city for weeks and have sent through the line of their organization, first to State presidents with instructions to send to county presidents with instructions to notify the carriers, circulars stimulating petitions to be sent to Congress. And I know that since the days of John Adams, the great champion of petitions, there has never been a more earnest effort made to stampede the House with petitions than in this particular case.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Just one more question, then I will not interrupt the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Have I answered the question?

Mr. TOWNSEND. Not to my satisfaction.

Mr. OVERSTREET. In what way?

Mr. TOWNSEND. And not, I think, to the satisfaction of the committee.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not like to leave it unless I can answer it thoroughly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. What I want to know is if the gentleman's committee has not received from the people of this country petitions asking that these salaries be increased?

The gentleman has stated two cases in which he evidently places confidence, two cases that are opposed to it, and insinuates that the other cases of petitions which have been presented to him have been due to the manipulations of the Carriers' Association, and I wish to say to the gentleman I have filed myself with his committee petitions with hundreds of names that have not been instigated by the Rural Carriers' Association, but by men who see the work of these carriers every day and believe that they should receive more pay than they are receiving, and I asked the gentleman the question simply to find out if the committee were not actuated by a desire to comply with the wishes of the people of the country, from the people not only who are serving, but the people who are served, that the compensation of $720 was not sufficient, and that even though the fund set aside is large and we are adding to it, it is so with many other branches of the Government, and we think that the people who are getting the benefit of this rural service should be consulted in determining what pay is sufficient and what those carriers should receive. That is the reason that I asked the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Exactly so, and I answered it. I would say that it is true that there has come to the committee, by reference of Members and also directly, a large number of petitions, petitions which were drawn in black, either typewritten or printed upon newspaper presses, sent out for the purpose of having the patrons sign them. Those petitions have come to the committee in large numbers. The gentleman says that he knows that the petitions filed by him were not stimulated. I would be very glad if he could say whether he knows that the patrons signed those petitions by hunting up somebody who had a blank or whether they were presented to them. Now, understand me; it is a little unfair to put this committee or myself in a position of antagonizing the demands of the people.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I do not wish to do that, Mr. Chairman; that is not my desire.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is a little unfair to leave the inference that I am insinuating that the committee has been controlled by one or two instances and are prejudiced against the thousands of names appearing upon the petitions. It is fair, however, for this House to know that this bill, notwithstanding extraordinary efforts of economy, carries three and one-half million dollars for no other purpose on earth than to increase these salaries, and we do give an increase of 64 per cent for that service, 97 per cent of that appropriation being for carriers' pay alone.

If we answer to the people by providing for the extension of the service from $12,000,000 to over $20,000,000, I will take my chances with the people on ratifying my act of whether or not it is a discharge of a public duty——

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield for a question, yes.

Mr. STERLING. Does this bill prevent rural carriers from receiving packages of newspapers, daily and weekly newspapers, from the express office or the freight office and delivering them to the farmers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The law to-day prevents that. There is nothing in the bill that prevents it. No carrier ought to be allowed to receive purely mailable matter by express and then carry it to a patron of his route to the disadvantage of the revenues of the Government.

Mr. STERLING. But in many instances it would not affect the revenues of the Government whether it be the law or not. It is the fact that in many instances county papers are——

Mr. OVERSTREET. County papers are in no wise disturbed.

Mr. STERLING (continuing). Sent to neighboring towns where they can not send them through the mail in time for the rural delivery to get them in the morning, but they go to the express office and get them there and distribute them that same day, and if they were obliged to send or receive them through the mail the farmers could not get them until the next day. Now, that does not affect——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, that is a very remote case and would indicate there are not mail facilities between the two towns.

Mr. STERLING. I think it is not a remote case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. At all events, there is nothing in this bill that changes the present status.

Mr. STERLING. You think this bill, in and of itself, would not prevent the rural carrier from doing that?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The bill does not touch on that item at all.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the law prevent that?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If it does not, it ought to, because a newspaper, like a letter, is a mailable article. Why should a merchant or a public house of any kind print a thousand letters and address them, or leave them unaddressed, and send them by freight to an office and then pay the Government's rural carrier less money than the postage would amount to to deliver them by hand, and by doing so defraud the Government of the revenue to which it is entitled? There is law against that now.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I will show the gentleman that that is only one side of the case.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Now, I would like to complete this statement.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to show the gentleman who has so well alluded to it that there are two sides to the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The trouble is that you are injecting an argument into this bill which the bill does not touch.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to show the gentleman from Illinois that this is a meritorious proposition.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then take him off one side and converse with him.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to convert you. [Laughter.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I will be glad to listen to the gentleman from Tennessee when we are not trespassing upon the time of the House. I shall be glad to talk upon astronomical questions and others just as foreign to this bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, these are not starry ma ters. I want the gentleman to come down to the ground floor. [Laughter.]

Mr. STERLING. I want to ask the gentleman from Indiana another question. Do s the bill provide, or does it prevent the rural carrier from acting as the agent of newspapers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly it does; it prevents the carrier from soliciting for any person, firm, or corporation.

Mr. STERLING. What harm might there be in making an express provision——

Mr. OVERSTREET. I don't know whether my friend was here or not, but I gave about forty-five minutes to the elucidation of that subject and answered many questions. I should like very much to accommodate him, but I do dislike to have to go over the ground a second time.

Mr. STERLING. I am very sorry, but I would like to have an answer to the question.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Has the gentleman been present during the discussion?

Mr. STERLING. Not all of the time.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, that is the gentleman's misfortune.

Mr. STERLING. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes; I will answer the question as a matter of courtesy.

Mr. STERLING. I would like to ask this question: What harm would there be in making an express provision in the bill giving the rural carrier a right to act as an agent for a newspaper? All newspapers would have the same opportunity, and it would be a great accommodation, it seems to me, to the farmer, and they are the ones to be benefited by this. Why would it not be convenient and a good provision for the carrier to act as agent and take subscriptions for the papers, and let the farmers pay it to the rural carrier?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Many things have been asked and fought for in the name of liberty, and now many things are asked for in the name of the farmer, but back of it all are the newspapers seeking to utilize the Government employees for their private business. There is no more reason for excepting the newspapers than there is for excepting the butcher, no more reason for excepting either one of them than there is for excepting a mail-order house, and for further illustration of that I refer the gentleman to my remarks in the RECORD to-morrow morning, which have clearly covered that subject. Whether they will convince the gentleman or not I can not say, but it is abject favoritism which the Government should not enter into. [Applause.]

Mr. STERLING. I beg to differ with the gentleman.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can not help that.

Mr. STERLING. Isn't it true that the greatest advantage resulting to the farmers by the rural delivery is the fact that they get the daily newspaper?

Mr. OVERSTREET. They will get it now. There isn't a syllable in this bill that will impair it.

Mr. STERLING. But in many cases the farmer can not get it unless the rural carrier is allowed to take it from the express or freight office, because the mail does not reach many points in time for the rural carrier to get it in the morning.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, I suggest that the gentleman prepare his argument on the subject. I have endeavored to explain it, and I repeat that there is no more justice in making a specific exception of the newspaper than there is to grant the same privilege to the mail-order house, which has to obtain its orders through the carrier and ship by freight to the carrier the sales, and they are delivered to the disadvantage of the revenues of the Government.

Mr. CHARLES B. LANDIS. As I understand, this bill does not prohibit the carrier from serving the patrons of the route with the newspaper. It prohibits his soliciting.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Absolutely. Here is the thing in a nutshell: This practice has been in vogue for several years. The bill provides that it shall discontinue on the 1st day of next July. Newspapers have already extended their circulation. Patrons have subscribed for them through the carrier, who has made the solicitations for orders. There is nothing to do but to continue that circulation, unless the farmer discontinues his subscription. The papers will go by mail, and they ought to go by mail, and when going by mail they come to the hands of the carrier to be delivered by him, and the order for subscription should go by mail.

Mr. SPALDING rose.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, I want to give notice that after yielding to the gentleman from North Dakota I shall hereafter decline to yield.

Mr. SPALDING. Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the gentleman what harm there is in a rural carrier delivering papers any more than there is in a railroad, which is also a mail carrier, every day carrying thousands and thousands of papers and delivering them outside of the mail bags?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, a very good and sufficient answer is that we are limiting the duties of an employee of the Government, and if a railroad does that it does it just like an individual boy on my street buys a lot of newspapers and delivers them. He is not a Federal employee. We draw the distinction that a Federal employee should not be licensed to make such distinction and favoritism between citizens.

Mr. SPALDING. They are each contractors of the Government.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But not for that purpose at all. Just a moment more, Mr. Chairman, and I shall close.

I call attention to the fact that we seek to consolidate, under authority carried by the bill, the supply departments of the service for the purpose both of economy in administration and economy in the expenditure in the purchase of these articles.

We hope also to make such segregation of these appropriations that a clear understanding of their original purpose shall be known to every Member of Congress, and in turn we propose a better system of audit in some instances, which will necessitate a more careful inspection of these expenditures for the purpose of insuring that economy which the Congress has a right to exact.

We present this bill with all of its great appropriations, and appeal to every Member to examine it and act upon it with the same spirit of economy and fairness which has guided the action of the committee, believing that the Committee of the Whole will not be led astray by rumors of inadequate allowances, but will confine itself to a strict accounting of the appropriations and will accordingly ratify the items which we recommend in the bill. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I decline to yield further.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. I wanted to ask the gentleman about the rural free delivery.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, I have gone over that for two hours.

Mr. WILLIAM W. KITCHIN. But not as to the point about which I wish to interrogate the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question about this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] is recognized.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Before beginning, I yield: yes.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] allow me to interrupt him long enough to ask whether any arrangement has been made with reference to the section of the bill providing for special facilities on trunk lines, to the end that we may, when we reach that section of the bill, on page 19, have some special allotment of time in which at that time to discuss the bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No arrangement has been made in committee. I presume none could be made except by the approval of the House. I will state that I understand that neither the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], nor myself is averse to an arrangement of that sort.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Let me suggest that that can not be done in committee. It must be done in open House, and it is utterly useless to take up the consideration of the subject now.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It is not useless to have some arrangement about it, so that the House membership may know what to expect. I am simply calling the matter to the attention of the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ROBINSON] that no arrangement has yet been made in the House respecting the length of time for general debate, and that debate is now proceeding by unanimous consent, in charge of the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], and the representative of the minority, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. Any arrangement with reference to extension of time under the five-minute rule will have to be made after the committee rises.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. I so understood, but I thought the chairman of the committee and the minority representative of the committee could at this time notify the House that some such arrangement would probably be made.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I think it is probable, but we can not make it outside of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. No; I understand that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I desire to address the committee for only a few moments, and then I shall yield to my colleague the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD]. We have heard from the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET], a very able presentation of the bill in its material paragraphs. I take pleasure in saying that the minority of the committee fully agree with the majority and that the report is practically unanimous upon all of the provisions of this bill except as to three or four items, to which reference will be made later.

Therefore, it does not become necessary, in view of the statements made by the chairman of the committee, that I should discuss the bill in detail, but only with reference to those matters upon which we differ.

The minority of the committee, while concurring in general in this bill, have felt constrained—in view of the evidence that was before them, and of the reports that have been made to the committee by the Department on the resolution from this House directing the same—to show the propriety of some action being taken by the House to strengthen the Post Office Department in its administration. And in the discussion of this question for a few moments I wish to disclaim altogether any animus of a political character in reference to this matter.

This is a great Department of the Government, and for many years it has been administered with ability, and for a greater part of the time with signal honesty and integrity. But we have reached the point in the postal administration where, in my judgment, it now becomes the duty of this House as the immediate representatives of the people to look closely into the condition of affairs in that Department.

This Department, charged with the expenditure of one hundred and sixty to one hundred and seventy million dollars annually of the public money, ought not to be left without the means of properly discharging its duties to the country so far as this Congress has power to give them. The system of administration there is in many respects weak. Unquestionably the power lodged by statute in branches of that Department ought to be more thoroughly consolidated than it is. Responsibility ought to be fixed more nearly and closely upon the heads of the four great subdivisions of the Department. There are not sufficient checks, it appears to us, in the Department to protect the public interests. There is not that closeness and community of interests between the different divisions in the discharge of their duties that there ought to be to protect thoroughly the Government and the people.

As a result of this weakness, a system of administration has been encouraged and pursued very unbusinesslike in many essentials. Inappropriate and hasty legislation may be responsible in some measure for this mongrel system that has become so intricate as to invite fraud and wrongdoing. There are, perhaps, more offices there than there ought to be. There certainly is too much assumption of authority under the guise of rules and regulations. The solemn judgment of this House twice expressed on the right to exclude certain matter as second-class mail matter and to change the law on that subject has been ignored by the Department, and rules and regulations having the force and effect of law, so far as the action of the Department is concerned, have been invoked, putting into effect that very bill the Congress refused to enact, commonly called the "Loud bill" or the essential features thereof. The power of Congress was thus usurped.

In considering the fact that recent developments in the Department clearly indicate that the slime which was found in the division of salaries and allowances would reach over the whole Department, there ought to be an investigation by a committee of this House, empowered to make recommendations to Congress by which the whole postal system should be revised and strengthened. The rights and duties of the Department should be more clearly defined and the means of information as to the needs of the Department and the legitimate expense of its conduct more readily obtainable.

You appropriate from year to year large sums of money for inland transportation of mails by railroads, yet there is not a gentleman within the sound of my voice who can tell me what it ought to cost.

There is not a Member on the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads who, in my judgment, can approximate the amount that it ought to cost within five or ten million dollars. There is not a man in the Department who can do so. Thirty-nine million eight hundred and sixty thousand dollars, in round numbers, is appropriated for this purpose in this bill.

I ask the House whether it is in accord with good business policy that a system should exist in a Department by which you can not approximate within millions of dollars that which a proper service ought to cost? We know what it does cost——

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. In view of what the gentleman has just said, will he allow me to ask him how the committee arrived at the amount of appropriation recommended in the bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I am coming to that: I will answer the gentleman now. We know, Mr. Chairman, just what it has cost by the system employed to carry the mail for one year by railroads, and the Department, with this information, makes its estimates for the next fiscal year, making liberal allowance for increase in mail. The committee has no other information and must take the estimates made by those who expend the money. The manner in which the estimates are arrived at is very unsatisfactory. We know that only once in four years in each of the grand subdivisions of the United States the mail is weighed, and upon that weighing the ultimate figures are determined. We know there are a thousand doors to fraud open. We have heard it charged, and the records contain, in a measure, proof upon the question, that large quantities of mail during the weighing period are carried all over the country—are weighed time and again. We know that a commission was appointed by Congress to look into this question. Unfortunately the report of that commission shows that they were not able to reach a satisfactory conclusion and therefore they recommended to this House its further consideration.

I am not able to suggest to the House at this moment what a proper and adequate remedy for this condition is. I present this to the House simply as an illustration of one of the methods of doing business in that Department, which I regard as not altogether proper and businesslike—one of the means that open the way for the commission of crime and fraud.

Aside from these suggestions as to inherent weakness in the postal system and the necessity for its improvement in the interest of the public service and revenue, there is a more delicate and serious question demanding your attention.

The record shows that many postal officials are charged by an officer of the Department with improper and criminal acts, and now stand indicted in the courts of justice.

Before proceeding further I ask permission now to incorporate as a part of my remarks the views of the minority of this committee on this bill, and also my own views bearing on the question now discussed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks the views of the minority and also his own views. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following are the papers referred to:

VIEWS OF THE MINORITY.

To disagree with other members of the committee in the conclusions reached on an important bill carrying the necessary supplies for a great Department of the Government may not be a gracious thing, and is certainly not pleasant; nor is it, but we feel it our duty to call to the attention of the House [illegible] under which as matters are at present conducted in that Department, the subject will need to be carefully examined and likewise could be the specific attention of the House the condition of affairs in the Post-Office Department.

Every reasonable and [illegible] facility that can be secured in the postal service for the benefit of the people under wise and economic administration of the Department should be granted. The administration of the Post-Office Department should be liberal, but not profligate. Congress should not permit the Department to enter upon any new scheme which may be proposed by those designing to make profit from dealing with the Department. Nor, on the other hand, should it prevent the Department from experimenting with new investigated and improved appliances in postal matters which may result, as heretofore, in improvement of [illegible] postal service. But such innovations should not be entered upon without due regard to the result alike on revenue and improvement of service. The Department is entirely relied upon for estimates. The committee hears proof from the persons interested in making the estimates, and often on their own showing, as in this particular bill, it becomes necessary to reduce the estimates many thousands of dollars. There seems to be no means of information under the present system except that furnished by those who expend the appropriation.

In a great Department like this, possessing as it does many different bureaus under different chiefs, we too frequently find a rivalry between the different bureaus as to which can most rapidly increase its importance and obtain the greatest appropriation. For a committee to rely entirely upon estimates furnished by bureau chiefs thus vieing with each other it seems to us as unsafe and unbusinesslike, yet we have had no further knowledge than information obtained exclusively from officials who manage the expenditures and Congress has practically surrendered its authority in favor of the Department and become merely clerks to record their decrees.

The Department seems to be now so impressed with the belief that the service can be maintained only by a continual increase of expense, [illegible] under the representations of necessity in any branch of the service, whatever inequality may be existing in the service in comparison for estimates from all other branches for a corresponding period, has contributed to impoverishing funds and absorbing the revenues without commensurate returns.

It is easy for a Member of the House to say that the Department knows best about these things and that we had better leave it to them. It is better business to know what it is that public money should be paid out. We can satisfy an appropriation on the ground of public good [illegible] Department [illegible] are [illegible] by their Representatives in Congress. If we have [illegible] and provide the means of [illegible] for expenditure, but [illegible] to know will the money go [illegible]. Who [illegible] the Department to exist which make it practically impossible to appropriate by [illegible] annual [illegible] of this service [illegible]. We know what it costs. We know just what it ought to cost.

The House passed a resolution recently directing the Postmaster-General [illegible] fraud. We reproduce the conclusion to this report:

"CONCLUSIONS.

"For the purposes of this report, the investigation ordered by you on March 7 has been completed. In the presentation of cases for trial where indictments have been found [illegible] and prosecution [illegible] have been [illegible] of them continuous every day since the grand jury [illegible]. The [illegible] of a [illegible] have been examined and the [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] of a period of three [illegible] years [illegible] and [illegible] as compared [illegible] to the Government. The [illegible] Thomas J. Cowherd, [illegible] Amos A. Wheeler, [illegible] and [illegible] in his administration the expenditures for canceling ink increased [illegible].

[illegible] that Kemper received money from the manifold company, [illegible] year. [illegible] from Arnold. Yet that company defrauded the [illegible].

The [illegible] of [illegible] in the [illegible] $2,000 [illegible] fact per. Yet [illegible] represents a net loss, since the Department continued, by the terms of the contract, [illegible] $2,000 [illegible].

[illegible] $30,000 from the automatic cashier. Yet the Department expended $74,275 for this wholly unnecessary [illegible].

[illegible] that the perpetrators of these frauds thought [illegible] [illegible] to be [illegible] between [illegible] and [illegible] that have been purchased and [illegible] [illegible] with any degree of necessity.

As the process of these cases [illegible] have been prosecuted [illegible] to the appointment of officers in Canada, where frauds have been committed, have been authorized.

As a result of the investigation, four officers and employees of the Department have been convicted, [illegible] have been [illegible] [illegible] have been [illegible] [illegible] have been separated from the service by resignation and removal, and a [illegible] of the [illegible] have been [illegible].

I wish to speak in the [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] of the investigation and their loyalty to the interests of the service. [illegible] the Department is largely due to them. They have sought the truth with energy and skill. No necessary [illegible] have been [illegible] to [illegible] of Chief Inspector William E. Chapman they have [illegible] in [illegible]. A [illegible] of the officers who have been employed on the investigation [illegible] to [illegible].

The results of the investigation demonstrate that all [illegible] of the Department, so far as [illegible] and [illegible] the registry system, and money-order system, should be placed under [illegible].

"A [illegible] should be made in the organization of the Department in order to prevent a [illegible] of the [illegible] of a [illegible] divisions, and some room [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] and [illegible] of ruin. How [illegible] [illegible] What [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

longer hesitate about it. You can not permit, if it be possible to avoid it, a single stain upon your personal honor and character, and God forbid that you ever permit the House of Representatives, the popular branch of the Government, to be dishonored by a failure to adduce the truth under conditions like these. I now yield to the gentleman from Missouri. [Applause.]

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I had finished, but I yield to him if the gentleman has an inquiry.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Under this special-facility clause, to which reference has been made, I would like to ask at whose suggestion this $167,000 was put in the bill—$12,000 from Washington to Atlanta and New Orleans, and $55,000 from Kansas City, Mo., to Newton, Kans. Was that done at the request of the Postmaster-General?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. In reply to the gentleman, I will say this is not the suggestion of the Department. The Post-Office Department has never recommended a subsidy to be paid to the railroads running from the city of Washington to New Orleans.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Then why does the committee put it in?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. On the contrary, the Department has always said that the allowance of this amount was a hindrance to the good administration of the office, and that they never would have spent it—not estimating for it nor recommending it to the House—but the House of its own accord taking it up and passing it, they regarded the action of the House under such circumstances, notwithstanding the language that it shall be expended only in the discretion of the Department, as a mandate to expend it, because the Department has not recommended and did not desire it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. And the gentleman has voted against it every time.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I have always voted against that proposition.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. So have I; but why does the committee still put it in? The Department does not recommend it.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. As to why the committee put the item in I can not say. I presume the committee did it in the discharge of their duty to the country as they understand it. I voted against the proposition in the committee and will vote against it here, and at the proper time shall move this House to strike that item from the bill, because, in my judgment, the alleged Southern subsidy is the most iniquitous and pernicious section ever attempted to be incorporated in any decent bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. GROSVENOR. How many years has that subsidy been paid?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I believe it has been paid for about ten years, and I want to say to the gentleman from Ohio that it would have been better for the Government to have bought many of the little towns along the Southern Railroad which this is supposed to have benefited than to have paid the money that has been paid out in this subsidy, so far as the principle involved is concerned, as I view it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did not the Democrats first put that in the post-office appropriation bill?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I am sure I do not know.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can tell the gentleman.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I should not be surprised if it was a Democratic Administration, because——

Mr. GROSVENOR. It was.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee (continuing). Because the southern membership largely insisted upon it. I have always insisted, I will say to the gentleman, that a subsidy is an evil which we should oppose in the North or South.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Has not a Republican House voted for it time and again in the bill?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that a number of us here constantly annually have voted for striking out that provision?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I know that a number of gentlemen did on both sides.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that a large majority of the gentleman's party on this floor have constantly voted to keep it in?

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. No; not always.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; and at one time we struck it out.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. If the gentleman will allow me to answer the question, I will say that I think the majority on the Republican side of the House, united with the majority on the other side of the House, have generally maintained the provision. It was clearly error by both.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It comes here branded as the child of a Democratic House.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I do not know who is the father of the child, but I know that the child ought to be killed for the public good. [Laughter.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman kills it, it will be infanticide in his own family. [Laughter.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Democrats with my views don't produce that sort of a child nor encourage its existence.

Mr. COWHERD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to submit some remarks along the line followed so ably by my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON]. In criticising the administration of the Post-Office Department I want it distinctly understood that I am offering no criticism against the committee that reports this bill to the House. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it can be truthfully said that no committee under the Dome of this Capitol has worked more arduously and endeavored more earnestly to bring to this House a fair and just measure, and I desire at the outset to say for the chairman of that committee that he has labored with infinite zeal for the good of the service and with rare tact and industry in the framing of this great bill. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, this bill carries more money than any other supply bill that will be presented to this House this year. It is providing for a department and service that is nearer to the membership of this House than any other service rendered by the Government. The fact of the matter is that it is in the postal service only that nine-tenths of our population ever come in contact with the General Government of the United States. Not one man in a thousand has ever seen a regiment of United States troops. Probably not one in ten thousand ever saw a battleship. The courts of the United States, distributed though they may be over all the States, yet, with their limited jurisdiction, serve a very small proportion of the people. It is the postal service only that enters into every home and touches in the circumference of their daily lives every citizen. This service, Mr. Chairman, ministers not only to the wants of the people, but has enrolled under its banner more men than serve the Government both on land and sea in the military and naval forces.

I may say, and I believe, truthfully, the postal service does more for the cause of education, in the dissemination of the millions of tons of printed matter, than all the universities and all the schools combined. It does more to promote business than all the boards of trade of this broad land, and, in the quick and ready communication from town to town, and city to city, and State to State, it links together these States by closer ties than were ever formed in written constitution or made good by force of arms. This is, in my opinion, the most important service, as it is the service that is the closest to the people of the country.

Mr. Chairman, we have a right, then, to demand that for this great business service, ministering to the wants of all the people of the country, there should be at its head men ready to conduct it on business plans and maintain it in a business way in accordance with the law and in accordance with honest business management. It behooves us to remember how rapidly the expenditures are growing in this Department. Why, it has been but a little more than twenty years when your whole appropriations were only about $40,000,000. This bill carries practically one hundred and seventy millions, and though it be true that the receipts are growing almost as rapidly as the disbursements, yet with the great increase in the rural service and the expense that necessarily follows it, we are finding year after year in the postal Department a continually growing deficit.

Therefore, I say, it all the more behooves us to demand through every branch of that service the most careful business management. No committee of this House, gathered as they are from different walks of life, is or can be composed of postal experts. It must rely in a large measure upon the recommendations and the information of the Post-Office Department, and in a large measure the bill brought in must be the estimates they submit. It is true that we cut down here and we cut a percentage off there, and do the best we can with this item and with that, but in the main the bill as reported must rest very largely upon the estimates of the Post-Office Department.

I propose to attempt to show to this House this afternoon that the estimates of that Department are not to be relied upon in the making up of a post-office bill, and that therefore there is force in the argument of my colleague from Tennessee [Mr. MOON] that this House should institute an investigation of that Department; not as to one branch of it, not a partial investigation reaching only into one division, but a general investigation under a committee appointed by the Speaker of this House in order to see if we can not get into that Department better business methods and get out of it some of the maladministration that has afflicted it in the last few years. Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to one of the items in this bill, which is to be found upon page 26. The bill provides that there shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, a purchasing agent for the Department, and that through his office shall be purchased all supplies.

Gentlemen, is there another great institution in the United States, be it railroad, municipal, State, or what not, that has carried on its business, as this great Department has for many years, with no general head for purchasing supplies, but by means of an antiquated system of boards, and these boards consisting of subordinates that are expected to govern and control the action of their superiors in the purchase of supplies? No recommendation of reform along this line came to this committee from the Department. That legislation appears in this bill upon the initiative of this committee itself. I should say in justice to the Department that when we called their attention to it they told us that they had had it under consideration for some time and were then considering the necessity and advisability of it, but though we considered this bill for nearly two months in the committee, in the end we had to frame the measure, and the initiative is the committee's and not the Department's.

If you would know something of the necessity for a purchasing agent, I would call your attention to a short resumé of the way supplies have been purchased in the past, as may be gathered from the report made by Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General Bristow. There has been some discussion on the floor of this House from time to time as to the appointment of Michael W. Louis as the chief of the supply division in the office of the First Assistant, and I took occasion once to say that it was not the violation of the civil-service law that was the gravamen of the offense in that case, but that when First Assistant Postmaster-General Heath ordered Louis into the service through the back door, he did it because he knew that shortly after great contracts were to be let.

Louis was a man capable and able. He could easily have passed a civil-service examination, and when that letter was written, on the 17th of April, ordering him appointed as cashier of the Kansas City post-office, and then immediately transferring him to Washington to take charge of the supply division, it was done in order that he might be in that position when the contracts were to be let on May 6 following.

What was the result? Take the question of the purchase of canceling ink. A company at Baltimore—the Caton Manufacturing Company, which had that contract—made a bid of 20 cents for the next year. Mr. Louis let the contract to the Ault & Wiborg Company, of Cincinnati, for 24 cents, in order, as he says, that he might get a better quality of ink. But we find that the quality of ink furnished is such that barrel full after barrel full is burned in the furnace in the Post-Office Department building, and when the engineer complained that they were ruining the boilers, we find that it was dumped into the Potomac.

We also find letters from Mr. Louis on file, asking the company that furnished the ink if they would manufacture over again at Government expense 15,000 pounds of this superior ink which he had purchased at a higher price. We find, in addition to that, that whereas the year before, under the cheaper price, it took only 21,600 pounds of ink to run the whole Government service, under the management of Louis it took over 50,000 pounds of ink. That one little item cost the Government, according to Mr. Bristow's report, $10,084 more than it cost the year previous for the same service. This is just an illustration of the way supplies were purchased under the antiquated system in the Post-Office Department. What was done the next year? They appointed one of these boards of subordinates to pass upon the question as to how Mr. Louis should buy the ink, and that board was not satisfied when it came to examine the subject, notwithstanding that they were subordinates in the Department.

The result was that the board was discharged and another one appointed which would be satisfactory, and George W. Beavers, chairman of that board, reports that it is best to permit Mr. Louis to purchase in the open market, and from March, 1898, until July, 1902, Louis bought ink from the Ault-Wiborg Company at 30 cents a pound, being 10 cents more than was paid for it during the time when they had anything like competitive bids. Take another illustration. Mr. Louis was permitted to buy twine. When he went in there, they were buying twine at 6.65 cents in the open market. It went up to 10.95 cents in 1900–1901, and then a year after it went down to 7.45 cents. When twine was at the lowest, 6.65 cents, it was necessary for the Government to keep on hand a surplus of only five or six thousand pounds. When twine had jumped to 10.95 cents, and after the contract had been made at 7.45 cents for the next year under Mr. Louis's able management, it is found that the Government accumulated over 100,000 pounds of surplus twine.

Take another illustration of the purchase of supplies. James T. Metcalf was Superintendent of the Money-Order System. There was a bidding for the engraving and printing work to be used in that branch of the postal service. One man bid nearly $50,000 less than the company that then had the contract. Mr. Metcalf used his utmost endeavors to persuade the lowest bidder to withdraw his bid, asserting he would never be able to do the work. Notwithstanding this we find that man to-day is performing the service, and is doing it satisfactorily upon the cheaper bid.

It is also found that Mr. Metcalf had a son working for the company that had made the higher bid, and it is discovered that Mr. Metcalf had so manipulated the bid for the sending out of printing supplies that that company received $22,692.95 more than they were entitled to under the specifications on which they had bid.

We find that Mr. Metcalf had so arranged that, instead of having the company ship the supplies here and sending them out, as had formerly been done, the company should ship the money-order books themselves; and he allowed them for this work of shipping 4¼ cents for each book. And this son of Mr. Metcalf who was working for the company got 1½ cents for every book shipped, so that this boy, who was drawing a salary of $65 a month, received from December, 1899, to May, 1903, in addition to his salary, $9,547 in commissions under the arrangement that his father had made with the company. Do you not think it is time there was some change in the method of purchasing supplies in the Post-Office Department?

And I appeal to you, gentlemen, had we not a right to expect from the heads of those great departments in the postal service a recommendation to this committee that would change this method of proceeding, especially after an investigation had shown the conditions that existed under the system there pursued?

Your committee hopes that in the creation of a separate supply bureau, with its chief selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate, there can be found a man of sufficient character and capacity to put this business beyond the taint of suspicion.

There is an item in this bill which will be found on page 11, which reads:

For separating mails at third and fourth class post-offices, $1,000,000.

That item read last year identically the same, except that the amount was $1,300,000; and it was in the distribution of that appropriation, Mr. Bristow charged, that Mr. Beavers had used the money "largely as an official perquisite for the benefit of his personal and political friends."

Note, please, the appropriation reads not "for unusual business," but "for separating mails." The need for that appropriation arises in this way: The pay of the postmasters, as you know, in the third and fourth class offices is dependent upon the cancellation and the sale of stamps. Where a star route goes out from an office of this class, the postmaster must separate the mail for the offices on that route, while the postmasters at those star-route offices receive the commission on the cancellation of the stamps. To pay the postmaster, therefore, at the office from which the star route starts for this separating work this item has for many years been carried on the appropriation bill. There was a regulation of the Department fixing the amount of pay, dependent upon the average number of pieces of mail postmasters were compelled to separate.

When, therefore, rural-delivery service was inaugurated and 15,000 rural routes had been instituted and 2,000 star routes discontinued, we had a right to expect that a decrease would be shown in the estimates for this item. That decrease ought to have begun as the rural service began to extend in 1900 and 1901, but, on the contrary, this item grew almost as rapidly as the rural service. The reason for its increase is shown when we read in Mr. Bristow's report how, absolutely without regard to the provisions of the law or the necessities of the service, the head of this Bureau distributed this money among his friends. We were told in the hearings that already 900 offices had been found where improper allowances had been made for the separating service, and this without a special investigation, but discovered in the ordinary course of business.

Did not this body have the right to expect that when it was shown that such gross misuse had been made of this fund the estimates of the Department would at least have called for some reduction in the item? On the contrary, the Department asks for $1,700,000, based, it is true, upon a proposition to give clerks to all third-class offices; but when called upon for an estimate upon the separating service alone, reports that it needs at least the amount of the last appropriation—$1,300,000. Can anyone justifiably that estimate upon any ground of good business conduct in the Department or fair dealing with Congress? If, as has been shown, without investigation of the thousands of offices to which allowances had been made, but just in the ordinary course of business, 900 have been discovered in which the allowances exceeded that provided by law, with rural free-delivery routes being established at the rate of 6,000 a year, and decreasing at least in some degree the necessity for separating service, how could any reasonable man demand a continuance of the already extravagant appropriation for that item of the service?

Why, sir, before Mr. Beavers went into that service we were appropriating $600,000 for the separating service; that is all. It was under his able management, under his judicious distribution of money to his friends, his yielding to pressure here and there, that this grew to $1,300,000. And yet the present administration of this Department reports that, managing the money honestly, as they ought to manage it, and allowing no more than the regulations of the Department prescribe, they can not run this service for any less than Beavers ran it when he gave the money away with free and reckless hand to every man that chose to ask for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

I appeal to you, gentlemen, whether that is not another illustration of the fact that this Department needs a competent business management, and that we are entitled to an investigation to see if such a reform can not be accomplished.

Now, the very next item in this bill is known as the "rent, light, and fuel item"—

For rent, light, and fuel for first, second, and third class post-offices, $2,550,000.

This is one of the items that is mentioned and discussed in the report upon what is known as the "Hay resolution."

It was in regard to the disbursement of this appropriation that Mr. Bristow says in his report:

The most charitable conclusion that can be drawn from Beavers's action in canceling these leases is that by the lavish waste of public money he sought to secure the good will of men prominent in public life.

Case after case is reported by Mr. Bristow where Beavers, even when there was a lease on a building running from three to five years, canceled the lease and raised the rent.

When it was shown to the Department how this money had been so recklessly distributed in the past, had we not a right to expect that they would come in and ask for a smaller sum? What is the fact? The fact is that Beavers, distributing the money so recklessly, was using $2,550,000 per year, and the Department administering it now, as we have the right to believe, honestly and economically, come in and report that they can not get along with less than $2,550,000.

Mr. Bristow calls attention to the fact that for the five years preceding Beavers's administration of that salary and allowance division this item had grown $250,000. During the five years he was in there it grew at the rate of $250,000 a year, and when the Department comes, in the light of that investigation, to administer it honestly, as we have a right to believe, they demand the same increase that Beavers demanded when administering it recklessly.

Now, gentlemen, I submit that these facts warrant the minority of this committee in calling upon you, without regard to party, without regard to partisanship, to look into the administration of the affairs of that great service.

Take the next item, on page 12, immediately following this, what is known as the "necessary, miscellaneous, and incidental" items connected with first and second class post-offices. That is the item under which the furniture is purchased. It is the item under which typewriters, copy presses, safes, Bundy time clocks, and other things are purchased. How has that item been administered in the past? Let me call your attention again to Mr. Bristow's report.

You remember the story of the Brandt automatic cashier. They had in the first and second class post-offices a little coin tray, a device that was used to make change, costing from $5 to $12. An invention was made of an automatic cashier, and during the year 1898 a number of them were sent out to the post-offices throughout the country. There was one postmaster, and only one, who reported in favor of it. Miller, the agent of the company, wrote Brandt, the president, on February 20, 1899.

I am satisfied that we have the assurance and friendship of both parties—General Heath and Mr. Beavers—and I feel [illegible] that [illegible] latter will be the most positive.

Whatever may have been the method of the cultivation, it is a singular fact that immediately following this Postmaster Heath notified Miller it had been decided to pay for the machines already installed and purchase 250 for use in the first-class offices. There had been no demands made from the postmasters for it, mark you. On the contrary, you will find that many of the postmasters reported against them. A very slight change was made in the machine, and this machine, which sold everywhere at $125, is put on the Department at $150 to take the place of the $5 and $10 coin trays.

What is the result? After the 250 were disposed of, largely by inducing the postmasters to ask for them, 527 more are ordered. Two hundred and seventeen of these were shipped without any request from postmasters, and out of the 527 thus purchased 175 are lying idle to-day. The aggregate amount paid by the Government for these machines, which is practically a total loss, was $24,275.

Typewriters also are purchased out of that fund. Along about 1897 a Mr. Gensler, at that time a stenographer to the Senate, was given the agency of the Elliott & Hatch book typewriter for Maryland, Virginia, and the District of Columbia. Gensler seems to have been a man with a considerable political pull. He managed to get twenty typewriters sent out to postmasters. They were to be used in preparing money-order statements, and he had these machines sent to the postmasters with a request from the Department to report upon them. There was only one postmaster out of the twenty who reported favorably. He was W. Scott Towers, postmaster at Station C, Washington City.

Notwithstanding only one favorable report was made, Gensler managed to work off on the Post-Office Department 193 of these worthless machines, and although postmasters had frequently written to the Department that they did not want them, and asked permission to send them back, they were compelled to pay for them out of the receipts of the office. One hundred and ninety-three of these machines cost $48,575, and on each machine so sold Gensler received $25, and he gave $50 to W. Scott Towers, who was the only postmaster that reported in favor of this machine, and Towers divided with Beavers. That also came out of this item.

Then there was the Bundy time recorder, that is, a clock with a recording device attached so constructed as to note the hour and minute a certain key is inserted. It was first used in the free-delivery service by the carriers to record when they would come in and go out of the office, in order to keep the number of hours they worked. It may have been a good device as far as that was concerned, but there was a great mistake in the estimates of the Department. Machen's estimate for the whole service was $25,000, but in 1898 Mr. Heath decided that he had to have them for the clerks as well as the carriers, and so it was transferred to the salary and allowance division, of which Mr. Beavers was the head, and we find that there has been expended for them, instead of $25,000, $247,000.

We find also that keys, sometimes as many as fifty to a hundred keys, costing 50 cents apiece, are sent out to little offices that have only two or three carriers and one or two clerks. The result of investigation of this shows that when these were instituted [illegible] was agent for the company; that he paid Machen a thousand dollars for the introduction of them in the service; that he paid Beavers five to six hundred dollars at various times, and he states himself that he found Beavers so obliging that it was [illegible] that he believed Mr. Perry Heath to transfer Beavers from New York and put him at the head of the salary and allowance division, and shortly thereafter the purchase of these recorders was transferred to that division.

This is the story of the expenditure of that appropriation. I submit again, gentlemen, when it has been proven to the Department itself how for years the money that Congress was appropriating in that item was being wasted, did we not have the right to expect the Department to reduce its estimates? Would not any business administration have done so, yet they demanded $2,550,000, the same amount used by Beavers when it was treated, not as a public trust, but as a private snap.

Next is the canceling machines. That is found on page 12, immediately after the item that I have been referring to, and reads:

For rental or purchase of canceling machines, and motor power therefor.

Let us look at the expenditure under the Post-Office Department of that appropriation. We have been appropriating $250,000. We appropriated $250,000 last year, and the year before $190,000, and the year before that $100,000. How was the appropriation expended?

Let us see. In 1896 the Hampden canceling machine was offered to the Government at $[illegible]. The Government purchased [illegible] machines at $[illegible] each. The company made a discovery about that time. They found out that if you wanted to do business with the postal service you had to pay a commission, with somebody who was in the service, so the company employed [illegible] company, and they made Mr. George Tyler, a brother of the Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department, president of the company, and promptly thereafter we find in January, 1897, that First Assistant Postmaster-General Heath purchased [illegible] machines at $[illegible] instead of $[illegible], the price at which the Government refused to take them two years before, and a few months later an order is given for 50 more at the same price; and in April, 1903, out of the 100 bought 83 of them have been discarded and thrown out as junk.

That is the way part of that item was expended. Here is the Doremus machine. The Doremus is a hand-power machine. It was invented by W. B. Doremus, of Washington. Beavers first bought 100 of these machines at $150. It was discovered that they were absolutely worthless. That was model No. 1. The company went to work and got out another model, called "model No. 2." On June 30, without testing its efficiency in any way, Beavers contracted for 100 more at $225. Model No. 2 did not seem to be much better than model No. 1, so the company got out another model called "No. 3," and of No. 3 another hundred was ordered at $225.

Now, model No. 3 was found to be fairly satisfactory, so the Department continued the purchase of them, and in all has bought 671 of the Doremus machines at a cost of $143,475. But the interesting part of this story is how the Government came to invest in the Doremus machine and why the Department so continuously purchased the machines after they were found inefficient and kept on experimenting with them until the company was enabled to make one that would work. Truesdell, the same Truesdell as mentioned before, was at that time the business agent of the company and Mr. George Green was the president of the company.

Truesdell said that before the order for the second hundred machines was given 200 shares of stock of the company, of the par value of $20,000, was transferred to Perry S. Heath, First Assistant Postmaster-General of the United States, and in consideration of this transfer of stock Heath promised to order not less than 200 machines, at $225 each. He says that he gave 50 shares; that Doremus, who owned one-fourth of the company, gave 50 shares to Greene, and that Greene was to make up the other 100.

Mr. Heath denies that any stock was transferred to him. Mr. Doremus admits that he did transfer 50 shares, but he doesn't know what it was for, except that it was for the interest of the company.

Ida Crowell, the bookkeeper, testifies that Doremus told her he thought it was a mistake to give the stock to Heath and objected to having to do it. The further satement is made by Truesdell that on each machine sold after the first 100 the company was required to pay Beavers $25, which he claimed was to be divided with Heath. The bookkeeper, Ida E. Crowell, says she drew the checks usually for $500 and procured the money in large bills. She would then telephone Beavers, and when he came she would retire from the room, and on coming back, when Beavers was gone, the money would be gone also, and she would charge that sum to "commission account." That is the way the item for the canceling machines has been expended. We submit that if they only needed $250,000 to run the canceling machines under that kind of a management, that they do not need so much if it was run honestly.

So the committee has cut the Department's estimate down to $200,000, but, mind you, the Department never proposed the cut in their estimate. They ask for the full $250,000.

Now we come to the item mentioned on page 23; and that is the most interesting item in this appropriation bill, when you come to look into the history of it. This is the item under which Mr. August W. Machen carried on, in a large part, his operations. I want to say for him that had his integrity been equal to his ability I verily believe there are few men that have ever been in the postal service who could have done so much good as he. He had a power of organization such as few men possess and a power of handling men such as is given to few individuals.

Machen, shortly after he came into the service, recommended that the carriers should use a little strap instead of a string in tying up the mail. That recommendation was adopted. He estimated that $[illegible] would be over the total annual expenditure for that purpose. For [illegible] the annual expenditure was $[illegible], and in all for these straps we have spent $172,987. That is not so very much of an increase when you come to consider the other estimates of the Department. It was estimated a few years ago by a Postmaster-General of the United States that the total cost of the rural free-delivery when it was instituted over all the territory that was entitled to the service would cost in gross less than $20,000,000 and net about fourteen millions.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What Postmaster-General was that?

Mr. COWHERD. Charles Emory Smith, in his report of 1900. We find we will next July have 24,500 carriers, and it has only extended over about one-third of the country, that was estimated as a proper part of the country for this service, and we know enough to know that instead of its costing thirteen or fourteen millions net it will likely cost nearer fifty millions by the time it is fully organized.

But let me go on with Machen. Machen bought the straps of a man by the name of Lamb, of New Haven, Conn. Lamb paid W. C. Long, a laborer in the supply department, $30,000 as commission on this sale of straps, and Long divided with Machen. Machen thought that these little straps were a good and profitable investment and concluded to carry the strap business a little further.

So, notwithstanding that the contractors who furnished the carriers' satchels were obligated under their contract to furnish the strap, they were notified that they needn't furnish the shoulder strap, and so in the first contract—the Boyle contract—Machen paid a lump sum of $8,199 to Lamb for the straps that Boyle ought to furnish in order that they might get the commission of $819. But then they discovered how they could go a little further.

When the next contract was let they had the contractor agree to furnish the strap, but they had him understand that they would sell the strap to him; and so they bought the straps from Lamb and got the commission, and then sold them to the contractor and had the contractor pay them for them, and in that way the Government lost $22,150 and Machen and Long got their usual commission from Lamb and collected $8,[illegible] from the contractor. Then they took another step forward, and when the next contract was let the contractor, Crawford, agreed to pay Lorenz, a friend of Machen, all the profit in the contract over 25 cents per satchel. Lorenz divided with Machen, Crawford paid Machen for the straps which the Government had bought from Lamb, and Lamb paid Long and Machen their usual commission. Mr. Bristow reports that the minimum amount of money stolen in this shoulder-strap swindle was $95,669.71.

We have had the story of the Groff fastener tried in court. That was purchased at Machen's suggestion. The contracts for letter boxes all provided that the contractor had to furnish two iron straps that went around the post and went through holes in the back of the box and were fastened with a nut to hold them onto the post. But the Groff fastener was a patented device. Mr. Machen concluded to institute it in the service.

Mr. Bristow reports that the old method was satisfactory; that in many large cities the postmasters really objected to the change, but since 1895, notwithstanding in every contract the contractor was required to furnish the strap according to the old method, Mr. Bristow reports that these Groff fasteners have cost the Government $128,021, and out of that sum Machen and Groff and Lorenz received $51,460; and if you will add to that the cost of putting them on the boxes, because the Government took down the boxes and put them back at its own expense, you will find that this device has cost the Government $200,000. That has to come out of this item.

For painting the letter boxes one man was given the contract at a sum which cost the Government $100,000 during the five years he had it, and he turned over $20,000 to the post-office employees as their portion of it and got double the price for doing the work that it cost the Government both before he got the contract and since. This shoulder-strap business had worked so well that they concluded to try it on the carriers' cases. This case is the little pocket-book arrangement that the carrier takes inside of his coat lapel. No contract was ever made for this at all. It was first introduced in the rural-delivery service by Machen, and he directed that a man named Maurice Runkle, of New York, furnish them.

Mr. Runkle was a dealer in clothing in Long Island City. He furnished to the Department 21,000 pouches, for which he paid the manufacturer $6,321, and the Department paid him $18,906. There is no proof to show that Runkle divided with Machen or anybody else in the service except his admission that he paid Machen $2,450 for some shares of mining stock that, in his own language, "was not worth a damn," and he might have added, to quote a high authority in this House, "was dear at that." [Laughter.]

Now, this pouch business worked so successfully in the rural-delivery service that Machen concluded to introduce it into the city free-delivery service. So a man in Baltimore named Smith had it suggested to him that if he would make a bid he could get this contract. Smith said he could furnish them at 50 or 60 cents, but he could not get the contract at that price. He raised his bid to 75 cents, and still he could not get the contract. It was then suggested to him that if he would make his bid 90 cents he might be able to get it. He promptly made his bid 90 cents, and immediately secured the contract.

These were purchased from Smith in bunches of 5,000 each, but the warrant was not paid to him. The warrant was issued down here in the Post-Office Department, and delivered to two employees of the Department, a warrant for $4,500 in each instance. These two employees would take the warrant over to Baltimore and go into Smith's store, when Smith would go out and get it cashed and bring the money back and would pay over to them $2,000 out of the $4,500, and they would give $1,000 of that money to Machen and take $500 each themselves. So that, Mr. Bristow reports, in this way the Government paid $11,450 more for the pouches than they were worth and this amount was divided between the contractor and the three employees in the free-delivery service.

It will be noticed that the letter boxes also come out of this item. We find in the first history of the letter-box contract that a man named Maybury had the contract. A Doctor Scheble, a dentist in Toledo, where Machen formerly resided, went to Maybury and induced Maybury to give him (Scheble) 25 per cent of the profits of his contract—a remarkable arrangement for a business man to make. Scheble claimed that he had some kind of a patent box which might become a competitor hereafter, and, although Maybury had the contract running for a number of years, he agreed to pay this Doctor Scheble the 25 per cent he demanded.

However, it was a very profitable arrangement for Maybury, because the year before the Government purchased only 2,740 of his boxes, at a cost of $3,189, while the year after the arrangement was made the Government purchased 16,400 of his boxes, at a cost of $32,526, and a net profit to him of over $20,000, one-quarter of which went to Scheble. The next contract was made in 1897 with Maybury and Ellis. By this time Scheble's share of the contract had grown to 50 per cent. The Government under that contract purchased 49,309 of these boxes, at a cost of $149,656, netting a profit to the contractor of $53,046, one-half of which, or $26,500, was divided between Scheble and Machen.

In 1901 the contract was let direct to Scheble, still a practicing dentist in the city of Toledo. Scheble employed the Adrian Brick and Tile Company to manufacture the boxes. They began furnishing them on the 1st of December, 1901, and within ten months had turned out to the Department 27,718 of these boxes, at a cost of $90,257. Mark you, gentlemen, how rapidly, as soon as some man in the Department begins to draw a commission on the letter-box contract, the need for the boxes grew, jumping from 2,750 per year to 27,718 for a period of eighteen months. Of course, there have been some remarkable growths in the postal service, but I suppose no one will contend that the legitimate growth has been that great.

The package boxes also came out of this item which I have been discussing. A lawyer named McGrehan had the package-box contract, and Machen sent Dr. Lorenz to him with the suggestion that he had a good idea. The Lorenz idea was that they be put on standard legs, and this contractor agreed to give Lorenz 75 cents on each box sold thereafter for his idea, while Machen allowed him $1.25 additional on the box. Immediately we find that the Government begins to need a very large number of these boxes, because they purchased 8,361 of them inside of a year, at the cost of $163,-000, and 29 per cent of them are stored away because no place can be found to use them. Just what this graft cost the Government is not shown, but it is reasonable to presume it was fairly profitable to everybody but the taxpayer.

The Montague indicator comes out of the same item. This was a little device fastened on the box, showing the hours of collections. It took the place of a little celluloid card that cost 10 cents, while the Montague indicator cost $5—far more than the box itself on which it was fastened was worth.

After this company was organized with a capital stock of $100,-000 they received, they say, a suggestion that they ought to distribute some of the stock where it would do the most good; so they gave away 3,000 shares of stock—1,000 to Machen, 2,000 to Beavers.

Machen had the control of the purchasing of those indicators. It is a little remarkable that Beavers, who had nothing to do with it, should have received twice as much stock as Machen. The explanation as given by the men who held the stock which was given away was that 1,000 shares of the stock given to Beavers was to go to the First Assistant Postmaster-General, Mr. Heath.

Shortly after this judicious distribution of stock 7,100 of these devices were purchased, at a cost of $30,075, and in April, 1902, an order was given for 10,000 more. Had they equipped the entire service with this device, Mr. Bristow reports, it would have cost the Government $400,000, netting a profit to the company of $160,000, which would have made that stock worth a little more than par for every dollar of stock issued.

The story of those 2,000 shares of stock that were given to Beavers is an interesting one, as told in the Bristow report. Beavers held the 2,000 shares in the name of Richardson, president of the company, for some time. Finally, when they came to pay a dividend on it, the check for the dividend was sent to Beavers, who acknowledged it in a letter of February 20, saying that he would hold to it in the name of Richardson for the present. Those shares had not been transferred to Beavers, mark you. And he said, further, that he had not seen Mr. Heath: "He is mighty hard to locate just now, being busy on national committee matters." Upon which he has been busy until the last few weeks.

In August, 1902, Beavers writes to Richardson, inclosing the certificates for stock, as follows:

DEAR RICHARDSON: Our friend in Salt Lake wants inclosed stock drawn in the name of Edwin D. Bacon. Kindly issue new certificates and have these destroyed. Forward same to me by registered mail.

Yours, truly, G. W. BEAVERS.

On the face of this certificate, thus returned, is indorsed:

Editor Salt Lake Tribune.

On the back of it is indorsed Mr. Heath's office and home address, in Salt Lake City.

The Edwin D. Bacon mentioned is an uncle, by marriage, of Mr. Heath. The certificate is finally returned to the company anonymously, in a blank envelope, after the investigation began; and that blank envelope is destroyed; so that we do not know from what place it was returned.

Of course no man can say that this testimony shows conclusively the complicity of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, because the testimony is largely the statements of Beavers, who is himself shown to be dishonest; that is, if the Bristow report is to be believed at all. Therefore we can not rely entirely upon his statements. But I submit that in view of this shameful story of graft that has gone on so openly and flagrantly in that Department under his management, with so many clues leading toward him, it seems to me the most extreme measures might well have been adopted to find out whether there had been any unlawful act on the part of that gentleman.

And I submit further that the report on the Tulloch charges, showing that numbers of people were employed on the direct order of Heath, with the distinct understanding that they were never to do a day's work, is conclusive proof that that gentleman was derelict in his duty to the public. In the cases of the postmasters, when they employed men unwarrantably they were sued and compelled to refund the money, and it seems to me the same course ought to have been followed by the Government in respect to the First Assistant Postmaster-General.

Now, gentlemen, that is the story of the expenditure under this item in the free delivery and the same story—I have read them together largely—of the expenditure in the rural free delivery, where a similar item is carried in the bill. The Department reported to us an estimate asking $300,000 on the item of free-delivery incidental expenses.

I want to say for Mr. Bristow, and in exoneration of him, that in making that estimate he stated to the committee that there was a deficiency in this item of $89,000 in the free-delivery service, as I remember, and a smaller amount in the like item in rural-delivery service; but the appropriation in the rural delivery service had been $150,000. The Department estimated that they needed $200,000 for the next year.

Your committee in reporting that last item to the House took occasion to cut it down to $150,000; and I ask you in the name of justice and of fairness, if all this story of "graft" as reported by Mr. Bristow be true, if all these unwarranted expenditures and all this maladministration of these two items along back for a series of years be true, ought we not to expect the Department, operating under business management, in a business and honest way, to run the service for less money?

Gentlemen, this is the shameless story of what is known as the "Bristow report" in connection with the items that it touches in this bill. I want you to remember this investigation covered but one of the four great divisions of the postal service, and touched only a part of another of the divisions of that service. As yet there has been no investigation of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General's office, there has been no investigation whatever of the Second Assistant Postmaster's department, and very little of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General's office.

Now, I appeal to you in the light of that story, of the shameless story of fraud, maladministration, and misappropriation, in the light of the fact that that great Department, with all that information before it, comes before your committee and in nearly every instance asks for the same or an increased sum in these items, I ask you are not the minority of this committee justified when they report to you that there ought to be an investigation of the postal service, not by a branch of that service, but a full, free, and impartial investigation made under the authority of this House, with authority to report not only the maladministration and misappropriation of money that might be found, but with authority to recommend reforms that ought to be instituted?

In my candid judgment an honest, efficient, and business administration of this great postal service will manage the affairs and conduct the business without a deficit.

In conclusion, let me say the blackest page of all this story is that which records the fact that the two men who called the attention of the Department to this shameful state of things have received as their only reward, one a dismissal from the service and the other a reduction in place and salary. Gentlemen, let us put this great service upon the high plane where it belongs. Let us drive out of it all those who would waste or steal the people's money, and make this service what it ought to be, the most useful and beneficent of all the Government's ministrations to the people's varied wants. To properly do that let us begin with a thorough and impartial investigation by a committee of Congress. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. PERKINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, several messages in writing from the President of the United States were communicated to the House of Representatives, by Mr. BARNES, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On March 1, 1904:

H. R. 11838. An act to authorize the Director of the Census to cooperate with the secretary of state of the State of Michigan and with officials of other States in taking the census of manufactures.

On March 2, 1904:

H. R. 8748. An act for the relief of Serenus Kilbourne.

On March 3, 1904:

H. R. 6345. An act for the relief of the State of Iowa.

On March 4, 1904:

H. R. 7620. An act defining the limit of navigation of the Osage River in the State of Missouri.

H. R. 8435. An act to amend the act of Congress of March 11, 1902, relating to homesteads; and

H. R. 10145. An act to provide for appeals, writs of error, and other appellate proceedings from the circuit and district courts of Beaumont, in the eastern district of Texas.

On March 5, 1904:

H. R. 11021. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Weems;

H. R. 2019. An act granting a pension to Mallie Gwynn;

H. R. 4045. An act granting a pension to Minnie Gusler;

H. R. 6352. An act granting a pension to Mary Huff;

H. R. 8227. An act granting a pension to Lucius E. Polk;

H. R. 865. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Chase;

H. R. 6069. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma L. Nagle;

H. R. 8850. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas Joyce; and

H. R. 13290. An act making an appropriation for clearing the Potomac River of ice.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield now to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, since I came down here I have been trying to understand the deficit in the Post-Office Department. This bill, Mr. Chairman, carries nearly $170,000,000, and of this amount the greater part is chargeable to systems added in the last sixty-five of the postal service's one hundred and fifteen years' existence.

Several of these systems have been added quite incidentally in the past to the service, and from mere experiments have risen to items of the first magnitude. This is particularly true of free city delivery and rural delivery, for which there will be expended in the next fiscal year an amount equaling the entire expenditures for the whole postal service in 1884.

There has come upon the service for seventy years past a public demand for extension of routes, expedition in mail, and reduction in postage rates, which for the greater portion of time has been a demand in advance of the financial capacity of the service, and with the exception of a few years, since 1851 the expenditures of the postal service have exceeded the receipts, creating an annually recurring deficit. Each extension of routes, measure of expedition, and reduction in postage has proved a revenue producer of sufficient power to balance receipts and expenditures, but with a very few exceptions the public demand has anticipated a surplus and added improvements in time to defeat that result.

There are no published tables of exact deficits, but there is one from the Auditor's office which shows in a comparative way the approximate deficits in the service since 1837.

This recurring deficit of varying amount is generally known, frequently condemned, seldom defended, and in latter days has been pointed out in several quarters as a result of the "socialistic tendencies" of this Government.

I desire to take up a study of the deficit, particularly as to its originating causes, which have remained on general lines the exciting causes to the present day.

The deficit is the result of American tendencies, not socialistic tendencies. The American tendency is to extend the benefits of the postal system uniformly to all the people; and this might be done within the revenues always but for the chief contributing cause in all deficits—the American determination to add the element of all possible speed to postal business.

There have been, in postal history, other contributing causes to the deficit—the encroachment of certain printed matter on the second-class privilege, the franking privilege, loose administration, the inability of the Government to curtail expenditures materially when hard times reduce revenues, and three reductions in postage rates; but the great source of the deficit is the facilitating of the mails, through extension partly, but chiefly through expedition.

The most comprehensive view of the postal deficit may be found, in my opinion, in its origin. It came through an expedition of the mails; and through expedition, through railway mail, free delivery, and, lastly, rural delivery, it has remained.

Between 1789 and 1828 the Department, slow-going and unprogressive, contributed $1,103,066 to the general revenues of the Government. In 1828 the Department began the expedition of the mails. Although attempts were made afterwards the Department never successfully escaped the new element then introduced, and the new and improved methods for the expedition of the mails, often innocently instituted as small experiments, have, while eventually producing revenues, kept in advance of the receipts.

William T. Barry, the father of the deficit, was a Member of Congress from Kentucky, 1810-11; a participant in the war of 1812, United States Senator, a judge, lieutenant-governor, State secretary, and chief justice of Kentucky, and in 1828 was made Postmaster-General under Jackson, and invited as such to a seat in the Cabinet, the first Postmaster-General to enjoy that honor.

John McLean, the preceding Postmaster-General, had in 1827 in his annual report pointed to a surplus of $100,000 revenues over expenditures with pride, and had predicted that "a vigilant administration, for a few years to come, will place at the disposition of the Government an annual surplus of more than $500,000." And this surplus, he thought, should be applied to the establishment and repair of mail roads. But one year thereafter we find McLean not with a surplus, but with a deficiency of $25,000, covered, however, by surplus outstanding sums due the Department of $370,033.37. This temporary deficiency was brought about through the circumstance that Congress declined to make any disposition of McLean's former $100,000 surplus, designating that the surplus should be used for extending mail facilities throughout the country.

Before McLean had satisfied all the importunate sections which desired new routes, McLean had added to the mail service annually 537,264 miles in stages, 261,704 miles on horseback; in explanation of which McLean said:

> It is believed to be good policy to keep the funds of the Department actively employed in extending its operations until the reasonable wants of every community shall be supplied. By withdrawing mail accommodations from all unproductive routes and substituting a horse for stage transportation on many others, a very large surplus of funds would annually accumulate; but the public convenience would be greatly lessened and the means of information withheld from districts of country but sparsely inhabited. * * * To connect important places by frequent lines of intercourse, combine speed with all the security possible, and extend the mail wherever it may be wanted constitute the objects which have influenced the policy of the Department.

In 1829 came in the amiable and pathetic figure of William T. Barry. Afterwards Barry, in his address "to the people of the United States," said that he found that his predecessor—

> Had entered into contracts to take effect from January 1, 1829, which involved the Department in an expense, for the period of only six months from January 1, 1829, to July 1 of the same year, of $49,775.55, more than all its revenues for the same time.

So Barry found himself speedily overwhelmed. The growth of the country, the importunity of sections for new routes, the extension of the franking privilege by Congress to members from a privilege during sessions to a privilege the whole year round, the Department in those days paying postmasters 2 cents for the delivery of every free letter, the expedition in mail, and extension of routes during Barry's administration jumped a total annual transportation mileage of 13,700,000 in 1829 to 23,854,485 in 1833—nearly doubled it. In 1834 Barry in his report showed a deficit, the first in the history of the Department. This was a balance of debt against the Department beyond the amount of its available funds on January 1, 1834, of $515,599.98. Barry, to meet this lack of funds, had borrowed from time to time from banks, in loans and overchecks.

The storm broke. Barry was investigated by both Houses of Congress. On the night of February 24, 1835, in the House an angry debate followed the remark of Representative Beardsley that the Postmaster-General had been "liberal to a fault, I might say almost beyond a fault." Explanations for his latent meaning were demanded by Barry's friends. During this William Cost Johnson, of Maryland, savagely attacked the whole Post-Office Department. A few days later Lieutenant Barry, son of the Postmaster-General, challenged Johnson to a duel, which, Johnson accepting with spirit for the same day, fell through, if contemporary reports are correct.

Both committees of Congress made lengthy reports upon Barry's administrations, showing upon the whole a loose management. In Congress a spirited debate occurred over the proposition of circulating generally these reports for the enlightenment of the public. A copy of the printed report exists in the Library of Congress with uncut leaves.

Barry had sinned chiefly on the side of expedition. The notable case of the time was the mail between Philadelphia and Pittsburg.

Reside and Slaymaker had a contract to transport the mail between Philadelphia and Pittsburg daily in four-horse post coaches; to run two lines a day, one to go through in a few hours more than two days, the other in three and a half days. The first was a "fast mail." This service began January 1, 1832. The fast coach carried the letter mail; the slow coach carried the newspapers. A few people in Pittsburg and west of Pittsburg received envelopes containing copies of newspapers, then small, on the fast mail.

This aroused the regular subscribers, and they demanding their newspapers as early, the contractors, by the pressure of public opinion, were forced to give in, to carry the newspaper mail in the fast coach, and from this coach, three times a week, passengers were excluded, at a loss of $100 a day. The contractors said the whole transaction was costing them $15,000 a year, and proposed that they would bear $5,000 of this sum themselves. Barry allowed them the $10,000. The investigating committee called this, indignantly, "a gift."

Some manipulation of contracts by Barry's subordinates was unearthed by the investigation. After a contract, $4,500 a year for carrying the mail between Chicago and Green Bay, weekly, to Colonel Savery, had been granted, Colonel Savery assigned his contract to a Doctor Temple, who had been a clerk in the Department. This outraged the Senate committee, which found confirmation of its suspicion in the fact that—

> Temple's contract sum, $4,500, equals the net proceeds of the postages received in the whole Territory of Michigan.

But Barry's chief fault was in expediting the mails, and he notes with contempt that one of his Congressional accusers had been a prominent petitioner for an improved route.

Barry got out of the Department by Jackson appointing him minister to Spain, and he died in Liverpool on his way to the new post. Before he went he wrote several defenses. One he closed as follows:

> My official acts belong to my country, and whether their tendency has been the promotion of the public good I must rely for answer to the decisions of my fellow-citizens. I make my protestation to posterity, but my errors, where ever they may have been, have not resulted from corruption. Our national mail system extends from the frozen regions of Lake Superior to the plains of perpetual foliage in the South, from the Atlantic Ocean on the east to the Rocky Mountains on the west.
>
> Causing intelligent and rational preferences in transportation, safety and speedy intercourse. Every improvement which tends to shorten the time of epistolary correspondence and to expedite and facilitate the transaction of business from one part of the country to another is free bringing the distant parts together, and deserves to compare favorably with any other consideration of interest or safety. This end I have kept constantly in view. Whether I have been in any degree successful the public will judge.

Barry was to have a vindication within a very few years. Under an act of Congress his successor reorganized the Department and began a rigorous and unpopular retrenchment. The first railroad had been built, and with the querulous complaint of the Department that it ought to control the time of the arrival and departure of trains, as it had the coaches, the thrust and parry over the rate for the transportation of mail began.

At one time Congress offered the roads the carriage of mail at a rate not exceeding 25 per cent of the cost by coach. The Department, under the pressure of reform, did not materially grow, and in 1845, with the first reduction in postage rates, the revenue of the Department began to diminish, being less in 1846 and 1847 than it was in 1845. It was during this period that the first suggestion for making newspapers pay postage by weight was made "to prevent editors from mailing their papers while wet."

The whole system was so little responsive to popular demand that the postal system, for the only time in its history, lost the full support of the people. Between the principal cities, connected by railroads, the pockets of travelers were crammed with letters and the principal hotels in Boston, New York, and other cities were reported to have become serious rivals of the local post-offices. The rivalry between the express company and the Government in the carrying of mails extended over many years. By reason of the decrease in revenue the deficit reappeared in 1845, 1847, and 1848. In this period of retrenchment Congress, in 1845, passed an act materially lessening the compensation of postmasters.

Within one year one-third of the postmasters in the country resigned. And during this period one Postmaster-General, C. A. Wickliffe, in 1842, while straining to bring economy about, put into the system a small improvement which now costs the postal service $22,000,000 annually. This was a "dispatch post" for the city of New York, with eight postmen—the germ which grew into a system in 1862 and has since developed into our city free delivery.

In 1851 came another reduction in postage and the adhesive 3-cent and 1-cent postage stamps became familiar. The then Postmaster-General anticipated a deficit, but limited it to a few years. It did not, however, disappear until 1882, thirty-one years later.

In 1862 the city-delivery system grew into the city free-delivery system. The extra cent the carrier had before collected for every letter delivered or collected was lopped off "to save time," a measure of expedition, the cost of which the Government bore.

In 1864 the money-order system, which had been first proposed nearly forty years before, was instituted. In 1882 the service produced a surplus. A reduction of the postage rate to 2 cents followed. The deficit reappeared. In the early nineties of the last century rural free delivery appeared; first, it seems, as a proposal to extend free delivery to small towns. The proposal appeared in the midst of a universal agitation for 1-cent postage. From a mere experiment, rural free delivery grew rapidly into the wonderful system we see to-day, and 1-cent postage is not now a current topic.

Only once since 1828 has the postal service failed to respond to the genius of this great and progressive people—in the period just preceding 1850. During that period it evoked, by its lack of progress, serious and hurtful rivalry and failed to assume the telegraph which was then offered it, which it had once, in fact, and which it could have retained by paying for the patent.

Otherwise the system has always responded to public demand, and it stands to-day the greatest single business in the world, its transactions aggregating a billion dollars a year. [Loud applause.]

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. VAN DUZER].

Mr. VAN DUZER. Mr. Chairman, the subject to which I propose to address myself at this particular time I believe is or more or less interest to every Member of this House, whether he come from the Pine Tree State of Maine or from California. I wish to discuss one of the greatest industries known to mankind, the mining industry, and the protection which it asks and ought to receive under a proper economical, honest, and forceful administration of the Post-Office Department.

It is a notorious fact that in recent years there has been conducted under the shadow, and you might say protection, of the Post-Office Department, by the use and the abuse of the mails, some of the most gigantic swindles that have ever been perpetrated upon the people of this country. This is a question to which I have given some seven months of careful investigation, particularly in the city of New York, the city of Philadelphia, in Boston, and in Pittsburg.

The information which I have in my possession I desire to place before the House of Representatives and to appeal to the Members of this House. I care not from what State they come, to give this matter consideration, because as far as the people of the Eastern States are concerned I venture the assertion that there is not a single Representative upon the floor of this House from this side of the Mississippi who has not had at one time or another constituents who have been swindled by the fraudulent use of the mails, and as far as the gentlemen are concerned who come from the West, from the Pacific States, Washington, California, Nevada, Utah, Colorado, and the Territories, I say that it is a matter of vital importance to them, because the great mining industry of this country has been brought into disrepute by a lot of irresponsible thieving promoters who inhabit that historic spot known as "Hell's Half Acre" in New York City, close by the intersecting points on Wall, Broad, Nassau, and William streets. I mean no offense when I speak in these terms, but particularly are the Members of Congress from New York City interested in this question.

There have been periods in this country spoken of as the age of patriotism. There have been periods in this country spoken of as the age of commerce and the age of liberty; but I venture the assertion that at no time in the history of this country has there been a series of years from 1890 to 1900 which will so much deserve from future historians the appellation of the age of graft as has been the past ten years, graft not only in the departments of the Government, but in every line of business throughout the country.

That to which I particularly desire to call the attention of the House is a condition of affairs that relates to the mining industry. There is taken from eastern investors who are innocent men, who have neither the time nor the opportunity nor the money to investigate mining propositions in the West, annually, millions upon millions of dollars. I spent four months in the city of New York this summer, and have investigated every mining proposition which has an office in that city, in Pittsburg, and in Boston. I want to say to the gentlemen of this House, though they may not realize the condition of affairs, that there is more money annually taken from the people of this country by bald misrepresentation regarding mining affairs than is extracted and filched from the pockets of the people in any other known business in America to-day.

I shall call attention to some cases which came under my observation, and I propose at the proper time to offer an amendment to the postal bill which will have the effect of directing the attention of the Postal Department to these gross frauds being perpetrated on the American people.

When we of the West come to the Eastern States and say anything about a mining proposition, the eastern man with money buttons up his coat, puts his hand in his pocket, and holds on to his pocketbook. He looks upon the western man who has a mining enterprise or a mining scheme as a sort of natural-born rascal; but I want to say that the men who are engaged in the legitimate mining industry in the West compare favorably in honesty, in integrity of purpose, and in their knowledge of their business with the most prominent citizens that are to be found in the East engaged in manufacturing business, in the steel business, or in any of the various lines of trade and occupation, and that if the mining industry has received a black eye, if mining is looked upon as an industry fraught with rascality, it is because the people in the East are the people who shelter, shadow, protect, and conceive the villainy which has resulted in the extraction of millions of dollars from the people of the East in investment in illegitimate mining securities.

I will venture the assertion that there is not a Member of the House on this floor who has not had constituents who have suffered. A man comes along who has no genteel occupation. He has nothing to do. He has a few dollars, and he will go down to Wall street, which seems to be that particular spot in America where every man who wants to get up a grafting scheme locates. He will get as close to J. Pierpont Morgan's office as possible, and then will advertise that he is in the same block with Mr. Morgan. He will get a little bit of a room, hire a prepossessing and good-looking stenographer, advertise in the daily papers that he has a mining proposition and that inside of three or four months dividends will be paid.

The result is that all through the East—in Pennsylvania, in Ohio, in Maine, in Massachusetts—through the Southern States, through the Mississippi Valley States, widows and orphans and men with small bank accounts, who know under existing conditions it will never be possible for them to amass any fortune—such men as constitute the great bulk of the American people, who are always ready to accumulate a lot of money by expending a small sum with the hope of getting quick returns—have sent to these promoting offices in New York City and Pittsburg and Boston and invested their hard-earned savings in mining propositions. The promoter of a mining proposition is a man who has a mine which he creates and runs by a printing press. All he has got to do is to get a few dollars, get up a book of stock, and then send out his literature.

I will tell you how they do it in New York City. They do not care whether there is any mine on the so-called "mining property." They would just as willingly promote a cabbage patch as they would a mining proposition. They get a few acres of land—if possible, 10 or 12 miles from a great mine whose vein trends toward the property which they own, or they say it does. They promise the credulous public that a great mine is to be developed by sinking their shafts in a region of country somewhat adjacent to this rich and well-known mine. They advertise in the paper that they just want $10,000. They would like to have 100 ambitious Americans who would like to become mine owners, who would like to break loose from their chains of poverty and become great business men. They promise that an investment of $100 will in six months return four thousand, five thousand, six thousand dollars. Circulars containing such statements are what they send through the mails. They say that their stock is going to advance to an almost fabulous sum.

This fall I went into an office in New York City where some man was trying to perpetrate that kind of a proposition upon the State of Nevada. I knew the location where his mine purported to be, where by the expenditure of a vast amount of money there never could be taken from it a dollar's worth of ore. Yet that man spent $5,000 in advertising. He took in $30,000 or $40,000 from people in Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, Pennsylvania, Delaware, New Jersey—from men who invested their money in good faith. By means of fraudulent circulars, which go through the mails; by the publication of fictitious and deceptive letters, which go through the mails; by means of forged telegrams, and all that sort of thing, this man was enabled to raise $30,000 or $40,000.

I went into his office one day and I said, "My friend, where is your property?" "Oh," said he, "the property is away out in Nevada; it is close by a great mining camp." "Well," said I, "you seem to have a mighty good property; where is it?" "Well," said he, "it is a great mine." "Have you been there?" "No." "Have there been any assays?" "No." "Have you struck any veins of gold-bearing or silver-bearing ore?" "No; but we are going to." "My friend," said I, "don't you know that the ground on which you are claiming to have a valuable mine is absolutely worthless?" "Well," said he, "I don't know. I bought it from So-and-so in New York City." "Do you know the reputation of that man?" "Well, I admit that anything I may buy from that individual does not carry with it a guaranty of being a very valuable proposition."

When I returned to my home in Nevada I undertook to find that property on which this valuable mine was claimed to exist. I could not see the property with a telescope, it was so far from the center of the mining district; and a man would have to dig a thousand feet into the sand to get a solid foundation for anything.

I want it distinctly understood that the legitimate mining men of the West condemn such methods. I want to state right here that I come not only from one of the greatest mining camps in the world—Tonopah—but also from the greatest mining State in the Union—Nevada. In the name of Tonopah and in the name of Nevada, I enter a protest against dishonest mining, and make the statement right here that Nevada is comparatively free from mining swindles, and that we do not propose to allow irresponsible promoters to trade on our honor or our riches. [Applause.]

Beaumont, Cripple Creek, Sumpter, Thunder Mountain, and Alaska, have furnished food for many a dishonest promoter. Of all modern mining camps Tonopah has been freest from this sort of wildcat speculation. The money has gone into the ground in legitimate investment in Tonopah.

I am not here for the purpose of making a partisan speech——

Mr. LACEY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I heard it said out there in Nevada that the true definition of a gold mine was—a gold mine is a hole in the ground, the owner of which is a liar. Is that correct? [Great laughter.]

Mr. VAN DUZER. I will come to that point in a moment. That is the usual eastern acceptation of the term "gold mine." But that reputation has accrued from the operations of eastern promoters, not from the operation of western mine owners. [Applause.]

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. We don't want you to come to the point; we want you to get to the hole.

Mr. VAN DUZER. I assure the gentleman that the hole will be silver plated and gold lined. [Applause.]

Owing to lack of uniformity in laws, it has been almost impossible to secure adequate protection against the operations of fraudulent mining companies and mining promoters. The Post-Office Department is the only proper channel through which relief can at present be secured. The entire proposition resolves itself down to the obtaining of money illegally by the fraudulent use of the mails.

The mining industry, which is one of the cleanest industries in the world, has received a great deal of discredit in the East owing to the manipulations of promoters in the East. There are a large number of people in this country constantly seeking to make money quickly upon a small investment. Mining offers this opportunity.

The result is that a large number of disreputable brokers and sharpers—confidence men who can not thrive upon honest methods, who know nothing of mining, who have never been West—open up offices in eastern cities for the sole purpose of obtaining money with no intention of placing it, using it for legitimate western development. Their favorite roosting place is Wall street, New York, where a small office is rented, and, with a few dollars for advertising and printing, they send out misleading literature, containing bold misrepresentations, holding out promises of dividends in the near future. People throughout the East who have only a few hundred dollars and who can not afford the time or money to make a thorough investigation, send in their money to the promoter. The promoter has a number of unique schemes to evade the law. He hires first a good lawyer to keep him out of jail. He turns in 40 per cent of his receipts as commission for acting as fiscal agent, 25 per cent goes to office expense and furniture, 10 per cent goes to a reserve fund, and the balance is taken up as personal stock sales.

The man who invests his money with this class of promoters never has a hope for its return. They spend a few dollars in getting a deed to sagebrush ground. In order to delude the public they pay dividends from stock sales. The money from one man is taken to pay another a dividend, an absolutely criminal transaction. Nowhere in the world is congregated a greater aggregation of mining fakirs, mining promoters, crooks, sharks and confidence men as are to be found within the shadow of Wall street, New York, and in Chicago.

With all due respect to my colleagues from West Virginia—and I do not mean to intimate that a West Virginian is an easy game, but I went into a certain mining office and represented myself as from West Virginia, and being a farmer, and that I wanted to buy some mining stock. I wanted to know something about a proposition from the State of Nevada. I said I did not know much about mining; and the broker commenced to get excited, and he told me the most alluring tales about the sudden acquisition of wealth by mining that I ever heard in my life. He told me about the discovery of fabulous gold deposits there, and how men were making fortunes.

I asked him questions. He knew nothing of Nevada, nothing concerning mining. He told enough lies to land him in the penitentiary if I had given him money on his representations.

I maintained that I was a humble farmer from the great State of West Virginia. Of course, I was perfectly familiar with the ore area. I was in New York for the purpose of ferreting out the illegitimate schemes, and I asked him how much was "this piece of property worth?" pointing to a well-known property on the map. "Why," he says, "you can not buy the stock in that. All the stock in that company has been taken up in the market at $80 a share, and about six months ago it was only 10 cents; but if you buy this claim I have here you will become immensely rich. This mine was discovered by a jackass," said he. I resented such a slander. I commenced to reach down for the money in my pocket, and he began to reach for it, and I backed out and asked him some more questions. [Laughter.]

"What do you mean by this jackass mine?" We all know what the jackass is. There is a very kind and quiet little animal, the burro, which is a little bigger than a jack rabbit and a little smaller than a mule, and we called him the hermit of the desert. He said: "There is a man out there who went out prospecting down in that great alkali plain, and when night came on the jackass and the man laid down and went to sleep. The man had been thirsty and drank up all his whisky, and he got up and kicked the burro. The burro began to get up." Then he got his mind somewhat confused between the sheep and the jackass, and he said the wool of the jackass was full of particles of gold. [Laughter.] He said that the jackass had been sleeping on a great gold mine, and they took $100,000,000 out of that gold mine. [Laughter.] Growing confidential, he said prominent Nevadans proposed to reproduce the jackass.

Then he says to me that these people had appointed a committee to send it to the St. Louis world's fair exposition as an example of the production of gold in Nevada; that they had hired a sculptor to cast the jackass in gold, and they were going to take him to St. Louis for exposition. [Great laughter.] Gentlemen, I state to you the actual conversation that took place between that mine promoter in New York City and myself. [Great laughter.] I want to say to you in that connection, by my own positive knowledge, they took in from over a hundred men $100 apiece.

As I understand, he had two desert claims that were not worth paying assessment on, and they had taken from a hundred men and several widows $10,000, at $100 each, to bring out that company. I am trying to drive out such men from such practices. Now, gentlemen, that is the condition of affairs that exists in reference to the mining industry.

A great industry, discredited by men who are dishonest, who mine only the public pockets; an industry, which supports the great Western empire, and this industry, which ought to support a department with a Cabinet officer, is thus discredited by the use of the United States mails. The Post-Office Department is unwittingly the confederate of the mine promoter.

My object in calling attention to this condition of affairs is that I may inform you with reference to the mining industry of the West and the imputation of dishonesty in the mining and the rascality in mining which does not come from western men. I want to say that it is the flock of human buzzards who have taken their financial skill and training from the men who have organized the steel trust, from the men who have organized the shipbuilding trust. [Applause.] There is where they learned it; not from the miners in the West.

Mining is the greatest industry the world has ever known. For ages men have sought the precious metals. And yet the golden dollars and the silver money is the cleanest and purest wealth in the world. Its creation makes no man poorer. It robs not the orphan nor cramps the widow. Its glistening glory is not dimmed by tears, nor sullied with blood, nor stained with dishonor. It is taken from the earth, not from the pockets of your associates. [Applause.]

More men are engaged in it than in any other industry. It is the dominant industry in the West. It has built our cities, covered our bays with the white-winged fleets of commerce, builded colleges, enflowed charities. We who mine in the West do it honestly, and we register against the discredit brought on it by the promoter of the East a vigorous protest. In legitimate mining enterprises there is no surer means of reward nor in any industry greater opportunity for the rapid accumulation of wealth. [Applause.]

I am not here for the purpose of attacking all frauds on the Post-Office Department, but I am here for the purpose of calling the attention of Members of Congress and post-office officials to a fraud which is being perpetrated daily and weekly and monthly under the protection of the Government of the United States, where men circulate through the mails matters, lists, advertisements, fake mushroom newspapers with accounts of gold mines out in the West. I have estimated that in the past five years something like $18,000,000 has been invested in mining propositions presumably from the West that has gone into the pockets of promoters in the East. Now, let me tell you how the promoter works in New York City. He opens up his office, gets out advertisements——

Mr. HOGG. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN DUZER. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. HOGG. I am interested in the mining question myself. Are you not fearful you may encounter some criticism from the Department in taking an undue activity in this sort of matter? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. VAN DUZER. No; I do not anticipate nor do I fear it. I wish to say that for every thousand dollars that the mining promoter in the East takes in he takes 40 per cent of that to himself for acting as fiscal agent. He spends 10 per cent for advertising, 20 per cent goes to office expenses. That leaves about 30 per cent. Twenty per cent of the money he takes to himself as salary.

I want to say of the $18,000,000 that has been taken up in the East for mining not 10 per cent of it has ever gone in a legitimate investment in the West, and yet I want to say, gentlemen, that under an honest administration of mining, with a legitimate expenditure of a few hundred thousand dollars, great fortunes could have been made. I am speaking here not only for my constituents in the West and the Pacific coast, but I am speaking for people who have a desire to invest their money in the West, and I want to see every dollar of money that is raised in the East go into legitimate mining propositions.

Now, I want to refer to just one other example in this connection where I know of a man who was driven out of every kind of legitimate business, who walked from Fulton street, New York, with a Federal indictment hanging over his head, went down to Wall street and hired an office, raised a thousand dollars and paid one month's rent, got half a dozen stenographers, and raised some money and used $5,000 worth of advertisements. He goes down in New York City and hires two ten-dollar clerks. He dared not open up that business under his own name. He dared not use his own name, because not only had he been indicted by a Federal grand jury, but he had an indictment hanging over his head.

He opened up this business—and I have the statistics on that; I have hunted them up. That firm in New York City in three years has taken in $2,000,000. I know of seven mining propositions they have floated, and I know that the combined seven mining propositions are not worth $20,000. Yet, how do they hold 27,000 clients with over seventy branch offices in the United States? I will tell you how they do it. They take in for three months a lot of money, and then declare a dividend from the money taken in.

We all know that is criminal; that no business can exist in which 60 per cent of the money taken in is paid out for office expenses, and we know that under the State statutes and Federal laws it is illegal to pay a dividend from money taken from stockholders, and yet of the $2,000,000 which they have received and of the vast amount of dividends which they have paid I know that not one dollar was legitimately taken from the ground.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN DUZER. With pleasure.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman if he does not think it is better for these mining fakirs to mine the people of the East for suckers than for the honest miner to mine for gold and silver in the West?

Mr. VAN DUZER. Well, under the present condition of monetary legislation in reference to silver, I think the man in the East has the advantage of the situation. [Laughter and applause.]

I simply want to call the attention of the House to this condition of affairs; and in the very few remaining minutes I have left to me I want to refer to another matter, with the indulgence of the House, if they will give me the courtesy and kindness to listen to what I have to say in defense of the State from which I come. There has been a great deal said about illegitimate and dishonest mining enterprises, but I want to state that while I have been condemning severely men who have been making statements which I know to be false, I hope that the statements which I make regarding the mining conditions in the State of Nevada will be accepted in the spirit of accuracy with which I shall clothe my statements.

It is to the interest of mining men in the West to remove the unjust accusations made against that industry. We stand for a legitimate industry, and we propose that every dollar raised in the East go into the ground in legitimate industry. If you believe that there is no basis for our contention, I simply want to call your attention to a few facts about my own State as regards her mining greatness.

The State of Nevada is the greatest mining State in the Union. [Applause.] In extent and richness of deposits she has no equal. In totality of production of the precious metals she has no peer. Every township is mineralized. From the snow-crested mountains of Elko County to the changing Colorado River is an unbroken series of mineralized ranges, containing a variety of minerals found nowhere else in the world. Some mining States are famous for high-grade ores, some are famous for their large deposits, some are celebrated for variety of mineral products, and still others for their very deep mining. Nevada possesses all the advantages and none of the disadvantages of mining. She has high-grade ores, large deposits of ore, infinite variety of minerals, and for precious metals holds the record for production, and has the deepest mining in the world.

Nature with sparing generosity has usually hidden the precious metals either near the summits of inaccessible mountains or far inland on burning deserts. She has deposited her gold under the snows of Alaska, where it is hunted in the light of the aurora. [Applause.] She has hidden it in the unknown, unwatered deserts of Australia, where privation, hardship, and death have often been the reward of the argonaut in search of wealth. The inaccessible Andes of South America and the dangerous sands of Mexico are the repositories of lead, gold, and silver treasures. Nowhere in the world is the search for precious metals accompanied by as little danger as in Nevada. Close to the lines of transcontinental railroads, within reach of fuel, and with a comparatively ample water supply, mining in Nevada can be carried on amid the comforts of modern civilized life.

Nevada is the most richly mineralized zone in the world. The mineral zones of Montana are confined to her western boundaries; in Colorado, to the Rocky Mountain range; in Utah, to the central and western mountain ranges, while in Nevada her mineralization is complete. Every township has been touched by the wand of mineral wealth. Every mountain range has her hidden treasure, every valley her placer deposit, and every stream her golden nuggets. [Applause.] Every county in Nevada has produced precious metals in more or less abundance. Her total output in forty years has exceeded that of any other State in the Union. Even California, which has the reputation of being the Golden State, yields the palm to Nevada.

Nevada has produced more gold, silver, copper, and lead in the aggregate than California has in gold. Nevada has produced more than Alaska. Nevada has produced more mineral wealth than Australia—more than Colorado and Montana combined. And yet the fascinated interest of mankind has been largely centered in the stories of Dawson, Nome, Cripple Creek, and Butte City. The present generation has almost forgotten the richly interesting days of the Comstock, so full of that which was dramatic and pathetic, when dazzling wealth to-day took on the rags of poverty to-morrow and when the scorned pauper of to-day was the courted millionaire of to-morrow, and along on the wings of discovery the golden crowned Tonopah and sensational Goldfields are being smiled upon by the Goddess of Fortune as new Eldorados great and rich as the old Comstock. [Applause.] Tonopah is three years old, yet the name Tonopah is almost world-wide. Only last fall a miner 29 miles south of Tonopah discovered a new district, which has been called Goldfields, which promises to be another Cripple Creek, greater in extent and equal in richness.

She has produced more than Montana, Utah, Idaho, Oregon, and Washington combined. Think of the vastness of the wealth and what these figures really mean. Various estimates have been made as to Nevada's actual production of the money and commercial metals, but a maximum aggregate places it at about $1,544,000,000. And these figures I have actually compiled after a great deal of work, research, and expense.

We often hear about desert mines not going down. This statement has often been unwittingly made about Nevada. The trouble is that with the exception of the Calumet and Hecla copper mines, the salt mines of Germany, and the gold mines of South Africa, Nevada has the deepest mining in the world, and it is the deepest mining for our money metals. Depth and permanency are characteristic of Nevada mining.

Nevada has scores of camps where deep mining has successfully been conducted. The most notable example is the famous Comstock, where a depth of 3,200 feet has been reached, and yet large ore bodies still exist, and now that capital, energy, and science have combined, mammoth machinery is pumping out the water and there is no estimate as to the possible depth of these ore bodies. The camps of Eureka and Austin each attained a depth of 1,800 feet, while Pioche and Candelaria have a depth of 1,200. Dozens of camps have reached 1,000 feet in depth. The ledges are strong, carry high average values, are largely free milling. As compared with other camps, Butte has a depth of 2,600, Leadville 2,200, and Cripple Creek 2,000. Nevada has more mining camps with depths ranging over 1,000 feet than all the other States of the West.

Another feature of peculiar significance is the fact that Nevada is distinctly a high-grade State. Alaska quartz mining is famous for low-grade ores. So is the Black Hills. Many of our great producers are low-grade camps and properties. One carload of ore from Treasure Hill, Nevada, yielded $60,000. One carload of ore from Humboldt produced $200,000. One mine—the Consolidated Virginia—produced $79,000,000 in dividends. The ores of Eureka, Tuscarora, and Candelaria, and Belmont, and Pioche were fabulously rich. Such is the case with Wedekind and the Tonopah mines

The State is one of record camps. It is true Alaska has had her Nome and Dawson, Montana has had her Butte, the Dakotas their Deadwood, Colorado her Cripple Creek and Leadville, and Utah her Park City, but Nevada has had her Treasure Hill, her Pioche, her Austin, her Tuscarora, her Candelaria, her Eureka, her Comstock, and her Tonopah. All of them wonderful camps, all of them famous camps, and great producers. It has been estimated that Virginia produced $644,000,000: Eureka, $200,000,000; Austin, $150,000,000; Pioche, $80,000,000; Candelaria, $60,000,000; Tuscarora, $40,000,000; De Lamar and Hamilton, each, $30,000,000.

It must be remembered that we are dealing in figures with potential meaning. The four men who rule the world are Carnegie with his $600,000,000, not actual but fictitious wealth; Rockefeller with $200,000,000; Morgan with $150,000,000; the Vanderbilts with $80,000,000, and yet four mining camps in Nevada have done more for civilization than these great money powers with their actual production of wealth greater than the fortunes of America's millionaires. [Applause.]

And yet with this magnificent story of production and achievement, the story of her mineral wealth is scarcely told.

Nevada possesses unique mining conditions. There are few States concerning which so much that is unjust has been said and concerning whose resources so little, that is true, is known. Nevada has generally been supposed to be an exhausted mining State. Her mineral wealth is supposed to be in minted dollars. The impression erroneously exists that mining is in its decadence in the State.

It is true that there was a long period of depression. Nevada received her setback about the time silver began to decline. There was a great rush in Nevada from 1860 to 1880. There was twenty years of unparalleled prosperity. There were thousands of men employed at high wages. Within twenty years Austin, Eureka, Pioche, Tuscarora, Virginia City, and Candelaria turned out almost a billion dollars in gold and silver. The interest was intense in these camps. There was only one line of railroad in the State. There was little prospecting done outside of the camps. Men rushed in to make fortunes.

It was simply the looting apparently of her minerals, and the vandals with their wealth rushed to other climes, spent their riches in building other cities, beautifying other valleys. Not 5 per cent of the vast wealth taken from her borders was invested there. The entire world has been more or less profited by Nevada's mineral output.

Men in the mad rush did not stop to experiment in Nevada's valleys. They did not appreciate her climate; they did not study her agricultural resources nor the advantages of her stock ranges. They came in by night and spent their days in massing wealth and fled again in the night, and there is no living monument today to show appreciation or gratitude of the men who profited by Nevada's wealth. No monuments raised, no institutions endowed, no buildings erected, no industrial enterprises set on foot. [Loud and continued applause.]

In 1880 silver started to decline, and gradually the effect of demonetization drove the price of the white metal down to ruinous figures. Many mine owners closed valuable properties to await the long-deferred hope of favorable legislation. Other properties had to close because they could not operate at a profit. A generation of silver miners and prospectors had been educated to one line of mining—silver mining. Along with the decline of silver came excitement in Colorado, Montana, and in Australia. Mining men left Nevada. Nevada's mines never were exhausted.

The millionaires who left Nevada to squander their millions in ease and luxury never had a good word for the State. They would never reinvest their money nor offer inducements for capital to come. Nevada was debauched and left with a nameless reputation. The result was necessarily a decline in population, which has excited the merriment of some statesmen and served as the jest of other statesmen whose geographical vision and intellectual strength has been circumscribed by their own narrow environment.

The impression went out that Nevada was an exhausted mining State. Capital would not invest, and we were too poor to do else than to perform assessment work and keep hold onto fortunes in mines with a faith that was sublime and in many cases pathetic. The men in the prime of life who had faith in the State have lived there for a quarter of a century, watching a dwindling population, looking at crumbling and silent mines and rusty machinery. Nowhere in the history of America is there such a pathetic picture of the ruin following a selfish and legislative cause as followed the demonetization of silver. [Applause.]

And yet you laughed at Nevada's degradation. She bore it in loyal silence. A similar ruin of an industry in Pennsylvania would have been followed by revolution and riot.

Silver is not dead, and as a Representative from a State whose constituents are brave and courageous miners, I proudly hold its banner aloft, feeling that the future holds in store for the white metal legislative recognition and commerial greatness.

Men lived in their cabins on their claims, worked at various trades to get money to hold their claims, and hundreds of brave and courageous Nevadans, examples of Anglo-Saxon determination, have crossed the great divide, dying in the hope that their children might profit by their lifetime's work. In no State was there ever a more devoted band of pioneers struggling for a cause with a higher faith in the greatness of a State than the men who have for forty years waited for the regeneration of Nevada and her recognition by a generous East. [Loud applause.]

For twenty years life was a struggle with adversity. Yet this population of 40,000 lived in a great, large State, constantly misrepresented, constantly slandered; and yet they have been conscious that on all sides were tremendous possibilities for industrial development and resources in variety and extent nowhere else in the world equaled. [Applause.]

The only transcontinental line of railroad we had used the State as a bridge and kept passenger and freight rates at an almost prohibitive figure. Everything that could conspire to crush the energy and destroy the hope of a brave people was directed at Nevada, and yet all this time in the lower levels of her once great mines there still existed vast bodies of ore, rich and magnificent. Virginia City is to-day an inexhaustible mineral fissure.

Pioche, closed down by litigation, is capable of producing a hundred millions. Eureka, one of the world's greatest lead and silver camps, has hidden under her hills as much more as she has produced; the same applies to Tuscarora and Candelaria. Yet capital and Eastern people do not understand this. [Applause].

Looked upon as a desert waste, Nevada is one of the most fertile spots in the world. Looked upon as a State where only a few hardy vegetables could mature, Nevada has a climate unsurpassed for sunshine and mildness, where all the fruits thrive, where all vegetables grow, where both cotton and tobacco mature, and where the orange, lemon, and olive flourish and ripen early.

Her valleys are filled with a soil deep, rich, and loamy, where the roots of alfalfa go 12 feet down to quench their thirst. Her foothills are covered with succulent bunch grass, and her plains with white sage, where stock fatten free from the blizzard of the North and the droughts of the South.

The effete Bostonian, the hustling New Yorker, and the chesty Chicagoan, rushing westward to California, have usually buried themselves in their berths in their sleeper or buried their faces in a novel when crossing Nevada, little realizing or apprehending the richness of the soil or the variety of her resources or the vastness of her mineral wealth.

We have been slandered and called the "rotten borough," but I commend the political corruption of New York City and Philadelphia and the disgrace of Delaware to busy reformers and suggest that they clean out their own stables and let Nevada work out her own salvation. [Loud applause.]

We have been called a desert, but compared with the blasts of a New England winter and the enervating heat of an Eastern summer, where the sun hides her face in winter behind clouds and is obscured by the fogs of spring only to blaze with fierceness in the summer, we are a land of eternal sunshine, whose aridity is lifegiving and whose constant days of sunshine, always pleasant and never disagreeable, makes us a land combining the equable temperature of California and the health-giving aridity of Egypt. [Applause.]

We have been accused of being paupers. We recommend the attention of statisticians to the sociological conditions in the East, where murder, suicide, rape, and lynching are a constant menace to society; where men both freeze and starve in your great cities; where the wages of girls are so low that they must barter virtue for sustenance; where crime and corruption are undermining your civilization, and we ask you to come to Nevada, where every man is an uncrowned king, of social equality; where crime is at a minimum [applause]; where poverty has no existence nor terrors; where woman's virtue is a priceless jewel and men's honor the badge of American citizenship [applause]; where murder, suicide and poverty are almost unknown, and while to defend our rights, we are quick on the trigger [loud laughter], yet to assist the needy and alleviate suffering we are prompt and always generous. [Loud applause.]

The regeneration of Nevada is at hand. Our reward has come. Our faith sublime has been justified. I am proud to say that the town from which I come, Tonopah, will always be known in history as marking the dawn of a new era in Nevada.

Tonopah has demonstrated to the world that we are still an immense mineral reservoir of richness, inexhaustible with new discoveries constantly attracting the attention of the mining world.

Where Tonopah is now situated was three years ago a desert, and yet in August, 1900, a man by the name of Jim Butler, one of those large-hearted western miners, started out to seek a new mining camp. He went down in the desert in the southern part of Nevada, which had been an almost impenetrable country on account of the scarcity of water, and ran across a reef sticking out of the ground.

He took several pieces of rock, but didn't have money enough to have them assayed, and he went to a place they call the South Klondike and gave a partner a piece of the rock to have assayed, and then went back to where he came from. It was three months before he got the assay, and when he got it, it assayed sixteen hundred ounces to the ton in silver.

They went back there and have opened up a mine that promises to be a rival of the famous Comstock mine. They have taken out of that within the space of three years an amount of mineral ——

A MEMBER. What is the stock selling for? [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN DUZER. For $7 a share, and will sell for $50 a share yet on its dividend merit. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Have they opened up any office yet? [Laughter.]

Mr. VAN DUZER. I want to say in answer to the gentleman from New York that that mine, known as the "Tonopah mine," was purchased by gentlemen from Philadelphia, and the gentlemen from Philadelphia who purchased for the sum of $[illegible] the mine known as the "Great Tonopah mine" have since made eighteen millions out of it; and there is to-day, according to the report of the best mining engineer in the world, $108,000,000 of gold and silver in sight in that one mine. [Applause.] That is the way we promote mines in Nevada. We generously give the good things to the East. [Applause.]

Mr. Schwab recently purchased a mine in Tonopah and its richness will recoup his losses in the steel trust. [Applause and laughter.]

I wish to say to my colleagues in the House of Representatives, who have so long looked upon the State of Nevada as a barren desert, as the State which has been termed a "rotten borough," that the State of Nevada has done more for the advancement of civilization, has contributed more to the commercial activity of the world, has contributed as much to art and literature and to the sciences as has any State in the Union. [Applause.]

At this present juncture what I wish to say to you about the State has some application to the question of the admission of the Territories. You eastern gentlemen are jealous of the growing power of the West. It has been said that Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory should not be admitted to the Union. As a reason they hold up the horrible example of the State of Nevada. [Laughter.]

I want to say to you that the State of Nevada was admitted to the Union against her protest. We are very glad that we came in then, because I am afraid if we had not come in at that time it would have been many years before the generosity of eastern statesmen would have admitted us. But I want to say that the vote of the State of Nevada was absolutely necessary for the policy of Abraham Lincoln. The constitution of the State of Nevada was telegraphed to the city of Washington in order that the State might be admitted.

The State was admitted and she came into the Union under most dramatic and, you might say, pathetic circumstances. She contributed first the number of votes requisite for the passage of the thirteenth amendment; she contributed from her gold and silver mines in metallic money enough metallic money to save the Union. Abraham Lincoln said, as he placed his hands on the shoulders of Harry Worthington, the first Representative from Nevada, "Thank God, we have a source of supply for metallic money that will save the Union at this time." [Applause.]

Within a period of thirty years Nevada has produced $1,546,000,000 in gold and silver.

Now, gentlemen, I wish to say that the production of that vast amount of money thrown into the channels of commerce constantly has contributed more to the prosperity of this country than any other condition known in economics. You gentlemen from Maine and Massachusetts and New York, from the South, swell with pride when the history of your State is mentioned.

You gentlemen who hail from Massachusetts can say: "Massachusetts was the cradle of liberty. Here the tea chests were thrown over in Boston Harbor. Here it was that the great principles of liberty, upon which this Government was founded, had their birth." The hills and valleys of Maine and Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, and the South have their historic battlefields. Hardly any place in the East but that has its traditions and memories of the Revolutionary war and the early struggles of this country. [Applause.]

We are denied that swelling pride in the West, and yet I want to say that although our pioneers were not men who were present at the birth of liberty, or who constructed our Constitution, or who signed the Declaration of Independence, yet we had a race of hardy pioneers born of that same Anglo-Saxon spirit of discovery that actuated Christopher Columbus in seeking the New World.

I want to say to you that if our strenuous President, Theodore Roosevelt, had been living in those days and had butted through the Panama Canal so that Columbus could have sailed through it and discovered the Pacific coast before he discovered the rock-bound coast of the Atlantic, you gentlemen from Maine, Massachusetts, and New York would to-day be clamoring to be admitted as Territories. [Great laughter.]

Boston would have been a fishing village [laughter], New York a coaling station [laughter]; the capital of the United States would have been at Denver, and Washington been the home of malaria microbes and New Jersey mosquitoes. [Loud laughter and applause.]

And right upon this line I wish to say that if it had been the western coast which was first discovered and first settled, to-day the center of population, the center of civilization, the center of commercial activity would have been the other side of the Rocky Mountains.

I wish to say further to the Members of the House of Representatives that I guarantee that there is not a single subject concerning which so little is known by so able and distinguished a body of Americans as is known by them about the State of Nevada, and particularly about the West. [Laughter and applause.] When I first came to Washington, seven or eight years ago, when I was asked where I came from and replied that I came from Nevada, those who asked the question would reply, "Where is Nevada?" And I had to get a map and point it out. [Laughter.]

I met a number of Department clerks, college-bred young gentlemen, who came from the classic precincts of Boston and New York and from your Eastern States, and they would say: "Nevada! Where is Nevada?" [Laughter.] "Nevada is bounded on the east by Colorado, is it not?" [Laughter.] One gentleman tried to place Nevada just beyond California on the Pacific coast. [Laughter.]

Why, a 12-year-old school child in the West knows more about the geography of his country from Maine to California than do the majority of adults in the East about the geography of their own States. [Applause and laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to continue and conclude his remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the control of the time is with the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. OVERSTREET] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MOON].

By MEMBERS. Go on! Take all the time you want!

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. VAN DUZER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that the young men whom I met here took me to their rooms, and, as was suggested by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LACEY] respecting the gold mine, they said I was a liar when I said I knew where Nevada was. They went to the shelves of their library, a very extensive library, consisting of about three books, to prove that I was mistaken.

One of the books was an old, worn-out statistical atlas gotten up by Rand & McNally, and I know of only one other book in the world which has more misinformation in it than that, and that is the book of political statistics compiled by a distinguished gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter.] The other book which they had was a book of "How to Do Society in Washington." [Laughter and applause.]

Now, upon the authority of those two books those young men, who represented the effete and enlightened East, tried to argue to me that I did not know anything about my own State, and, gentlemen, that is the condition of affairs which exists in the East regarding the West.

I want to say to you gentlemen of the East that we of the West have an advantage over the men of the East, for I believe there is something about the broadening influence of the West that gives us a broader intellectual horizon. [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

I do not say that with any disrespect to my colleagues from the East, but I wish to say simply that I will guarantee that any school child in the State of Nevada can tell more about the State of New York, the State of Massachusetts, or the State of Maine than many of you gentlemen in the House of Representatives can about your own States. [Laughter and applause.]

I have simply risen here to-day for the purpose of defending the State of Nevada, from which I come, and to say to you that to-day we are enjoying an unparalleled degree of prosperity. [Prolonged applause and laughter on the Republican side.] I appreciate that the only way a Democrat can secure Republican applause is to speak that magic word "prosperity." [Renewed laughter and applause.] I stand pat on the prosperity, however [great laughter], yet with the sweet music of that applause still ringing in my ears. [Laughter.]

I want to say to the Republican party upon the floor of this House that the prosperity in the State of Nevada is due to the fact that God planted in the bosom of her mountains unmeasured quantities of mineral wealth. [Applause on the Democratic side.] That it is due to the fact that God planted in the valleys and in her plains a fertility of soil unequaled by any country, except the fertile valley of the Nile. [Renewed applause.] That it is due to the fact that God planted in the mountains snows, and that He causes the rains and the snows to fall, which brings water to fructify the valleys of the State.

I want to say further that as hard and severe as is the financial condition here in the East at the present time, as difficult it is to get money into legitimate enterprises, because people in the East would rather be bunkoed out of their money by any [illegible] than invest it in a legitimate proposition out West [laughter]—prosperity has been due to the simple fact that it became known within the past three or four years that Nevada was going to lead the world in the past in the production of minerals, and the result has been that every man in the United States who has money and capital and wants to make more is coming to the State of Nevada and investing his money there, and I am very candid to say that I think the Republican party has had very little to do with the increase and influx of population into the State of Nevada at the present time. [Applause and laughter.]

Jim Butler, who discovered Tonopah, has had more to do with the present prosperity in Nevada than Theodore Roosevelt. [Loud laughter and applause.] Men are seeking fortunes in Tonopah and the wonderful camp Goldfields, and I am [illegible] the Republican party, judging by its apparent ignorance that Nevada was on the map, had nothing to do with Nevada's prosperity. The gold and silver of Tonopah is now beautifying and [illegible] to Carson City—a once live town stricken down by the [illegible] of the Carson mint. The fact is that Reno, the [illegible] metropolis of Nevada, enjoys prosperity because of her [illegible] resources.

In truth, gentlemen, I do not believe that you can point to a single act of Republican legislation which has tended to increase prosperity to the State of Nevada. Your [illegible] have not contributed to our prosperity. Republican trusts have raised the cost of living, and your colonial policy has taken money to build up foreign countries, while your labor legislation has been adverse to the workingman.

For twenty-five years Nevada suffered as no State in the Union ever suffered, because, owing to adverse legislation, the [illegible] noisy and prosperous mills became silent; because the shafts from which hundreds of millions of dollars had been extracted were closed; because every miner in the State was driven forth in consequence of the shutting down of the mines, and because silver had declined in value, so that the miner had to seek refuge in other lands for a livelihood. Yet all the time the mills of New England, favored by Republican legislation, kept running. Your steel plants, favored by trusts, run to a full capacity.

If the silver mines of Nevada had been in Pennsylvania and New York, my distinguished colleague [Mr. PAYNE] would have been a more ardent silver man than William J. Bryan. [Loud laughter and applause.] And Mr. DAZELL would have been introducing free-coinage measures. [Laughter.] The story of Nevada's brave struggle commands admiration. The men who took hundreds of millions from us deserted the State of Nevada and went to New York to build palaces, to San Francisco to buy mansions, to Paris to build villas. [Applause.] The money which Nevada produced has rejuvenated the broken-down nobility of Europe. [Laughter and applause.]

Point to a State which has contributed more to the nation's growth, fame, and greatness than Nevada. [Applause.] New York has produced millionaires; Nevada has [illegible]. Pennsylvania has turned out steel rails to girdle the globe, but Nevada has furnished the money to build the roads. [Applause.] The world has been circled by the electricity of [illegible], but Nevada has produced the man to conceive it and the money to span it about the globe. [Applause.]

The generation now passing away have contributed the energy and faith, and the generation coming on will complete the work of our future building.

We stand to-day upon the verge of a new era, looking forward to the prosperity and happiness that are to come as a reward for our energy, the rewards which our natural resources are to give us. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. I yield the gentleman five minutes additional.

Mr. VAN DUZER. I say to you, gentlemen, that within five years the State of Nevada will have doubled her population; within ten years she will have trebled it. Through the beneficent influences of the Newlands irrigation act, which is soon to be put in effect in that State, we shall have homes for our miners, homes for a great agricultural population. As that great empire builder, F. H. Newell, who has charge of the reclamation service, has said, within ten years, as the result of the beneficent influence of that act, we shall have a population of half a million in Nevada. I want to say——

Mr. CURTIS. A Republican Congress passed the irrigation act.

Mr. VAN DUZER. That irrigation act was an act framed by a Democrat, inspired by Democratic policy, and it is a historic fact that the greatest opposition that the irrigation act ever encountered on the floor of Congress came from distinguished and able Republicans of the East. [Democratic applause.]

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. All Democrats voted for it.

Mr. CURTIS. That act was passed by a Republican House and a Republican Senate and signed by a Republican President.

Mr. VAN DUZER. Yes; and I want to say a Nevada Congressman, Mr. NEWLANDS, educated you to do it, started the agitation, showed the advantages of it, or you would still be opposing it, as you opposed statehood. I am willing to give credit to everyone who may have contributed toward the passage of that act; at the same time we know that the policy of irrigation was a Democratic policy. As far as Nevada's interests are concerned, I am not bound by party limitations; and I say that Congress at all times has been gingerly in its treatment of the State of Nevada, and if we become great it will be by reason of our own energy and the magnificent resources of our great State. [Loud applause.]

As great as our mining resources are, the agricultural possibilities of Nevada are a revelation to the easterner. Millions of acres can be reclaimed. Large in area, with a soil of amazing fertility, with more days of sunshine than anywhere else in the world known to exist, where soft-tempered winds silken the tassels of cereals and a gentle sunshine unlocks the head of wheat, where fruits ripen in a constant sunshine, with alfalfa to fatten thousands of cattle, we offer to the home-seeker an ideal home State.

Our mines demand your modern and costly machinery, and in return our great Comstock, our wonderful Tonopah, our rich Goldfields and growing Searchlight district will yield gold and silver for the world. White Pine yield copper for commerce, and the entire State contribute her quota of patriotism and citizenship, which, independent of partisanship, makes our nation the greatest on earth. [Loud and continued applause.]

Mr. OVERSTREET. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BOUTELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the post-office appropriation bill and had come to no resolution thereon.

PRICES OF BEEF CATTLE.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution No. 203.

Resolved, That the Secretary of Commerce and Labor be, and he is hereby, requested to investigate the causes of the low prices of beef cattle in the United States since July 1, 1903, and the unusually large margins between the prices of beef cattle and the selling prices of fresh beef, and whether the said conditions have resulted in whole or in part from any contract, combination, in the form of trust or otherwise, or conspiracy in restraint of commerce among the several States and Territories or with foreign countries; also whether the said prices have been controlled in whole or in part by any corporation, joint stock company, or corporate combination engaged in commerce among the several States or with foreign nations; and if so, to investigate the organization, capitalization, profits, conduct, and management of the business of such corporations, companies and corporate combinations, and to furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, the results of the investigation herein requested.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Line 3, page 2, strike out the words "furnish to this House, at his earliest convenience, the results of the investigation herein requested" and insert in lieu thereof "make early report of his findings according to law."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The question was taken; and the amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. Speaker, there are two other amendments that have been suggested or approved by the chairman of the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce and which are satisfactory to me.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report them.

Mr. MARTIN. I will indicate them. Before the word "unusual," in line 4, insert the word "alleged;" in line 10, instead of the word "controlled" insert "manipulated." The amendments are in furtherance of the purposes of the resolution and meet with my approval.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 4, page 1, before the word "unusual," insert the word "alleged;" and in line 10 strike out the word "controlled" and insert the word "manipulated."

The question was taken; and the amendments were agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. MARTIN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 4180. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph G. Thomas;

H. R. 6951. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Corr;

H. R. 7444. An act granting an increase of pension to Washington J. Dutcher;

H. R. 11113. An act granting an increase of pension to Silas Soules;

H. R. 3769. An act granting an increase of pension to Clinton M. Casey;

H. R. 4605. An act granting an increase of pension to William Herlinger;

H. R. 10991. An act granting an increase of pension to Frances C. McFarland;

H. R. 11343. An act granting an increase of pension to Matthew S. Priest;

H. R. 9610. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Halling;

H. R. 1566. An act granting an increase of pension to Ellis T. Peirce;

H. R. 6602. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hackett;

H. R. 4314. An act granting an increase of pension to John F. Slade;

H. R. 4391. An act granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Schwemler;

H. R. 5879. An act granting an increase of pension to Bennett Putnam;

H. R. 5568. An act granting an increase of pension to Emily Chapman;

H. R. 910. An act granting an increase of pension to Freeman York;

H. R. 1287. An act granting an increase of pension to Cyrus B. Dopp;

H. R. 1485. An act granting an increase of pension to Franklin Ferguson;

H. R. 4179. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Kuhn;

H. R. 9903. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Harlan;

H. R. 8811. An act granting an increase of pension to James Dougherty;

H. R. 8991. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. Mattison;

H. R. 4642. An act granting an increase of pension to William L. Wheeler;

H. R. 941. An act granting an increase of pension to William D. Taylor;

H. R. 9037. An act granting a pension to Alice W. Clarke;

H. R. 8849. An act granting a pension to James S. Lauderdale;

H. R. 8879. An act granting a pension to Reuben A. Finnell;

H. R. 1314. An act granting a pension to Denison L. Brown;

H. R. 10700. An act granting a pension to Ella D. Madden;

H. R. 4589. An act granting a pension to Henry H. Barrett;

H. R. 10192. An act granting a pension to Martha Mullins;

H. R. 4679. An act granting an increase of pension to Martha M. Pierce;

H. R. 6038. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin George;

H. R. 6999. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Jones;

H. R. 2995. An act granting a pension to Mary Korth;

H. R. 5006. An act granting a pension to Sarah Ulshafer;

H. R. 11413. An act granting an increase of pension to Jasper F. Morton;

H. R. 10268. An act granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Keller;

H. R. 2578. An act granting an increase of pension to William G. Cronkite;

H. R. 5849. An act granting an increase of pension to Catharine R. Brown;

H. R. 2192. An act granting an increase of pension to William O. Smith;

H. R. 6385. An act granting an increase of pension to James A. Barnes;

H. R. 6618. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Coffin;

H. R. 8284. An act granting an increase of pension to Samuel G. Woods;

H. R. 4719. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Carter;

H. R. 4702. An act granting an increase of pension to John T. Collins;

H. R. 11194. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank S. [illegible];

H. R. 8863. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward O'Malley;

H. R. 6455. An act granting an increase of pension to Abraham W. Cochran;

H. R. 2692. An act granting an increase of pension to Elwood Finley;

H. R. 10904. An act granting an increase of pension to Edson H. Crawford;

H. R. 11076. An act granting an increase of pension to Elvira Miller;

H. R. 9999. An act granting an increase of pension to William Edgar;

H. R. 4872. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Bradbury;

H. R. 9753. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Loomis;

H. R. 1316. An act granting an increase of pension to George W. Day;

H. R. 8231. An act granting an increase of pension to John Gangwisch;

H. R. 5532. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi Vassar;

H. R. 8079. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles La Forest;

H. R. 5750. An act granting an increase of pension to William Cassidy;

H. R. 7486. An act granting an increase of pension to James Smith;

H. R. 9587. An act granting an increase of pension to Bartlett S. Haggard;

H. R. 9124. An act granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Hatfield;

H. R. 8173. An act granting an increase of pension to Anna Waters;

H. R. 8718. An act granting an increase of pension to Caswell P. Ford;

H. R. 5479. An act granting an increase of pension to William H. Anderson;

H. R. 7680. An act granting an increase of pension to De Witt C. Folsom;

H. R. 7737. An act granting an increase of pension to Howard McGuire;

H. R. 5155. An act granting an increase of pension to John J. Tompkins;

H. R. 6814. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward W. Miller;

H. R. 7418. An act granting an increase of pension to Peter Minkler;

H. R. 9988. An act granting an increase of pension to William Ellis;

H. R. 9064. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Tidd;

H. R. 9376. An act granting an increase of pension to Martin Renthler;

H. R. 9060. An act granting an increase of pension to John Connors;

H. R. 7895. An act granting an increase of pension to William N. Hall;

H. R. 9273. An act granting an increase of pension to James H. Sackett;

H. R. 9421. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Marshall;

H. R. 7311. An act granting an increase of pension to Rachel Large;

H. R. 8996. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Beach;

H. R. 1623. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Reed;

H. R. 4910. An act granting an increase of pension to Prudentia L. D. Nugent;

H. R. 4674. An act granting an increase of pension to John Thompson;

H. R. 4449. An act granting an increase of pension to William Brown;

H. R. 2001. An act granting an increase of pension to Nora J. Glahn;

H. R. 7999. An act granting an increase of pension to David W. Williams;

H. R. 8835. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Jackson;

H. R. 7814. An act granting an increase of pension to James G. Andrews;

H. R. 6977. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Graves;

H. R. 8723. An act granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. McGraw;

H. R. 10850. An act granting an increase of pension to Adaline L. Power;

H. R. 11052. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary Eaton Livingston;

H. R. 8992. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. Davis;

H. R. 7719. An act granting an increase of pension to Hiram B. Cozine;

H. R. 10622. An act granting an increase of pension to Marion Arnold;

H. R. 10706. An act granting an increase of pension to Alfred J. West;

H. R. 9125. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. King;

H. R. 11556. An act granting an increase of pension to Edward M. Tappen;

H. R. 11319. An act granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Arnold;

H. R. 1563. An act granting an increase of pension to Ory Warriner;

H. R. 10190. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. McDowell;

H. R. 4151. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Foland;

H. R. 5045. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Elmore;

H. R. 9009. An act granting an increase of pension to George [illegible];

H. R. 8966. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Finke;

H. R. 7410. An act granting an increase of pension to Enos D. Hogg;

H. R. 10378. An act granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Shell;

H. R. 8970. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Hart;

H. R. 719. An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Willey;

H. R. 4630. An act granting an increase of pension to Thaddeus S. Collins;

H. R. 807. An act granting an increase of pension to William F. Benefiel;

H. R. 3402. An act granting an increase of pension to Daniel Nagle, jr.;

H. R. 11810. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Swisher;

H. R. 3936. An act granting an increase of pension to Isaac Frazier;

H. R. 4192. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick A. Slocum;

H. R. 11287. An act making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905;

H. R. 3578. An act to authorize the Monongahela Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela river, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of North Charleroi, Washington County, to a point in Rostraver township, Westmoreland County;

H. R. 10648. An act granting an increase of pension to Agnes Shearer;

H. R. 10694. An act granting an increase of pension to Alderson T. Keen;

H. R. 10794. An act granting an increase of pension to Moses Hurlbut;

H. R. 9710. An act granting an increase of pension to Henry Frazier;

H. R. 9778. An act granting an increase of pension to Loriston W. Adkins;

H. R. 9035. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Branen;

H. R. 6703. An act granting an increase of pension to Levi Remick;

H. R. 8203. An act granting an increase of pension to James M. Hunnibill;

H. R. 1317. An act granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. McIntire;

H. R. 789. An act granting an increase of pension to Eli Lachman;

H. R. 6816. An act granting an increase of pension to Frederick Ratzel.

H. R. 8984. An act granting an increase of pension to John L. Rundberg;

H. R. 877. An act granting a pension to Ann M. Driggars;

H. R. 9010. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Hoffman;

H. R. 9695. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank M. Spears;

H. R. 5781. An act to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River;

H. R. 1005. An act granting an increase of pension to Marab E. Powell;

H. R. 5149. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Erwin;

H. R. 4466. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. Burton;

H. R. 4964. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Mink;

H. R. 9426. An act granting an increase of pension to William S. Campbell;

H. R. 5868. An act granting an increase of pension to William Simmons;

H. R. 4198. An act granting an increase of pension to Edwin Lake;

H. R. 7236. An act granting an increase of pension to William R. McCullough;

H. R. 7992. An act granting an increase of pension to Isidore F. Chamberlain;

H. R. 8379. An act granting an increase of pension to Ira B. Waubaugh;

H. R. 4326. An act granting an increase of pension to Wilfred C. McCardell;

H. R. 7659. An act granting an increase of pension to Emma M. Elliott;

H. R. 10194. An act granting an increase of pension to Marion Long;

H. R. 7096. An act granting an increase of pension to Eva A. Burgess;

H. R. 9024. An act granting an increase of pension to Jacob Laird;

H. R. 2116. An act granting an increase of pension to Richard C. Ivory;

H. R. 10748. An act granting an increase of pension to Kate Ridgway;

H. R. 2470. An act granting an increase of pension to Harriet S. Packard;

H. R. 5603. An act granting an increase of pension to William C. McCormick;

H. R. 7083. An act granting an increase of pension to Albert P. Jackson;

H. R. 6817. An act granting a pension to Rosa Glass;

H. R. 2769. An act granting an increase of pension to William E. Armstrong;

H. R. 2980. An act granting an increase of pension to Lafayette M. Greene;

H. R. 6869. An act granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Elmer;

H. R. 3370. An act granting an increase of pension to Joseph Adams;

H. R. 4119. An act granting an increase of pension to William Mercer;

H. R. 2204. An act granting an increase of pension to Addison B. Stone;

H. R. 10068. An act granting an increase of pension to James G. Sains;

H. R. 10640. An act granting an increase of pension to Horace E. Wood;

H. R. 859. An act granting an increase of pension to Andrew Barr; and

H. R. 720. An act granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Gray.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 3596. An act to amend section 2327 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, concerning mineral lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 4387. An act to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Gilbertsville, Ky.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

S. R. 48. Joint resolution authorizing the President to extend an invitation to the Twelfth International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to hold its thirteenth congress in the city of Washington—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE BRITISH SHIP PYRENEES.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to file the views of the minority and to have the time extended until Thursday morning in the case of the bill (H. R. 5335) to give an American register for the British ship Pyrenees.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I did not understand what request the gentleman made.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It is simply a request for unanimous consent for leave to file the minority views and have the time extended until Thursday morning next in the case of the bill (H. R. 5335) giving an American register to the British ship Pyrenees.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman whether this is the bill on which a report was made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. It was made by Mr. WILSON of Illinois on Saturday.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, we can not hear what is being said.

Mr. MANN. It is not the one that was reported on by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; that is the Beaumont.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the minority may have until Thursday next to file its views on the bill touching the giving of an American register to the ship Pyrenees. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

KIOWA, CHICKASHA AND FORT SCOTT RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. GREGG. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3204.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

[illegible]

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. I would like to ask the gentleman whether there is the creation of any railroad trust or any consolidation of parallel lines involved in this bill?

Mr. GREGG. The committee's report is brief, and I will take pleasure in reading it to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. You can answer my question. Is there any consolidation of parallel lines involved in this bill? [Laughter.]

Mr. GREGG. No, sir; nothing of that kind.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. GREGG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

REPORT OF PUBLIC LANDS COMMISSION.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President; which was read, referred to the Committee on the Public Lands, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I submit herewith the preliminary report of the Public Lands Commission appointed by me October 22, 1903, to report upon the condition, operation, and effect of the present land laws, and to recommend such changes as are needed to effect the largest practicable disposition of the public lands to actual settlers who will build permanent homes upon them, and to secure in permanence the fullest and most efficient use of the resources of the public lands. The subject is one of such great importance and great intricacy that it is impossible for the Commission to report in full thereon at this time. It is now ready, however, to suggest certain changes in the law as set forth in the accompanying report. I commend these suggestions to the favorable consideration of the Congress.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1904.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to inquire whether there are any illustrations in that report, in which event I would ask that the order to print cover them.

The SPEAKER. There do not appear to be any.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a letter from the Secretary of the Interior with accompanying report of Charles J. Bonaparte and Clinton Rogers Woodruff, special inspectors, in the matter of alleged abuses and irregularities in the police service of the Indian Territory, and I call special attention to the condition of affairs in the Indian Territory as there set forth. In accordance with the recommendations of Messrs. Bonaparte and Woodruff the members of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes have been informed that if they are to continue in the service they must at once cease all connection with business operations of any kind in the Territory where it is possible that their official positions could be of any effect upon their private business, even though no such effect in fact shown. What further action, if any, is to be taken in regard to the Commission or any of its members by the Executive will be determined upon after full consultation with the Secretary of the Interior and careful consideration of all the facts in the case. It will be noticed that the Secretary of the Interior does not believe that it would be possible, in accordance with the suggestions of Messrs. Bonaparte and Woodruff, to close up the work of the Commission this year and discontinue it accordingly. If it should be found to be possible, I would regard this as desirable, and invite the attention of the Congress to the matter.

I also transmit a memorandum of work of the Commission to the Five Civilized Tribes.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WHITE HOUSE, March 7, 1904.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 42 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Postmaster-General submitting an estimate of appropriation for purchase of site for fireproof building for use of United States post-office in New York City—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor submitting an estimate of appropriation for light vessel and fog signal near Peshtigo Reef, Green Bay, Lake Michigan, Wisconsin—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Postmaster-General, reporting that the files of his Department are burdened by useless papers and asking for the appointment of a committee under the statute providing for their examination—to the Joint Select Committee on Disposition of Useless Papers in the Post-Office Department.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. OVERSTREET, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, to which was referred the House resolution (H. Res. 118) that the Speaker of the House of Representatives appoint a committee consisting of five Members to investigate the conduct of Members in relation to the Post-Office Department, reported the same with the recommendation that the resolution lie on the table, accompanied by a report (No. 1395); which said report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 335) to provide for the allotment of lands in severalty to the Stockbridge and Munsee tribe of Indians, to authorize the distribution of their trust funds, and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1420); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11177) granting an increase of pension to George Manypenny, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1396); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13117) granting an increase of pension to Lewis Sawyer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1397); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13067) granting an increase of pension to Thomas W. Prentiss, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1398); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12938) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Reed, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1399); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12680) granting an increase of pension to Harvey Polen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1400); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12592) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Nash, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1401); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12402) granting a pension to Orson Burlingame, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1402); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12389) granting an increase of pension to Napoleon Paulus, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1403); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11838) granting an increase of pension to William H. Mann, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1404); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11999) granting an increase of pension to William Vincent, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1405); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10841) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth De Baugh, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1406); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10478) granting an increase of pension to William T. Hayter, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1407); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9682) granting an increase of pension to Philip Loney, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1408); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9280) granting an increase of pension to John M. Hildreth, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1409); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8099) granting an increase of pension to Stephen L. Richardson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1410); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7431) granting an increase of pension to Charles N. Burns, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1411); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6933) granting a pension to L. M. Ferrier, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1412); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6592) granting a pension to Sarah C. Wilson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1413); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. DEEMER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6530) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Williams, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1414); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5445) granting a pension to Susan R. Choat, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1415); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5247) granting a pension to Lora Milliken, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1416); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5105) granting an increase of pension to Jacob P. Fishback, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1417); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 544) granting an increase of pension to Luther St. John, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1418); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4718) granting an increase of pension to Thomas Ballard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1419); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GRAFF, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 2052) for the relief of Ramon O. Williams and Joseph A. Springer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1421); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10089) for the relief of R. D. Ashford, of Lockport, Niagara County, N. Y., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1422); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13221) for the relief of Edward Cahalan; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: A bill (H. R. 13552) authorizing the purchase of a site for a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. SOUTHARD: A bill (H. R. 13553) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska, and for other purposes"—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. TIRRELL: A bill (H. R. 13554) to protect our national food supply by the extermination of dogfish or dogfish sharks of the Atlantic coast of the United States of America included between Cape Hatteras and Eastport, Me.—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. SPARKMAN: A bill (H. R. 13555) for the improvement of Hillsboro Bay, Florida—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. GILLETT of California: A bill (H. R. 13556) authorizing the Secretary of War to draw warrants on the Secretary of the Treasury for funds to improve the upper Sacramento River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WADSWORTH: A bill (H. R. 13557) to appropriate $5,000 to the Revolution Monument Association of Clarendon, N. Y.—to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 13558) to establish a life-saving station at or near the harbor of Dunkirk, N. Y.—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. WRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 13559) to provide for the erection of a public building at Honesdale, Wayne County, Pa.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BYRD: A bill (H. R. 13560) providing for closing the rolls in the matter of the Mississippi Choctaws, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BURKETT: A bill (H. R. 13561) to establish the true status of the Nebraska State Militia—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HINSHAW: A bill (H. R. 13562) to provide for the adjustment of certain sales of lands in the late reservation of the confederated Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians in the States of Kansas and Nebraska—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. LILLEY: A resolution (H. Res. 243) calling for an investigation of the causes of the high prices of white paper used for the printing of newspapers, and the great scarcity of the same—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 13563) for the relief of W. M. Gibson—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 13564) for the relief o James M. Scott—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13565) for the relief of James M. Scott—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 13566) granting a pension to Annie Valerie Stockton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BIRDSALL: A bill (H. R. 13567) granting an increase of pension to Anna A. Collins—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COCHRAN: A bill (H. R. 13568) to correct the military record of James Stephenson, alias James Stevenson—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13569) granting an increase of pension to Eli B. Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13570) granting an increase of pension to James S. Snow—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13571) granting an increase of pension to Harriet E. C. L. Bonham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13572) granting an increase of pension to Preston C. Little—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13573) granting an increase of pension to Owen N. Dibble—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13574) granting a pension to Harriet Bonham—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13575) granting a pension to Daniel W. David—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13576) granting a pension to William H. Nichols—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13577) granting a pension to Sarah E. Stockton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13578) granting a pension to W. A. Griffin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13579) granting a pension to John N. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13580) granting a pension to Henry C. Larew—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13581) granting a pension to John W. Dinwiddie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 13582) to remove the charge of desertion from record of Levi Burdine—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13583) granting a pension to Abner G. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13584) granting an increase of pension to John E. Fries—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13585) granting an increase of pension to Frances P. McMurtrie—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GILLESPIE: A bill (H. R. 13586) granting an increase of pension to Abraham Harris—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13587) granting an increase of pension to Mary J. Weems—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 13588) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Rosa—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 13589) granting an increase of pension to James D. Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILDEBRANT: A bill (H. R. 13590) granting a pension to Sarah Ann Barker—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13591) granting a pension to James Johnson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HOPKINS: A bill (H. R. 13592) granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Ferguson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13593) granting an increase of pension to William Weddington—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13594) granting an increase of pension to William Turner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13595) granting a pension to Lucreasy Cassady—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13596) granting a pension to Henry Lawless—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13597) granting a pension to Daniel J. Sheemaker—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13598) granting a pension to Selie Dunn—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13599) granting a pension to James Caudill—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. JACKSON of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 13600) granting an increase of pension to Albert Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KETCHAM: A bill (H. R. 13601) for the relief of Anthony Mixted—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LITTAUER: A bill (H. R. 13602) granting an increase of pension to Fannie M. Bristol—to the Commitee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIND: A bill (H. R. 13603) for the relief of Sylvester D. Foss—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LIVERNASH: A bill (H. R. 13604) restoring a pension to Mary B. Wadsworth—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 13605) granting a pension to Elizabeth E. Conatt—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORGAN: A bill (H. R. 13606) for the relief of Miles T. Oiler—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13607) granting an increase of pension to Jonathan Hughes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13608) granting an increase of pension to Jesse A. Ross—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13609) granting an increase of pension to Evan E. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NORRIS: A bill (H. R. 13610) to place the name of Linville H. Wymore on the muster rolls of the Second Nebraska Territorial Troops—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PUJO: A bill (H. R. 13611) for the relief of Mrs. Octave Simoneaux—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RIXEY: A bill (H. R. 13612) for the relief of John A. Fairfax—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SHEPPARD: A bill (H. R. 13613) to rescind the dismissal of certain West Point cadets and grant them honorable withdrawals—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: A bill (H. R. 13614) for the relief of De Forest Keyes—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STERLING: A bill (H. R. 13615) granting an increase of pension to Albert J. Sprinkle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. TATE: A bill (H. R. 13616) for the relief of Gilbert E. L. Falls—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: A bill (H. R. 13617) granting a pension to Charlotte A. Dubry—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. VREELAND: A bill (H. R. 13618) for the relief of Daniel M. Brezer—to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13619) for the relief of Daniel M. Brezer—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WRIGHT: A bill (H. R. 13620) granting an increase of pension to Silas W. Squires—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13621) granting a pension to Gilbert R. Stiles—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 13622) granting a pension to Martha J. Humber—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13623) granting an increase of pension to Marion A. Carlisle—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Resolution of Typographical Union No. 230, of Danville, Ill., in favor of the anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Helpers' Division, No. 54, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-Ship Builders of America, of Danville, Ill., in favor of bill H. R. 7056, for the development of the American merchant marine; in favor of bill S. 2259, relative to the extension of the coastwise laws of the United States to the Philippine trade, and in favor of bill S. 2263, restricting the carriage of naval and war stores to American vessels—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, protest of the Edgewood Distillery Company, against the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: Resolutions of the Lake Seamen's Union of Buffalo, N. Y., in favor of bill H. R. 12230—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of E. J. Blood and others, of Chafee, N. Y., in favor of increased salary for rural mail carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. BADGER: Petition of C. A. Stevenson and others, of Ohio, in favor of bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. BELL of California: Petitions of 41 citizens and of 26 citizens of Tolo County, Cal., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDERHEAD: Resolution of the Duncan Republican Club, of Duncan, Ind. T., in favor of bill H. R. 7862—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Also, petition of the seventh national convention of the American Blind People's Higher Education and General Improvement Association, in favor of bill H. R. 10856—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CAMPBELL: Petition of residents of Grenola, Kans., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COCHRAN: Petition of citizens of St. Joseph, Mo., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Petition of citizens of Racine, Wis., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Wisconsin Retail Lumber Dealers' Association, relative to regulating the carriage of interstate freight—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of members of the congregation of Good Shepherd Church, Racine, Wis., in favor of an amendment to the Constitution defining legal marriage—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FULLER: Resolution of the Illinois Farmers' Institute, in favor of bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GILLETT of California: Resolution of Gold Hill Grange, Placer County, Cal., in favor of the Grange good-roads bill, introduced by Mr. CURRIER—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts: Resolution of the Springfield (Mass.) Board of Trade, favoring arbitration treaties between the United States and Great Britain—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Paper to accompany bill H. R. 12861, granting an increase of pension to Bartlet Mingus—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMILTON: Resolution of Ed. M. Pratzman Post, No. 72, Grand Army of the Republic, of Three Rivers, Mich., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HARRISON: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 10895, to authorize the President to appoint Col. Henry Lippincott, United States Army, retired, to the grade of brigadier-general, United States Army, on the retired list—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HEMENWAY: Resolution of the Evansville Manufacturers' Association, urging development of our merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. HINSHAW: Papers to accompany bill granting increase of pension to John S. Beardsley—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of the Christian Church of Waco, York County, Nebr., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey: Concurrent resolution from the State of New Jersey, favoring an appropriation for improvement of the Passaic River—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petitions of the Third Christian Reformed Church, of Paterson, N. J., consisting of 143 members; the Methodist Episcopal Church, of Stanhope, N. J.; the Lake View Presbyterian Church, of Paterson, 140 members; G. D. Eckmon and 19 others, of Closter, N. J., and the Methodist Episcopal Church of Alpine, N. J., 55 members, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. JACKSON of Ohio: Resolutions of seventeen Grand Army of the Republic posts of Ohio, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Albert Mitchell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bill H. R. 12949, granting a pension to Harriet Place—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolution of the Builders and Traders' Exchange of Sandusky, Ohio, against the anti-injunction bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the general assembly of Ohio, in favor of bill H. R. 6475—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Adolph Renthner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KINKAID: Petition of B. C. Ennis and 81 others, of Chadron, Nebr., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LACEY: Resolution of the Duncan Republican Club, of Duncan, Ind. T., in favor of bill H. R. 7862—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. LINDSAY: Resolution of Subordinate Lodge No. 264, of Richmond Hill, Long Island, N. Y., Brotherhood of Boilermakers and Iron Ship Builders of America, in favor of bill H. R. 7056—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of the Eagle Pencil Company, of New York, in favor of bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the American Blind People's Higher Education and General Improvement Association convention, in favor of bill H. R. 10856—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: Petition of the Independent Order of Good Templars, No. 316, of Buckfield, Me., for the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LONGWORTH: Two petitions of citizens of Cincinnati, Ohio, against the passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McNARY: Petition of the Ruggles Street Baptist Church, of Boston, Mass., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MORGAN: Petition of citizens of Adams County, Ohio, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, paper to accompany bill granting a pension to Evan E. Evans—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of W. S. Hancock Post, No. 571, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, in favor of amendment to act of Congress of July 2, 1864, so as to exclude from Statuary Hall the statue of any person who bore arms against the Government—to the Committee on the Library.

Also, resolutions of W. S. Hancock Post, No. 571, of Thurman, Ohio, and John W. McFerren Post, No. 226, of West Union, Ohio, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Petition of L. E. Ferguson, of Scott, Ind., relative to salary of rural free-delivery carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of E. E. Morgan and J. C. Wallace, of the Allen County Medical Society, of Fort Wayne, Ind., in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. SMITH of New York: Paper to accompany bill for the relief of De Forest Keyes—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution of Crookston Council, No. 88, United Commercial Travelers, in favor of Badger amendment to bankruptcy law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STEPHENS of Texas: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 13357, for an additional United States commissioner—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. STERLING: Petitions of Danish Methodist Episcopal Church, of Dwight, Ill.; citizens of Colfax, Ill.; citizens of Chenoa, Ill., and of the Second Presbyterian Church of Bloomington, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the Christian Church of Eureka, Ill., for the passage of a bill to prevent nullification of State liquor laws—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of citizens of Bloomington, Ill., favoring bill H. R. 9302—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SULLIVAN of New York: Resolution of the American Association of Masters and Pilots of Steam Vessels, relative to a light-house on or near the Outer Diamond Shoal, coast of North Carolina—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of Lachman & Jacobi, and E. Eising & Co., of New York, against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of General Slocum Circle, No. 33, and Elizabeth Spellman Circle, No. 8, Department of New York, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of New York, favoring the passage of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of John E. Bendix Post, No. 402, Grand Army of the Republic, of New York, in favor of a service-pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolutions of the Drug Trade Section of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, favoring a reduction of the duty on alcohol used in arts and manufactures—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, resolutions of the Fifth Annual Supervisors' Highway Convention for the State of New York, in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. TIRRELL: Petition of Elizabeth Eddy and others, for creation of a forest reservation in the White Mountains—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. TOWNSEND: Memorial of the Brotherhood of Boilermakers, Lodge No. 166, of Wyandotte, Mich., in favor of bill H. R. 7056 and sundry Senate bills—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of G. K. Warren Circle, No. 14, Martinsville, Mich., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Stephen D. Luse and 43 others, of Blissfield, Mich., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Patrick Culhone and 108 others, of Adrian, Mich., in favor of increase of salaries for rural mail carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, memorial of Mary Schlander, of Ann Arbor, Mich., in favor of bill H. R. 9313—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of bill H. R. 6295—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 10 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of consolidation of the Bureau of Forestry with the Department of Agriculture—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of an antitrust law—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of a parcels-post law—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of an amendment to the Constitution providing for the election of United States Senators by direct vote of the people—to the Committee on Election of President, Vice-President, and Representatives in Congress.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., for revising fees and salaries of Federal officers—to the Committee on Revision of the Laws.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of construction of ship canal—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of bill H. R. 6273—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., favoring bill H. R. 10765—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of a bill establishing postal savings banks—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of legislation to extend the markets for farm products—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of C. D. Johnson and 9 others, of Chelsea, Mich., in favor of increasing salary of rural mail carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, March 8, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. BURROWS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Journal will stand approved.

RICHARD P. BLACKISTONE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of the court as amended in the cause of Richard P. Blackistone v. The United States; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9480) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, and Mr. LIVINGSTON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 220) permitting the Kiowa, Chickasha and Fort Smith Railway Company to sell and convey its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company, and the Eastern Oklahoma Railway Company to lease all its railroad and other property in the Indian Territory to the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company, and thereafter to sell its railroad and other property to said the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Company.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. BATES and Mr. BASSETT members of the joint committee on the part of the House, as provided for in the act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the Executive Departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Post-Office and Navy Departments.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 719) granting an increase of pension to John H. Willey;

A bill (H. R. 720) granting an increase of pension to Frank L. Gray;

A bill (H. R. 783) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Reinhart;

A bill (H. R. 789) granting an increase of pension to Eli Lachman;

A bill (H. R. 807) granting an increase of pension to William F. Benefiel;

A bill (H. R. 859) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Barr;

A bill (H. R. 877) granting a pension to Ann M. Driggars;

A bill (H. R. 910) granting an increase of pension to Freeman York;

A bill (H. R. 941) granting an increase of pension to William D. Taylor;

A bill (H. R. 1005) granting an increase of pension to Marab E. Powell;

A bill (H. R. 1287) granting an increase of pension to Cyrus B. Dorp;

A bill (H. R. 1314) granting a pension to Denison L. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 1316) granting an increase of pension to George W. Day;

A bill (H. R. 1317) granting an increase of pension to Thomas E. McIntire;

A bill (H. R. 1485) granting an increase of pension to Franklin Ferguson;

A bill (H. R. 1563) granting an increase of pension to Ory Warriner;

A bill (H. R. 1566) granting an increase of pension to Ellis T. Peirce;

A bill (H. R. 1623) granting an increase of pension to John H. Reed;

A bill (H. R. 2001) granting an increase of pension to Nora J. Glahn;

A bill (H. R. 2116) granting an increase of pension to Richard C. Ivory;

A bill (H. R. 2192) granting an increase of pension to William O. Smith;

A bill (H. R. 2204) granting an increase of pension to Addison B. Stone;

A bill (H. R. 2470) granting an increase of pension to Harriet S. Packard;

A bill (H. R. 2573) granting an increase of pension to William G. Cronkite;

A bill (H. R. 2692) granting an increase of pension to Elwood Finley;

A bill (H. R. 2769) granting an increase of pension to William E. Armstrong;

A bill (H. R. 2930) granting an increase of pension to Lafayette M. Greene;

A bill (H. R. 2995) granting a pension to Mary Korth;

A bill (H. R. 3370) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Adams;

A bill (H. R. 3402) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Nagle, jr.;

A bill (H. R. 3578) to authorize the Mercantile Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela river, Pennsylvania, from a point in the borough of North Charleroi, Washington County, to a point in Rostraver Township, Westmoreland County;

A bill (H. R. 3769) granting an increase of pension to Clinton M. Casey;

A bill (H. R. 3909) granting an increase of pension to George Hayden;

A bill (H. R. 3910) granting an increase of pension to Charles W. Hoffman;

A bill (H. R. 3936) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Frazier;

A bill (H. R. 4119) granting an increase of pension to William Mercer;

A bill (H. R. 4151) granting an increase of pension to John W. Foland;

A bill (H. R. 4179) granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Kuhn;

A bill (H. R. 4180) granting an increase of pension to Joseph G. Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 4192) granting an increase of pension to Frederick A. Slocum;

A bill (H. R. 4198) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Lake;

A bill (H. R. 4314) granting an increase of pension to John F. Slade;

A bill (H. R. 4326) granting an increase of pension to Wilfred C. McCardell;

A bill (H. R. 4391) granting an increase of pension to Nicholas Schwemler;

A bill (H. R. 4449) granting an increase of pension to William Brown;

A bill (H. R. 4468) granting an increase of pension to William R. Burton;

A bill (H. R. 4589) granting a pension to Henry H. Barrett;

A bill (H. R. 4605) granting an increase of pension to William Herlinger;

A bill (H. R. 4630) granting an increase of pension to Thaddeus S. Collins;

A bill (H. R. 4642) granting an increase of pension to William L. Wheeler;

A bill (H. R. 4674) granting an increase of pension to John Thompson;

A bill (H. R. 4679) granting an increase of pension to Martha M. Pierce;

A bill (H. R. 4702) granting an increase of pension to John T. Collins;

A bill (H. R. 4719) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Carter;

A bill (H. R. 4872) granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Bradbury;

A bill (H. R. 4910) granting an increase of pension to Prudentia L. D. Nugent;

A bill (H. R. 4964) granting an increase of pension to Charles E. Mink;

A bill (H. R. 5006) granting a pension to Sarah Ulshafer;

A bill (H. R. 5045) granting an increase of pension to Albert S. Elmore;

A bill (H. R. 5149) granting an increase of pension to John W. Erwin;

A bill (H. R. 5155) granting an increase of pension to John J. Tompkins;

A bill (H. R. 5479) granting an increase of pension to William H. Anderson;

A bill (H. R. 5532) granting an increase of pension to Levi Vassar;

A bill (H. R. 5568) granting an increase of pension to Emily Chapman;

A bill (H. R. 5603) granting an increase of pension to William C. McCormick;

A bill (H. R. 5750) granting an increase of pension to William Cassidy;

A bill (H. R. 5761) to authorize the Charleroi and Monessen Bridge Company to construct a bridge over the Monongahela River;

A bill (H. R. 5849) granting an increase of pension to Catharine R. Brown;

A bill (H. R. 5868) granting an increase of pension to William Simmons;

A bill (H. R. 5879) granting an increase of pension to Bennett Putnam;

A bill (H. R. 5999) granting an increase of pension to Ann Jennett Whitney;

A bill (H. R. 6038) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin George;

A bill (H. R. 6335) granting an increase of pension to James A. Barnes;

A bill (H. R. 6455) granting an increase of pension to Abraham W. Cochran;

A bill (H. R. 6602) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Hackett;

A bill (H. R. 6618) granting an increase of pension to Henry C. Coffin;

A bill (H. R. 6703) granting an increase of pension to Levi Remick;

A bill (H. R. 6814) granting an increase of pension to Edward W. Miller:
A bill (H. R. 6816) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Ratzel:
A bill (H. R. 6817) granting a pension to Rosa Glass:
A bill (H. R. 6869) granting an increase of pension to Lorenzo D. Elmer:
A bill (H. R. 6879) granting a pension to Reuben A. Finnell:
A bill (H. R. 6951) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Corr:
A bill (H. R. 6977) granting an increase of pension to Mary A. Graves:
A bill (H. R. 6999) granting an increase of pension to Albert W. Jones:
A bill (H. R. 7083) granting an increase of pension to Albert P. Jackson:
A bill (H. R. 7096) granting an increase of pension to Eva A. Burgess:
A bill (H. R. 7236) granting an increase of pension to William R. McCullough:
A bill (H. R. 7311) granting an increase of pension to Rachel Large:
A bill (H. R. 7410) granting an increase of pension to Enos D. Hoge:
A bill (H. R. 7418) granting an increase of pension to Peter Minkler:
A bill (H. R. 7436) granting an increase of pension to James Smith:
A bill (H. R. 7444) granting an increase of pension to Washington J. Dutcher:
A bill (H. R. 7659) granting an increase of pension to Emma M. Elliott:
A bill (H. R. 7680) granting an increase of pension to De Witt C. Folsom:
A bill (H. R. 7719) granting an increase of pension to Hiram B. Cozine:
A bill (H. R. 7737) granting an increase of pension to Howard McGuire:
A bill (H. R. 7805) granting an increase of pension to William N. Hall:
A bill (H. R. 7814) granting an increase of pension to James G. Andrews:
A bill (H. R. 7992) granting an increase of pension to Isidore F. Chamberlain:
A bill (H. R. 7999) granting an increase of pension to David W. Williamson:
A bill (H. R. 8079) granting an increase of pension to Charles La Forest:
A bill (H. R. 8124) granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth Hatfield:
A bill (H. R. 8173) granting an increase of pension to Anna Waters:
A bill (H. R. 8203) granting an increase of pension to James M. Hemphill:
A bill (H. R. 8231) granting an increase of pension to John Gangwisch:
A bill (H. R. 8284) granting an increase of pension to Samuel G. Woods:
A bill (H. R. 8379) granting an increase of pension to Ira B. Wamsley:
A bill (H. R. 8718) granting an increase of pension to Caswell P. Ford:
A bill (H. R. 8733) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. McGraw:
A bill (H. R. 8811) granting an increase of pension to James Dougherty:
A bill (H. R. 8835) granting an increase of pension to Charles H. Jackson:
A bill (H. R. 8849) granting a pension to James S. Lauderdale:
A bill (H. R. 8863) granting an increase of pension to Edward O'Malley:
A bill (H. R. 8966) granting an increase of pension to James M. Fink:
A bill (H. R. 8970) granting an increase of pension to Charles B. Hart:
A bill (H. R. 8984) granting an increase of pension to John L. Randberg:
A bill (H. R. 8991) granting an increase of pension to William E. Mattison:
A bill (H. R. 8992) granting an increase of pension to William C. Davis:
A bill (H. R. 8998) granting an increase of pension to Henry L. Beach:
A bill (H. R. 9024) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Laird:
A bill (H. R. 9035) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Branen:
A bill (H. R. 9037) granting a pension to Alice W. Clarke:
A bill (H. R. 9060) granting an increase of pension to John Connors:
A bill (H. R. 9064) granting an increase of pension to Edwin Todd:
A bill (H. R. 9125) granting an increase of pension to William S. King:
A bill (H. R. 9273) granting an increase of pension to James H. Sackett:
A bill (H. R. 9376) granting an increase of pension to Martin Ranthler:
A bill (H. R. 9421) granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Marshall:
A bill (H. R. 9426) granting an increase of pension to William S. Campbell:
A bill (H. R. 9587) granting an increase of pension to Bartlett S. Haggard:
A bill (H. R. 9610) granting an increase of pension to Frederick Halling:
A bill (H. R. 9695) granting an increase of pension to Frank M. Spears:
A bill (H. R. 9710) granting an increase of pension to Henry Frazier:
A bill (H. R. 9753) granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Loomis:
A bill (H. R. 9778) granting an increase of pension to Loriston W. Adkins:
A bill (H. R. 9903) granting an increase of pension to George W. Harlan:
A bill (H. R. 9988) granting an increase of pension to William Ellis:
A bill (H. R. 9999) granting an increase of pension to William Edgar:
A bill (H. R. 10068) granting an increase of pension to James G. Saims:
A bill (H. R. 10180) granting an increase of pension to William E. McDowell:
A bill (H. R. 10192) granting a pension to Martha Mallory:
A bill (H. R. 10194) granting an increase of pension to Marion Long:
A bill (H. R. 10268) granting an increase of pension to Margaret E. Keller:
A bill (H. R. 10378) granting an increase of pension to Sarah J. Shell:
A bill (H. R. 10640) granting an increase of pension to Horace E. Wood:
A bill (H. R. 10648) granting an increase of pension to Agnes Shearer:
A bill (H. R. 10682) granting an increase of pension to Marion Arnold:
A bill (H. R. 10694) granting an increase of pension to Alderson T. Keen:
A bill (H. R. 10700) granting a pension to Ella D. Madden:
A bill (H. R. 10706) granting an increase of pension to Alfred J. West:
A bill (H. R. 10748) granting an increase of pension to Kate Ridgway:
A bill (H. R. 10794) granting an increase of pension to Moses Hurlbut:
A bill (H. R. 10850) granting an increase of pension to Adaline L. Power:
A bill (H. R. 10904) granting an increase of pension to Edson H. Crawford:
A bill (H. R. 10991) granting an increase of pension to Frances C. McFarland:
A bill (H. R. 11052) granting an increase of pension to Mary Eaton Livingston:
A bill (H. R. 11076) granting an increase of pension to Elvira Miller:
A bill (H. R. 11113) granting an increase of pension to Silas Soules:
A bill (H. R. 11194) granting an increase of pension to Frank S. Nickerson:
A bill (H. R. 11287) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905:
A bill (H. R. 11310) granting an increase of pension to John W. Swisher:
A bill (H. R. 11319) granting an increase of pension to Mary C. Arnold:
A bill (H. R. 11343) granting an increase of pension to Matthew S. Priest:
A bill (H. R. 11443) granting an increase of pension to Jasper F. Morton; and
A bill (H. R. 11556) granting an increase of pension to Edward M. Tappen.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. BURROWS presented a petition of J. M. Bond Circle, No. 23, Department of Michigan, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Saugatuck, Mich., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of sundry patrons of free-delivery route No. 2, of Greenville, Mich., praying that an appropriation be made to increase the salaries of rural letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of Lafayette Lodge, No. 182, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of Detroit, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to develop the American merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Saline, Mich., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLATT of New York presented petitions of sundry citizens of New York City, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the immigration of aliens into the United States; which were referred to the Committee on Immigration.

He also presented a petition of the New York State Assembly of Mothers, of Albany, N. Y., and a petition of the Federation of Women's Clubs of New York City, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented the petition of C. J. Wash, of Ontario, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Independent Order of Good Templars of Yeddo, N. Y., and a petition of the congregation of the First Presbyterian Church of Ontario, N. Y., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, of New York City, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for a refund of internal-revenue duties paid on alcohol used in the manufacture of articles exported; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of the Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange of New York City, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the use of interstate telegraph and telephone lines to promote gambling; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of Local Union No. 232, International Brotherhood of Blacksmiths and Helpers, of Norwich, N. Y., praying that an appropriation be made to increase the capacity of the Naval Gun Factory at Washington, D. C.; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

He also presented petitions of Washington, Columbia, Lafayette, General Slocum, Spellman, Mechanicsville, Curran, James A. Garfield, and Phil Kearny circles, all of the Department of New York, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Troy; of Lewis O. Conklin Post, No. 627, Department of New York, Grand Army of the Republic, of Port Jefferson, all in the State of New York, and of sundry citizens of Carlisle, Pa., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. LODGE presented a petition of Joseph E. Simmons Post, No. 111, Department of Massachusetts, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pembroke, Mass., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DRYDEN presented a petition of the Woman's Club of Orange, N. J., praying that an appropriation be made to purchase a national forest reserve in the White Mountains of New Hampshire; which was referred to the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game.

He also presented a petition of Haddon Grange, No. 38, Patrons of Husbandry, of Camden, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a petition of Cement Workers' Union No 10, American Federation of Labor, of Trenton, N. J., praying for the passage of the so-called "eight-hour bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Hightstown, of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Crosswicks, and of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Alpine, all in the State of New Jersey, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Gloucester County, N. J., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to require gill-fishing boats and launches to employ licensed engineers and pilots; which was referred to the Committee on Fisheries.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Scullville, N. J., and a petition of the congregation of the Third Baptist Church of Camden, N. J., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BURNHAM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pittsfield, Penacook, and Lakeport, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of rural free-delivery mail carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MILLARD presented petitions of sundry citizens of Franklin, Dewey, and Norfolk, all in the State of Nebraska, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. CLAPP presented petitions of sundry citizens of Preston, Orono, Appleton, and Minneapolis, and of Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Tracey, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL presented a petition of Siuslaw Grange, No. 54, Patrons of Husbandry, of Lorane, Oreg., praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Grass Valley, Oreg., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation relative to insurance companies; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of McKinley Circle, Department of Oregon, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Myrtle Point, Oreg., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 320) granting an increase of pension to Hiram W. White; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 2851) granting a pension to Sarah E. Thompson; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Pacific Coast Jobbers and Manufacturers' Association, of San Francisco, Cal., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission; which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. BERRY presented petitions of sundry citizens of Siloam and Cane Hill, in the State of Arkansas, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PROCTOR presented the petition of E. A. Burditt and sundry other citizens of Shrewsbury, Vt., praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. SPOONER presented a petition of John A. Logan Circle, Department of Wisconsin, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Omro, Wis., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Platteville, Wis., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented petitions of the Wisconsin Federation of Churches and Christian Workers; of Pottawatomie Lodge, No. 827, Independent Order of Good Templars, of Washington Island, and of sundry citizens of Lodi, Fall River, Beloit, and Windsor, all in the State of Wisconsin, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of sundry citizens of Howard County, Mo., praying that an appropriation be made providing for the construction and maintenance of public highways; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Savannah and Seligman, in the State of Missouri, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FAIRBANKS presented a petition of Garfield Circle, No. 15, Department of Indiana, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Richmond, Ind., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a memorial of the Indiana Retail Merchants' Association, remonstrating against the passage of the so-called

"parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a memorial of the Citizens' Alliance of South Bend, Ind., remonstrating against the so-called "anti-injunction bill;" which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of sundry rural free-delivery letter carriers of Hamilton County, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of rural letter carriers; which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented petitions of the Presbyterian Missionary Society of Gas City, of the Woman's Missionary Society of the Presbyterian Church of Union City, and of the Woman's Missionary Society of the First Presbyterian Church of Logansport, all in the State of Indiana, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the Anderson Carriage Manufacturing Company, of Anderson, Ind., and a petition of the American Seeding Machine Company, of Springfield, Ohio, praying that an appropriation be made to prevent a repetition of damages by flood in the Kaw Valley, in the States of Kansas and Missouri; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Muncie, Ind., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salaries of rural free-delivery mail carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington presented a memorial of the Mitchell, Lewis & Staver Company, of Seattle, Wash., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend an act providing for certain requirements for vessels propelled by gas, fluid, naphtha, or electric motors; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce and Board of Trade of Tacoma, Wash., remonstrating against the passage of the so-called "parcels-post bill;" which was referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

He also presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce and the Board of Trade of Seattle, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation dividing the judicial district of the State of Washington into western and eastern districts; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a petition of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Columbia, Wash., praying for the enactment of legislation providing that the Federal Government shall not grant liquor-tax receipts to persons residing in prohibition territory; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of James A. Garfield Circle, No. 15, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Everett; of General Lawton Circle, No. 14, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Ballard; of John A. Logan Circle, No. 16, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Tacoma, and of Lieutenant Cushing Post, No. 56, Department of Washington, Grand Army of the Republic, of Ballard, all in the State of Washington, praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GALLINGER presented petitions of the congregations of the Congregational and Methodist Episcopal churches of Lisbon; of the congregation of the Curtis Memorial Church, of Merrimack; of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Lebanon; of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Hollis; of the congregation of the Congregational Church of Grafton County; of the congregation of the Pleasant Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of Salem; of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Plaistow; of the congregation of the First Baptist Church of Franklin Falls; of the congregation of the Free Baptist Church of Farmington; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Grafton County; of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Antrim; of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Hillsboro; of the congregation of the Baptist Church of Gonic, and of sundry citizens of Concord and Peterboro, all in the State of New Hampshire, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PENROSE presented petitions of London Grove Grange, No. 63, and of Pomona Grange, No. 3, Patrons of Husbandry, and of the Grove Farmers' Club, all of Chester County, in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the so-called "Brownlow good-roads bill;" which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented petitions of the congregation of the United Presbyterian Church of Lackawanna County, of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Boiling Springs, and of the congregations of the First Presbyterian and Methodist Episcopal churches of Glen Hazel, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Northeast and Norristown, of the congregation of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Point Marion, and of the East Pennsylvania Conference of the Evangelical Association, all in the State of Pennsylvania, praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. WETMORE presented a petition of the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, praying that increased appropriations be made for the support of agricultural experiment stations; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. GORMAN presented a petition of the Home Missionary Society of the Brown Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Baltimore, Md., praying for an investigation of the charges made and filed against Hon. REED SMOOT, a Senator from the State of Utah; which was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

He also presented a petition of the East Baltimore Station Methodist Protestant Church, of Baltimore, Md., praying for the enactment of legislation to prevent the nullification of State liquor laws; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ELKINS presented sundry papers to accompany the bill (S. 3730) for the relief of T. J. Cougar; which were referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. FRYE presented a petition of Sagadahoe Lodge, No. 168, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of Bath, Me., praying for the enactment of legislation to develop the American merchant marine; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

THE DUTY OF AMERICANS IN THE PHILIPPINES.

Mr. BACON. I hold in my hand a speech delivered by the present Secretary of War before the Union Reading College, Manila, P. I., December 17, 1903, when he was the governor of the Philippine Islands. It is entitled "The duty of Americans in the Philippines." I have read it through, and it is a very instructive document, made at a time when the Secretary of War was charged with a responsibility there as governor. While there are some things in the address with which I do not entirely agree, I think it is a valuable paper for the use of the Senate, and I ask that it may be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Georgia asks unanimous consent that a speech made by the present Secretary of War——

Mr. BACON. Made while he was in the Philippine Islands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Made while he was in the Philippine Islands, touching Philippine conditions, be printed as a document. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. BURNHAM, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3790) for the relief of B. Jackman, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 12446) making appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,000 for the purchase by the Joint Committee on the Library of a marble bust of General Lafayette, by David d'Angers, to replace the one destroyed by fire in 1851, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

REPORT OF DIVISION OF SOILS.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I am directed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 106) amending public resolution No. 8, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, approved February 23, 1901, providing for the printing annually of the report on field operations of the Division of Soils, Department of Agriculture, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. NEWLANDS introduced a bill (S. 4846) granting an increase of pension to John Taylor; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN introduced a bill (S. 4847) for the relief of Caroline Jones, widow and executrix of John L. T. Jones, late of Montgomery County, Md.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 4848) to amend section 552 of the Code of Laws for the District of Columbia, relating to incorporations; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SPOONER introduced a bill (S. 4849) granting an honorable discharge to Peter Green; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. PENROSE introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

A bill (S. 4850) granting an increase of pension to Sarah V. Matlack (with an accompanying paper);

A bill (S. 4851) granting a pension to Jennie C. Cole;

A bill (S. 4852) granting a pension to Bernard Closkey;

A bill (S. 4853) granting a pension to Frank Gillespie;

A bill (S. 4854) granting a pension to Louisa V. Bowers (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 4855) granting an increase of pension to Daniel Shelley.

Mr. PENROSE introduced a bill (S. 4856) to correct the military record of John Sailer; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4857) for the relief of Annie White; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOPKINS introduced a bill (S. 4858) granting an increase of pension to J. B. Harvey; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4859) to correct the military record of William Morrison; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. LODGE introduced a bill (S. 4860) for the relief of Mrs. Louisa Mitchell Smith; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HOAR introduced a bill (S. 4861) to appoint an advisory board of public works for the city of Washington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to introduce a bill to amend the act of August 13, 1894. I wish to accept the responsibility myself for the bill; but it has been prepared by an intelligent and competent friend. I have not been able to examine, as I might if I had not been otherwise employed, all the details of the bill, so that if it should turn out that in any respect the bill is deficient, I introduce it with that explanation.

I ask that the bill be referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The bill (S. 4862) to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works," was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. MITCHELL introduced a bill (S. 4863) granting an increase of pension to Charles G. Jenkins; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4864) granting a pension to J. S. Waggener; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FORAKER introduced a bill (S. 4865) granting an increase of pension to John F. Ludington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4866) to correct the military record of Thomas M. Elliott; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also introduced a bill (S. 4867) to amend section 14 of an act entitled "An act to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings," and so forth, passed March 3, 1903; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. ELKINS introduced a bill (S. 4868) to provide for depositing the taxes collected in the District of Columbia with the national banks of said District which are United States depositaries; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. McCREARY introduced the following bills; which were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Claims:

A bill (S. 4869) for the relief of the heirs of Caroline Thompson;

A bill (S. 4870) for the relief of the trustees of the Christian Church of Danville, Ky.;

A bill (S. 4871) for the relief of the trustees of the Baptist Church at Somerset, Ky.;

A bill (S. 4872) for the relief of the heirs of Henry P. Bottom, deceased; and

A bill (S. 4873) for the relief of the trustees of the Baptist Church of Somerset, Ky.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. PETTUS submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to pay to Rittenhouse Moore, out of the unexpended balance of the appropriation made in the act of March 3, 1901, for improving the Potomac River, the sum of $3,633.05, being the amount stated and claimed by him for overwidth dredging in the Potomac River below Washington, D. C., and recommended by the Secretary of War, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 to extend, enlarge, and improve the post-office and court-house building at Birmingham, Ala., etc., intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 for grading, regulating, and macadamizing Albemarle street east from Connecticut avenue extended to Broad Branch road, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,500 for grading and improving Sherman avenue from Florida avenue to Irving street, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. QUAY submitted an amendment granting to the Delaware Indians who have made or acquired improvements in the Cherokee Nation the right to first select from said improved lands their allotments, and during the term of six months thereafter to sell their surplus improvements to other citizens of the Cherokee Nation, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that each Indian allottee in the limits of the Quapaw Agency, Ind. T., to whom a trust or other patent has been issued, may sell and convey all of his or her allotment, excepting 40 acres thereof, which shall be selected as a homestead, and providing for the sale of allotments of minor allottees, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FOSTER of Washington submitted the following amendments, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Commerce:

An amendment proposing to appropriate an additional sum of $6,000 for an additional building or dwelling, cistern, oil house, and other improvements in connection with the New Dungeness light-house station, in the State of Washington;

An amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 for additional employees' quarters at the Robinson Point post light, in the State of Washington; and

An amendment proposing to appropriate an additional sum of $6,000 for the completion of the Battery Point post light, in the State of Washington.

Mr. QUARLES submitted an amendment authorizing the issuance of patents in fee severally to Lotsee Dietrich, Pekin Rowlee, George Chandler, and Louis B. Farwell, members of the Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache tribes of Indians, for the lands heretofore allotted to them, respectively, in the Territory of Oklahoma, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for the salary of the Indian agent at the Shoshone Agency, Wyo., from $1,500 to $1,800, intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORMAN submitted an amendment providing for the payment to Andrew Gleason and Patrick Maloney of the sum of $4,772.89, being the interest due upon a judgment rendered by the Court of Claims in cause No. 16310, between the time when the transcript of judgment was presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for payment and the time said judgment was paid, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. ELKINS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the salaries of the three telephone operators, police department, District of Columbia, from $600 each to $720 each, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

MARTHA C. KUHN.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4179) granting an increase of pension to Martha C. Kuhn; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HEARING BEFORE COMMITTEE ON WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

On motion of Mr. BACON, it was Ordered, That 10,000 copies of the hearing before the United States Senate Committee on Woman Suffrage held in the Marble Room of the United States Senate on the 18th day of February, 1904, be printed for the use of the Senate.

STATUES OF CHARLES CARROLL AND JOHN HANSON.

Mr. PLATT of New York submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to Senate concurrent resolution No. 21, Fifty-second Congress, first session, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendments in lines 7 and 8.

T. C. PLATT,
L. E. MCCOMAS,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. B. LANDIS,
J. B. PERKINS,
F. C. TATE,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

BUILDING LINE ON THE MALL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill for its second reading.

The bill (S. 4880) regulating the erection of buildings on the Mall in the District of Columbia was read the second time by its title.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks on the bill introduced by me yesterday, for I regard it as a bill of great importance and one requiring speedy action.

The bill provides that no building shall be constructed on the Mall within 400 feet of a central line stretching from the Dome of the Capitol to the Washington Monument. It is the purpose of the bill to preserve the vista through the Mall from the Capitol to the Monument, and preserve it from all obstructions.

Mr. GALLINGER. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. NEWLANDS. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was not in yesterday when the Senator introduced the bill. Was it read?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It was read yesterday, and read the second time by title this morning.

Mr. GALLINGER. Is it a brief bill?

Mr. NEWLANDS. It is.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask for the reading of the bill. I am very much interested in this matter, and I should like to know what the bill is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no building shall be erected on the Mall of Washington, D. C., within 400 feet of a central line stretching from the center of the Dome of the Capitol to the center of the Washington Monument.

Mr. GALLINGER. I thank the Senator for permitting the bill to be read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The purpose of the bill is, as I stated, to preserve the vista from the Dome of the Capitol to the Washington Monument as originally designed by L'Enfant under the plan approved by Washington and Jefferson.

Senators, of course, are aware that the plans of Washington were prepared by a French officer under the direction of Washington and were approved by him. That plan involved a Mall stretching from the Capitol to the Washington Monument, 1,600 feet in width and lying between north B street and south B street. The plan of L'Enfant provided that on the outer edges of this reservation, on North B street and South B street, public buildings could be constructed, but it reserved a space in the center of the Mall 1,000 or 1,200 feet wide as a vista between the Dome of the Capitol and the Monument.

In pursuing that plan the Mall was gradually developed from a pasture to its present condition. The public structures that were put upon the Mall were placed pursuant to the plan of L'Enfant on the south side of the Mall, stretching along B street. These buildings are the National Museum, the Smithsonian Institution, and the Department of Agriculture. No buildings were placed upon the north side of the Mall, but there was one building constructed stretching entirely through the Mall, the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad, with which we are all familiar.

Some years ago the Senate of the United States employed a commission, consisting of Mr. Burnham and Mr. McKim, both distinguished architects; Mr. St. Gaudens, the leading sculptor of this country and one of the leading sculptors of the world, and Mr. Frederick Law Olmsted, a landscape engineer of eminence, all of whom had been identified with the forming of the plan for the World's Fair at Chicago, and to them was assigned the duty of preparing a plan for the park system of Washington. These gentlemen turned to the plans of L'Enfant and have scrupulously pursued those plans in the development of the park system of Washington.

So far as the Mall itself was concerned, they modified to some degree L'Enfant's plan so far as the preservation of the vista from the Dome of the Capitol to the Washington Monument was concerned. They narrowed that from 1,000 or 1,200 feet to 800 feet, and they provided that this vista should be over a mile in length and 800 feet in width, consisting of a stretch of grass the entire length and 800 feet in width, and upon each side of this stretch of grass, extending from the Capitol to the Monument, there were to be formal rows of elm trees, four abreast, planted in line, and about 45 feet apart; so that upon each side of this green sward, this carpet of grass, were to be these magnificent rows of elm trees stretching from the Capitol to the Monument. On each side of these elm trees were located park roads of inconsiderable width, stretching in a straight line from the Capitol toward the Monument, and on either side of the 800 feet thus laid out in grass, flanked on either side by rows of elms, were laid aside reservations 400 feet in width for public buildings which might possibly in future be provided for by Congress.

That plan has never yet been formally adopted, but it is simply a completion of the original plan designed by L'Enfant and approved by Washington.

Now, the Congress of the United States, with a view to restoring the original plan, has directed the removal of the station at a cost approximating, I believe, about $3,000,000, to which the Government and the District of Columbia largely contribute. Since that time Congress has ordered the erection of two public buildings, one for the Department of Agriculture and the other for the National Museum. The appropriation made for the Department of Agriculture building was one and one-half million dollars. The appropriation made for the National Museum building was three and one-half million dollars. Both these buildings were to be located upon the Mall, and the question is where shall they be located?

I am told that it is proposed to locate the building for the Agricultural Department in such a way as to trench upon this space, this reservation of 800 feet, intended for the vista, a distance of about 100 feet. That building is to be placed, I believe, in front of the present building and encroaching upon this vista. If so, it will necessarily mean the contraction of the vista 100 feet upon the other side, which will mean that the vista will be contracted in its entirety from 800 feet in width to 600 feet.

Then also it is entirely within the discretion of the authorities who control the Agricultural Department building as to where they will locate this building upon the Mall. There is danger that a similar discretion will be exercised with reference to other buildings, or, rather, lack of discretion, and we may have varying lines; and unless a building line is established by Congress now, there is danger that this space, this vista of 800 feet in width and over a mile in length, will be encroached upon, as it has been in the past, by public structures.

The purpose of this bill, then, is to call upon the District of Columbia Committee to report a building line. It is certainly important that there should be some building line, and the question is whether that building line shall be the original line of L'Enfant, which preserved a space of ten hundred or twelve hundred feet; or whether it shall be the modified line of the park commission, which will reserve the width of only 800 feet, the line recommended by the commission, of which I have spoken; or whether it will be a varying line, according to the discretion of those in charge of the two public buildings about to be constructed.

I wish to state in this connection that there is a popular misconception regarding this vista. It was called in the Times of last evening a grand boulevard stretching from the Capitol to the Monument. That is a misnomer. It is true that L'Enfant in his original plan provided for a grand boulevard stretching from the Capitol to the Monument in this reserved space of ten hundred or twelve hundred feet, and he designed that there should be public buildings upon either side, and that from the Monument to the White House there should be a similar boulevard. But that plan has been modified by the commission, and they have substituted for it simply a carpet of grass, one four-hundred and a mile and a half in length, flanked on either side by the stately rows of elms to which I have referred, thus maintaining a park-like aspect of the Mall, giving it a somewhat formal appearance, resembling the appearance of the mall in Central Park, which is one of the most marked features of that park, resembling also the grand avenue to the park at Florence, and resembling also the parkway which, I believe, was laid out in Savannah, Ga., in colonial times.

Some opposition has arisen against this project of a supposed boulevard, arising from the fact that there is a very popular demand throughout the entire city that the south side of Pennsylvania avenue should be rescued from its present deplorable condition. Public sentiment and the sentiment of Congress has been strongly crystallizing for years in favor of condemning or purchasing the Mall triangle, so called; not a part of the Mall itself, but that portion of the city lying to the south of Pennsylvania avenue and between the Treasury Department and the Capitol, about three blocks wide at the Treasury Department and coming down to a sharp angle at the Capitol, comprising about twenty-five or twenty-six blocks. There is a feeling that the public buildings of the future should be located upon this avenue rather than upon the Mall, and that as long as the Avenue itself is a defective one the Government should not attempt to construct a boulevard through the Mall which will stretch in the same general direction.

The park commission have yielded to that view, and they have substituted for the boulevard provided for by L'Enfant this vista, consisting simply of grass and trees; but they carried out L'Enfant's plan by providing that there shall be no public buildings constructed upon it.

Now, another objection which has been made against this plan is that it has been said it would cost a very large sum. No estimate of cost has ever been made of the cost of the park system of Washington, but I assume that those who are opposed to the project on the ground of its cost take into consideration the cost of possible public buildings and monuments which may be constructed in the future. I think all should agree that the park system should be preserved, that this general plan should be preserved, and then we can determine afterwards as to how far we will go in the expenditures contemplated, which will cover probably a period of one hundred years.

The preservation of the park features themselves will cost very little. This vista stretching from the Capitol to the Monument requires very little grading, and nothing except the planting of grass and the planting of elm trees and the construction of two narrow macadamized roads on each side of the vista, stretching in a straight line from the Capitol to the Washington Monument.

I state these facts because of the popular misconception that exists regarding this proposed improvement, the misconception which causes a great many to believe that the purpose of the commission and the purpose of the Senate in presenting this plan is to build up a boulevard through the Mall that will be a rival to Pennsylvania avenue. They have no possible relation. The one will simply be supplementary to the other, and the improvement of the Mall will not interfere in any way with the contemplated project of condemning the land to the south of Pennsylvania avenue and devoting it to future public or municipal buildings.

I trust that the Committee on the District of Columbia will take this bill into immediate consideration and report some kind of a building line. The National Institute of Architects is exceedingly interested in this matter. These plans have been presented to the entire country in magazines and in lectures, and have received the approval of the country generally; and it seems to me that now is an opportune time to prevent the plans from being marred by the unfortunate and accidental placing of structures about to be erected.

I will ask leave to put in the RECORD certain extracts from the park commission's report showing the nature of the Mall.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and leave is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

The city of Washington, during the century since its foundation, has been [illegible] according to the plans made in 1791 by Maj. Pierre Charles L'Enfant and approved by President Washington. That plan the commission has adopted as the guide for future development, and supplement.

[illegible] "Pennsylvania Avenue," as he termed them, were the cardinal features of L'Enfant's plan; and these [illegible] connected" by a grand avenue, 400 feet in breadth and about a mile in length, [illegible] "a space fronting the mansion on each side." At the point of intersection of the avenue, one drawn through the center of the Capitol, the other drawn through the center of the White House, L'Enfant [illegible] an equestrian statue of Washington, one of the [illegible] statues voted by the Continental Congress, but never erected.

* * * * * * *

THE MALL.

Having considered the Capitol grounds and the areas related thereto, we come now to that long stretch of territory designed to furnish the park [illegible] means of communication between [illegible] and the [illegible] departments. It is interesting to note that although this space has been cut into pieces, some of which have been highly developed according to the landscape art of the day, as for example, the grounds of the Smithsonian Institution and the Agricultural Department, and while other portions have been diverted from their original purposes, as in the case of the sections given up to the Botanic Garden and the Baltimore and Potomac Railroad, still the L'Enfant idea of treating the entire space as a unit has never been entirely lost sight of.

* * * * * * *

The axis of the Capitol and Monument is clearly defined by an expanse of unbroken green a mile and a half long and 800 feet broad, walled on either side by elms planted in formal phalanxes, in four abreast. Bordering this green carpet, rows, park-like in character, stretch between Capitol and Monument, while beneath the elms one may walk or drive protected from the sun. Examples of this treatment abound in England and on the Continent of Europe, and also may be found in our own country in those towns, both North and South, which were laid out during the colonial era. Moreover, these two plantations of elms traversed by paths are similar in character to [illegible] in Central Park, New York, which is justly regarded as one of the most beautiful features of that park.

* * * * * * *

The [illegible] Mr. Glenn Brown, in describing the park commission, says:

The Capitol building is the crowning feature on the east [illegible] it were grouped [illegible] [illegible] Square, with institutions with [illegible] Square and [illegible] the Mall. From Union Square to the Monument [illegible] Avenue, [illegible] Mall [illegible] Monument [illegible] [illegible] of 1,500 feet in width at the Monument [illegible] and some which appear [illegible] by any other treatment.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, before the Senator from Nevada takes his seat, I should like to ask him one or two questions for information.

The Senator has given this matter much more thought than I have been able to do, notwithstanding I am chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia; but I have been overwhelmed with other work.

The Senator speaks of the two contemplated buildings, that for the Department of Agriculture and that for the National Museum, trenching upon the avenue or vista the Senator desires to have established. I will ask him under whose direction the building of those structures is now placed? I ought to know, but I do not recollect.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know under whose direction the construction of the National Museum is placed, but I believe the construction of the building for the Department of Agriculture is under the control of the Secretary of Agriculture. I do not know, either, where the National Museum building is to be placed. I do not know whether the proposed location for the Museum building trenches upon this space or not, but I am informed that the location of the building for the Department of Agriculture runs over the vista at least 100 feet.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada is correct with reference to the Department of Agriculture. That building is to be constructed under the direction of the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has been suggested to me that the President of the United States has some control over the location of the National Museum building. I do not know how that may be. Does the Senator know whether that is the case or not?

Mr. NEWLANDS. I do not know.

Mr. GALLINGER. There is another matter. Possibly, my attention having been diverted, I did not understand the Senator. The Senator spoke of this magnificent thoroughfare, vista, whatever we may call it, and if I understood the Senator correctly, he says that in the original plan it was not intended that any buildings should face that avenue. Was I correct in understanding the Senator to say that?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; as I understand it, in L'Enfant's plan there was a narrow strip, a much narrower strip than is provided by the present commission, running through the Mall on North B street and on South B street for such buildings, and then between there was to be this grand boulevard, flanked by trees, etc., for which the commission has substituted a carpet of green.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is in sympathy with me in his desire to have the public buildings located on the south side of the Avenue. He does not contend that the building for the Department of Agriculture or the building for the National Museum should not face this contemplated vista?

Mr. NEWLANDS. No, I do not; though my individual opinion is that it would have been much better if we had placed them on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue.

My idea with reference to that is that the original plan should be carried out: that so far as this Capitol Hill is concerned, it should be reserved for the legislative department, the Supreme Court, the Congressional Library, and the office buildings for Congressmen and Senators now in contemplation on either side of the Capitol Park. Then, so far as Lafayette Square is concerned, it seems to me that that is a proper location for the Executive Departments. The original design was that the Departments of State, of Justice, of War, of the Navy, and of the Treasury should be immediately adjoining the White House, and they were so located. Those Departments have grown beyond their present accommodations, and a new Department—that of Commerce—has recently been created. It seems to me entirely proper that as to the buildings necessary to accommodate this growth they should be located on either side of Lafayette Square and convenient to the White House.

But that would not interfere at all with the ultimate building up of the south side of Pennsylvania avenue by other public buildings which it will be necessary to construct, such as buildings for the Geological Survey, which has become a very large department, the municipal building, the armory building that is contemplated, and the great public market which ought to be constructed by the District itself one of these days, instead of leaving the unsatisfactory condition that exists now upon the public reservation, and other structures of that kind.

It seems to me that all the public buildings authorized in the near future should be either on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue or upon either side of Lafayette Square, and that no buildings should be for the present constructed upon the Mall. These spaces in the Mall can be reserved until after Pennsylvania avenue is appropriately built up, and meanwhile the Mall can be used in its entirety as a park and laid out as the commission has planned it. The entire Mall triangle should, in my judgment, be purchased immediately. It will not do to purchase it block by block as buildings are required, for that will be much more costly, and, besides, the proper architectural treatment of the south side of the Avenue requires treatment of the whole front in its entirety and the readjustment of the streets in this triangle.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will simply add that I am in entire sympathy with the Senator in the purpose of this bill so far as the establishment of a building line is concerned. I think that ought to be done. I will say to the Senator that the committee will promptly take that matter up and hear all interested parties with the purpose of reaching a satisfactory conclusion.

Now, as to the south side of the Avenue and the Mall, it is gratifying to us all that in the near future the unsightly structures belonging to the Pennsylvania Railroad will be removed from the Mall. As soon as the Union Station is built we will then get rid of that encroachment, which perhaps ought never to have been allowed.

So far as the public market is concerned, located, as I think, in a very undesirable place, the rights that market company had, I think for thirty years, have expired, and if I remember correctly the provisions of the law are that the Government can purchase these buildings, without any reference to good will, at a proper value. So it is to be hoped that not only will we get rid of the railroad depot and its train sheds, but likewise that market, and have it placed in a more desirable part of the city.

So I think we have reason to hope, if we go along carefully and conservatively and judiciously, as we construct these new buildings we will protect the Mall and at the same time greatly improve the south side of the Avenue, which it is a very desirable thing to do.

I think the Senator has done a service to the District and the country in introducing the bill.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the bill passes from consideration, I wish to express the hope that the committee will investigate this whole question with care. There is already upon the statute books provision for the erection of a new Museum building and also for the erection of a building for the Department of Agriculture.

As I understand the question, it is whether this vista or boulevard, whatever you choose to term it, shall be 800 feet in width or 600 feet. I think that has been very carefully looked into by a good many people who know a great deal about this question, and they have finally determined, I think, upon 600 feet. As I understand the proposition of the Senator from Nevada, it is to provide that there shall be 800 instead of 600 feet.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President——

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the Senator from Massachusetts permit me just a moment?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I stated that the effect of the decision of the Department of Agriculture would be to narrow this space to 600 feet. Perhaps it was inaccurate to say that. The difficulty now is that there is no line established by law, and the next Department provided for would put up a building 200 feet across the line, or put the building right in the middle.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree that it is necessary to have a provision of law on this subject, but it occurs to me, and I think it occurs to a good many other people, that 600 feet is quite a good width for a space between the buildings.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I rose merely to ask the Senator from Iowa, who alluded to the pending buildings for the Museum, etc., what has become of the plan for a great bridge, which we had before us a year or two ago? Is that still pending?

Mr. ALLISON. The memorial bridge?

Mr. HOAR. Yes; at the end of this boulevard. Was the bill passed by the Senate?

Mr. GALLINGER. It passed the Senate this year.

Mr. ALLISON. I am very glad to know that it has been considered. It is to cost only $5,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. I will say that in passing it through the Senate this year we opened it to all competition, so far as architects are concerned, while the previous bills were not quite as liberal in that regard.

Mr. ALLISON. I understand also that the cost has been limited to $5,000,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. It has.

Mr. ALLISON. That is a great safeguard.

Mr. GALLINGER. Now, just one further observation.

In saying that the committee would take this matter up for early and careful consideration, I did not mean at all to commit myself to the proposition embraced in this bill that this so-called "vista" shall be 800 feet wide. That would be a matter for the consideration of the committee and of Congress, of course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill having been read twice, will be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. PROCTOR. I trust the Senator from Minnesota will allow me to move that the army bill may now be taken up. I will then yield to the Senator.

Mr. NELSON. Very well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

MINNESOTA RIVER BRIDGES.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON]?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do on condition that the bill for which the Senator asks consideration will lead to no discussion.

Mr. NELSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House bill 8160, which is a local bill and will lead to no discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 8160) to authorize the construction of bridges across a portion of the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CLAIM OF JOHN S. MOSBY.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. PROCTOR. If the matter gives rise to no discussion.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 952, a bill that has previously passed the Senate, referring the claim of John S. Mosby to the Court of Claims. At three different sessions the bill has been unanimously recommended by the Committee on Claims, and I imagine it will lead to no debate.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 952) to refer the claim of John S. Mosby against the United States for the value of certain tobacco to the Court of Claims. It provides that the claim of John S. Mosby for the value of 7,900 pounds, more or less, of tobacco, mentioned in an official paper dated at Rocketts Landing, Richmond, Va., July 27, 1865, signed "W. H. D. Coolbran, major, depot quartermaster," and purporting to give a "list of captured tobacco marked in the name of Col. J. S. Mosby, transferred to Col. J. S. Loomis, Treasury agent, June 7, 1865," be referred to the Court of Claims with full jurisdiction to try and adjudicate the claim and render judgment against the United States in such sum as may be found just by the court, without the interposition in behalf of the Government of any bar arising from the existing statutes of limitations.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MINING CLAIMS.

Mr. HEYBURN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3298) to amend section 2326 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to mining claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that all suits brought pursuant to the provisions of section 2326 of the Revised Statutes in support of an adverse claim filed in any United States land office against an application for patent for a mining claim shall be deemed actions at law, to be tried as other actions at law are tried in the courts having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the suit.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HARBOR OF NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I appeal to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] to allow a bill to be passed relating to a modification of the improvement of the harbor of New Haven. It will take no time.

Mr. PROCTOR. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 1734) to provide for the modification of the project for the improvement of the harbor of New Haven, Conn.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 10, after the word "feet," to insert "deep and of such increased width as may be desirable and practicable;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of War is authorized to make such modification of the project for the improvement of New Haven Harbor, New Haven, Conn., adopted in the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, and extended in the river and harbor act of June 13, 1902, so as to revise the channel in Quinnipiac River from Tomlinson Bridge to Ferry Street Bridge 20 feet deep and of such increased width as may be desirable and practicable: Provided, That the cost of completing the project as fixed by the said act of March 3, 1899, shall not be increased by reason of such modification.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TITLE TO LANDS IN INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. LONG. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration at this time of the bill (S. 3305) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to acquire the title to lands within certain Indian reservations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This bill has been heretofore read in full to the Senate, and when it was under consideration the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] objected to it.

Mr. LONG. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] has withdrawn his objection.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is informed that the objection on the part of the Senator from Minnesota has been withdrawn.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it has.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS RELATING TO DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] yields for me to make a request.

I ask unanimous consent that on Saturday of the present week, after the routine morning business, the remainder of the day, until 2 o'clock, be given to the consideration of bills reported by the Committee on the District of Columbia, not to interfere with the consideration of appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that on Saturday next, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, until 2 o'clock, the Senate shall give consideration to District of Columbia bills, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. Under Rule VIII?

Mr. GALLINGER. Under Rule VIII.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order is made.

Mr. PROCTOR. I now ask for the regular order. Mr. President.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. What was the order made on the request of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER]?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request made by the Senator from New Hampshire was that on Saturday next, immediately after the conclusion of the routine morning business, until 2 o'clock, consideration should be given to District of Columbia bills, under Rule VIII, not to interfere with appropriation bills.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Is it for that day?

Mr. GALLINGER. It is for just two hours.

Mr. FAIRBANKS. Very well. I do not, however, want a unanimous-consent agreement made that would prevent taking up the bill (S. 1508) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection thereon of a public building to be used for a Department of State, a Department of Justice, and a Department of Commerce and Labor.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives still further insisting on its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 9480) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, and asking for a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. CULLOM. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked for by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. CULLOM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TELLER were appointed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 255) for the relief of the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.;

A bill (S. 334) for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co.;

A bill (S. 721) for the relief of Darwin S. Hall;

A bill (S. 833) for the relief of Joseph M. Simms, captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired); and

A bill (S. 2696) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John F. Weston the sum of $241.60, etc.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 1909) to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land;

A bill (H. R. 10136) authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory;

A bill (S. 2323) relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation; and

A bill (S. 3317) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian lands.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 10670) making appropriation for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PROCTOR. I have been obliged to refuse other Senators, and I must insist on proceeding with the army bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Very well.

Mr. PROCTOR. An amendment is pending, at the bottom of page 23. I move that the final clause, requiring a report to be made to the committees of the two Houses of Congress, shall be stricken out. I refer to the last two lines requiring that a statement of the amount thereof shall be furnished to the chairmen of the Committees on Military Affairs of the Senate and House of Representatives on the reassembling of Congress. I move that those words be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They were stricken out yesterday.

Mr. PROCTOR. I did not understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the amendment went over and has not been agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the question is now pending.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont as amended. It will be again stated to the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understand that the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who asked to have that amendment go over, has no objection to the main amendment now.

Mr. ALLISON. Since yesterday I have looked into this matter, and I think it is an improvement upon the House provision.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Philippine Scouts," on page 23, line 24, after the word "purposes," to insert the following proviso:

And provided further, That within the discretion of the Secretary of War it shall be lawful to pay the salaries of officers and the pay of enlisted men, as herein provided, to the extent of 25 per cent thereof, in Philippine currency, at the ratio of 2 Philippine pesos for $1 in United States currency.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Subsistence Department," on page 26, line 21, to increase the total appropriation for the purchase of subsistence supplies from $6,500,000 to $7,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued down to page 27, line 24.

Mr. PROCTOR. At that point, after the word "animals," I had an amendment to propose, but I think the Senator from Wyoming desires to offer a similar amendment.

Mr. WARREN. On page 27, line 24, before the semicolon, and after the word "animals," I should like to propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 27, line 24, after the word "animals," it is proposed to insert:

And nothing in the act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1905 shall hereafter be held or construed so as to deprive officers of the Army, wherever on duty in the military service of the United States, of forage, bedding, shoeing, or shelter for their authorized number of horses, or of any means of transportation or maintenance therefor for which provision is made by the terms of this act.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. May a layman ask what the real effect of that amendment is?

Mr. WARREN. It has the effect of leaving matters as they are now.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. What was the matter in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, to which reference is made?

Mr. WARREN. I will say that there was an addition made to the legislative, etc., appropriation bill by the other House which might be construed to prevent the allowance of any forage for the use of any horses of officers of the United States Army. This is to construe the law, or it is to provide legislation whereby the officers of the Army may not be disturbed, as they might be disturbed by the provision in the other bill.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the amendment again be stated.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it is entirely proper. I simply wished to understand it.

Mr. SPOONER. Let the amendment be again read.

Mr. CULLOM. I should like to hear the amendment read before we vote on it.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. CULLOM. I desire to say that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which is referred to in the amendment as containing the clause which the amendment seeks to guard against, is in the other House, where the amendments made by the Senate have been disagreed to. If it comes back here for another consideration by a conference committee, it may be that possibly the end of the matter will be to strike out the whole clause. I think probably that ought to be done, but, at any rate, there is no law now that requires this amendment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Then it could be dropped out?

Mr. CULLOM. Yes; I think so.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, under the subhead "Quartermaster's Department," on page 28, line 3, to increase the total appropriation for regular supplies of the Quartermaster's Department from $4,800,000 to $5,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 33, after line 6, to insert:

Barracks and quarters, Isthmus of Panama: For the proper shelter and protection of officers and enlisted men of the Army of the United States lawfully on duty on the Isthmus of Panama, including the acquisition of title when necessary, and including also shelter for the animals and supplies, and all other buildings necessary for post administration purposes, $100,000, to be immediately available.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, line 9, to increase the total appropriation for the transportation of the Army and its supplies from $14,500,000 to $15,000,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 9, to insert:

For continuing the construction of a military wagon road from Valdez by the most practical route to Fort Egbert or Eagle, on the Yukon River, in the district of Alaska, $250,000; said wagon road to be surveyed, located, and constructed under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I suggest that in line 11 the word "practical" should be stricken out and the word "practicable" substituted. It is evidently a mistake in printing.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEAN in the chair). Without objection, that change will be made. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 15, to insert:

For locating and constructing a military trail, under the direction of the Secretary of War, by the shortest and most practicable route, between the Yukon River and Coldfoot, on the Koyukuk River, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 36, after line 19, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to cause to be constructed across the Spokane River in the county of Spokane, in the State of Washington, at such point as may be most advantageous for the Government service at Fort Wright Military Reservation, a bridge, and may permit the use of such bridge by the city of Spokane for the maintenance of the water main and may make such arrangements as may be deemed best with the city of Spokane and the county of Spokane for the maintenance of a good macadamized road to said bridge, and make such regulations and requirements as may be deemed fair and just for the use of said bridge by the people of Spokane and by any corporation or company. To carry into effect the foregoing provision, the sum of $80,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated: Provided, That this appropriation shall not be available until the title shall be acquired and vested in the United States to sufficient land to accommodate the terminal abutments and necessary approaches for said bridge and until jurisdiction over the same shall be duly conferred upon the Government of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 37, line 17, after the word "cloth," to strike out "woolen" and insert "woolens;" so as to read:

Clothing, and camp and garrison equipage: For cloth, woolens, materials, and for the manufacture of clothing for the Army, for issue and for sale at cost price, according to the Army Regulations, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, line 10, after the word "Arkansas," to strike out "except quarters for the officers;" in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four hundred and seventy-five" and insert "three hundred and eighty;" and in line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert:

of which sum not to exceed $50,000 may be used to build a modern hospital at Fort Riley, Kans.; $20,000 to build a modern hospital at Fort Totten, N. Y.; $20,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; $25,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Snelling, Minn.; $30,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and $30,000 for the erection of a modern hospital at Fort Clark, Tex.

So as to make the clause read:

Construction and repair of hospitals: For construction and repair of hospitals at military posts already established and occupied, including the extra-duty pay of enlisted men employed on the same, and repairs and alterations of expenditures for construction and repairs required at the Army and Navy Hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and for the construction and repair of general hospitals and expenses incident thereto, and for additions needed to meet the requirements of increased garrisons, $800,000; of which sum not to exceed $50,000 may be used to build a modern hospital at Fort Riley, Kans.; $20,000 to build a modern hospital at Fort Totten, N. Y.; $20,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Leavenworth, Kans.; $25,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Snelling, Minn.; $25,000 to enlarge the hospital at Fort Sheridan, Ill., and $30,000 for the erection of a modern hospital at Fort Clark, Tex.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 7, to increase the appropriation for shooting galleries and ranges from $35,000 to $39,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 7, to insert:

That for the purpose of equipping and maintaining a national rifle range at Fort Riley, Kans., for the use of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, organized militia of the States, Territories, and District of Columbia, and civilian rifle clubs, the sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That this sum shall be immediately available and be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Ordnance Department," on page 44, line 23, after the word "ammunition," to insert "to the materials therefor;" and on page 45, line 7, before the word "thousand," to strike out "eight hundred and twenty-five" and insert "one million one hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

Ordnance, ordnance stores, and supplies: Manufacture or purchase of metallic ammunition and the materials therefor for small arms for current needs and reserve supply, and ammunition for exercising cartridges, including the cost of targets and material for target practice, ammunition for burials at the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers and its several Branches, including National Soldiers' Home in Washington, D. C., marksmen's medals and insignia for all arms of the service, $1,150,298, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 24, to insert:

For 3,000 medals of honor to be prepared, with suitable emblematic devices, upon the design of the medal of honor heretofore issued, or upon an improved design, together with appropriate rosettes or other insignia to be worn in lieu of the medal, and to direct that the same be presented, in the name of Congress, to such officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates as have most distinguished, or may hereafter most distinguish, themselves by their gallantry in action, $12,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to use so many of the medals and rosettes or other insignia provided for by this act as may be necessary to replace the medals that have been issued under the joint resolution of Congress approved July 12, 1862, and section 6 of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863: And provided further, That whenever it shall appear from official records in the War Department that any officer or enlisted man of the Army so distinguished himself in action as to entitle him to the award of the Congressional medal of honor under the provisions of the sixth section of the act of Congress approved March 3, 1863, entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and naval expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1864, and for the year ending the 30th of June, 1863, and for other purposes," the fact that the person who so distinguished himself has since become separated from the military service, or that the award of the medal to him was not specifically recommended or applied for while he was in the said service, shall not be held to prevent the award and presentation of the medal to such person under the provisions of the law hereinbefore cited.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any special case to which the latter clauses of the amendment are intended to apply?

Mr. WARREN. The amendment is not intended to apply to any special case, but not long since, on the submission of a certificate-of-merit matter to the Attorney-General, he gave it as his opinion that a certificate of merit or other distinction would have to be awarded while the man was still in the service. Under the law, or under the construction which had been previously placed upon the law, the practice has been that where it was proved that a medal had been earned and sufficient evidence submitted to the Secretary of War the President would issue it. But the opinion of the Attorney-General placed the board having the award of medals in charge in such a position that it thought best to suspend consideration of the question of granting any further medals sought for gallantry in the civil war, or any other war, after the person had become separated from the service. Of course that cut out all the civil-war volunteers and most of those who were in the Spanish war.

Mr. SPOONER. Does this grant medals to men not connected with the service?

Mr. WARREN. Not those who never have been in the Army; but the man need have been in the service but two days, provided he earned the medal while in service. Medals only can be granted for exceptional gallantry while in the service.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course; but what I mean is——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that it is impossible for the reporter to hear him.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not think it important that he should hear this colloquy.

Mr. TELLER. I wish to ask the Senator who has the floor what difference there is between this proposed law and the old act?

Mr. WARREN. I will say to the Senator that there were two acts. The first resolution provided that medals might be issued to noncommissioned officers and privates for acts of gallantry already done.

Mr. TELLER. Acts in action?

Mr. WARREN. Yes; and more. The first resolution stated that medals might be issued to noncommissioned officers and privates for exceptional gallantry in action or for other soldier-like qualities.

Mr. TELLER. When was that act passed?

Mr. WARREN. In 1862. Then in 1863 an act was passed which provided that they should be issued to officers (a provision which was not contained in the other), noncommissioned officers, and men, and confined it to rewards for exceptional gallantry in battle only, leaving off the words "or other soldierlike qualities." The Department soon after that—after some medals had been issued to those who did not earn them in the regular way—made rules and proceeded under the second resolution awarding medals for action in battle only. It is deemed best, in amending at the present time, to state the construction herein plainly that it should be for exceptional gallantry in action only. That is the rule, however, which has been followed mainly for a number of years.

Mr. TELLER. From a hasty examination of the proposed amendment it is somewhat difficult to see what its relation may be to the former statute.

Mr. WARREN. I have before me the other statute, if the Senator would like to have it read.

Mr. TELLER. No; I do not care about having it read. I should like to know whether the medals are confined to persons who distinguish themselves in battle, in action.

Mr. WARREN. Absolutely.

Mr. TELLER. There is no discretion in the Secretary of War to grant a medal to some man who has distinguished himself otherwise than in battle?

Mr. WARREN. No. This provides exactly what the Senator states. The medals can be issued only for exceptional gallantry in battle.

Mr. TELLER. I have seen a medal, or at least I have seen the statement that a medal was issued by the Secretary of War within a few years to a distinguished officer, somewhat distinguished now because of his rapid elevation to the position he occupies, and one he expects to occupy, and I understand that when it was issued the officer had never been in action in his life; that he had never been under fire at all. But the remarkable statement is that for about a week, in some Indian campaign, he was daily in danger of being fired on. I had an idea that almost all soldiers in active warfare are in danger of being fired on. I do not know that it indicates any great moral or physical courage in a soldier that he continues to march with his associates when he is in danger of being fired on. Probably that was the safest place for him. He could not retire.

Mr. SPOONER. And if a medal was granted to one under such circumstances all would be entitled to it.

Mr. TELLER. As has been suggested, if one man is entitled to a medal for that, all our soldiers are.

I suppose the purpose of any medal is to give a recognition of some soldierlike conduct, something that is worthy the attention not only of the soldier, but of the country. And keeping that in view, of course it becomes a matter of great interest to the soldier to receive for some such action a medal. I know a number of soldiers who have received them. I know that if medals are to be issued under such conditions as those under which the one I have mentioned was issued, they will cease to be of any value whatever to the soldiers who have them or who may hereafter get them.

For that reason I made the inquiry. If this is confined to heroism in battle I have no objection to the medal, and I shall be glad to see a good many of them issued, because I think in any war we may have there will be occasion to issue them.

Mr. WARREN obtained the floor.

Mr. CARMACK. Will the Senator permit me for a moment?

Mr. WARREN. I wish just here, if the Senator will permit me to proceed, to state exactly what this amendment does provide for.

Mr. NELSON. May I ask the Senator from Wyoming a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I could not exactly hear all that was going on. Is the amendment limited to bravery in action, and so that no medals will be issued to anybody except soldiers or officers who have distinguished themselves in battle?

Mr. WARREN. I will read it to the Senator:

That the same be presented, in the name of Congress, to such officers, noncommissioned officers, and privates as have most distinguished, or may hereafter most distinguish, themselves by their gallantry in action.

I desire to say, answering the observations of the Senator from Colorado, that I presume I know of the medal to which he referred.

Mr. TELLER. I presume so.

Mr. WARREN. I have seen the statements in the newspapers; but I am informed by those who ought to know that the officer in question did take charge of a company in an Indian battle or skirmish, and therefore came under the rule. I do not vouch for that. I am simply stating what is reputed to be true.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, any statement of that kind is not true, for there was no skirmish and no battle in that whole trip. I am sufficiently advised on that whole subject.

Mr. WARREN. Very well; I will not pursue that matter further. But it is a fact that medals were issued. I think they were issued to soldiers who bore the body of Lincoln after his death and to others for acts not in battle, and this simply takes a narrower view, or a narrower scope rather, than that which could be pursued by the Department under the act of 1863, and is confined to those who most distinguish themselves by their gallantry in action.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the Senator from Wyoming if it does not take too narrow a view?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think so.

Mr. SPOONER. I have read or heard of cases, if I have not known of them, where an enlisted man or a noncommissioned officer or a commissioned officer has won a medal of honor, if a man ever won it, by a ride of two or three hundred miles in order to bring relief, to carry a report to headquarters of a beleaguered fort and one in desperate straits. I can imagine instances, and it is not simply imagination either, because history is full of such cases, where men have performed, not in action, but in connection with the discharge of soldierly duty, that which to the common apprehension of fair-minded men, would distinguish them and ought to distinguish them.

It is not much encouragement to soldiers to render great service, conspicuous service, to limit this particular decoration or award of this sort to action in battle.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I think the Senator is entirely right that such a soldier should have preferment. In fact, under the laws, there are now ways of preferment. There are brevets for commissioned officers; certificates of merit, etc., for men. But it has been considered with regard to this particular decoration, the Congressional medal of honor, that it should be awarded for but one thing—gallantry in action. It is not the intention to detract from those who may in other ways win commendation, but it is a particular decoration for a particular line of gallant action in actual battle.

Mr. SPOONER. What other method does this legislation leave for the other class of cases?

Mr. WARREN. This does not change the legislation at all for such cases. It simply recites the resolution of 1863 rather than the resolution of 1862. The resolution of 1862 is considered obsolete and has not been proceeded upon for many years.

Mr. SPOONER. Would it not be wise to provide for medals to private soldiers or noncommissioned officers for heroic acts outside the field of battle?

Mr. WARREN. I do not think so, in this amendment. I do not think they could be linked together; that is all.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not see any reason why the two should not be linked together. It seems to me, if we are enacting legislation to enable the Government to decorate soldiers who by conspicuous service, whether in action or otherwise, have entitled themselves to that reward, we ought to adapt the language of the law to it.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President, there is one side of this question which I wish to bring briefly to the attention of the Senate, and that is that some men who won medals and were recommended for medals seem to have been overlooked in their distribution. I knew a young man in my State who was recommended for a medal of honor because of gallant services on the field of battle. He was wounded by the Moros in defending a comrade who had fallen. He was recommended for a medal, but the last I heard of it he had never received it. He said to me that he was not going to ask for it or make any pressure to get it, and preferred not to say anything about it; that if the War Department did not think he deserved it, to let it go. The last time I heard from him he had never received his medal, and it was awarded in a case of very conspicuous gallantry.

Mr. WARREN. That brings up the importance of this amendment. There are a great many applications and a great many papers that have been approved, and the Department would be glad to issue the medals to-day except for the intimation of the Attorney-General that they only can be legally issued where the soldier is still in the service. This amendment seeks, among other things, to clear that situation up and make the law apply so that they can get the medals.

Mr. CARMACK. The soldier must be still in the service?

Mr. WARREN. Under present construction of the law.

Mr. CARMACK. I think the recommendation was made while he was still in the service. I am very sure it was; but he was discharged because of the disability received on the occasion of his gallant conduct.

Mr. WARREN. Now, it is to dispose of that uncertainty and situation that this amendment is offered. This clears up that class of cases and allows medals which have been earned to be bestowed.

Mr. CARMACK. I am very glad to have that explanation from the Senator.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Military Affairs was, on page 47, line 18, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and made immediately available;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of procuring field artillery material for the organized militia of the several States, Territories, and the District of Columbia, without cost to the said States, Territories, or the District of Columbia, but to remain the property of the United States and to be accounted for in the manner now prescribed by law, the Secretary of War is hereby authorized, under such regulations as he may prescribe, on the requisitions of the governors of the several States and Territories or the commanding general of the militia of the District of Columbia, to issue said artillery material to the organized militia; and the sum of $500,000 is hereby appropriated and made immediately available for the procurement and issue of the articles constituting the same.

Mr. TELLER. It seems to me that this applies only to material to be furnished.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is for artillery material. The artillery would go with the battery.

Mr. TELLER. I should say that it does not contemplate furnishing any artillery, and what is the use of furnishing material unless the artillery is provided?

Mr. PROCTOR. The artillery is furnished.

Mr. WARREN. It will be furnished under the regular appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. And not under this provision?

Mr. WARREN. No.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 21, before the word "repairing," to insert "overhauling, cleaning;" in line 22, after the word "and," where it occurs the second time, to strike out "for issue;" in line 23, after the word "arsenals," to insert "posts;" in the same line, after the word "depots," to strike out "$75,000. For" and insert: "; for;" on page 48, line 1, before the word "infantry," to strike out "$600,000. For" and insert "; for;" and in line 4, before the word "dollars," to strike out "nine hundred thousand" and insert "one million six hundred and twenty-five thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

For overhauling, cleaning, repairing, and preserving ordnance and ordnance stores in the hands of troops and at the arsenals, posts, and depots; for purchase and manufacture of ordnance stores to fill requisitions of troops; for infantry, cavalry, and artillery equipments, including horse equipments for cavalry and artillery, $1,625,000.

Mr. ALLISON. If I understand this particular paragraph, it is so amended as to make it a single appropriation.

Mr. PROCTOR. A single appropriation. It is the consolidation, without any change of amount, of three clauses.

Mr. ALLISON. Then I think the semicolon ought to be stricken out in line 24, page 47. Otherwise the first two items will have no appropriation.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is correct. Let the semicolon go out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In line 24, before the word "for," the semicolon will be stricken out. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 4, to strike out:

For overhauling, cleaning, and preserving new ordnance and ordnance stores on hand at the arsenals, posts, and depots, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 6, to insert:

All funds received as the value of machinery stores manufactured by the ordnance department of the Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, in the United States shall be deposited in the treasury of the United States and shall remain available during the fiscal year 1905 for the procurement of like machinery stores to replace those so manufactured.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, after line 21, to insert:

Hereafter all moneys arising from depositions taken and by law and regulations of service authorized to be taken, and all moneys received for the sale of unserviceable property, shall be credited on the books of the Treasury Department to the appropriation for the manufacture of ordnance and ordnance stores for the year in which the same may be received, and such moneys are hereby made available for such purpose. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to sell to American citizens, on demand, ordnance stores as may not be necessary for the public service, at such rates as may be fixed in the regulations governing the sale of such stores, which shall be not less than the cost of manufacture. Ordnance and ordnance stores can be sold for the purpose and under the regulations given above to the militia of the several States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 18, after the word "Army," to insert "except as herein specially provided;" so as to make the clause read:

Nothing in this act shall be so construed as to deprive any officer of his commission or to increase the total number of officers of the Army, except as herein specially provided, and all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. I wish the acting chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs would explain the necessity of the amendment on pages 49 and 50, relating to ordnance and ordnance stores, whereby all appropriations for this purpose become a single fund. I can see very well why that should be necessary in some particular cases, as respects pay, etc., but it seems to me there ought to be some reason for this provision that is not apparent.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will ask the Secretary to read the note on page 10 of the report, the fine print, beginning with the word "Note."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

NOTE.—The object of the proposed legislation is to simplify the methods of accounting for ordnance and ordnance stores, which, as now [illegible] are made to a number of appropriations, requiring the keeping of many accounts to the disadvantage of the service. Under the proposed law the money received for such property will be credited to the appropriation current at the time of receipt. Machinery of an obsolete pattern and remains available for two years in public hands, when it is made to the Ordnance Department, the money therefor being credited to the appropriation under which the supplies were procured, but the authority is limited to the fiscal year, which is a serious matter in the case of the Army, which, with the exception of a few years, has been under a system of biennial appropriations. Various other purposes, out of which the supplies were procured, which it would be a hardship to charge to any one year, [illegible] the money reverts to the appropriation. Moreover, the sale of ordnance property is made from the pay of a soldier.

It seems to be a very great loss to the Government to have confusion as respects officers detailed, and I do not want to run any risk in that regard.

Mr. PROCTOR. I am sorry that the Senator has compelled me to say anything on that score.

Mr. ALLISON. I will withdraw what I said.

Mr. PROCTOR. It will lead to no possible confusion. I have a letter here from the Adjutant-General. I should like to have it read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not ask to keep this clause in, but I should like to have it understood that it is all easy of administration

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 8, 1904.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Acting Chairman Committee on Military Affairs,
United States Senate.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry whether the provision in the army bill in regard to the number of officers for the general staff of the infantry of the Army for service in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rican regiment and the provision that the [illegible] shall be [illegible] or promotion or appointment [illegible] I will say that it is feasible. It is practicable, the same system that has been followed for many years past in the matter of adjustment of the lists for service in the various staff corps. There is no point of doubt in regard to the number of administration. The vacancies so created are filled by appointment or promotion in the [illegible] from the grades of which the vacancy is made, and [illegible] promotion are [illegible] in the east.

Very respectfully,

W. P. HALL,
Acting Adjutant-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, in speaking of immunes, that question did not appear to be fully understood. The Porto Ricans would undoubtedly be immunes on the Isthmus; and also to a great extent any people living in a tropical country, but it would depend upon their acclimation.

The chief surgeon of the force that built the Panama Railroad was there from the beginning to the end. His name was Rogers, a classmate of mine, and I saw him frequently after the road was built. He stated that the turning up of the soil near the sea was poisonous. They first took several thousand men from New York, and no one of them, he said, was able to do two weeks' work. They got away from there as soon as they could; but a very large proportion of them died before they could get them back. They were poisoned by turning up the soil of Panama, which is very fatal.

They then secured Chinamen, and the process was just as fatal to them. The survivors did not wait to die from that poison, but they commenced committing suicide. They then tried the employment of the natives, who were very good hands for work; and the natives were taken sick in the same way. They had not cultivated the soil there, and they could not stand its being turned up.

Then they got Jamaica negroes, who had been cultivating the soil thoroughly in that region for many generations, and they were immunes. I was there on the Isthmus soon after the Panama Railroad was constructed and saw these Jamaica negroes. They were in fine health, and, as I have said, the turning up of the soil did not poison them. They were immune to the turning up of the soil in the Tropics, for they had been accustomed to it for generations.

Natives of the Tropics can stand the climate at Panama a great deal better than can persons from a northern climate. The natives live there and enjoy good health, but they can not dig up the surface of the soil.

In the digging of the canal they will not meet with the same trouble that was encountered in building the railroad, because they will get below the surface and will get into different strata. I inquired of some physicians who have been there, and they said when they got below the surface of the earth it was not any more poisonous than any other earth. That is the dangerous thing.

It is for that purpose they want immunes. I have no doubt that by adopting some modern system of sanitation, and only using immunes for the work on the surface of the soil, they will get along a great deal better with the construction of the canal than has been supposed possible.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not know that I wish to put my personal knowledge of these matters against that of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], but I will put the historical fact against his statement that the West Indian people were by actual trial found not to be immune.

Then I want to challenge another statement made by the Senator——

Mr. STEWART. Does the Senator refer to West India people from Jamaica?

Mr. TELLER. From Santo Domingo. The Porto Rican is not a particle more immune than the New York man or the Florida man.

Mr. STEWART. I am speaking of tropical climates.

Mr. TELLER. I can name men who came across the Isthmus before there was any attempt to break the ground for that railroad who contracted the Chagres fever in crossing. That was a common occurrence. They came across on the railroad, and by the time they reached the mouth of the river they had the fever.

Mr. STEWART. That is very true, but they did not all get it; they did not get it en masse.

Mr. TELLER. They did not get it because they were such a short time in going across.

Mr. STEWART. Some of them were there two or three months.

Mr. TELLER. They got across just as quickly as they could.

Mr. STEWART. They had to stay there a week or two, and sometimes two or three months. There were sometimes four or five thousand there for several months.

Mr. TELLER. I have known a man to cross in two days and to get the Chagres fever before he left there. It is a fever which belongs to that section of the country and nowhere else in the world that we know anything about. No sanitation, in my judgment, will entirely eradicate it. It is largely due to the fact of the long periods of calm at the mouth of the river. Very few people seem to have given any attention to that cause of the fever. It is a place where the breezes do not blow and where ships lie idle sometimes for months, unable to make any movement or speed whatever.

There is a marshy [illegible] along that coast which it is impossible to render healthful to sanitation, and I believe only the Jamaica negroes will come to do this work. The Chinamen could not do it; the people of Honduras who went there could not do it. They were tried, as were people from Santo Domingo, and none of the white inhabitants could stand it. There is a record of 400 men being taken to Panama, and in two weeks [illegible] they were all dead. It is the most frightful climate on the face of the earth, and it would be a crime to take to the Isthmus any soldier from this country or from the Philippines that we are not obliged to take. As I said yesterday, you can get Jamaica negroes of a character that will keep order there if you want a constabulary.

The Jamaican negroes as a rule are good workmen. They are large, able-bodied, powerful men, and not much inclined to disturbance; but, so far as the labor of building this canal is concerned, we might as well understand now as ever that we can not depend upon American labor, but we must depend upon the character of labor I have mentioned. It was thought that the Chinaman could do that work, as the Senator from Nevada has said, but that was tried, and they died so rapidly that those who did not die with the fever preferred to commit suicide. That is the history of that trial.

Mr. President, I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator allow me a moment?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. I simply wish to state that the natives of Porto Rico and other tropical countries can stand the climate of Panama better than can men from the north. That, I think, is well established.

Mr. TELLER. They can stand it very little better.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say a word before the Senator passes from that point.

Mr. TELLER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. FORAKER. I appreciate very much indeed what the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has said. When I spoke in the way I did yesterday as to what occurred in the Committee on Military Affairs, I perhaps should have stated in that connection that we were not aware of what we did or what we said upon any personal knowledge of the conditions there, or what would be the effect if what had been suggested might be done, but we were simply reasoning in a general way upon the probability of, at some time or other, possibly having to send troops there, and that troops who belonged in that region, who were accustomed to that climate, would, as we thought naturally—and I think the Senator will agree—in the absence of information, be better qualified to go there and withstand whatever diseases they might be subjected to than troops from the United States.

I am very much obliged to the Senator for giving us the information he has. It is very valuable and very interesting.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is any danger of soldiers going from Porto Rico—I hope not, at least. I doubt very much whether there will be any large number of soldiers required at all, but I think the Government had better organize a force on the ground, if such a condition arises as that they will be needed, which seems to be the policy of the Government, at least, in Porto Rico and in the Philippines. I do not know why they should not select the Panama people just as well as they would select the Filipinos or the Porto Ricans. I think the Government will send very few soldiers there, unless it is obliged to do so.

I want to submit an amendment on line 11, page 21, if it is in order, and, if it is not, I will wait until the bill has been reported to the Senate.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is still another committee amendment pending.

Mr. TELLER. I will wait, then, until the committee get through with their amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. An amendment to the pending amendment is in order.

Mr. TELLER. I am not quite sure that the amendment I wish to offer is an amendment to the amendment. I find in line 11, on page 21, before the word "battalions," the word "two" has apparently been stricken out and the word "three" inserted. I do not know whether that has been agreed to or not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That has been agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Then I want to move to reconsider the vote by which it was agreed to; or I will ask the Senator from Vermont to consent that the vote may be reconsidered.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator can amend it in the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to amend it now, but I want to say something about it, and I do not want to waste time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado asks that the vote by which the amendment on page 21, line 11, striking out "two" and inserting "three" before the word "battalions," was agreed to be reconsidered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. TELLER. What I desire is that the Senate shall disagree to that amendment. It seems to me that in all the statements made yesterday there has not been any reason shown for an increase of that force, whether it be put upon the ground of enlisting those people to the United States, because they have got their hands into the Treasury to a limited extent, or whether it be put upon the ground that you are proceeding upon an educational line. I do not see any reason for it. It seems that you have two battalions. I do not know how many men there are in two battalions, for I do not know how full the battalions may be. I presume the acting chairman of the committee may be able to tell me how many men there are in those two battalions. If he can tell me, I shall be glad to hear him.

Mr. FORAKER. There ought to be four companies of 100 men each.

Mr. BLACKBURN. About 750 men in the two battalions.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know that they are filled to the maximum; perhaps they are only filled to the minimum, which would be, I believe, 65 men to a company.

Mr. TELLER. If they are not all full, they can be filled under existing law.

Mr. FORAKER. They can be, if necessary.

Mr. TELLER. I do not believe that anybody can go before the American people and give any reasonable excuse for increasing this force. Every regiment that you put into the field will cost the Government of the United States a million dollars. I do not care whether they are Porto Ricans or Filipinos or whoever they may be, by the time you get through with it it will cost fully that amount, and, as a Senator suggests to me, very likely more. Certainly the old rule used to be that you must absolutely expect the expenditure connected with a regiment will be at least a million dollars. Of course it will cost more if the battalions are full.

Mr. President, I dislike to interfere with the committee in a matter of this kind, but it seems to me that it would be wise now to let the provision stand for two battalions and then apply this provision to enlisted men, and so forth. I do not know that that would destroy the amendment; I do not think it would, although I am not quite clear about it. I should like to know whether the acting chairman will consent to a disagreement to the amendment or whether he will insist upon it standing.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, if the acting chairman of the committee does not object to my making answer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], I will say, as I said yesterday, that I have been more active, perhaps, than any other Senator in regard to what concerns Porto Rico, because of my relations with the legislation for that island, and perhaps I have received more communications from there as to the situation, generally speaking, and as to what the people of Porto Rico desire. I hope that the Senator will not insist upon that amendment.

I know that the people of Porto Rico are very anxious—from communications such as I have referred to I know it—to have a full regiment there; and it seems to me that while that is not a vital question, yet, at the same time, it is one of a good deal more importance than the Senator rightly appreciates; at least, I have been led to believe that it will be a great deal of satisfaction to that people, and in that way it will be important as making them better satisfied with their condition and situation.

Now, I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact, as suggested to me by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], although I was going to refer to the same thing in a different way, that a full regiment in the island of Porto Rico is not a very large military provision. They are responsible for the preservation of order there. No one knows when there may be a necessity for military intervention on account of some local or other troubles, just as we now and then have occasion to use military force here.

But another point that I wish to call the Senator's attention to is the fact that, except only for this regiment—which can be used outside of Porto Rico as well as in Porto Rico, if the President shall so see fit—aside from that there is practically no expense to the Government of the United States for the island of Porto Rico.

The Porto Ricans support their own government and put us at no expense at all that I can think of now, except only that for the United States court and perhaps some similar expenses. Their government is supported out of their own revenues by their own system of taxation. All that we are put to an expense for connected with them that is of substantial amount will be this one regiment; and every man who has been a soldier in the Army knows the difference between having a full regiment and having a part of a regiment. With a full regiment you have the completed organization; you have then the possibility of regimental drill, regimental evolutions, and a great many things that you can not have so long as you have only a fraction of such an organization.

So, taking into consideration the fact that this is the only expense, that it will add greatly to their satisfaction and their pleasure, and that it will be an organization which we can use elsewhere, if we have occasion, as well as there, I hope the Senator will not object to allowing the regiment to be made a full regiment.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I am going to withdraw my amendment, not because I think it ought not to be made, but because my experience here has taught me that it is useless to make any effort to curtail the increase of the Army at this time, either on this continent or in our insular possessions.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator withdraw his motion to reconsider?

Mr. TELLER. I withdraw the whole thing and let the provision stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will then be considered as agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. I want to say a word or two.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to have the amendment read before it is agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the amendment increasing the number of battalions of the Porto Rico Provisional Infantry from two to three.

Mr. DANIEL. I should like to say a word or two on that.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Virginia wants to discuss that matter I will adhere to my original motion and not withdraw it.

It is not very material whether you have three battalions or two. That is only a question of expense; but, Mr. President, there is something in this question beyond that. I find in this bill a provision for a force in Porto Rico, and on page 28 I find this language:

PHILIPPINE SCOUTS.

Pay officers of the line: Fifty first lieutenants, $50,000.
Fifty second lieutenants, $50,000.
Non-commissioned officers and privates, fifty companies, $499,440.

Or something over a half million dollars for the Philippine army. I do not know how many men there are in that army, but I have been told that in round numbers there are about 5,000. I will ask the acting chairman of the committee if he can tell me how many natives are employed in the Philippine Scouts—I do not mean in our Army?

Mr. PROCTOR. In the Philippine constabulary, Mr. President, there are fifty first lieutenants, fifty second lieutenants, and something near 5,000 men—short of that number, but approaching it; between 4,500 and 5,000 men.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, it can not be demonstrated by anybody here or anywhere else that there is any necessity whatever for an army of this kind on the island of Porto Rico. I therefore infer that it is the policy now to create a provincial army of the natives of our various dependencies, or whatever we are going to call them. For two years we have had two battalions in Porto Rico, and now we must have three battalions. At the next session we shall want five battalions or six battalions, and the same argument can be used then for 10,000 men on the island that has been used for the thousand or twelve hundred men for which this bill provides.

One Senator will have it that it is to attach by army relations the people of Porto Rico to the United States; another will say that it is a great educator. I notice the governor of the island says:

As you doubtless know, there is a provisional regiment of native Porto Ricans here in the island, which was established several years since. The regiment has done a great deal in the general education work which has been accomplished. It has taught the men habits of discipline, self-control, and self-respect. I should be very sorry to see it disbanded, because of its usefulness in the way I have just spoken of.

Is that the purpose of this Government? Is it the business of a government to put men into the army, to take them out of the useful pursuits of life, to take them in their youth, and put them in the army, and give as an excuse that it teaches them self-control? I suppose you might as well say also that it teaches them to stand erect or it teaches them how to handle arms. All that may be useful; but it is an absolutely new suggestion that the people of the United States are to be taxed for that purpose.

That is not all. It is not a question of taxation entirely. It is a question of whether it is to be the policy of this Government in the future not to depend upon the people of the United States themselves to maintain order and law; but that there must be an efficient army, not because anybody can say there is a pressing necessity for it, but because something may happen in the future when they will be needed.

Five thousand men in the Philippines in addition to the soldiers of the United States Army already there may be necessary. I do not know about that. I do not pretend that it is not. I do not know but that it is necessary; but why should it be necessary? How it can be necessary after the statement made on this floor again and again during this session of Congress that peace prevails in all parts of the Philippine Islands, if it is not the policy of this Government to run the Government in the future by the force of an army, first in the dependencies, and later that it shall come to be the rule here?

Mr. President, I do not intend to go into any discussion to keep the Senate from acting upon this proposition, as I know they will act favorably, because it is the policy of the Government, the policy of the Administration. It is the policy of the Government because the Administration has got control of the Government. I myself distinguish between "the Administration" and "the Government." I regard the President and his associates in executive power as the Administration; I regard Congress, the Executive, and the judiciary as the Government.

To-day the Government of the United States is being organized and conducted on the theory of force and upon the theory that the people, individually and collectively, are not fit to carry on this Government. You will some day be depending upon an army here, as you are depending upon it in the Philippine Islands and as you are depending upon it in Porto Rico, and the excuse will be, first, because it will teach young men how to stand straight, teach them how to walk erect, teach them how to keep a uniform step, and then it will give them a dignity, Mr. President, such as you are trying to put upon the people of Porto Rico—a military dignity.

I have seen enough of such things since I have been in public life. I know the American Army is as good an army as the world has ever seen; yet I know that in army circles there is not any virtue practically except that which is exhibited in time of war.

I do not expect, Mr. President, that any Senator will give any better reasons why we should have a regiment down there than have been given, because there can be no other reasons. We have exhausted the wisdom of the Senators who have investigated this matter. They have told us everything that they thought would tend to mitigate and remove the objections we make to it. I submit that at no other time in the history of this Government has any such reason been considered sufficient for the maintenance of an army.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, there has not been any time in the history of this country, until within the last few years, when this question could arise so far as Porto Rico is concerned.

Mr. TELLER. No; of course not.

Mr. SPOONER. And therefore the question is unique, sui generis, in a sense. But, really, does the Senator from Colorado think that it needs much argument or discussion in detail to demonstrate the propriety and the necessity or the wisdom of maintaining this force of two battalions in Porto Rico? I do not know whether or not the additional battalion is necessary. Porto Rico is 1,200 miles from the United States; it has a population of a million people; it is a population which has been no part of us or our associations. They are a different race from ours. The island is governed by us not after the full fashion of an organized Territory. Does not the Senator think that as a Government we are responsible for the maintenance of order in Porto Rico; and does he really think that it is extravagant or unreasonable or unwise, or indicative of the descent of this Government from a government of the people to one of military tyranny, that there should be organized a couple of battalions of Porto Ricans there, officered by American officers?

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator wants a direct answer, I will say yes, I do. I think——

Mr. SPOONER. Think what?

Mr. TELLER. I think it is unwise and un-American, and all that.

Mr. SPOONER. Porto Rico is not so much American as some other parts of the United States. It is new to us; it is not inhabited by our sort of people, but a pretty hot-blooded Spanish people.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; but not more so than we are perhaps.

Mr. SPOONER. Are we not responsible for order there?

Mr. TELLER. I think we are.

Mr. SPOONER. Should we not maintain some sort of force there in Porto Rico?

Mr. TELLER. I think we should; but I should like to say to the Senator that I have not believed that a Government like ours should depend upon a military force to maintain order until the necessity for it was apparent.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not that depend upon circumstances?

Mr. TELLER. No, Mr. President, I will not say it depends upon circumstances, because I know the Senator will say there are circumstances that might happen.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator would not expect us to keep order in the Philippines among 7,000,000 people with police.

Mr. TELLER. But you have said that you had been doing it.

Mr. SPOONER. No; we have not said that.

Mr. TELLER. I have heard that said repeatedly.

Mr. SPOONER. I said that we had cut that force down from 70,000.

Mr. TELLER. That was in time of war, when 70,000 were there.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. It was that force that changed conditions there from a time of war to a time of peace.

Mr. DANIEL. Is there any recommendation on the subject from the Secretary of War, or does the provision come from the committee? Has any reason been assigned why we should increase the military force?

Mr. SPOONER. That is another proposition.

Mr. DANIEL. I understand it is, but has it been recommended by the Secretary of War?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know whether this increase has been recommended by the Secretary of War or not.

Mr. DANIEL. Where does it come from? Is it the spontaneous suggestion of the committee?

Mr. TELLER. I guess it is.

Mr. DANIEL. What is its source or origin?

Mr. TELLER. I guess it is a spontaneous movement.

Mr. PROCTOR. The late Secretary of War, Mr. Root, proposed to make the Porto Rican Regiment a part of the Regular Army, doing away with the Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry, or two or three regiments. It did not seem to the committee to adopt that at this time and to make it a full and regular regiment.

Mr. TELLER. In answer to the Senator from Wisconsin, I will say that we are responsible for order on the island. Up to this time there has not been any trouble there at all.

Mr. SPOONER. Yes; there has been some.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him in order to answer the inquiry of the Senator from Virginia? He desired to know whether this originated with the committee. I am a member of the committee, but not a member of the subcommittee who framed the amendment, but I have ascertained enough of what may have occurred with the subcommittee which framed the amendment, that the idea did not originate with the committee.

Mr. PROCTOR. Not at all.

Mr. FORAKER. At least, it did not unless the committee had information I did not share. We were accustomed to look to the governor of Porto Rico and others to make this a full regiment.

Mr. TELLER. Yes; by these letters.

Mr. FORAKER. They thought it would be more satisfactory to have a full regiment. If the Senator from Virginia will give me his attention, I am sure he will agree with me in what I am just about to say. The feeling was that a full regiment there would not be too large a military force for that island, situated as it is, distant from us, with a million people, and I think I can appeal to the Senator's own experience when I say that it is a great deal more satisfactory to men connected with a military organization to have a full organization.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator please tell me what is the use of any of them? We have cleared away all the momentary troubles incident to a change of government. Nobody is going to attack Porto Rico without making war on the United States.

Mr. FORAKER. It is a period of profound peace in Porto Rico, as it is a period of profound peace in the United States; but nobody would think of abolishing the Regular Army in the United States.

Mr. DANIEL. Not at all, but this is not the Regular Army.

Mr. FORAKER. It is not the Regular Army, but it is the regular army for Porto Rico, so far as we have any.

Mr. DANIEL. What have they to do, except to parade occasionally?

Mr. FORAKER. Why not abolish the National Guard, as is suggested to me by the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. DANIEL. The National Guard are not paid regularly and enrolled in the service and officered, as these are.

Mr. FORAKER. No, they are not paid regularly, but the Senator will agree that if we have any organization in Porto Rico, it should be such an organization as this——

Mr. DANIEL. I beg your pardon.

Mr. FORAKER. And I be officered as this is, and should be officered and enrolled and [illegible].

Mr. DANIEL. They are [illegible] every day.

Mr. FORAKER. Every day. It is a regiment, and it is for [illegible] in the service of the United States, [illegible] of Porto Rico if there should be any need for [illegible] there.

Mr. DANIEL. If we need any more soldiers, it is all right.

Mr. FORAKER. I do not know whether we will ever need any more or not.

Mr. DANIEL. I hope we will not.

Mr. FORAKER. But I think we can afford a full regiment for a million people, who support themselves in every [illegible].

Mr. TELLER. We can afford anything we take a notion to [illegible].

Mr. FORAKER. Yes.

Mr. TELLER. The question is whether we should abandon that fundamental principle of this Government that the army is not to keep peace in this country, but the people.

Mr. FORAKER. I am [illegible]——

Mr. TELLER. The Senator will allow me to get through?

Mr. FORAKER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. TELLER. That the Army is for war and not for peace. You have in the statutes a provision of law that you shall not use the Army of the United States as a posse comitatus, except where [illegible] provision of law to that effect. I recall very [illegible] when every man on this side of the Chamber voted for that law, and four men on the other side, and made it the law, and I was one of the four men. I was then of the opinion, as I am now, Mr. President, that you must depend upon the people of the [illegible] of law, and if you can not depend upon the people of Porto Rico for that purpose, they being at least a civilized community, then we have made a mistake in having anything to do with them.

Mr. President, there is not any reason for having a regiment in Porto Rico any more than there is for having one in the city of Washington—not a parade—or in any small [illegible] in the State of New York or [illegible]. In the long period of Spanish domination the Porto Ricans were always [illegible] to the Spanish Crown, and [illegible] in modern times at least of any trouble down [illegible]. There are not any signs of it, and that is not what the army is there for. It is [illegible] and with the [illegible] control it, that you are to have a great army to terrorize the people.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President——

Mr. TELLER. Will the Senator wait a moment? Let the executive officers of Porto Rico call upon the Porto Ricans, and build up a constabulary there, if you want, with sheriffs and deputy sheriffs and policemen, if necessary, and officers of that kind. Now I will hear what the Senator from Ohio wants to say.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has two or three times in the course of his remarks charged, or he talks as though he meant to charge, that it is a part of the policy of the present Administration. And he leads us to believe that he distinguishes the "Administration" from the "Government," and by "Administration" he means the President and those associated with him in administering the affairs of our Government) to try to build up an army for some improper purpose. I wish to say to the Senator, if it will relieve his mind any in that respect, that the President had nothing whatever to do, not even to the extent of having knowledge about it, with this amendment to increase this force. I am sure he did not have any knowledge of it, unless he learned it through the newspapers or in some accidental way. Nobody conferred with him. He made no request about it. He has not been consulted about it. He gave no advice about it. I can see no harm in having a regiment in Porto Rico, when all the Porto Ricans without exception, so far as we have heard from them, are petitioning us to give them this very thing.

They do not seem to have any fear of being tyrannized over or terrorized or of being oppressed or denied liberties.

As to the Philippines, if the Senator will bear with me for a word——

Mr. TELLER. I would rather the Senator would permit me to complete my remarks, and then he can reply if he wishes to. I do not think this is quite a fair way to proceed.

Mr. FORAKER. Just a word.

Mr. TELLER. I thought the Senator wanted to make an explanation. I see now he wants to make an argument. Let him wait until I get through.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to say only one word, and then I will be done with it.

Mr. TELLER. Go ahead.

Mr. FORAKER. Five thousand native troops in the Philippines, where there are 7,000,000 people, where the conditions are of the character we are all familiar with, do not seem to me to constitute a very dangerous military establishment to maintain there.

Mr. TELLER. The Senator says all the people of Porto Rico want this. He has read one letter from a Porto Rican. He may have more. He has read a letter from the governor, who is not a Porto Rican, but who was a Montana man, I think, when he went to the island. I have forgotten, but I think that is the fact. The Senator read from some man who, by his name, I presume is a Spaniard, who says they want a full regiment there. They want them to live there and die there, and all that kind of nonsense. Nobody has taken the opinion of the Porto Ricans, and if all the Porto Ricans should send up here and say, "We want a regiment," is it incumbent upon us to respond and say, "Well, if you want it, you must have it?" I do not know what their relation is to the General Government. I know if the people of some State said they wanted a regiment they would not get it merely because they wanted it. Is that so?

Mr. FORAKER. It may be for other purposes and some use. We expect it will be used for some purpose and under conditions arise that call for it. If it is to be used as a constabulary, I say that is an un-American system. If it is not to be so used, there is not any use for it at all, and if it is to be used for a constabulary, that is where there is the reason that it is there for an educational purpose, as other regiments are used, which, if I may say it without being offensive, I suggested were utterly absurd and ridiculous. I [illegible] will apply that to any statement which he makes. It seems to me that when we are told that we must have it there because somebody wants it, whether all of them or a few—and that is the reason and the only reason—that it is a matter with the legislation of this country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Colorado. If there was any proposal [illegible] Senator——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to reconsider was withdrawn by the Senator from Colorado, and the amendment was declared agreed to. Does the Senator wish it to be in open question?

Mr. DANIEL. It was declared to be agreed to by the Senate without the question having been formally put.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire it to be still open?

Mr. DANIEL. Yes. I should like to have that done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is still open.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, it looks to me as if some one were trying in this item increasing the military force in Porto Rico to find a place to spend money and notwithstanding the debate on this subject has been participated in by a number of gentlemen, not one of them has suggested any use for this regiment. A bishop has said it is of great educational value for the young men in it and that it gave pride. There does not appear to be the slightest use for these battalions in Porto Rico, except to parade occasionally. The regiment does not go into any corps of the United States. The battalions are not sent here or there as they may be needed. The little frictions which always occur in a change of government passed away from Porto Rico. The Porto Ricans have accepted the changes with remarkably good temper, and the island is getting along well. No official of the Administration has recommended this.

The Senator from Vermont says Mr. Root made some remark, I believe, about having a full and regular regiment in Porto Rico. It does not seem to have been of sufficient importance for the Administration to make any recommendation upon the subject. The sole effect of having a new battalion of Porto Rican troops will be to have a few more young men in Porto Rico drilled for a little while in a military organization by American officers. It looks to me rather like toying with a great subject for the Senate of the United States to invent a new battalion in Porto Rico, adding them to the military roll without any very serious plan about the matter.

It encumbers this bill with new legislation upon a subject which has been offered in no other form. It gives, in a time of profound peace, a prominence to the military idea totally unconcongenial to the subject-matter and foreign to the objects and purposes of this measure.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill, having reference to another part of the measure, if any provision has been made in the bill for increasing the Engineer Corps of the Army?

Mr. PROCTOR. No provision has been made for increasing the Engineer Corps.

Mr. CARMACK. We are spending money to maintain a regiment of soldiers in Porto Rico, where it seems to me there is absolutely no necessity for it at all, when the excuse is given for the failure to expend money for the improvement of rivers and harbors and to complete projected improvements in this country that the Engineer Corps has been so greatly diminished——

Mr. PROCTOR. I ought to have added, perhaps, that a bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs yesterday morning making a considerable increase in the Engineer Corps, making a slight change in the rank, and adding three or four more officers than they asked for.

Mr. CARMACK. Why is not that put on this bill?

Mr. PROCTOR. Because it would be subject to a point of order. There were increases of other corps asked for. We did not think it was the proper duty of the committee, at least, to do it. If the Senate choose to make any increase in the Engineer Corps, the committee, I presume, would not object to such an increase.

Mr. CARMACK. I would ask the Senator if this legislation is not subject to the point of order?

Mr. PROCTOR. This Porto Rican legislation?

Mr. CARMACK. Yes.

Mr. PROCTOR. It is not. I am very sure. The full regiment of three battalions is authorized by law. This provision simply says how they shall be organized. It is not new legislation, because the act of February 2, 1901, provides for a Porto Rican regiment, which means three battalions.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CARMACK. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. In answer to the suggestion of the Senator from Tennessee, I will state that I contemplate, as soon as the amendments offered by the committee are disposed of, to offer an amendment to the bill increasing the Engineer Corps. On yesterday I asked if such an amendment was in order and was informed that it was not until the committee amendments were disposed of, which I am awaiting now, in order to offer the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. I hope the Senator will offer it. We shall have no river and harbor bill at this session of Congress, and the reason why, it is said, is that we had about $40,000,000 of the last appropriation that was left, because they could not spend the money, and they could not spend the money because they did not have the engineers to do the work. Army engineers have been drawn away to the Philippines and other of our possessions, so that they are not able to attend to the business of the United States and to improve the avenues of internal commerce in the United States, and we must have an increased appropriation for army engineers in order to carry out this work.

I wish to emphasize what the Senator from Colorado said. There is absolutely no necessity in the world for any soldiers in Porto Rico. The Senator from Wisconsin said the Porto Ricans are a hot-blooded people. They have never demonstrated that fact. They were peaceable under Spain and they have been peaceable under the United States. They were not in the insurrection against Spain. They gave no trouble to Spain. They were peaceable and law-abiding under the Spanish Government, and they changed from the Spanish Government to that of the United States, not with enthusiasm, but with apparent indifference. They seem willing to take anything that comes along in the way of a government. I do not think there is very much patriotism in it, but there is not very much danger in it, and we do not need any regiment there.

I think it is unfortunate, Mr. President, that the Senator should have suggested in the very same breath in which it was argued that we ought to keep a number of soldiers there as a matter of education and a matter of pride to the Porto Ricans——

Mr. SPOONER. I did not say that.

Mr. CARMACK. No; the Senator from Wisconsin did not suggest that, but he made his suggestion in the very same breath that it was made.

Mr. SPOONER. It was my breath and nobody else's.

Mr. CARMACK. I am trying to draw a distinction between two breaths.

The Senator from Ohio said that we ought to keep this regiment there as a means of identifying the people of Porto Rico with the people of the United States. The Senator from Wisconsin argues that we must maintain them there in order to keep the people of Porto Rico suppressed, because they are a hot-blooded people.

Mr. SPOONER. I understood the Senator from Ohio to mention that as an incidental advantage.

Mr. CARMACK. It is the only thing he mentioned.

Mr. SPOONER. I had covered the other part.

Mr. CARMACK. I will get up a joint debate between the Senator from Wisconsin and the Senator from Ohio.

We are keeping soldiers in the Philippines for the very plain and frank reason of holding the people in subjection. They are not kept there for ordinary police work. They are kept there because the people of the Philippines hate the United States and the Government of the United States and the people of the United States, and we are compelled to keep soldiers there to hold them in subjection. If the soldiers were taken away, they would rise in insurrection and have a rebellion. We know it. There is no such reason for keeping soldiers in Porto Rico. They do not care a cent whether they are under the dominion of the United States of America or under the dominion of Spain. A great many of them do not know now, perhaps, that they are not under the dominion of Spain, and if they do know it they do not care. It is a matter of indifference to them.

The Senator says that the late Secretary Root recommended this. I am not surprised that that distinguished lawyer should recommend it, a gentleman who on his way to honorable retirement was accompanied by regiments of soldiers, with flags flying and horns blowing and drums beating—a great military display. They saw him go into his honored retirement, and another like demonstration was made to welcome the incoming Secretary of War. We are getting into the military business and the business of military display; and that is all this sort of thing means. We are trying to make this a military government, just like we have a military Administration and a military President. The whole Government must be permeated with militarism and military ideas, and I understand there is now under consideration a programme providing that whenever a diplomat arrives here—it was gotten up too late for Bunau-Varilla—he is to be received with a great military display. I am sorry that we did not have it ready for Bunau-Varilla, as I should like to have commanded the regiment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment to the amendment?

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the amendment as amended?

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. DANIEL. Is that the main amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The main amendment.

Mr. DANIEL. I raise the point of order that it was not moved by direction of a standing committee, and that it was not, for at least one day before it was considered, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SPOONER. What was the amendment just declared adopted?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Porto Rican amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. That has just been declared adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Striking out "two" and inserting "three."

Mr. DANIEL. That carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That was carried.

Mr. SPOONER. That was carried.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the statement of the Senator from Vermont that there is a law which provides for three battalions in Porto Rico, the Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. PROCTOR. It provides for a regiment. It is the act of February 2, 1901.

Mr. DANIEL. I think the battalion organization belongs to the Regular Army of the United States and the National Guard, and this is neither. Therefore I do not think it can be construed that existing law requires three battalions in this irregular Porto Rican regiment. I have not read the law on that subject to see.

Mr. PROCTOR. The three-battalion organization has been adopted by law for Government troops and for all volunteer troops, and all the States so far are conforming to it.

Mr. DANIEL. That may be; but this is a matter sui generis. It stands all by itself. It is an arrangement for a temporary military organization in the island of Porto Rico. I do not remember what act it was that provided——

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator will allow me, I will read a sentence from the act. I read the beginning of section 37 of the act of February 2, 1901:

That the President is authorized to organize and maintain one provisional regiment of not exceeding three battalions of infantry.

Mr. DANIEL. This shows that three battalions of infantry were authorized for this regiment. It also shows that the President and, as we would infer, the War Department have never thought it desirable to have three battalions there or they would have organized them. And the Senate in this proposition is trying to force an increase in the military establishment in Porto Rico, when the present Administration has declined under the authority given in that act to put it there, showing that it is entirely useless and not within the purview or contemplation of the President of the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment?

Mr. MONEY. Before the vote is taken, I should like to ask a question: I simply desire to inquire of the acting chairman of the committee what he construes the word "provisional" to mean in the act which authorizes a regiment of three battalions?

Mr. PROCTOR. The regiment was organized on the basis of volunteer regiments. The word is to distinguish it from regulars. That is the whole force of it.

Mr. MONEY. Is that all the difference the Senator can see?

Mr. PROCTOR. The officers are not made permanent. They are not officers of the Regular Army, except those detailed from the Regular Army.

Mr. MONEY. To me the word "provisional" in such a connection as this means a temporary arrangement, a temporary regiment, and the occasion has gone by when it may be considered in force under that act. It seems that nobody took care to provide for this arrangement at the time it was created. That time has gone by, and now it is proposed to have this regiment increased by one battalion. I do not know whether it is provisional, according to the law, or whether it is to be permanent. If it is provisional, there is no use for it at this time. If it is to last for a year or two, there is no particular point in its being maintained at its full strength. If it is to be permanent, then the amendment is subject to a point of order.

Certainly it is too late to talk about a provisional regiment under a law of that sort. The occasion has gone by. It was then the apprehension, I presume, that there would be some sort of disturbance in the transfer of the sovereignty from one government to another, a change of flags; that a people who had been so long loyal to the yellow and red standard would find it difficult to adapt themselves readily to the changed circumstances of a new authority, and therefore it was provided in the law that we should have a provisional regiment. The executive department did not think it was necessary; the legislative department does not seem to have considered it at all; and now, after the time has gone by when it could have been considered, it is proposed to increase the regiment to its full strength. If it is permanent, then the amendment will be subject to a point of order; and if it is not permanent, then it is absolutely useless after all these years. Unless somebody will show that there is some necessity of some sort for organizing a new regiment, at great expense, we had better not do it.

I do not think, Mr. President, that the regiment would be of any use there, and I do not think it would be of any particular harm. It would be just an expense. It is a great thing in all Spanish communities to have a brass band to play on the plaza in the evening and let the people come there and enjoy the music. That is about all the use they have for it. It would be the band. I do not suppose the people will care much about it except the display on civic occasions, when there will be a brass band and a flaunting of banners and the parade of soldiers. It is very gratifying to a populace anywhere to see the march of soldiers, flags flying, and drums beating. That is about all they will want with it there, and it seems to me that it is about as useless an expenditure of public money as we can think of.

I hope the amendment will not pass.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I am obliged to the Senator from Vermont for loaning me a copy of the statute under which this regiment was authorized. It provides:

That the President is authorized to organize and maintain one provisional regiment of not exceeding three battalions of infantry, for service in Porto Rico, the enlisted strength thereof to be composed of natives of that island as far as practicable. The regiment shall be organized as to numbers as authorized for infantry regiments of the Regular Army. The pay, rations, and clothing allowances to be authorized for the enlisted men shall be fixed by the Secretary of War, and shall not exceed those authorized for the Regular Army.

It also provides that the regiment shall be continued in service until further directed by Congress, so that as it is a provisional regiment it is one that requires legislation by Congress to abolish it.

A comparison of this statute with what was done—that is to say, the organization of a regiment of two battalions—shows that the President of the United States has regarded it as a very trivial matter, for while he was not only authorized but instructed by the statute that the regiment shall be organized as to numbers as authorized for infantry regiments of the Regular Army, he declined, and elected to so organize this regiment. It had been so unimportant, so inconspicuous, and so trivial a matter that even its organization has not been perfected according to its contemplation.

If it is in order to do so, Mr. President, I would offer as an amendment for the paragraph of the bill covered by the amendment of the committee and the appropriation, from line 10, on page 21, to line 2, on page 23, these words:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1904, the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry authorized by section 37 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," approved February 2, 1901, shall be discontinued.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 21, beginning with line 10, strike out the bill down to and including line 2, on page 23, and substitute the following:

That from and after the 1st day of July, 1904, the Porto Rico Provisional Regiment of Infantry authorized by section 37 of the act entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," approved February 2, 1901, shall be discontinued.

Mr. PROCTOR. I trust it is not necessary to say that that amendment ought not to be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. TELLER. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Virginia brings up this question in the proper form and compels a vote of the Senate upon the proposition as to whether we shall now enter permanently upon the policy in the insular possessions of the United States, to be followed by a similar policy in the Territories, and perhaps by a similar policy in the States, of organizing a certain population into either a temporary or permanent addition to the Army of the United States, differentiating it entirely from that Army. In other words, whether we shall in these places, where the United States have exclusive jurisdiction, establish a new form of military organization, to be officered by officers of the Regular Army of the United States, but made up of the native population of the respective localities, in this case the native population of Porto Rico.

We have heard very much said, Mr. President, in the discussion of questions for the last several years upon the progress of a sentiment in this country amongst the people to a considerable extent and in Congress to a much greater extent that is styled "imperialism." I have never been afraid of that except through the indulgence of Congress in a disposition that has been manifested for many years to legislate here upon principles of absolutism—not imperialism, necessarily, but absolutism—that is to say, to take the control of all local affairs, as far as possible, out of the hands of the constituency, who otherwise might be or are a voting population and who through that agency are conducting civil government in their own right and according to their own choice.

I have voted uniformly for the expansion of the territory of the United States, whenever it has been presented in a legitimate form, in the Hawaiian Islands and the Philippine Islands. I was not here to vote upon the Alaskan treaty, but would have voted for it if I had been here. I am willing to extend it still further in a legitimate way, in conformity with the principles of our Government, of our Constitution more particularly, so as to include a further expansion to cover the island of Cuba, which from natural causes, from geographical situation, has, in the opinion of the wisest of our fathers, been dedicated to union with the United States.

In all these votes, Mr. President, I have been aware of the fact that an opportunity was afforded for the exercise of the powers of government in the absolute form to which I object. But I have not supposed that the American Senate or the American Congress or Government, because it has had an opportunity to abuse the powers of the Constitution, would necessarily do so. I have supposed that we could expand the area of this country without necessarily invading the principles of our own Government; that we could extend, through the agencies of our Government and our Constitution and laws, the blessings of American liberty to many people who ought to enjoy them, whether they desire them or whether they do not.

But we have got to a point, now, Mr. President, where a serious departure is about to be made, and it is made in the military establishment of the United States, which of all others is the most dangerous to the liberties of this country. That fact has been recognized from the foundations of the Government. It was recognized, when the principles which controlled the organization of the militia were incorporated in the Constitution of the United States, that the military control of this country, after all, must be left under the power of the civil administration and the civil laws.

We have now got to a point where we are following the example of Great Britain in India in establishing an army of Sepoys. Great Britain found it necessary when she expanded and extended her commercial strength and power, together with her governmental authority, over India to organize there an army of natives to be governed by British officers. They are called Sepoys, and they are for the purpose of controlling not merely the affairs of the British Government within the various territory of India within the reach of her imperial power, but also for the purpose of supplying deficiencies whenever they might occur in her army forces in respect of wars that were entirely foreign to the country where those people live.

In the last war with China, the "Boxer war," as we called it, we noticed that regiments of Sepoys were sent into China by the British Government, she then having a use for all of her regular troops, perhaps, in her controversies and contests in South Africa. That was objected to by the military authorities of the world as being rather an invasion of a precedent, at which they took umbrage. The objection was based upon the idea that the Indian Sepoy is an inferior kind of man, a bloodthirsty creature, perfectly under the control of his commanding officers, and so a dangerous instrument to use in a foreign invasion and in the exercise of military power of any sort in a foreign country. It has been put up to Great Britain on various occasions that it would be entirely disreputable in a war between her and any civil power that she should use the Sepoys.

We are organizing now an army of Sepoys, commencing with a small beginning in Porto Rico. We began this under circumstances that were at the time apparently and really, I think, legitimate. But those circumstances have passed entirely out of view. What were they? They were that the Porto Ricans, a million strong in population, had been always under the control of a captain-general of Spain, and that captain-general held them in obedience to the authority of Spain, not by the ties of civic power or the influence of civic virtues, but entirely through the military power.

In the passage of that people from the condition in which we found them after we annexed Porto Rico from Spain under the treaty of Paris, it was necessary apparently and I believe it was actually necessary, that we should continue the use of military authority over the Porto Ricans, and instead of doing so by importing into Porto Rico our Regular Army we took volunteers and made a voluntary organization, making it, however, provisional, making it of three battalions as a limit, which the President has only filled up so far with two battalions, and providing that it should be temporary. It was intended to pass out, and when that organization would disappear it would leave the true American principle in force in Porto Rico. What is that? The superiority of the civil power over the military. And those people would be in a position to recognize it.

They are in a position now to recognize it, because there is little lawbreaking in Porto Rico and certainly none of a general turbulent or insurrectionary character. Those people seem to have no idea of a general insurrection against the United States or against any authority whatever. Their drift and bent is toward a compliance with the laws that are over them, whether enacted by their local legislature or enacted by the Congress of the United States. They are advancing in the cause of peace and civic virtue, and in correspondence with that idea, which is set forth so distinctly in the act read by the Senator from Vermont, the act of 1902, we ought to observe and pursue that policy of withdrawing troops from Porto Rico instead of organizing an army there, though it may consist of but a single regiment at present, which is to become a permanent establishment.

Now, Mr. President, I have no way in my own knowledge of military affairs of describing the relations between this regiment in Porto Rico and one of the regular regiments of the United States Army. It looks to me like an appendage to the Army of the United States proper, which has had no place heretofore in our military system. It is not of the nature of national guards or of the Regular Army. It is an entire matter—that is, sui generis—as said by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. In that sense it is an interposition of a new idea, a new thought, and it is a dangerous one if it is voted by this Congress. It is a departure from the principles of the American Government. It is evident that it is not needed for any present or expected purpose of controlling the people of the island of Porto Rico. That is evident.

It is said that some of the prominent families of Porto Rico take some pride in having their sons enter this army and pass through a sort of graduating course in the army—like the children of all Frenchmen have to pass through under the provisions of law that exist there, and to some extent in Germany—and that it gives them a sort of distinction amongst the people. Now, if that is to be one of the effects of it, it is deleterious if not disastrous. It will not do for us to put insignia upon individuals mustered into the service of the United States which, after they have passed out of the service, give them social position and influence in the country. That is neither the republican nor the democratic idea, nor is it the proper idea of civil rule, which enforce upon all of us, when we respect those views, proper political equality, a man to be left with the influence of his character and whatever else he possesses to commend him to his people, instead of some mark of advantage or some mark of segregation put upon him through the influence or through the favoritism of the Government of the United States.

We do not want to build up a class of that sort of people in Porto Rico. We want to teach them other doctrines. After a while they will get to respect no person whatever except those who have belonged to the army. The military spirit of government will assert itself there against civic rule. That is a spirit we are encouraging now without any necessity whatever.

Some gentleman referred to the fact that it would be necessary perhaps, or at least convenient, to have these people carried into a regiment, fifteen hundred strong, I suppose it will be, for the purpose of using them in the isthmian zone, where we are about to construct a canal.

Mr. President, after the remarks of the honorable junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. QUARLES], that if our soldiers were sent there they would die like flies, I am moved to some feeling of compassion toward those people in Porto Rico, that we shall not, under the bait and temptation of an enlistment in the Army, cause them to go down there and die like flies. They are not immunes, so far as we know; they are just as liable to the disasters of that climate as anyone else.

Now, if you want a regiment, and you will need more than a regiment to take care of affairs in the canal zone in the Isthmus, and if you want immunes, organize your regiment; do it under this bill or on any other measure that is proper, and get the enlistments from the men who are immune, who live there, and do not float them in from Porto Rico. You can trust a man who lives in Panama just as well, if he is a Spaniard or the descendant of a Spaniard, as you can trust the descendant of the same blood in Porto Rico. In one place the Spaniard is as reliable as he is in the other.

My own judgment is that whenever we organize for that special service or with a view to special service any particular corps of men we had better have a pretty strong guard of Americans stationed around them to prevent them from doing what they did at the time of the establishment of the Republic of Panama—for a few dollars of bounty desert their colors and go off to the other side. I would not really, for the safety of that Isthmus, have any set of men enlisted either in Panama or Porto Rico. It will take the best men we have got to take care of affairs down there, and a good many of them. We have got to be providing so that they shall be prepared to go there. Orders were issued for the Third Regiment of United States troops to go down to Panama, and after a few days' consideration they were recalled, what for nobody knows. Their places must be supplied by somebody. Somebody must go there to take care of our affairs. We can not leave them without military guard for one single moment, either against the local population or against Colombia. We have got to have the guard and have them there continuously and at once.

Now, why the Third Regiment was not sent there I do not know, unless it was that they might fall victim to this plague, which the Senator from Wisconsin described so graphically when he said if our soldiers went there they might die like flies.

If we have got to face that, Mr. President, let us do it like men, and let us do it at once. When we assume responsibility in view of the American people and of such vast importance as that, do not let us shrink from it. Do not let us dodge around and try to organize a Porto Rican regiment to go down there and take the place of our own soldiers. Let us move up to the front and take charge of the subject like men ought to do, and build that canal, and while we are building it protect it with our Army.

I arose only for the purpose of entering my protest, while I favor the amendment of the Senator from Virginia, against this new departure in American military policy which establishes in any of our insular possessions an army of a peculiar character based upon enlistments of the people there.

Let us have all parts of this country subject to the same military control, or if any of the Territories need a special military police guard, or whatever you may choose to call it, let it be organized, sustained, supported, and commanded as is required to be done in respect to the militia under the Constitution of the United States. We have got a militia; we have got laws to organize the militia as a State guard; we have got a Regular Army, and that is provision enough to cover the whole case. Now, to establish an army of Sepoys, beginning in Porto Rico, and after a while extending to the other islands and then after a while to the Territories and after a while to the negroes of the South, I object to, I know where it is going to land us: and I arose, Mr. President, although I am not in condition to speak, to enter my protest against any such legislation.

Mr. QUARLES. Mr. President, I rise simply to set the committee right. I judge from the discussion which has taken place here that we have been challenged as to our motives: that we are no longer patriotic citizens seeking to legislate for the general benefit, but that we have all of a sudden been inspired with a very dangerous military tendency, and that we are here advocating some pernicious measure from some peculiar hidden motive to accomplish some unjust and unlawful purpose.

Mr. President, I think I may say that if we had considered only the keeping of the peace in Porto Rico the committee would not have advised an additional battalion there. The reason they asked the Senate to enlarge this regiment from two to three battalions was this: We knew, as the learned Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] well said, that when we begin operation on the Isthmus of Panama we must have soldiers there. That is a concession which he makes and which every intelligent man understands. He says he would not leave the Isthmus for a day without trained soldiers there. So say the committee.

The committee are in accord with the distinguished Senator from Alabama. We went a step farther, however, and said that if we are going to send soldiers down there to do what amounts to constabulary duty, we had better in the first place have some soldiers who understand the language of that country. Does my distinguished friend from Alabama see any advantage in that, the people of the Isthmus being Spanish?

Mr. MORGAN. If my friend will allow me, I will say that I see a great disadvantage in it, because if they do not understand the language there will not be any conspiracy between our soldiers and the people.

Mr. QUARLES. Well, I am not tinged with that all-pervading jaundice of suspicion that leads me to doubt, in the first place, without any evidence whatever, the justice of any class of people; and when my friend intimates that there is anything in the history of this Porto Rican regiment to sustain such a suspicion as he has thrown out here, I simply say I have never heard of such evidence and never before heard any such suggestion.

Mr. MORGAN rose.

Mr. QUARLES. On the other hand, if the Senator will pardon me a moment, the record of that provisional regiment in Porto Rico is all that could be asked of any troops in the uniform of the United States. They are well drilled; they are manly; they are strong; they are proud; and, so far as I know, their record is second to none. Now, if the Senator has any ground to intimate a suspicion against that force, it is the first time I have heard it intimated from any source.

Mr. MORGAN. They are not suspicions or intimations at all, but facts well known to the Senate that attended the construction and birth of the Republic of Panama, when one regiment, or a large part of a regiment, of Spaniards deserted their fellows for pay and went over to the insurrection, and another was bought off and sent home on a ship.

Mr. QUARLES. How can my distinguished friend reconcile that statement with the suggestion he made here a few minutes ago, that we should go down there and take the very fellows whom he now describes and make a constabulary force out of them? That was the suggestion of the Senator made a moment since.

Mr. MORGAN. I said if you were going to rely upon the native population for your constabulary force, you had better go there and get those people and put white men in command of them. That is what I said.

Mr. QUARLES. If the indictment which the Senator prefers against those natives be accurate, his suggestion is certainly of very little value. I have this to say: From all the information that this committee can gather, this Government has not under its flag to-day any organization more patriotic, any organization better drilled, any organization better qualified to go to Panama and discharge that duty than this Porto Rican regiment.

There is another point. I say that there is an advantage in having men there who understand the language of the country. That would seem to be self-evident. If you send down there the Third Regiment, they can not understand a word that anybody would say there; it would be all Greek to them; the whole thing would be a closed book. They are not familiar with the traditions or the habits of those people. Is there not a manifest advantage in having a corps of troops sent down there who know all those things? It seemed so to the committee.

Another thing, Mr. President. A great deal has been said about who are and who are not immune. The committee did not expect that this battalion of Porto Ricans could be sent to Panama with shovels and picks to excavate that soil and escape the fever that is said to be created from the upturning of that soil. These troops are to be sent down there for an entirely different purpose. They will be encamped on the highest ground. We have provided for barracks wherein they will be sheltered.

The committee thought—and I submit to the Senate whether it be not perfectly correct—that a tropical people, a people inured to the heat of the climate and the sun, could maintain themselves in that latitude better than the Third Regiment, which has been encamped this winter in a zero climate. Is not that a sensible proposition?

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I ask the question not by way of argument, but for information. I understand the suggestion of the learned and honorable Senator is that the real purpose is to provide troops that can be sent to the Isthmus of Panama?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. This provision in the present bill is one amendatory of the act of 1901, as I understand?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. BACON. In which act authority is given to the President to organize this regiment?

Mr. QUARLES. Yes.

Mr. BACON. Now, the point that I desire to call to the attention of the Senator is—it may have been mentioned by others while I have been temporarily absent from the Chamber—that the original act authorized the organization of this regiment specifically for service in Porto Rico.

Mr. PROCTOR. If the Senator from Wisconsin will allow me, I will say that act was repealed a year ago.

Mr. QUARLES. Yes; that has been all fixed by legislation.

Mr. BACON. That has been amended.

Mr. PROCTOR. That has been amended so that these troops are subject to service anywhere.

Mr. BACON. I only wanted that information.

Mr. QUARLES. What I wanted to say chiefly was that this committee is not asking for this increase, unless their policy be considered proper, that the two battalions, now well drilled, should be taken and made some use of by the President.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. As the law now stands these battalions could be sent to Panama if the President desired to send them there?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly; and, as I took occasion to say to the Senate the other day when the matter was up, we had the major of this regiment before the committee, and he stated that that regiment would be glad to go down there, that their feeling was that they wanted in some way to show their satisfaction and their pride in their country, and that if the country called upon them to go there they would go with the most cordial feelings of gratitude.

If it be not thought proper to send them down there, the committee does not recommend this increase. It was simply that the President should have these two well-drilled battalions to send down there and that this other battalion that we provide for should remain in Porto Rico to take its place. That is all.

When anybody stands here and says in the Senate that people from the Tropics are not better qualified to go down there and endure the heat of the sun than people from this northern latitude, I say it is nonsense.

We are not talking about the kind of immunity of which the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] has spoken, for we do not propose to subject these men to any such test. If we send them down there, it is simply to establish a constabulary force, not to dig up the soil and get the fever which originates from that source.

Mr. President, this much I thought I would say; and while I am on my feet I merely want to add one other word. My distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. CARMACK], with his inimitable sarcasm, speaks of one of these Porto Ricans strutting in a uniform. That may seem very funny in the abstract, but, Mr. President, if we are going to civilize those people down there, the first thing we have got to do is to build up pride and self-respect in the individual. When a man stands up, feeling that he has some mission to perform in the world, as the distinguished Senator said, when he struts in his uniform, he is on the way to a higher grade of manhood, because you have established in him that pride and that self-respect that lie at the foundation of character.

Mr. CARMACK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. QUARLES. Certainly.

Mr. CARMACK. Do I understand the Senator to say that the first step to be taken in the development of manhood is to teach a man to strut? [Laughter.]

Mr. QUARLES. I tried to obviate that expression, which my distinguished friend used with such skill. I did not say "strut." I used the Senator's expression. I say that when you have implanted in the minds of these people a sense of pride and self-respect, you have laid the foundation for character and usefulness.

Mr. President, the theory of the committee simply was that these two battalions were not too much to act in the place of a national guard. We are responsible, as has been said here, for the order of that island. It is quite an extensive island. There are a million people there. You can not get a million people of any kind under the sun who, left alone down there in that island, would not get up some kind of a disturbance. I grant that these people so far have indicated a most gentle temperament. I do not think they are a quarrelsome people; but human nature is the same the world over. If we should leave a million people on that island, situated as they are with reference to us and with regard to the responsibility that we owe to them to preserve peace without having some kind of a force there, we certainly would put ourselves in a position to be very much criticised.

Mr. MORGAN. If the Senator will allow me, if we send them down to the Isthmus to guard the canal zone, they will not have very much to do with preserving the peace in Porto Rico, will they?

Mr. QUARLES. Perhaps I did not make myself understood and the fault may be mine, but I certainly tried to make the Senate understand that the theory of the committee was that when the two battalions were sent down—the two seasoned, trained battalions—to Panama, if the President should choose to send them there, we would still have this additional battalion left to keep the peace in the absence of any militia. With no regular troops there at all, except perhaps a single battery of field artillery, we would leave that additional battalion there to keep the peace while the other two battalions were away.

This much, Mr. President, I think it fair to say to explain the attitude of the committee as against the criticisms which have been made here.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment I offered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent to withdraw his proposed amendment. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the amendment is withdrawn. The question before the Senate is on agreeing to the committee amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PROCTOR. There is an amendment on page 10 which was passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee inserting the clause beginning in line 17 on page 10.

Mr. KEAN. What is the amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 10, after line 16, the committee proposes to insert——

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment has been once read, Mr. President.

Mr. KEAN. Is there a point of order pending against that amendment, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No point of order has been made.

Mr. KEAN. Then, I make the point of order on the amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator withhold his point of order for a moment?

Mr. KEAN. Certainly.

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not wish to make a speech on the amendment, but I may be allowed, perhaps, to tell a little story.

In the first Administration of President Cleveland a committee was appointed, of which the present senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] was chairman, to investigate the business methods of the various Executive Departments. In that investigation he gave particular attention to the system in the War Department in answering questions from the Pension Bureau as to the status of soldiers.

As all Senators know, there are two points to be established in reference to an application for a pension. One is the hospital record of the soldier—his medical record—and the other his service record. The hospital records of the Army were kept on books, ledger size usually, but not quite ledger thickness, being 1 or 2 inches thick. They were kept under all sorts of conditions; some, but a small minority of them, in regular hospitals, where they could be carefully kept; but the great majority of them in the field, in barns, in groves, and in places out of the line of fire. They were kept in pencil. There were great inaccuracies in the names so hastily put down.

At the time of this investigation there was no way to settle the medical record of a soldier except to look through those books. It depended upon the man himself to state what hospital he was in, and then for the officers to examine the books of that hospital. In very many cases the man could not tell the name of the hospital. A severely wounded or very sick man could not remember—I know of several such instances—the hospital he had been in. If it was a widow's application, she would have very little knowledge of that fact.

The report says there were 10,000—and my recollection is that there were 22,000—of those books. On the recommendation of the Senator from Missouri, the War Department called an officer here—Captain Ainsworth he was then—to take charge of this work, to bring order out of confusion, and to put those hospital records into such condition that the proper information could be obtained from them.

Captain Ainsworth adopted the card-index system. That was in 1887 or 1888 perhaps.

Mr. KEAN. The Senator does not mean to say that he invented that system?

Mr. PROCTOR. He adopted it. I did not say he invented it. I think, however, he was the first to adopt it and apply it to Government purposes in the city of Washington. It met with very great opposition I am able to say from personal knowledge.

The Senator from Missouri urged the incoming Secretary of War in Harrison's Administration to apply the same principle to the service record. There were 400,000 muster rolls, as I remember. They were made once in two months, six in a year, and if a soldier had served four years his name should appear on twenty-four muster rolls.

The muster rolls were on large sheets folded several times; and in order to get a soldier's complete record it would be necessary to examine all those rolls. They had been unfolded and refolded so many times and had become so worn by that process that it was impossible in the months of April and May, in 1889, of which I am speaking, to have the windows open in the rooms in the War Department used by the clerks who were examining these rolls, for the pieces that were worn out would blow away, and so the windows had to be kept closed. A large force of pasters was engaged to try to mend these rolls.

The Senator from Missouri presented his ideas with his usual good sense and vigor. The Secretary of War adopted them, consolidated fourteen divisions, and established the Record and Pension Division.

At that time, in answering an application from the Pension Bureau, the War Department was over 40,000 cases behind, or three months in time. The Secretary urged with what mild force he could that it was customary in business houses to answer letters at least within three months. A good share of his correspondence at that time consisted of letters from Members of Congress, inclosing a blank circular from the Pension Bureau, which was sent by that Bureau to applicants and to Congressmen who applied for information as to the status of any claim. The circular read something like this: "Your application has been received and is awaiting evidence from the War Department." The Secretary was besieged with letters reading: "We had this notice two or three months ago; why do we not have an answer?"

This consolidation was made and Captain Ainsworth was put in charge. Inside of three months, Mr. President—I think the order in question was issued in the month of September—but, at any rate, inside of three months, in 1889 the work of Captain Ainsworth's office was all brought up to date, so that to every application received before 3 o'clock in the afternoon the answer went out that night, unless it was a rare case involving some exceptional condition. Answers to letters received after 3 o'clock went out early the next day. A line of special messengers was established between the War Department and the Pension Bureau, running every hour, in order to make prompt delivery.

Even after the work was brought up to date those circulars were sent out, and quite a number of them were received at the War Department. In several cases, when the request for the status of a claim came to the Pension Office, that Bureau sent out these circulars to the person making the inquiry sometimes a day or two before request was made of the War Department for the information. Several such requests were collected in the War Department, when the Pension Commissioner was called in and asked if that circular had not outlived its usefulness. He admitted that it had, and no more of them were sent. Since that time there has been no complaint, and the work has been kept right up to date. Mr. President, that is far the best piece of administrative work that I have had an opportunity to know of in Washington.

I have heard the suggestion made that Captain Ainsworth was receiving very rapid advancement by legislation. It occurred to me to look at the Army Register in connection with the matter. From that I find that General Ainsworth came into the Army in 1874 and was made a captain in 1879. So he has had thirty years' service. At that time, 1879, Lieutenant-General Young, who has just retired, was a captain, and was not made a major until four years ago. General Chaffee, now Lieutenant-General, was a captain at that time, and was not made a major until nine years afterwards. Major-General MacArthur, the senior major-general, was a captain in 1879, of the same rank as General Ainsworth, and was not made a major until ten years later. General Bates, second in rank in the list of major-generals, was also a captain in 1879, and was not made a major until several years later.

Major-General Wood was not in the Army until seven years later than that. General Randall was a captain at that time and for twelve years after. General Kobbé was also a captain. Gen. Franklin Bell was a second lieutenant. General Baldwin was made a captain in that year. General Wint was also a captain, and Gen. Jesse M. Lee was made a captain in that year, 1879. General Carter was made a first lieutenant in that year. General Bliss was also a lieutenant until some years after that. General Sanger was only a captain. General Moore and General Carr were captains, and General Barry was a second lieutenant. General Corbin was only a captain at that time.

I thought it not out of place to show that the promotion of General Ainsworth had not been especially rapid, he having been thirty years in the service. Owing to his isolated position he has not been in the line of direct promotion, and therefore it is not strange that his advancement should come in the way it has.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I want to occupy just a few minutes in regard to this proposed amendment. It is right. It is for the best interests of the public service, and it is for the best interests of our Government. It is a consolidation of the Office of the Adjutant-General and of the Record and Pension Division into one office.

Why should this be done? Senators are aware of the fact that not long since a General Staff was established in the Army and that that General Staff has taken away from the Adjutant-General's Office all the important business of that office, and to-day its duties are simply those of correspondence.

I read now from the Secretary of War, as quoted here:

> But the establishment of the General Staff has relieved the Adjutant-General's Department of substantially all of its advisory and secretary functions, and the Adjutant-General's Office, as a bureau of the War Department, has become almost entirely a bureau of records and correspondence. The head of that bureau is virtually a corresponding secretary for the Secretary of War and the Chief of Staff. Its principal duties being to receive and record their correspondence, the transmission or publication of orders being a large part of such correspondence, and to furnish information from the records in his custody. Upon the Chief of Staff and his assistants under the President and the Secretary of War, has devolved the duty of executing the general military policy of the nation as expressed in the laws, the regulations of departments, including those relating to the construction and in relation to the government of commands, and other departmental matters, including those which the President and Secretary of War require technical and professional attention or advice.

Now, what is the Record and Pension Office? That Office has control of all the muster rolls of the volunteer forces of the United States, including all the Revolutionary rolls that can be found and those of the war of 1812, the Indian wars, the Mexican war, the war of the rebellion, or the civil war.

Within the last year all the muster rolls of the Regular Army have been transferred to the Record and Pension Office, and so to-day it has charge of all the records and proceedings, and it is engaged in precisely the same kind of business that the Adjutant-General's Office is. Why should they be kept separate? There is no benefit to anybody by keeping them separate. It is against the best interests of good executive administration that they should be kept separate.

At the head of the Adjutant-General's Office is a soldier, a gentleman of high character and standing. He has been in the Army all his life. He now has the rank of colonel. This consolidation will give him the rank of brigadier-general. At the head of the Record and Pension Office is General Ainsworth, with the rank of brigadier-general. This consolidation will give him the rank of major-general.

Now, what is the effect of this? Does it give them any command or any right to interfere with the strategic movements of the Army or of its organization? Not at all. Do they skip anybody? Not an officer of the Army is kept back one particle by this legislation. No one is prejudiced by it. Does it give them command? There is a mistake which is very frequently made; and I want to explain the difference between office and rank.

We have in the Army officers. We have a Lieutenant-General, we have major-generals, and we have brigadier-generals, and they are commissioned as Lieutenant-General, as major-generals, and as brigadier-generals. We have had in the staff department officers of different rank; for instance, the Adjutant-General with the rank of brigadier-general.

Now, this gives Colonel Hall the rank of brigadier-general. It gives General Ainsworth the rank of major-general. The difference between military office and military rank is that it is a custom to speak of the heads of the various staff departments of the Army as general officers, but such a custom is erroneous. The real general officers are those who are commissioned to be such, and their number, which is fixed by law, consists of one Lieutenant-General, six major-generals, and fifteen brigadier-generals.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. DANIEL. Is not General Corbin, who has been Adjutant-General——

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain all that.

Mr. DANIEL. With the rank of major-general——

Mr. COCKRELL. I will explain all that in a minute. I will cover the whole ground, I think.

Mr. DANIEL. Is he not now the head of the Department of the East, at New York?

Mr. COCKRELL. I will come to that if Senators will permit me. I am not going to evade anything in the world.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the gentleman who is to be a brigadier-general is in the Regular Army?

Mr. COCKRELL. He has been there all his life.

Mr. TELLER. And he is a West Pointer?

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Mr. SPOONER. With a fine record, too.

Mr. COCKRELL. He is one of my friends and constituents. He belongs to a distinguished family in Missouri. He is a son of Judge Hall, who was on the circuit court bench for a long time, and was at one time a Member of Congress, and an uncle of his was governor of Missouri during the civil war.

Mr. TELLER. What I meant to say was that if there was any necessity to use that officer to command somebody, he has the qualifications to do it.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly.

Their duty is chiefly of an administrative nature, and their military rank, no matter what it may be, gives them no right whatever to exercise the command which it is the peculiar function of general officers to exercise. It is true that it is within the power of the President to assign the head of a staff department to the command of troops in accordance with his military rank, but only four instances of such assignment are known in the whole history of the Army of the United States.

Here are the four instances:

Alexander Hamilton served as lieutenant-colonel and principal aid-de-camp to General Washington during the war of the Revolution. He was appointed Inspector-General of the Army, with the rank of major-general, July 19, 1798, and after the death of General Washington, December 14, 1799, he commanded the Army until June, 1800, still holding the office of Inspector-General.

Zebulon Montgomery Pike entered the Army as second lieutenant of infantry, and was colonel of the Fifteenth Infantry in 1812. He was appointed Adjutant-General, with the rank of brigadier-general, March 12, 1813, and was killed in the attack on York, Upper Canada, April 27, 1813, while in command of a brigade. He had been authorized by the President to command a brigade. He never performed the duties of Adjutant-General.

Thomas S. Jessup was a line officer from May, 1808, to March, 1818, when he was a lieutenant-colonel of infantry. He was appointed Quartermaster-General, with the rank of brigadier-general, May 8, 1818. On May 20, 1836, he was, by direction of the President, assigned, according to his brevet rank of major-general, to command United States troops and militia to suppress the hostilities of the Creek Indians in Georgia and Alabama. On December 8, 1836, he succeeded General Call in command of the army in Florida, serving in that capacity to May, 1838. He held the office of Quartermaster-General during all this time.

Henry C. Corbin served in the civil war from second lieutenant to colonel of volunteers. He was appointed to the Adjutant General's Department from captain of infantry June 16, 1880; appointed Adjutant-General, with the rank of brigadier-general, February 25, 1898, and with rank of major-general June 6, 1900.

He was, by direction of the President, assigned to the command of the Department of the East October 2, 1903, and to command the Atlantic Division December 22, 1903.

In the whole history of the Army, from its organization in 1789 to the present time, there have been found no other instances of the heads of administrative staff departments being assigned by the President to the command of troops. There is no danger in this case.

I wish to say one more word. General Ainsworth has done a work which has never been equaled by any executive officer of this Government from 1789 to date; and I challenge any comparison with his record. In 1861 he was taken from the Army, where he was a captain, first in Texas, or in Arizona, down on the western border, where he had been, and put in charge of the Record and Pension Office in the War Department. That office at that time had charge of all the hospital records—over 20,000 books, big, little, and tall, piled up and kept in the hall and the hospital. There were transferred in that office over 19,000 cards from the Pension Office for hospital records. Some of them were six inches thick, some of them were thin, to my certain knowledge, for I was trying to find the work my father current business, and had a list of all the cards [illegible] in the Record and Pension Office of the Surgeon-General's Office furnished me by the Commissioner of Pensions. It was a disgrace to any administration.

Ainsworth took charge in December, 1886. By the middle of March he had [illegible] almost 1,000 calls with the same clerks who had been [illegible] and who were not allowed by law to do any other kind of business, and I was answering within three days all my mails. He was [illegible] with the same men. On the 3d of March, 1887, a select committee of the Senate was appointed to investigate the methods of business and to ascertain the causes of the delay in the transaction of business. I was made chairman of it with the Senator from Illinois, the Senator from Connecticut, the Senator from Tennessee, Mr. Harris, and Senator Jones. We were the five members of the committee. We made the investigation, and that is how I became familiar with it.

I went to the War Department. I spent days going over the muster rolls. There they were—some of them copied; some of them covered over with tracing paper. The heavy artillery rolls were as large as the tops of four of these desks, with hundreds of names on them. Every time the Pension Office called for the history of any one of those men all of the rolls of the whole company had to be taken down and unfolded and the record taken and the rolls folded up and put back again. That was the process, until they were being absolutely worn out and destroyed so that you could not decipher them—four hundred and twenty-odd thousand of them. I appealed in every way I could to the officers there in charge to devise some means by which we could obtain access to the contents of the rolls without having to open them out—all of them—every time we wanted to have the record of a man.

I found in the Record and Pension Office of the Surgeon-General's Office, on my investigation of their methods there, that card indexes were being made. I examined them very carefully. I asked General Ainsworth—Captain Ainsworth then: Can not that system which you have adopted in the Record and Pension Office be made applicable to the muster rolls of the Army? He studied a while and said he thought it might be done. I then asked him if he would take the rolls of an entire company, if I would get them from the Adjutant-General's Office, and transcribe their contents onto cards, so that we could know and see exactly what would be the result. He did it. It is in the report of the select committee. It is there shown just exactly what it would be.

I then went to the War Department to get that system adopted there. I found very great objection to it. I then recommended to the Secretary of War that he appoint a select committee of his own officers to investigate and see whether it was not the best system. He appointed a committee of three. They made an investigation and reported in favor of the card-index system.

It was referred to the Secretary. I had hoped that he would adopt it at once and carry it out; but, on the contrary, he referred it to the then Adjutant-General, who made a very strong report—just as strong as he could make—against it. There it was. He refused to carry out a system which, to my mind, was as plain as A B C, and since has been demonstrated to be so.

I do not know whether they remember it or not, but I was very much discouraged after I had spent two years in trying to reform some of the methods so as to get the business up to current date. I went to the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], who with me were a subcommittee on the deficiency bill, and asked them to allow me to put a little legislation on the deficiency bill to compel the War Department to carry out this system. They agreed to it. It went through. The change of Administration came just as that bill became a law, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] became Secretary of War. I saw him, as a matter of course.

My select committee had gone out of existence. Its term had expired. I did recommend the system, and I said to him, "I do not know who may be able to carry out that system, but if you will and can take Captain Ainsworth and will put him in charge of it, I will be personally responsible for its success and guarantee it." In due time he made the order. I did not know what he could do. But he consolidated eight or ten divisions, including the Record and Pension division of the Surgeon-General's Office.

Ainsworth had about 300 men under him. About four hundred odd were transferred with the records of the Army. That was done. In June, when an invoice of what was transferred from the Adjutant-General's Office was taken, there were 40,000 cases unadjudicated. On the [illegible] day of [illegible] when Captain Ainsworth took charge there was not [illegible] of unfinished business in the Adjutant-General's Office, or that part of it which was transferred to General Ainsworth. All the accumulations were disposed of and all the current work was being disposed of.

Not only that, but during that time the law of June 27, 1890, was passed, when the Pension Office was [illegible] with applications for pensions and military records had to be searched. The Pension Office sent to Ainsworth to find calls for [illegible] a week—60,000 calls for military records in one week. All of those that were received before 12 o'clock were acted on that day, and the rest were acted on the next day. That is the record, and it shows for itself.

Now, what has been the result? He has discharged from that office clerks whose salaries amounted to $[illegible] a year. They have been discharged as unnecessary burdens to be kept in the service, their services dispensed with for all time to come, an annual saving, for they are no longer needed.

Now, he does the number of the Regular Army. In September they were on the work begun twenty months before. In other words, they were twenty months behind. When the [illegible] clerks that they turned over to him then every one of those cases was disposed of by the end of December.

I say it is a systematic business which he understands better than all of his clerks put together and which he has the power of making them observe and carry out, and he has done a work for which the salary of a major-general would be insufficient. If he had done the work for any great corporation that has been done for the Government, it would not be [illegible] to pay him $[illegible] a year. Now, these are matters of record. He is a native Vermonter, personally. He is a Vermont Yankee, I suppose. He has been in the Army all his life. I do not suppose he has ever cast a vote in all his life. He went in the Army at a very early day and was kept out on the border.

These are the men who are to be the beneficiaries of a horizontal increase in their salaries by reason of this reorganization. I am not, as a rule, in favor of increasing salaries, but when I find men who have done what these gentlemen have done, I do not begrudge them the increase. As a matter of course, General Ainsworth is not a man who would seek to go in command of the Regular Army. He has been with [illegible] on the frontier. He is not seeking that. That is not his ambition. He has done a work such as no other administrative officer has done. He has taken an interest in it. He has stayed there until 6 or 7 o'clock at night. He divided up his force, and he goes a mile in at 5 or 6 o'clock in the evening. He has clerks who do not come to work until after 12 o'clock, and he stays with them and monitors them work out their time in that way. He keeps everything in perfect order.

He has a record showing exactly the amount of work done by every clerk in the office every since he went there to take charge. He can give you just the amount of work every one has done and they all work. There is no idling there. They have to carry to exactly what they have done and make their own returns. They simply work and do good work. I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PERKINS in the chair). The senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] makes a point of order against this amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. The present incumbent of the chair is here by courtesy, and therefore he will avail himself of Rule XX and submit the question to the Senate for its decision.

Mr. KEAN. I will withdraw the point of order if the Chair is going to do that. I am glad to know how major-generals are made—by handling cards, etc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey withdraws the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. On page 13, line 4, after the word "dollars," I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, line 4, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

That section 22 of the act approved February 2, 1901, entitled "An act to increase the efficiency of the permanent military establishment of the United States," be, and the same is hereby, amended so that it shall read as follows:

"SEC. 22. That the Corps of Engineers shall consist of one chief of Engineers with the rank of brigadier-general, of 12 colonels, 12 lieutenant-colonels, 24 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 40 second lieutenants. The enlisted force provided in section 11 of this act and the officers serving with the organized battalions thereof shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided, That the Chief of Engineers shall be appointed as now provided by law and hereafter vacancies in the Corps of Engineers in all other grades above that of second lieutenant shall be filled by promotion according to seniority from the Corps of Engineers. Any vacancies occurring at any time in the grade of second lieutenant shall be left for future promotions from the corps of cadets at the United States Military Academy."

Mr. PROCTOR. The Committee on Military Affairs yesterday reported a bill for the increase of the Engineer Corps. The reorganization act of February 2 increased all the corps somewhat, and Secretary Root aimed to incorporate in the provisions for the different corps, so far as he was able, something near a fair proportion between the officers of the higher and lower grades. The staff corps always had the advantage of the line in this respect. They have a larger proportion of officers of high rank.

Without making a radical change, he adopted the system, as near as he could bring it about, of a proportion between the colonels and the lieutenant-colonels of one to one and a half, and between the lieutenant-colonels and the majors of one and a half to three. That is, if there are two colonels he would have three lieutenant-colonels and six majors.

Now, in reporting this bill yesterday morning the committee, as nearly as possible, conformed to that rule, which is a wise one and a fair one and a liberal one, and yet we gave in that report the Corps of Engineers some advantage. That report—I speak from memory, but I believe I am correct—provided for 1 brigadier-general, 10 colonels, 16 lieutenant-colonels, 32 majors, 40 captains, 40 first lieutenants, and 40 second lieutenants. We thought the number of lieutenants of each grade should be the same as the number of captains, as it is generally, as it is in the line and in other staff corps.

Now, if the Senator will accept the provisions of that report, I will refrain from any opposition or point of order. It is very true that the Engineer Corps should be increased. The increase which we proposed gives four or five more officers than the amendment of the Senator, but the officers are of the lower grades.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered is the bill introduced on the 23d ultimo by my colleague [Mr. BAILEY], who is unavoidably absent from the Senate to-day. The amendment which has been proposed by the committee increases the number of engineer officers to a considerable extent; but, as indicated by the Senator in charge of the bill, the increase is largely in the lower grades, particularly first lieutenants and second lieutenants.

My information is that the amendment proposed by the committee is not as satisfactory as the bill proposed by my colleague, for the simple reason that the second and first lieutenants in the Engineer Corps are usually officers just from West Point, thoroughly equipped theoretically for the discharge of their duties, but lacking in the practical knowledge that is necessary to carry on these great works.

If the Senator from Vermont, however, speaking for the committee, declines to accept the amendment proposed by my colleague and will insist upon that proposed by the committee, I, of course, will accept the amendment. But I wanted to make the explanation and to suggest that the bill proposed by my colleague is the best under the circumstances, because what is necessary now is an increase in the number of engineer officers capable, by learning, and experience also, to carry on the great works we have in hand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand the Senator from Texas to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. CULBERSON. I accept the amendment to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. ALLISON. We had better have the amendment of the committee read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that there is no amendment at the desk from the committee other than that which has been adopted.

Mr. PROCTOR. The amendment is to strike out "twelve" before "colonels" and insert "ten;" before "lieutenant-colonels" to strike out "eighteen" and insert "sixteen;" before "majors" to strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty-two."

Mr. CULBERSON. As an accommodation to the Senator, I send up the amendment in print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Texas sends to the desk a modified form of the amendment, which the Secretary will read.

Mr. CULBERSON. It is a printed amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. Where the word "twelve" occurs before the word "colonels" strike out "twelve" and insert "ten."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Where the word "eighteen" occurs before the word "lieutenant-colonels" strike out "eighteen" and insert "sixteen."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "majors" strike out "thirty-six" and insert "thirty-two."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "captains" strike out "forty" and insert "forty-three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Before the words "first lieutenants" strike out "forty" and insert "forty-three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Before the words "second lieutenants" strike out "thirty-eight" and insert "forty-three."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is agreed to as amended.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to have the attention of the acting chairman of the committee for a moment. I have an amendment which I desire to offer.

Mr. PROCTOR. Has this amendment been agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands, that it was agreed to as read.

Mr. TELLER. I understood that it was agreed to. If in order, I should like to offer an amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment met the approval of the Committee on Military Affairs as modified by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. PROCTOR. I have received a letter from the Secretary of War this afternoon, since we have been in session, in regard to some matters pending between the military and civil governments in the Philippine Islands. Of course I have not had an opportunity to examine it, but I had a talk with him this morning in which he proposed it, and I have no question but that it is a just and proper thing to do.

I said to him that it occurred to me it should be considered by the Committee on the Philippines, but I have shown it to the chairman of that committee, and he thinks it should properly go on this bill. I therefore offer as an amendment the matter in parentheses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

Mr. CULBERSON. I simply rose to ask what became of the amendment. I understood that the Senator from Colorado rose to ask some question about the amendment I proposed.

Mr. LODGE. It was agreed to

Mr. TELLER. No; I rose to offer an amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state that the amendment as modified by the Senator from Texas was agreed to by the Senate. The Secretary will read the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont. The Secretary is in doubt as to what point in the bill the amendment shall be inserted.

Mr. LODGE. At the end of the bill.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add at the end of the bill the following:

The Secretary of War is authorized, if in his judgment the conclusion be an equitable one, to compare the accounts and settle the balances between the civil government of the Philippine Islands and the government of the United States, to settle and adjust and to report the character of the claims covering expenses that have arisen between the two governments, such as those for transportation, Quartermaster's supplies, Commissary supplies, Ordnance supplies, Signal Corps supplies, Engineer supplies, Medical supplies, Q. M. D. supplies, Signal Corps supplies, Ordnance supplies, Engineer supplies, Medical supplies, Q. M. D. supplies, and to report that the same be dropped from the records of the Quartermaster's Department. The act of the Secretary of War in this behalf, with respect to the accounts and the expenses, the Quartermaster's and the Subsistence Corps shall be accorded [illegible] and settlement [illegible] and settlement [illegible] not authorized to [illegible] a deficit in the subsistence and quartermaster's appropriations for the current fiscal year, there is hereby appropriated out of moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, for the quartermaster department payment of claims [illegible] and government, $[illegible] for the subsistence department, [illegible] $144,000.00, which funds shall be accounted for as [illegible] "and subsistence supplies for not exceeding two years."

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to hear some explanation or statement about the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. I will state that the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs in charge of the bill handed me the letter from the Secretary of War, together with the amendment which has just been read. That amendment belongs clearly on the appropriation bill. I think it is very necessary and very proper in order to settle the outstanding accounts between the civil and the military government. The military government turned over certain launches, which are mentioned there, to the civil government, but they are still borne on the Quartermaster's accounts. The civil government has taken them and carried them, and kept them in repair ever since that time.

In the subsistence department there is a charge against the civil government, and the civil government makes a charge against the War Department for expenses involved in taking care of certain prisoners. The civil government has also expended money for the redemption of arms. This is done simply to enable them to balance the two accounts between the former military [illegible] the civil government now existing. It seems to me that it ought to be passed. It is really necessary to settle up the accounts; that is all.

Mr. CARMACK. I would rather that the amendment should be printed and go over.

Mr. LODGE. I take it the acting chairman of the committee does not wish to have the bill held up for the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, I am not going to press it. It was simply submitted. It is not my amendment. I have nothing to do with it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Vermont withdraws the amendment?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do not, unless the Senator from Tennessee insists upon its going over. I have a letter here from the Secretary of War going into a fuller explanation of it. I can have it read, if the Senator wishes, or I will withdraw the amendment, if the Senator desires.

Mr. CARMACK. I shall have to insist upon the amendment going over. I have no desire to delay action on the bill, but I should like to have an opportunity to read the amendment and understand it better than I do now.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go over until to-morrow morning.

Mr. PROCTOR. I will withdraw the amendment.

Mr. CARMACK. I should like to hear the letter read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont withdraws the amendment.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the letter from the Secretary of War relative to the amendment be printed as a document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The letter will be printed as a document.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the acting chairman to an amendment. I have offered a similar amendment, and we have adopted it once or twice. The committee have put in an amendment on page 15 which I do not think quite fills the bill, and I wish to amend that amendment. I am hesitating between two opinions as to a part of it. There has been a large number of brigadier-generals made recently, and the Senate committee amendment on page 15, line 18, provides that—

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, with creditable records, who served during the civil war, shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade, and the Secretary of War may assign, etc.

That is the point. A large number of officers have suggested that it is not fair to provide that the rank shall be below the grade of brigadier-general, and so cut out a brigadier-general. I can see where in some cases that would be exceedingly unfair. I ask the Senator in charge of the bill if he thinks it would jeopardize the amendment if I should insist upon changing it, and instead of saying "below the grade of brigadier-general" say "below the grade of major-general."

Mr. PROCTOR. I am sure it would jeopardize the amendment. We had an amendment a little broader than this on one appropriation bill, and we were told in conference that it was utterly useless to consider it, and we dropped it out. The Senator will see that above the rank of colonel it is entirely in the discretion of the President to make a brigadier-general, who may be a colonel before he retires.

Mr. TELLER. I know he can.

Mr. PROCTOR. I think the adoption of such an amendment to the amendment would be very unwise indeed.

Mr. TELLER. I am not going to offer it. I wanted the opinion of the Senator on the subject. I am going to offer something else.

We have retired a large number who have been in the Army and have been promoted to a brigadier-generalship and then retired. There has been a great number of soldiers who were colonels retired. To-day a retired colonel called on me and told me that he had been forty-two years in the regular service of the United States, and he had been retired as a colonel by reason of his age. He seemed to think that he ought to have been promoted to a brigadiership, and judging from the service he told me of, it seemed to me that he ought to have been so retired.

I wish to make the provision the committee have inserted here retroactive. I want it so that those who have already gone on the retired list may have this bounty, for that is what it is. I should like to have it read as follows:

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of major-general—

Leaving out brigadier-general—with creditable records, who served during the civil war, shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade.

I do not know how many that would include, but I should say not a very great number.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Colorado whether there will be any objection to inserting in line 10, after the words "civil war," the words "in the Army or Navy."

Mr. SCOTT. The Navy already has the benefit of the provision.

Mr. TELLER. A Senator near me says the Navy has it.

Mr. QUARLES. The Navy has it now.

Mr. SCOTT. I will say to the Senator from Pennsylvania that this is the exact language that is used in the law which provides for the retiring of navy officers.

Mr. PENROSE. I did not understand it, having just entered the Chamber.

Mr. PROCTOR. It has applied to the Navy for many years, and on the naval appropriation bill which has just passed the Senate it was made to apply to the Marine Corps.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to withhold my amendment for a moment. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. ALGER], who has had more experience in these matters than I, who served not only as a general in the Army, but as Secretary of War, has a measure that he thinks will cover the case. I only want to say, having this rule in the Navy, why should we not have this rule in the Army?

Mr. SCOTT. And we have it in the Marine Corps.

Mr. TELLER. And we have it in the Marine Corps, says the Senator from West Virginia. I will withdraw my amendment for the moment: and if the Senator from Michigan offers his and it is accepted, that will be all that will be necessary. I understand that it is what he has proposed as a bill.

I will wait while the conference is going on about it. I have no pride by any means in getting it in as my amendment. [A pause.] The Senator from Michigan tells me it is suggested that his bill might injure the appropriation bill. I know that if it is postponed to be passed as a separate bill, that will be the end of it. These people have not got any great amount of political backing, and they will not get it in the shape of a bill. If we do not get it on the appropriation bill, it will not go through at all. Now I am going to offer my amendment. I move to strike out and insert after the word "war," in line 20 on page 15, "who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 20, after the word "war," insert "who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired."

Mr. TELLER. That is it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, we have once on an appropriation bill had the provision substantially as this would be with that amendment. It was impossible to get it accepted. I think the effect of the Senator's amendment would be to kill this whole provision. If it is allowed to stand as it is, I think it will be a stepping-stone toward getting full justice for the officers who have been retired. I am just as earnestly in favor of it as the Senator. I have drawn and introduced two or three bills. We passed here in the Senate one separate bill. We also put the provision on an appropriation bill, but it failed to be agreed to in the other body.

My feeling for the veterans of the civil war who retired with insufficient rank is certainly just as strong as the Senator's can be. That is all that need be said of it. I would do anything that would secure them equal recognition, and I shall always act in that way. But I am sure it would be very unwise to put it in this place. It would be harmful to the purpose the Senator has at heart.

Mr. SPOONER rose.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. Is not that a very singular theory upon which the Senate is to legislate, that it will not put on a provision that is just? If the Senator thinks it belongs in the bill and is necessary to make the bill right, why should it be withheld in contemplation of a disagreement to it in some other place? If there should be a disagreement to it, I do not see how it would jeopardize the provision, because undoubtedly the whole bill will be thrown into conference, or nearly all of it.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator from Vermont had better take the chances and try it.

Mr. PROCTOR. From experience I am very sure it would be harmful. I think the provision as we have it might pass, and that it would be a help in getting further action. There is a bill before the committee that will no doubt be reported favorably, which covers the whole provision, and I do not see why it can not be passed during the present week or on almost any day.

Mr. TELLER. The provision I want to have inserted is in the interest of the men who have served this Government in the most arduous war of the age.

The provision the Senator insists upon as so important that he thinks the provision ought not to be changed for fear he may jeopardize it will possibly take in a few, but only a very few of that class. It will take in some of the more modern soldiers, some who did not go through the civil war, and some who have rendered comparatively little service to the Government of the United States and the world compared with what these men rendered, who have now, after a long service, gone out of the service on a compensation that in these days of high prices does not give them a decent living.

I have heard it said here that we are big enough to do anything we ought to do. I agree to that. I agree, Mr. President, that if for any whim or for any reason we want a regiment down in Porto Rico, either for glory or for gain, we can have it there if we want it.

I do not believe, Mr. President, that the American people will be gratified when they find that such an exhibition is made here, particularly when it comes to a question of promoting and paying a man who has given his life to the public service in the Army of the United States, who has performed all the duties of a soldier in an acceptable manner, and because age has overtaken him before he got to be a brigadier-general, which he would have attained if he had not been retired on account of his age, he must remain a colonel or a captain or whatever may be his rank, and be jumped, as is suggested to me, by those without military experience or military training.

I do not know whether this amendment will jeopardize the bill or not, and I do not care. I know very well that the bill will not fail; and if this provision, which does justice to men now on the retired list, can not be put on it, I do not care whether the provision for future retirements is retained or not. You can put that in some other day. I want it distinctly understood that it is a question whether men who have done their duty and have gone out of the service by reason of the statute as to age shall not have the same benefit granted to them which you grant soldiers and marines, and which you propose to grant to men who are now not on the retired list, but who shall hereafter retire. I ask that there may be a vote on the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 15, line 20, after the word "war," it is proposed to insert "who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired;" so that, if so amended, it will read:

Field, line, and staff officers of the Army below the grade of brigadier-general, with creditable records, who served during the civil war, who have heretofore been or may hereafter be retired shall, when retired, be retired with the rank and retired pay of the next higher grade.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, I am not going to put myself on record as opposing any measure for the benefit of these soldiers, but I have doubted in their interest the policy of putting the amendment on the bill, and I still doubt it, but I am not going to oppose it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Colorado to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, there needs to be another amendment, because some few of these officers have had the advantage of that grade. I have an amendment here, which reads as follows:

But no officer shall be entitled to the benefits of this provision who received any advancement of grade at the time of retirement or with a view to retirement.

Mr. PROCTOR. That is right.

Mr. TELLER. I do not know that that would cover many cases, but it does cover some.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Colorado offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 16, at the end of the amendment, after the word "grade," it is proposed to insert:

But no officer shall be entitled to the benefits of this provision who received any advancement of grade at the time of retirement or with a view to retirement.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to offer an amendment, which I send to the desk, to be inserted after line 10 on page 13.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 13, after line 10, it is proposed to insert:

Details to fill vacancies in the Ordnance Department, as contemplated by the act of February 2, 1901, may be made from the Army at large from the grade in which the vacancy exists, or from the grade below; and officers shall have the rank and pay of the grade to which detailed while serving therein: Provided, That no officer shall be so detailed except upon the recommendation of a board of ordnance officers: And provided further, That officers so detailed to vacancies in grades below that of lieutenant-colonel shall not, after a service of four years in the Ordnance Department, be again eligible for such detail until after they shall have served for at least one year out of that Department.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, this matter, though it did not come before the committee for consideration this year, has been before the committee in previous years, and the committee have not favored its adoption. I think it is a harmful amendment. Secretary Root was two years ago inclined to favor it, but he subsequently changed his mind. I should like to have the Secretary read from Secretary Root's last annual report what I have marked.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

Some criticism has been made upon the detail system as applied to the Ordnance Department upon the ground that it has brought [illegible] a number of officers to fill the ordnance vacancies. I acknowledge such criticism. It is true that when the statute assigns twenty-four first lieutenants to the Ordnance Department we have but seven. But the reason is that the deficiency of experienced officers in the Artillery Corps from which is the main the detailing for the Ordnance Corps must be obtained.

The Chief of Artillery, in his report of November 24, 1903, says upon this subject:

"It will appear that only about 34 per cent of the total number of artillery officers present for duty have had over five years' experience in the artillery. The gravity of this situation will be duly appreciated when it is remembered that at the present time the duties and responsibilities of an artillery officer are greater than ever before. It is neither just nor considerate, nor fair to the officer concerned, to put an inexperienced one in a position of command where ignorance may result in the loss of human life or in the destruction of thousands of dollars of government property."

When it is remembered that the 13 colonels, the 15 lieutenant-colonels, the 44 majors, and 32 captains of the Artillery Corps constitute more than 34 per cent of the corps, it will readily be seen that there are but few lieutenants who are qualified among the inexperienced officers referred to by the Chief of Artillery and few who are available for transfer to the Ordnance Corps. There would have been no difficulty at any time within the past two years in completely filling the list of lieutenants in the Ordnance Corps by details from the artillery, if a sufficient number could have been spared from the small number of artillery lieutenants fitted for the ordnance service. The details have not been made because artillery officers should not go into the ordnance without a considerable amount of previous artillery service, and because that service, under the existing conditions of the new artillery component, has number of peculiar consequences. This is a temporary condition and can readily be dealt with in the near future without any change of the law.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, it is true that in the past, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] has indicated, Secretary Root opposed the change, and stated very clearly that his reason for opposing it was to give the General Staff law a trial before proceeding to amend it. It has been given a trial, and it has been demonstrated that it is deficient in this one respect.

It has been under consideration by the General Staff, and this proposed amendment recommended to the Lieutenant General. The Lieutenant-General has recommended it to the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of War has to-day recommended it to Congress. The Secretary of War has been absent, and hence the delay.

In justice to the acting chairman of the committee, I should say that I have not had an opportunity to fully discuss this matter with him to-day, because of his being busily and constantly occupied in charge of the bill.

The matter went before the subcommittee on fortifications because it was too late for consideration by the committee in charge of this bill, but the committee on fortifications believed that it ought to go in with the other matters pertaining to the staff which have just been adopted as a part of this bill now under consideration.

In the meantime a bill had been presented to the Committee on Military Affairs relating to the enlargement of the Corps of Engineers, which, of course, was legislation, pure and simple. The committee was polled yesterday morning and the bill was reported and went to the Calendar. So far as I am concerned, my assent to it was on the ground and assurance that it should be treated as a separate measure and not be attached to this bill.

That measure having now gone into this bill leaves this amendment where it can not be added to that one as a separate measure. So that now in justice it should be adopted as a part of the pending measure. I have here a copy of the letter of the Secretary of War in respect to it.

Mr. President, the amendment provides for no more officers. It has been found on trial that that corps can not be filled in the usual way. Unless you offer relief in this way, it is a simple matter of whether you will detail men to go there without passing an examination or not have a full corps.

They are now short twenty-one members of the corps, two on staff duty and nineteen vacancies, because the junior officers do not care to take the necessary course of study to submit to an examination and pass unless some inducement is offered. So we must either lower the standard or we must make a more liberal provision, if we will have an efficient Ordnance Corps.

I send to the desk the letter of the Secretary of War, which I ask may be made of record.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator desire to have it read?

Mr. WARREN. I ask to have it read.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to have that letter read, but before it is read I wish to say a word respecting the amendment.

It is true, as stated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], that this amendment was submitted to the subcommittee on fortifications, and reasons, which I think were very good, were presented for its adoption, although I did not examine the details of the amendment with very great care. But it was intimated to the committee and to me personally that the amendment relating to the Engineer Corps, which is now a part of this bill, would be offered as an amendment to the bill, and it was stated that if that was offered as an amendment this provision relating to the Ordnance Corps, being very pressing, ought also to go upon the bill.

I stated to the officer who presented the matter that it was utterly impossible for the amendment in regard to the Engineer Corps to be put upon this bill; that it was palpably and clearly general legislation; that a point of order would surely be made against it, and that, if such a point were made, the amendment would be ruled out. I also stated to the officer that it would be out of order on the fortifications appropriation bill and could not be placed upon that bill. So I think I must have misled the officer, who had the view I have stated respecting this particular amendment; and I certainly must have been misled about it, for there seems to be much doubt as to whether the amendment respecting the Engineer Corps is a proper amendment on this bill, and whether the question of receiving it should not have been submitted to the Senate. I believe another amendment was submitted to the Senate which was equally out of order.

Now, I hope the Senator from Vermont who is in charge of this bill, having consented to place upon it a considerable amount of legislation which is not in order under any circumstances, will not now cut off this amendment relating to the Ordnance Corps, which is a reasonable and proper amendment. If its language is not just what it ought to be, I trust the Senator will give us the benefit of his experience and modify it, so that the Ordnance Corps may have in some measure, at least, what it is entitled to.

There are nineteen vacancies, I am told, in the Ordnance Corps now, and under existing law the examinations are so rigid that it is impossible to get men from the particular corps who are eligible to be transferred to the Ordnance Corps. It is a highly scientific corps, and it is one that in the future will be of immense service to our country if its officers will pursue the studies which are necessary in the Army.

I think that the document which the Senator from Vermont had read, instead of being an argument against this amendment discloses the fact that the whole Army ought to be admitted to competition as respects details and assignments to the Ordnance Corps, so that young men who, by any misfortune, may not have got into the Artillery Corps, which I believe is now the only corps from which officers may be drawn for the Ordnance Corps, that these young men, whose intellects are alert and who have a disposition to study the intricacies and complications of ordnance, may have the opportunity of a detail; and then, if they show a capacity for this work, that they may have an opportunity for promotion in this corps.

I should not have spoken upon this subject were it not for the fact that I misled entirely those who are in favor of this measure by stating to them that I supposed it was impossible to put it upon this appropriation bill.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, in regard to the last sentence of the Senator from Iowa, there is no promotion in the Ordnance Corps to the men who are provided for by this amendment. It is a mere detail. They are not promoted to the Ordnance Corps at all: they take their promotion in the line of the Army, and the Ordnance Corps is open to details from the whole Army.

In regard to the letter of Secretary Root, I will say that, after several years of experience, three or four years ago he changed his mind in regard to this matter, and the closing sentence of what was read from him is that he thinks no further legislation is necessary.

There is one very vicious clause in this amendment, and I wish especially to call the attention of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to it. There have been several cases where details were made and the officers were to receive pay of a higher grade. That was the old rule of the Ordnance Department before the reorganization of the Army. It was a rule to which there was great objection. We have in the case of the Porto Rican Provisional Regiment, provision for which was made to-day, provided especially that the officers so detailed shall receive the pay of their grade only. Now, field officers are receiving the pay of a higher grade. That is all wrong. All the staff officers will be trying to get a similar provision. The provision is this—I will begin with the first part of the amendment:

> Details to fill vacancies in the Ordnance Department, as contemplated by the act of February 2, 1901, may be made from the Army at large from the grades in which the vacancy exists or from the grade below, and officers shall have the rank and pay of the grade to which detailed while serving therein.

That is all right so far. Then they say—and this is the milk in the cocoanut—that the second lieutenants who are detailed to that corps shall get the pay of first lieutenants. That is a very vicious provision. If that can be stricken out, I will not raise the point of order on the amendment, although I think the whole of it is unwise and that it is a very improper provision.

Mr. WARREN. I trust the Senator will not raise the point of order. I hardly think he can persist in doing so after the legislation of the afternoon, and especially so as he knows that the understanding was that the Ordnance Corps could be taken care of along with the Engineer Corps, provision for which has now gone into the bill as an amendment.

What the Senator from Vermont proposes to strike out is the very essence of the amendment. After three years' trial of the staff it has been found impossible to fill the detail under the terms of the present law.

Second lieutenants do not wish to take the course of study to enable them to take this examination to go into this corps and to do this hard and trying work without some compensation therefor.

It has been sufficiently tried. It has been found wanting; and there is no other way to handle this matter except to make provision of this kind or to detail men for that service who can not pass the examination.

Will you lower the standard or will you keep up the standard and pay the small difference between a second lieutenant's salary and that of a first lieutenant or between a first lieutenant's salary and that of a captain?

So far as the late Secretary of War is concerned, I have heard nothing very formidable in what was read from his report. I have talked with the Secretary about this subject, and I am not going in too far when I say I believe that we should have had exactly the same kind of a report from him at this time as we now have from the present Secretary of War, Mr. Taft.

He desired very properly that the staff law in all its provisions should be lived up to long enough to demonstrate fully whether it needed amendment or not. It has been demonstrated seemingly to the satisfaction of our acting chairman, the Senator from Vermont, that it is wrong or insufficient, so far as the Engineer Corps is concerned, and he has consented to an amendment which provides for that corps.

Now, I ask that the same consent may be given, or that a vote of the body may be taken upon the amendment in regard to the Ordnance Corps. Perhaps it would be well to have read, and I will ask to have read, the letter from the present Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, March [illegible], 1904.

Hon. REDFIELD PROCTOR,
Committee on Military Affairs, United States Senate.

SIR: I have the honor to invite your attention to the following in regard to the Ordnance Department of the Army.

Under the provisions of existing law commissions in that department are now filled by the detail of line officers of the same grade [illegible] from the line of the Army. There are now [illegible] second lieutenants who serve in the Ordnance Department for four years, and [illegible] the grade of lieutenant colonel are [illegible] but [illegible] and they shall have served for at least two years in that grade. The law provides that the details shall be made under such system of examination as the President may from time to time prescribe.

Since the passage of the act of February 2, 1901, providing a code for the present method of filling vacancies in the Ordnance Department there have been in that department [illegible] vacancies in the grade of lieutenant colonel, for which purpose no officers have been detailed, and [illegible] from the line of the Army [illegible] by his promotion to a majority. There are now [illegible] vacancies in addition to two officers detailed to the General Staff. Under the law [illegible] prior to the passage of the act above mentioned, second lieutenants of the line were eligible for transfer to the Ordnance Department upon the occurrence of a vacancy, and by such transfer they received a permanent appointment and an elevation to the grade of first lieutenant. With these opportunities there was no difficulty in securing candidates capable of passing the examination, the numbers being in ordinary times sufficient to provide competition, though in times of prospect of rapid promotion in the line of the Army opportunity for preparation for examination the rate of accumulation was so slow as to cause vacancies in the Ordnance Department to remain considerable intervals.

The change of the provisions of the act of February 2, 1901, so as to permit the detail of second lieutenants to the grade of first lieutenant was made in recognition of the necessity for offering inducements not existing in the conditions allowing detail only from the same grades, but as the commissions from service in the Ordnance Department will come after an officer passes the grade of second lieutenant the measure of relief is but a partial one and has had only partial effect, but three officers having been selected under it.

In order to supply officers for the urgent needs of the Ordnance Department it appears to be necessary either to lower the standard for admission to that Department or to increase the inducements to officers to prepare themselves for the examination for detail and to undergo the exacting service of the Department. It is not believed to be necessary or desirable to lower the standard: the character of the examination has not been changed from that obtaining under the former laws, and there are believed to be plenty of officers in the service capable of passing it.

The inducements can be increased, it is believed sufficiently, by permitting the detail of all officers to be made either from the grade in which the vacancy exists or from the grade below, and by reducing the compulsory interval between details from two years to one; and this change would involve no increase of expense, as the number of officers in each of the grades, both in and out of the Ordnance Department, would not thereby be increased. [illegible] provision for less frequent promotion of officers in the Ordnance Department, of which the duties are specialized and [illegible] officers serving in grades below [illegible] a great part of their time out of the Ordnance Department [illegible] to be sufficient to preserve the advantages of the present system.

I [illegible] that the following legislation be enacted which [illegible] conveniently done at the present stage by attaching it to [illegible]

[illegible] the Ordnance Department, as contemplated by the act of February 2, 1901, may be made from the Army at large, from the grades in which the vacancy exists or from the grades below, and officers shall have the rank and pay of the grade to which detailed while serving therein.

[illegible] until after they shall have served for at least one year out of that [illegible]

Very respectfully,

W. H. TAFT,
Secretary of War.

Mr. PROCTOR. In regard to what the Senator from Wyoming says about a misunderstanding as to the staff measures, I wish to say that I never heard [illegible] that there was any [illegible] to the Ordnance Corps. [illegible] was before us and never alluded to it. We had a hearing and he was [illegible] us and we gave him everything he asked for. The Chief of Engineers was before us and stated just what he wanted in regard to that corps, and I was instructed by the committee to have a further conference with him. I thereupon [illegible] to an amendment offered by the Senator from Texas when he accepted the amendment I proposed, making it conform to the action of the committee.

Now, to be consistent, I can do nothing other than to insist that I shall raise the point of order unless this amendment can be made to correspond with all the previous action of the committee—that is, to strike out the words I have referred to, giving the increased pay.

There is another provision in it which I think is very unwise. It puts the whole matter under the control of the Ordnance Department. It takes it away from the Secretary, where the responsibility ought to rest. It restores the old provision which was in force before the reorganization. The power used to be with the Ordnance Department. It was claimed that it was a close corporation, and that the sons of favorite officers could always pass the examination. This measure restores that old vicious proposition in the proviso that no officer shall be so detailed except upon the recommendation of a board of ordnance officers. It takes it out of the Secretary's hands entirely, which is an unwise measure surely.

Mr. SCOTT. I raise the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator from West Virginia withhold the point for a moment?

Mr. SCOTT. I should be very glad indeed to accommodate the Senator from Wyoming, but we have been four weeks on this bill in subcommittee, and I am very sure few of us on the subcommittee would recognize it now. These measures are coming up that never were before the subcommittee and never have been considered, and I certainly think it is not the proper time or the proper place——

Mr. WARREN. That is what I wish to explain.

Mr. SCOTT. To load down this bill with amendments without having given them due consideration. The army officers were all given an opportunity to appear before us, as the chairman very truly says. We take the Porto Rican officers, who are detailed for that regiment, and we say they shall not have the pay of one grade higher. We take it from them. Now, if this amendment is adopted we put in the very thing that we have taken out in the Porto Rican case. I shall insist, as soon as the Senator from Wyoming says what he may care to say, upon the Chair ruling on my point of order.

Mr. WARREN. What I have to say is with regard to the point raised by the honorable acting chairman of the Military Committee and the honorable Senator from West Virginia. I dare say, in fact I fully understand, that the reason why it was not before the Military Committee was, as I said before, that it did not early enough reach a point where it could be presented, backed with the proper credentials: that is, with the approval of the staff, the Lieutenant-General, and the Secretary of War. The return of the Secretary of War was subsequent to the reporting of this bill by the regular committee. I do not think that that alone ought to be alleged as a reason why it should not be considered upon its merits.

Mr. President, I do not think I need to go into any argument to show the fairness or the unfairness of permitting this amendment to be voted on by the Senate. If it is wrong, the Senate will say so; if it is right, it will say so. We have proceeded along lines with this bill of submitting to the will of the Senate.

There have been notices of points of order, but none have been really made. If offered, they have been withdrawn. One was withdrawn at a time when the presiding officer felt it his duty to submit it to the Senate for decision under the rule. Now, there may be some difference of opinion as to the gauge that the presiding officer may take. I have always understood that rules were for general government.

I have often heard the adage that "the exception proves the rule," although I do not think I know exactly what that adage means. But I do know that almost every rule must at rare intervals be suspended for the public good. I do know that if it had not been considered proper it would not be one of the standing rules of the Senate. Therefore, I think it is a rule that may be resorted to perhaps oftener than is our custom in the Senate.

We have had amendments upon amendments to this bill, which now have become part of the bill by adoption, that certainly were wide upon the points of order than the pending amendment. I hope the point of order will not be made, but if made, that it will be submitted to the Senate to decide.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. PROCTOR. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to make the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator did not make the point of order.

Mr. PROCTOR. He gave notice that he would do so.

Mr. SCOTT. I am perfectly willing to allow it to go to a vote. I do not feel disposed to shake out the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Wyoming. [Putting the question.] The Chair will again submit the question, and ask all Senators to vote.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to have the amendment read again, as I was not here when it was offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The Secretary again read the amendment.

Mr. HOAR. I merely wish to make an inquiry of the mover of the amendment. I am not very well informed about this matter. Are there precedents in our existing legislation for putting a discretion, which is in the President in such a matter, in the power of a board of officers as to individuals to be selected for certain military service?

Mr. PROCTOR. I think it is very unusual. It was the old provision which was wiped out by the reorganization act, and I think it would be very wrong to restore it.

Mr. GORMAN. I trust the Senator from Vermont will not keep us here later this evening. Evidently we can not finish the bill to-night. An important provision is before the Senate. I think the Senator would better let the bill go over until to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. I should be very glad to close it up if there is nothing but this provision. To settle this quickly, I raise the point of order.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont will state his point of order.

Mr. WARREN. I rose, Mr. President, to say I would be glad to accept an amendment covering the point raised by my honorable friend the Senator from Massachusetts, but I am very much in hope the Senator from Vermont will not raise the point on it, amended as he suggests. If the point of order is so raised I shall be glad to have the President pro tempore, if he will do so, submit it to the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the point is raised, the Chair will be obliged to sustain it. Does the Chair understand the Senator to raise the point of order?

Mr. PROCTOR. I do.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I agree with the Senator from Maryland——

Mr. PROCTOR. Is there anything further?

Mr. ALLISON. I think this amendment ought to be modified, so as to meet the views of the acting chairman of the committee, and I have no doubt it can be done by to-morrow.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask that the amendment which I offered and withdrew in regard to a settlement between the military and civil governments in the Philippines be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed at the request of the Senator from Vermont.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in excutive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 53 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, March 9, 1904, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate March 8, 1904.

POSTMASTERS.

OHIO.

John A. Anderson to be postmaster at St. Marys, in the county of Auglaize and State of Ohio, in place of John L. Sullivan, removed.

William A. Campbell to be postmaster at Lima, in the county of Allen and State of Ohio, in place of George Hall. Incumbent's commission expired January 24, 1903.

Elmer A. Palmer to be postmaster at Napoleon, in the county of Henry and State of Ohio, in place of Tilghman C. Clewell. Incumbent's commission expired March 9, 1902.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate March 8, 1904.

APPOINTMENT IN THE REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

George Elfers, of New York, to be a second assistant engineer in the Revenue-Cutter Service of the United States, with the rank of third lieutenant.

POSTMASTERS.

LOUISIANA.

Benjamin F. Ford to be postmaster at Natchitoches, in the parish of Natchitoches and State of Louisiana.

MONTANA.

Lawrence Hauck to be postmaster at Philipsburg, in the county of Granite and State of Montana.

OHIO.

John A. Anderson to be postmaster at St. Marys, Ohio.
William A. Campbell to be postmaster at Lima, Ohio.
Frederick T. Miles to be postmaster at Salem, in the county of Columbiana and State of Ohio.
Elmer A. Palmer to be postmaster at Napoleon, Ohio.

PENNSYLVANIA.

Cyrus E. Hipple to be postmaster at Conshohocken, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.
Sylvester C. Stout to be postmaster at Glenside, in the county of Montgomery and State of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, March 8, 1904.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.
Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. On yesterday, upon the conference report on the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] made the point of order that the conferees had exceeded their jurisdiction in substance as follows: That Senate amendment numbered 235 inserted these words: "or any other;" and again to the amendment numbered 236 the Senate inserted these words: "by this or any other act." The House provision which the Senate amended is as follows:

No part of any money appropriated by this or any other act shall be available for payment of expenses of horses and carriages or drivers therefor for the personal use of any officer provided for herein other than the President of the United States, the heads of Executive Departments, and the Secretary to the President.

The conference report takes the matter in difference to which the Chair has referred, accepts the Senate amendments, and inserts "or official:" so as to make it read "for the personal or official use of any officer provided for by this or any other act other than the President of the United States, etc." It is objected that the insertion of the words "or official" is aliunde to the matter that was in difference between the two Houses, and prevents, if enacted, the use of appropriations in this or any other appropriation bill for paying the expenses of horses and carriages, or drivers therefor, for the personal or official use of any officer, etc. It is evident from the reading of the amendments that the insertion of the words "or official" inserts that within the conference report that was not proposed by the House or by the Senate.

It is true that if the whole paragraph in the bill as it passed the House had been stricken out and a substitute therefor proposed by the Senate, or if the Senate had stricken out the paragraph without proposing a substitute, and the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate, then the conferees might have had jurisdiction touching the whole matter and might have agreed upon any provision that would have been germane. But that is not this case. This provision in the conference report inserts legislation that never was before the House or before the Senate, and it was quite competent for the conferees, if they could do this, to have stricken out the whole paragraph and inserted anything that was germane. They could have stricken out these words, "other than the President of the United States, the heads of Executive Departments, and the secretary to the President," and while there were but two words inserted, the provision, if enacted into law, would be far-reaching and would run along the line of the whole public service.

As to the wisdom of such a provision, the Chair is not called upon to intimate any opinion. It is for the House and the Senate to determine upon the wisdom of it, and as the House and the Senate never have considered that proposition the Chair is of opinion that the conferees exceeded their power, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist upon its disagreement to the amendments and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that the House further insist upon its disagreement to all the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. BINGHAM, Mr. GILLETT of Massachusetts, and Mr. LIVINGSTON.

A CORRECTION.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make a correction in the RECORD, with a statement.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GILBERT. Mr. Speaker, some four or five days ago I took occasion to make some remarks criticising the record of the Republican party, and, among other things, to animadvert somewhat on the conduct of General Davis in the Philippine Islands, charging him, in substance, with having sold rice and provisions at enormous profit to the hungry natives. I am in receipt of a letter from Gen. J. Franklin Bell showing that I was in error in my statement, and I desire the letter to be read and inserted as a part of my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I could not hear what the gentleman from Kentucky said. What does he desire read?

The SPEAKER. Unanimous consent has been accorded to the gentleman to make a statement, and this is a part of that statement. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GENERAL SERVICE AND STAFF COLLEGE,
OFFICE OF THE COMMANDANT,
Fort Leavenworth, Kans., March 5, 1904.

MY DEAR MR. GILBERT: A friend of mine in Washington [illegible] a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD [illegible] in Congress. For the good work and [illegible] I am very grateful, but your remarks [illegible] might do injury [illegible] as I believe will [illegible] unjustly do injustice to any [illegible] and third paragraphs on page [illegible] cite them, as they will be [illegible] facts.

I was [illegible] in the Philippines. As a [illegible] Merritt, Otis, MacArthur, Chaffee, and Davis. I had [illegible] from time to time. The generals [illegible] in the order named of the land forces [illegible] other subordinate officers, like myself, had command of portions of said forces in the field.

I claim a share of fighting as full to my lot, but to say that I did "the main fighting" would be giving me extravagant credit, far greater than I deserve, after the going above mentioned to my commrades.

General Davis never had charge of the commissary, and never sold any rice or provisions to anyone, much less to starving natives, at enormous profits.

There was an officer of the Commissary Department by the name of Davis who had charge of the depot commissary in Manila, but he never sold any rice or other provisions to natives. It is possible that your information has led you to the identity of these two officers confused, but, as last stated, neither of them ever sold rice or other provisions to natives. I might here remark parenthetically that no rice or other provisions were ever sold to any "starving" natives at "enormous" profits by anyone, to my knowledge.)

As General Davis has not been appointed a member of the Panama Canal Commission by the President, and as your erroneous remarks might possibly be some time cited or repeated to his disadvantage, I shall make a somewhat fuller statement of the facts than I otherwise might, in order to justify a request that you correct your erroneous statement as to General Davis.

Furnishing rice and other provisions for sale to natives of my brigade during the period they could not get such supplies themselves, owing to their ports having been closed as a war measure, was not only an act of humanity, but a military necessity and undertaken as such, i. e., as a war measure; but, because of humanity, prevented my summarily arresting the growth of the disease to the people upon the declaration of peace, because the necessity for measures was then not less than it had been formerly.

When peace was proclaimed on July 4, 1902, this war measure no longer had any force of law, as military necessity can not exist in peace and can, therefore, justly be procedure in time of peace. This fact was first pointed out to me by General Davis, who suggested a remedy, namely, to close up the business as a military undertaking and turn its supervision over to the civil authorities, which was done.

You can therefore see that instead of having charge of this business and conducting it he objected to having it done under his supervision by the military authorities in times of peace, and caused me to have it turned over to the civil authorities, where in time of peace he considered it properly belonged.

Though I never at any time actually sold rice or other provisions to natives or handled any proceeds in person, I am the general officer who had immediate supervision of those who were engaged in such sale to natives in the Archipelago of the Island for some time from January 1, to December 1, 1902. I originated the plan, which received the approval of the commanding general in the Philippines and the Secretary of War, and I issued the orders under which it was carried out. [illegible] any decision which attributes to the detailed officers engaged by those orders business to me, at all to me alone.

These orders have been published by me and also in Senate documents, and full and complete reports have been made to the War Department. Other than the question raised by General Davis, I do not cite them, as they will be necessary questions as to the propriety of my actions or omissions. On the contrary, they are in the highest degree approved by my superiors, and the Secretary of War will, I believe, testify that I would have acted differently had I knowing the facts. I am willing that my acts should stand and be judged by the entire record.

I [illegible] to suggest, my dear Mr. GILBERT, that a person who has [illegible] not to be willing to receive credit for his services, if any, not at the expense of comradeship and friendship. [illegible] a friend and comrade to whom I feel under many obligations. [illegible] to the [illegible] accused. I don't want to profit at anyone's expense [illegible] the same as yours are [illegible] right nature [illegible] conscious [illegible] in manner that the correction may also appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Very truly and sincerely, yours,
J. F. BELL,
Brigadier-General, United States Army.

Hon. GEORGE G. GILBERT,
Member of Congress, Washington, D. C.

Mr. GILBERT. Now, Mr. Speaker, I merely desire to add that I am glad of the opportunity to make the correction with as much publicity as the erroneous statement was made. [Applause.]

BILLS ON THE PRIVATE CALENDAR.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar, in pursuance of the special order entered on last Friday.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, with Mr. CRUMPACKER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House for the consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

JOSEPH M. SIMMS.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 33) for the relief of Joseph M. Simms, captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, retired.

Be it enacted, etc., That Capt. Joseph M. Simms, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired), having been promoted "for meritorious acts of public service and wounds received in the United States service, as appears upon the public records of the volunteer service of the Army and Navy and of the Revenue-Cutter Service," shall hereafter receive the full retired pay of his said rank.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LAWRENCE].

Mr. LAWRENCE. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill providing that Capt. Joseph M. Simms, United States Revenue-Cutter Service, retired, having been promoted for meritorious acts of public service and wounds received in the United States service, as appears upon the public records of the volunteer service of the Army and Navy and of the Revenue-Cutter Service, shall hereafter receive the full retired pay of his rank.

At the second session of the Fifty-seventh Congress in 1902 a bill was passed promoting Joseph M. Simms to the rank of captain of the Revenue-Cutter Service, but it did not grant him the salary under the law which he would receive as captain on such retired list. It was felt that thereby an act of injustice was done. At the next session of Congress a bill was introduced, was considered in the Senate, reported unanimously by the committee, and passed by the Senate. A report, in speaking of the matter, says:

There seems to be a lack of justice in the action in this case. Mr Simms served through the war of the rebellion in the Navy, and was wounded many times. He served for nearly thirty years thereafter in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and was finally placed upon waiting orders because of the disability he received when in the service of the United States. No good reason is apparent why the officer should not receive the compensation of the grade to which Congress, in its wisdom, has seen fit to elevate him. It therefore reports the bill with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman how the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce got jurisdiction of this matter?

Mr. LAWRENCE. Because Captain Simms was in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and all matters relating to that Service go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. CLARK. Isn't this in the nature of a pension?

Mr. LAWRENCE. No; the bill promoted Lieutenant Simms to captain, and that promotion was based on gallant service in the war of the rebellion and faithful services afterwards. To my mind, giving him the pay of a captain is not at all in the nature of a pension. Now, Mr. Chairman, just a word about Joseph M. Simms. He enlisted in 1861 in the volunteer service and served as a corporal in the District of Columbia Volunteers in defense of Washington three months and received an honorable discharge at the expiration of his term. In August, 1863, he was appointed acting master's mate in the United States Navy.

His service in the civil war was characterized by coolness, bravery, and efficiency. James Parker, late lieutenant-commander, United States Navy, under date of August 6, 1869, wrote to Lieutenant Simms, as follows:

[illegible] particularly for your success in your coming examination.

Immediately after the close of the war Captain Simms entered the Revenue-Cutter Service, in which he has served for nearly thirty-six years. In 1872 he was promoted to second lieutenant and in November, 1879, to first lieutenant, having to pass both a physical and professional examination. In March, 1893, Lieutenant Simms was examined for promotion to the grade of captain, but failed to pass a satisfactory physical examination, and the report says that the failure to pass that physical examination was due to his wounds and arduous service.

Captain Simms, but for the wounds received in the civil war and his condition resulting therefrom, would have been a captain in the Revenue-Cutter Service for the past several years, and would have received the pay of that rank. He was qualified in every way except physically, and, as I said, his failure to pass the physical examination was due to wounds received in war. A bill giving him the salary of a captain upon the retired list has been passed twice by the Senate. It was reported in the last Congress in this House. It failed to pass simply because of the pressure of business at the close of the session and because of the filibuster which blocked business here during the last two or three weeks of the session. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has again considered the matter, and the report is unanimous. In fact, I will say that all persons who have examined the matter, so far as I know, are agreed that this is simply an act of justice to a very deserving and gallant officer, and that the pending bill should be passed by Congress. I therefore ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think I ought to make a brief statement in respect to this bill, as I made the report. Gentlemen of the House will remember very distinctly that I opposed with as much vigor as I could the passage of the bill to create a retired list in the Revenue-Cutter Service, giving retired pay. That bill, however, became a law, and under the terms of an act which had been enacted for the benefit of Captain Simms because he was laid up by reason of wounds received in the war he received no benefit from that act. A discrimination is made against him, and his is a peculiar case. The services which he rendered and the wounds which he received during the civil war make his case rather peculiar. For that reason the committee which has jurisdiction of the subject decided to recommend the passage of this bill, which in fact increases his pay $300 a year.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK. Is not this bill in the nature of a pension?

Mr. MANN. It is not in the nature of a pension in one sense, and in another sense it is. This bill places Captain Simms upon the same terms that Congress, by law, has already placed the other, or most of the other, Revenue-Cutter officers. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] and myself, with a minority of the House, stood as firmly as we could against the passage of that law, but it was passed. Now, this simply gives to Captain Simms the same benefit of the law that Congress gives to other officers who are retired.

Mr. CLARK. I am not objecting to this man getting this reward or whatever it is, but it seems to me that this bill ought to have been referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is mistaken as to the jurisdiction of the bill. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has jurisdiction of all bills relating to the Revenue-Cutter Service, and had jurisdiction in the same way of the bill creating a retired list in the Revenue-Cutter Service, and all of these bills are referred to that committee, because, I may say to the gentleman, this is not a pension. Captain Simms now draws retired pay. He is now on what is known as the "permanent waiting orders list" of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. CLARK. Without interrupting the gentleman, I should like to read clause 7 of Rule XI:

> To commerce, Life-Saving Service, and light-houses, other than appropriations for Life-Saving Service and light-houses, to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Now, I should like the gentleman to explain under what part of that paragraph a bill like this can be referred to that committee.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce always has referred to it, and such has been the case ever since the committee was created, bills relating to commerce between the States or with foreign nations and bills which have relation to aiding navigation. Now, the Revenue-Cutter Service has always been considered as a service in aid of navigation and commerce; and there being no rule requiring such bills to be referred to any other committee, they have always been referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. All bills to provide for new revenue cutters are so referred.

Mr. PAYNE. While I do not care to make any point on this bill, I wish to say that I do not think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is right in reference to the rule. This bill is practically a bill for the relief of a private party; it is in the nature of a private bill; it does not relate to the general subject of interstate and foreign commerce. Now, it used to be the practice to refer to the Committee on Ways and Means certain bills for payment to private parties of claims connected with the revenue of the Government, but the later practice has been, during the last five or six years, for the Committee on Ways and Means to refuse to accept jurisdiction of any such bill and to ask its reference to the Committee on Claims. I think this is a bill which should properly have gone to the Committee on Claims; but I am not insisting on that point.

Mr. MANN. This is a bill which could not possibly be considered by the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not? It is for the relief of a private party.

Mr. MANN. It is true it is entitled "A bill for the relief of Joseph M. Simms," but it is not a claim against the Government. This gentleman is now on the permanent waiting-orders list of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill seems to be in the nature of a private claim for back pay.

Mr. MANN. Not at all: it provides for no back pay; it simply provides that this man shall be given the same position on the permanent waiting-orders list that he would have had if he had been included in the general bill passed by Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. The bill gives him two-thirds of the retired pay, whatever it is, from the time he was put upon the retired list, does it not?

Mr. MANN. I do not so understand it at all. The language of the bill is:

> Shall hereafter receive the full retired pay of his rank.

Mr. PAYNE. I did not catch that language when the bill was read.

Mr. DALZELL. Is this a unanimous report?

Mr. MANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I am not disposed to make any point on the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported favorably to the House?

The question was decided in the affirmative.

PAY IN CONTESTED-ELECTION CASE—KOONCE V. GRADY.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4407) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the expenses of contestant in the contest entitled "Koonce against Grady."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Frank D. Koonce, of the Third Congressional district of the state of North Carolina, the sum of $1,000 as amount of expenses incurred by him as contestant for a seat in the Fifty-third Congress in the contest entitled "Koonce against Grady."

Mr. GRAFF. The Committee on Claims adopted a resolution providing that all bills directed by them to be reported should be placed in the hands of the clerk of the committee, and that bills dealing with bonds and checks and bills of a formal character be placed at the head of the Calendar.

The report was agreed upon by the Committee on Claims, but the gentleman who is interested in the bill—I suppose without being advised of the action of the committee—filed this report. In view of those facts I ask that in all fairness this bill be passed over without prejudice until the first sixteen bills reported by the committee are considered.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina rose.

Mr. GRAFF. I wish to say to the gentleman from North Carolina that I anticipate no great delay in the passage of the next sixteen bills, as they are all bills of a formal character, against which there can be no reasonable opposition. I think the gentleman will facilitate the work of the committee by not objecting to the request that I make.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. As I understand, this is a rule that the committee has adopted.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; that is a fact.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Well, I shall raise no objection if the committee has adopted such a rule. This is a bill which passed a previous Congress, and will take only a short time. I hope it will be reached to-day.

Mr. GRAFF. I will say to the gentleman we will take up the bill at the conclusion of these other bills.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. With that assurance I am perfectly willing that the other bills shall be disposed of first. I hope that it will be reached to-day, because it is a bill that has passed a previous Congress and not a number of other Congresses.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois state his request?

Mr. GRAFF. I ask unanimous consent that the bill just read be passed without prejudice until the first sixteen bills reported by the Committee on Claims shall have been considered.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I will be compelled to be absent from the House a part of the day. I am not insisting that the bill be considered now, but I would like very much to take it up and dispose of it, as it will only take a short time.

Mr. GRAFF. I think the gentleman will find that the bill will be reached.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. All right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill just read be passed without prejudice until the next sixteen bills reported by the Committee on Claims shall have been considered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

SVEN J. JOHNSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2009) for the relief of the estate of Sven J. Johnson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the estate of Sven J. Johnson, late a citizen of the United States, one hundred dollars in United States four per cent registered bonds, numbered [illegible] for [illegible] dollars each, in lieu of bonds of the same denomination and numbers which have been stolen, and upon the receipt of said bonds the legal representatives of said estate are to be [illegible] to pay to the Treasurer of the United States the amount of the principal of said bonds, with all accrued interest thereon to the date of their redemption, [illegible] the United States, residents of the United States, to indemnify and save harmless the United States and the Treasurer, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any loss on account of the said stolen bonds.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. GIBSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PARKINSON, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment joint resolution and bill of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 106. Joint resolution amending public resolution No. 8, Fifty-sixth Congress, second session, approved February 23, 1901, providing for the printing annually of the report on field operations of the Division of Soils, Department of Agriculture; and

H. R. 8760. An act to authorize the construction of bridges across a portion of the Minnesota River in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to concurrent resolution No. 21, to print and bind the proceedings in Congress upon the acceptance of the statues of Charles Carroll of Carrollton and John Hanson, etc.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4769. An act validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bill of the following title in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 12220. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had further insisted upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 9180) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes, agreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CULLOM, Mr. WARREN, and Mr. TELLER as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

KIRBY THOMAS.

The committee resumed its session.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10058) for the relief of Kirby Thomas.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow on the accounts of Kirby Thomas, postmaster at Superior, Wis., a credit of $13,897.36, for postal funds derived from box rents and postage stamps, or their equivalent in money, stolen from said post-office by burglars on the night of October 20, 1903.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, who will make a brief statement about the bill.

Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Chairman, on the night of October 20, 1903, the post-office at Superior, Wis., was robbed, and $13,897.36 in postage stamps and money was stolen from the post-office. Under the law the Postmaster-General is required to investigate all claims of postmasters for loss, and if there is no fault on the part of the postmaster the Postmaster-General is authorized by law to allow up to the sum of $10,000. The amount involved in this case being in excess of $10,000, the Postmaster-General was required to submit this claim to Congress. The report is very lengthy and includes a long and carefully prepared report on the part of the post-office inspectors; but after a very thorough investigation on their part and by the Postmaster-General the recommendation is made that the postmaster be reimbursed.

Mr. PAYNE. The Postmaster-General did allow to $10,000?

Mr. JENKINS. I will say to the gentleman from New York that the Postmaster-General declined to act at all until after the action of Congress.

Mr. PAYNE. But he did recommend?

Mr. JENKINS. He recommends that favorable action be had on this bill.

Mr. GRAFF. As I understand it, if the sum involved exceeds $10,000 the Postmaster-General does not grant any relief?

Mr. JENKINS. That is a correct statement.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACOB SWIGERT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7535) for the relief of Jacob Swigert, late deputy collector, seventh Kentucky district.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to allow in the accounts of the Treasurer of the United States the amount of the value of twenty [illegible] Kentucky, [illegible] on account of loss of twenty tenths of documentary stamps during the month of January, 1899.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ARTEMUS E. GIBSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of the estate of Artemus E. Gibson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the estate of Artemus E. Gibson, [illegible] the sum of $[illegible] Now [illegible] for [illegible] dollars each, in lieu of bonds of the same denomination and numbers which have been stolen, from the Treasury, a bond in a similar form and denomination to be substituted in the Treasury of the United States, with good and sufficient sureties, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the loss or destruction of said lost or destroyed bonds.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

THOMAS J. HOBBS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3256) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas it appears that Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, Treasury Department, did, on the 8th day of July, 1903, issue a check, No. 40308, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at New York, in favor of Crane & Co., for the amount of [illegible] being in payment for distinctive paper furnished the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Treasury Department, United States Mint, Philadelphia, Pa., and was lost in transmission through the United States mails; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 16, 1895, amending section 3679, Revised Statutes of the United States, authorizing United States disbursing officers to issue duplicate checks in place of and checks to apply only to [illegible] Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk of the Treasury Department, [illegible] hereby, upon the production to the Secretary of the Treasury of satisfactory evidence of the issuance of said check, [illegible] and the [illegible] to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of said check, [illegible] have been presented by the Secretary of the Treasury for the payment of duplicate checks under the provisions of section 3679, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the preamble be stricken out, and that as amended the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the preamble be stricken out.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZABETH S. CUSHING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6937) for the relief of the heirs of Elizabeth Cushing.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue duplicates to McHenry Robinson, executor of the estate of Elizabeth Cushing, in lieu of United States four per cent registered bonds, Nos. [illegible] for $[illegible] each, Nos. [illegible] 488, 489, 490, 491, for $500 each, Nos. [illegible] for $1,000 each, and Nos. [illegible] for $5,000 each, inscribed in payment to Elizabeth S. Cushing, and alleged to have been lost or mislaid and destroyed, and before the issue of said duplicate bonds the said McHenry Robinson, executor as aforesaid, shall execute and file with the Secretary of the Interior a bond, in duplicate, with good and sufficient sureties, subject to the approval of said Secretary, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the loss or destruction of said bonds.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5 insert the initial "S." in claimant's name.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY KEATING.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10511) for the relief of the estate of Mary Keating.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the administrator of the estate of Mary Keating, late of Nevada County, State of California, a certificate of deposit for the sum of $[illegible] in United States four per cent registered bonds, [illegible] dollars each, in lieu of bonds of the same denomination and numbers which have been stolen, and upon the receipt of said bonds the legal representatives of said estate are to be [illegible] to pay to the Treasurer of the United States the amount of the principal of said bonds, with all accrued interest thereon to the date of their redemption, [illegible] the United States, residents of the United States, to indemnify and save harmless the United States and the Treasurer, conditioned to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the said stolen bonds.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after the word "to," strike out the words "redeem, in favor of" and insert the words "issue to."

In line 5, after the word "Cottroll," insert the words "duplicates in lieu of."

Strike out in line 12 the words "with interest accrued."

In line 13 strike out the words "and upon" before "the date of their maturity."

On page 2, in line 2, after the word "interest," strike out the words "due on the same" and insert the words "that would accrue thereon until the same shall become due or payable."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CYRUS D. HOTTENSTEIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8505) for the relief of the heirs of Cyrus D. Hottenstein, deceased.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the heirs of Cyrus D. Hottenstein, deceased, late of Nevada County, State of California, a certificate of deposit for the sum of $[illegible] in United States four per cent registered bonds, [illegible] dollars each, in lieu of bonds of the same denomination and numbers which have been stolen, and upon the receipt of said bonds the legal representatives of said estate are to be [illegible] to pay to the Treasurer of the United States the amount of the principal of said bonds, with all accrued interest thereon to the date of their redemption, [illegible] the United States, residents of the United States, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim because of the said stolen bonds.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In the title substitute the word "estate" for "heirs."

In line 7, after the word "States," insert the words "company," and after the word "bonds," insert "[illegible] per cent funded loan of 1891," and on page 2, line [illegible], after the word "bonds," insert "and the interest coupons [illegible] due between January 1, 1892, and the date of the maturity of the bonds."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

FARMERS AND MECHANICS' NATIONAL BANK, PHILADELPHIA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 255) for the relief of the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa., a duplicate in lieu of United States gold coin given to the act of March 3, 1899, approved June 30, 1899, for $10.00, issued by the assistant treasurer of the United States, Philadelphia, Pa., on deposit to the order of the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa., as a lost or destroyed bank note: Provided, That the said Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank shall first furnish the Treasurer of the United States satisfactory evidence of the loss of the original bank note, with good and sufficient security to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, to indemnify and save harmless the United States from any claim or cause of the said certificate hereinbefore described.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHANN A. KILLIAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10855) for the relief of Johann A. Killian.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue to Johann A. Killian, [illegible] in lieu of three cotton bonds described as follows: [illegible] United States Revised Statutes, and the regulations of the Department.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 4, strike out the word "issue" and insert "pay."

Line 5, strike out the word "duplicate" and insert in place thereof the words "the amount of coupons."

Line 6, strike out the words commencing "in the" down to and including the word "coupons" in line 7.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

W. S. FELAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2591) for the relief of W. S. Feland, late deputy collector second Kentucky district.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. S. Feland, late deputy collector of internal revenue, third district of Kentucky, the sum of $1,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount due him for excessive expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties during the period from July 1, 1898, to March 16, 1899.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask about that bill. This bill seems to be a bill for excessive expenses.

Mr. GRAFF. Here is a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue giving the facts in the case. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, December 12, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you in further reply to letter from this office of the 10th instant, that it appears from further investigation in the matter of the claim of late Deputy Collector W. S. Feland, second district, Kentucky, for excessive expenses incurred while during the period from July 1, 1898, to March 16, 1899, that there is still a balance of $[illegible] due him for the above-mentioned period by authority to pay at a rate allowed as per Auditor's statement November [illegible], 1899, for the entire period.

The amount should have been paid but there is no money. A claim was not presented to the Treasury until after the appropriation for the year for the close of the fiscal year in which these pay roll vouchers were received, consequently favorable action by the Treasury Department was prevented by the one-year limitation provided in section 3648, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. This letter, I understand, is from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I have no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY C. GILMORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of the estate of Mary C. Gilmore.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered and directed to issue a duplicate of a registered bond of the United States, 4 per cent, issued under the acts of [illegible], 1870, and January 20, 1871, No. [illegible], for $[illegible], and inscribed in the name of Mary P. Gilmore, now deceased, to Walter S. Gilmore and William T. Hird, [illegible] trustees, the heirs-at-law of the deceased said Mary P. Gilmore, said duplicate to be of like amount, to bear like interest, and to be marked in like manner as said original bond, upon their being a bond, with sufficient sureties, in such sum as may be determined necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be approved by him, conditioned to save harmless and indemnify the United States against all legal claims and demands which may be made under said original bond or its issue.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect when approved.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 10 strike out all of the line after the word "Gilmore," all of line 13, and in line 14 as far as the word "upon," and the word "upon" and all following out the word "their," in the same line, inserting immediately before the word "with" these words: "the said administrators of the Treasury."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HEPPENSTALL FORGE AND KNIFE COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10975) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas it appears that O. M. Taylor, assignee of certificate [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at New York, issued [illegible] in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company for the sum of [illegible] in final payment for [illegible] United States at Chicago, in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, and other claims having been assigned by it to the Pittsburg National Bank, of Pittsburg, for the benefit of said bank, who [illegible] in the course of transmission to said bank to reach the Treasury Department in the regular course of business, and the said Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company has since been changed to Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 26, 1895, authorizing such a [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, now authorizing and directing the issue of duplicates of lost checks, apply only to those issued since [illegible]; and

Whereas [illegible] That such O. M. Taylor, assignee of certificate, United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, be and he is hereby instructed to issue a duplicate of said [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, for the sum of [illegible] upon the filing of an affidavit setting forth the facts in the case, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, as prescribed by section 3648, United States Revised Statutes, and the regulations of the Department.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 4, strike out the word "issue" and insert "pay."

Line 5, strike out the word "duplicate" and insert in place thereof the words "the amount of coupons."

Line 6, strike out the words commencing "in the" down to and including the word "coupons" in line 7.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

W. S. FELAND.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2591) for the relief of W. S. Feland, late deputy collector second Kentucky district.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to W. S. Feland, late deputy collector of internal revenue, third district of Kentucky, the sum of $1,000 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, being the amount due him for excessive expenses incurred in the discharge of his duties during the period from July 1, 1898, to March 16, 1899.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask about that bill. This bill seems to be a bill for excessive expenses.

Mr. GRAFF. Here is a letter from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue giving the facts in the case. The letter is as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, December 12, 1902.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you in further reply to letter from this office of the 10th instant, that it appears from further investigation in the matter of the claim of late Deputy Collector W. S. Feland, second district, Kentucky, for excessive expenses incurred while during the period from July 1, 1898, to March 16, 1899, that there is still a balance of $[illegible] due him for the above-mentioned period by authority to pay at a rate allowed as per Auditor's statement November [illegible], 1899, for the entire period.

The amount should have been paid but there is no money. A claim was not presented to the Treasury until after the appropriation for the year for the close of the fiscal year in which these pay roll vouchers were received, consequently favorable action by the Treasury Department was prevented by the one-year limitation provided in section 3648, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. PAYNE. This letter, I understand, is from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I have no objection.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY C. GILMORE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of the estate of Mary C. Gilmore.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized, empowered and directed to issue a duplicate of a registered bond of the United States, 4 per cent, issued under the acts of [illegible], 1870, and January 20, 1871, No. [illegible], for $[illegible], and inscribed in the name of Mary P. Gilmore, now deceased, to Walter S. Gilmore and William T. Hird, [illegible] trustees, the heirs-at-law of the deceased said Mary P. Gilmore, said duplicate to be of like amount, to bear like interest, and to be marked in like manner as said original bond, upon their being a bond, with sufficient sureties, in such sum as may be determined necessary by the Secretary of the Treasury, and to be approved by him, conditioned to save harmless and indemnify the United States against all legal claims and demands which may be made under said original bond or its issue.

SEC. 2. That this act shall take effect when approved.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 10 strike out all of the line after the word "Gilmore," all of line 13, and in line 14 as far as the word "upon," and the word "upon" and all following out the word "their," in the same line, inserting immediately before the word "with" these words: "the said administrators of the Treasury."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HEPPENSTALL FORGE AND KNIFE COMPANY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10975) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Whereas it appears that O. M. Taylor, assignee of certificate [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at New York, issued [illegible] in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company for the sum of [illegible] in final payment for [illegible] United States at Chicago, in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, and other claims having been assigned by it to the Pittsburg National Bank, of Pittsburg, for the benefit of said bank, who [illegible] in the course of transmission to said bank to reach the Treasury Department in the regular course of business, and the said Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company has since been changed to Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company; and

Whereas the provisions of the act of February 26, 1895, authorizing such a [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, now authorizing and directing the issue of duplicates of lost checks, apply only to those issued since [illegible]; and

Whereas [illegible] That said O. M. Taylor, assignee of certificate, United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, be and he is hereby instructed to issue a duplicate of said [illegible] United States Assistant Treasurer at Chicago, in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, for the sum of [illegible] upon the filing of an affidavit setting forth the facts in the case, to be approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, as prescribed by section 3648, United States Revised Statutes, and the regulations of the Department.

Mr. GRAFF. I notice, Mr. Chairman, the body of the bill refers to the number of the check in the preamble. I think that it would be better to amend the bill so that the check could be identified in the body of the bill and would not need the preamble to make the legislation intelligible. I therefore move to amend the bill by striking out, in line 5 the word "said" and inserting after the word "check" the following: "No. 38017, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, for the sum of [illegible]."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In lieu of the word "said" and after the word "check" insert "No. 38017, upon the assistant treasurer of the United States at Chicago in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, for the sum of [illegible]."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GRAFF. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the preamble.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

BANK OF NORTH WILKESBORO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7190) for the relief of the bank of North Wilkesboro.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the cashier of the Bank of North Wilkesboro, Wilkesboro, N. C., the sum of $[illegible], being the amount of a check issued by the Assistant Treasurer of the United States at New York, payable to the order of said bank, which was burned in railroad wreck near [illegible], Va., on or about March [illegible], 1902.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

In line 3 strike out the words "one hundred" and insert "ninety."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

COLUMBIA BREWING COMPANY, SHENANDOAH, PA.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 3393) for the relief of the Columbia Brewing Company, of Shenandoah, Pa.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to audit and settle the claim of the Columbia Brewing Company, of Shenandoah, Pa., for the sum of $416.25, being the amount paid by said company and entered into the Treasury of the United States for beer stamps ordered by the said company but never received by it, by payment of such sum of $416.25 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, or by issuance to the said company of beer stamps to said amount in accordance with the order given by said company, as the Secretary of the Treasury may determine in his discretion.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "appropriated," in line 12.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES T. KILBRETH ET AL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11928) for the relief of James T. Kilbreth, George R. Bidwell, and Nevada N. Stranahan, as collectors of customs for the district and port of New York.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following named, to wit, James T. Kilbreth, George R. Bidwell, and Nevada N. Stranahan, holding successively the office of collector of customs for the district and port of New York during the period commencing [illegible] and ending [illegible], and their sureties are hereby released and [illegible] from the balance of the amount of the collection of customs for said period, amounting to $[illegible], which said balance was found due from said collectors by the Comptroller of the Treasury in a final settlement of their accounts, and which said balance was found due by reason of the payment by said collectors of certain moneys for services of inspectors of customs at the port of New York, which said payments were disallowed by the Comptroller of the Treasury, and which said payments were made by said collectors in good faith and in the belief that they were legally entitled to make said payments, and which said payments were made by said collectors in the regular course of their official duties, and which said payments were made by said officers and charged against themselves in said accounts with the entire amount.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, that completes the passage of the first sixteen bills.

The CHAIRMAN. It does. The Clerk will now report the bill that was laid aside without prejudice.

FRANK D. KOONCE.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4407) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the expenses of contestee in the contest of Frank D. Koonce against [illegible].

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Frank D. Koonce, late a contestee in the contest of Frank D. Koonce against [illegible], the sum of $[illegible], being the amount of his expenses in said contest, upon the proofs of said claim to be adjusted and ascertained by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Comptroller of the Treasury, and to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and in full for all services and expenses in said contest, and in full for all services and expenses in said contest, and in full for all services and expenses in said contest

Mr. GRAFF. The question before the committee was not as to the amount of evidence that this man had taken excepting as it might bear upon the question of what his actual expenses were.

Mr. BURKETT. The question for this Committee of the Whole is this: Has this contestant exercised proper diligence, or does he base this claim on the fact that he was deprived of proper opportunity for prosecuting his case to a termination?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, the Congress before which his contest was had, and which presumably was familiar with the circumstances of the contest, evidently did not consider his claim of very much merit, or he would certainly have been allowed the same allowance for attorney's fees that was given to other contestants.

Mr. GRAFF. The succeeding Congress, which must have contained a number of the same Members that were in the Congress in which the contest arose, passed upon this claim.

Mr. BURKETT. If that Congress did what this Congress has done, and adopted the report of the previous Congress, perhaps the matter did not receive very much consideration.

Now, it seems to me we ought to know whether this man simply filed a contest which he never prosecuted, and then came in for reimbursement of attorney's fees, or did he take any evidence? Is he really out any money for expenses of prosecuting the contest?

Mr. GRAFF. The evidence is that he employed an attorney and did take evidence; also that his house burned down. The question whether he ultimately succeeded in his contest has nothing at all to do with his right to reimbursement of attorney's fees.

Mr. BURKETT. No; that does not make any difference.

Mr. GRAFF. In that view of the matter it does not make any difference whether the House decided in his favor or against him so far as the question of his right to reimbursement is concerned. The question is whether he did incur these expenses. Even if the fact was that he abandoned his case before the contest was completed and a decision reached, that would not debar him from reimbursement for attorney's fees which he reasonably incurred up to the time that the contest was abandoned. But in point of fact, no such abandonment is proved.

Mr. BURKETT. If there was a mere filing of the papers in the contest and then an abandonment of the contest, he would not be entitled to reimbursement.

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no; but it might be developed in the course of a contest that the contestant could not successfully go on and prosecute his case, but still he might go ahead up to a certain point and employ counsel.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the report as to the action of the House in the matter? I do not have it here. At the time that these fees were allowed to other contestants, what was the action of the House with reference to this man's fees?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. In the other cases the contestants filed their accounts for expenses, and reimbursement was made in the sundry civil bill. But in this case the contestant had asked an extension of time for the taking of testimony, and in consequence of that delay he obtained no allowance from that Congress; so that the only course left to him to secure reimbursement was to go to the Committee on Claims and ask to be allowed a reasonable sum for the expenses of his contest.

Mr. BURKETT. That is exactly the point I am trying to get at. It appears, then, that he comes here to get something that the law does not give him. Now, the law makes provision as to the allowance of expenses in election contests.

But this man is entirely outside of the pale of the law when he comes here asking us to give him something in the nature of an equitable allowance. Under these circumstances the question is, What is he equitably entitled to? Did he prosecute the case in a fair and legitimate way, or did he abandon it? What are the showings with reference to these matters of facts? It seems to me that on these points Congress ought to know something. When he comes here asking us to make an allowance on the ground of equity, we ought to know whether he has properly performed his part.

This report simply duplicates the report made in the last Congress. I do not know but that the report of the last Congress was also a duplication of a previous report. Is there now or has there ever been any evidence that he ever did make this contest in good faith or that his house ever was burned—that he ever did pay out a cent of expenses for taking testimony? In fact, did he ever conduct a bona fide contest?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. The merits of this case have been shown by affidavits on file; and this claim does not come here as a matter of equity, but as a matter of legal right.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me suggest to the gentleman that if this man had not abandoned his contest the Elections Committee, in due course of law, would have certified to the Appropriations Committee a reasonable allowance for expenses, and that committee would have reported the item to the House.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that this man, while his contest was pending, was waiting for the Elections Committee to pass upon his motion for an extension of time in which to take testimony. The Congress expired before that matter was determined.

As the gentleman well knows, a contestant sometimes overlooks the fact that a provision for reimbursement for contest expenses must be inserted in the sundry civil bill. In this case the contestant was all the time awaiting to have his application for extension of time passed upon by the Elections Committee. There was no abandonment of the contest. I will say further that in every Congress since, except the Fifty-fouth, he has had introduced a bill for reimbursement.

Mr. BURKETT. Why was not this contestant entitled to have his expense account considered and, if just, inserted in the sundry civil bill at the same time the expenses of the contestee were allowed?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. He was.

Mr. BURKETT. What was he waiting for?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. He was waiting to have his motion passed upon for an extension of the time to take evidence.

Mr. BURKETT. Why did not the contestee wait, too?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. Simply because the contestee knew that the commitcee had practically decided the matter in his favor, and he was here in person—the sitting Member—familiar with the course of proceeding in these cases, and he had his item inserted in the bill.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, what is the nature of the evidence, I will ask the gentleman, that has been filed? I see in the report a statement that some evidence was filed. How much of that is there, does the gentleman know?

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. I do not know. I can not say positively what it was that was filed. There was some documentary evidence. The clerk gave notice of the opening of testimony.

Mr. BURKETT. There may not have been any here.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. If there had not been any here the clerk would not have acted.

Mr. JOHNSON. If the gentleman from North Carolina will permit me, I will state to him that the Committee on Elections never passes upon the contestant's or the contestee's account until the matter has been settled before that committee, so that inasmuch as this case was pending until the last day of Congress the Committee on Elections never had an opportunity to pass upon the accounts or recommended payment, so that it could go on the sundry civil bill, and therefore it had to go before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. THOMAS of North Carolina. That is an accurate statement of the reason why it goes to the Committee on Claims.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DAVID TWEED.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. [illegible]) for the relief of David Tweed.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to David Tweed, of Minnesota, [illegible] Wyoming, the sum of $5,000 as compensation for injuries received while in the United States Army, while [illegible] on a scout from Fort Brown (now Fort Washakie), Wyo., to Fort Stambaugh, Wyo.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 6, strike out "five thousand" and insert "three thousand five hundred."

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, in the winter of 1876, after the Custer massacre and the Indian wars on the frontier that followed that massacre, the Sioux gathered in large numbers in central and northern Wyoming. For the protection of the miners and settlers in that region two posts had been established—Fort Washakie (then Fort Brown) and Fort Stambaugh. Fort Brown was on the plains and Fort Stambaugh on the summit of the Rocky Mountains, at an altitude of about 10,000 feet. In January of that year, during a severe storm, a cavalryman was ordered from Fort Brown to Fort Stambaugh to carry dispatches. When he reached the foot of the mountains he found it impossible to make his way from there to Fort Stambaugh, owing to the character of the trail and the very fierce storm raging.

He stopped at a settler's house and persuaded David Tweed, then a boy 14 years of age, to guide him to Fort Stambaugh. The mercury was about 57 degrees below zero. A terrible storm was raging. The boy had hesitated about going, but the soldier insisted that the dispatches were of such importance that it would be necessary for him to go through to the fort, and to attempt to go without a guide meant almost certain death. So this gallant youngster finally agreed to guide him to Fort Stambaugh. Before their arrival there the storm increased, they lost their way, and became badly frozen, but finally reached the fort with the dispatches. The boy's feet were so badly frozen it became necessary to amputate them, and he paid $500 or a little more for the operation to the surgeon at the fort. Since that time, for twenty-seven years, he has lived in that region, getting on as best he could, crippled as he is.

Mr. GRAFF. Is the claimant a man of means?

Mr. MONDELL. The claimant has but little means. He has a small farm at the foot of the mountain. It is very difficult for him to support himself, and he has been at all times since this injury in straitened circumstances. The bill has been reported a number of times, and has not passed because, having been reported late in the session, it has never been reached on the Calendar. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the amount in this bill?

Mr. MONDELL. Three thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. BURKETT. It is reduced from $5,000.

Mr. MONDELL. It has been reduced from $5,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the amendment recommended by the committee be agreed to?

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ALEXANDER S. ROSENTHAL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9457) for the relief of Alexander S. Rosenthal.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Alexander S. Rosenthal, of [illegible] the sum of $[illegible] in full compensation for all claims against the United States for [illegible] furnished and services rendered to the United States during the prevalence of [illegible] cholera at [illegible] in the year [illegible] and for all claims for [illegible] furnished and services rendered to the United States during the prevalence of [illegible]

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DARWIN S. HALL.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9981) for the relief of Darwin S. Hall.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That Darwin S. Hall be and he is hereby relieved from the charge of $[illegible] in his accounts as disbursing agent of the Chippewa and Mississippi bands of Indians in Minnesota, and special disbursing agent, from October 10, 1897, to July 31, 1900.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Mr. Chairman, I move that Senate bill 721 be substituted for this bill, as the two are identical and cover the same subject. The Senate bill has been passed in the Senate and it is on this Calendar. It has been reported favorably by the Committee on Claims of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota moves that the bill S. 721 be substituted for the bill H. R. 9981, the two being identically the same. If there be no objection, it will be so ordered.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask for some explanation of this bill.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. LIND, or can the gentleman from Minnesota, Mr. VOLSTEAD, make an explanation of the measure?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think I can. Mr. Chairman, this is merely for the settlement of an account. Mr. Hall was commissioner in charge of the allotment of certain Indian land. While acting as such he found it necessary to make a trip from Minnesota to Washington. This trip was made solely in the performance of his duties as an officer, and the time spent was charged by him in his bill. When he came to settle his account this item was allowed, but some time afterwards he was notified that the item for the time spent while here should not be allowed, and that as such this $111 should be charged to him. The matter has been explained to the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary has recommended that this bill be passed. It does not really call for the appropriation of any money or the payment of any sum out of the Treasury. It simply adjusts or allows this account. It seems to me it is perfectly just. Every dollar that is charged for was earned. All the time that he did spend and did charge for was time spent in the service of the Government in carrying out his duties as an officer. It seems to me under the circumstances that it is a proper charge and should be allowed, and I ask that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, House bill 9981 will be laid aside with the recommendation that it do lie on the table.

JAMES L. ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4637) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay James L. Anderson the sum of $798.28.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc. That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of the Treasury of the United States, from any money not otherwise appropriated, to James L. Anderson, the sum of $798.28, being compensation for loss on march, loss of his personal effects, and transportation by sinking of steamer, under orders, from Baguio to Manila, Philippine Islands, as captain, Forty-fourth Infantry, United States Volunteers.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to hear something about this bill. It seems to be to pay an officer something for having lost his baggage in transporting it from one point to another. Is it the rule for the Government to be held responsible unless the Government carelessly or negligently lost it?

Mr. GRAFF. This bill seeks to reimburse this officer for the loss on the ground that the personal belongings which are reimbursed for are found by the Department, on investigation made under the order of that Department, to be necessary for the performance of his official duty at that point—not for the purpose of reimbursing for baggage which would be unnecessary in connection with the performance of his duty and presence there as an officer. There has been relief made in Congress in these cases many times before, and, in expectation of that, it is the custom of the Department to have an inventory made of the property and ascertain what property is necessarily included in a proper equipment on the officer for the proper performance of his duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. The property belonged to the officer, did it?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; it was a part of his necessary equipment in the performance of his duty at that point. There is nothing unusual about the relief granted in this case.

Mr. BARTLETT. Was it furniture, arms, clothing, or what was it?

Mr. GRAFF. There is a long itemized statement in the report showing what it consisted of, some four pages, which gives the items in detail even down to a pair of socks.

Mr. BARTLETT. Then it was clothing?

Mr. GRAFF. Clothing and personal property necessary in connection with his duty.

Mr. BARTLETT. How were they lost and in what way did the United States become responsible in law, equity, or good conscience to reimburse this man, and how was the Government responsible for it? The mere fact that they were lost would not make the United States incur any liability to pay for them?

Mr. GRAFF. Oh, no; the Government is not compelled to make the allowance. There is no existing law that deals with that question.

Mr. BARTLETT. The Government is not an insurer of the baggage of its army officers when transporting them?

Mr. GRAFF. Not at all; but the officer was compelled to be there in the performance of his duty. He was there under the orders of the Government. He was compelled to be at a particular point under orders of the Government, and it was necessary for him to have this property there in pursuance of the orders of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. How did he lose them, how were they destroyed, in what way, so as to make the Government liable, even in good conscience?

Mr. MADDOX. I would like to know what the property consisted of to amount to $798?

Mr. GRAFF. I understand the Government would be responsible if it had been in time of war, but the fact that it was not in time of war renders it a case where there is no existing law applying to it.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have not yet been informed how the loss took place.

Mr. GRAFF. I will yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It was lost by the loss of a transport which was passing from one point in the Philippine Islands to another, under orders of the War Department. It was lost without any fault on the part of the officer, and his equipment consisted, as is shown by the scheduled inventory, of what he had a right to have possession of. Of course some of it was entirely personal, and some of it was equipment to which, as an officer, he was entitled. Nevertheless, he was in that section of the world under orders, and had not yet been able to return home after the discharge of his duty, but by the loss of the boat on which his effects were being transported he suffered this loss.

Mr. BARTLETT. Was it a Government transport?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not recall, but my recollection is that it was.

Mr. GRAFF. I will read an affidavit of Conrad C. Brown, of the Forty-fourth Infantry, relating the circumstances:

CITY OF JAGNA, Island of Bohol, P. I., ss:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Private Conrad C. Brown, Company C, Forty-fourth Infantry, United States Volunteers, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: On April 7, 1899, I was stationed with my company at Bacalayan, Bohol. That my captain, Adam [illegible], commanding the company, ordered Q. M. Sergt. Albert [illegible] to have Private Fred Gengler, Company C, present, and myself on board the sailing launch [illegible] as a guard and proceed to Jagna. The boat was loaded with the company property, [illegible] rations for the ensuing month and the men's and officers personal effects. We left Bacalayan about 3 p. m. April 7, 1899, and sailed about 4 leagues the first night. The morning of April 8 we stopped for water about a league east of the pueblo of Loay. We sailed again about 5 p. m. and sailed about 2 miles, when the wind entirely died out, and we [illegible] anchor.

We remained again the next morning, April 10, and had sailed only a short while when the wind [illegible] and we anchored. We put in to shore for supplies [illegible] and started again about 5 p. m. and had a pleasant wind. We went on well till 2 [illegible] a. m. At that time I noticed the wind was blowing very hard and the waves getting rough. At that time as near as I could guess the wind was from the south and the heat was stifling. At 4 o'clock the wind was blowing more [illegible] and the waves were so [illegible] that the boat was [illegible] and [illegible] crew apparently [illegible] [illegible] time the sky was dropping of [illegible] and [illegible] heavily. Soon [illegible] was [illegible] [illegible] I [illegible] Sergeant [illegible] [illegible] the sail was [illegible] and the boat [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] to make a raft out of the [illegible] [illegible] they [illegible] the boat, but the waves were so rough they [illegible]

We remained on the wreck until 10 a. m., when we were rescued by natives from [illegible] of Bacalayan, who [illegible] there [illegible] and boat started [illegible] [illegible] We [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible]

Further deponent saith not.

CONRAD C. BROWN,
Private, Company C, Forty-fourth Infantry, U. S. Volunteers.

Sworn and subscribed to before me this 15th day of October, 1900, at Jagna, Bohol, P. I.

RICHARD H. S[illegible],
Second Lieutenant, Forty-fourth Infantry, U. S. Volunteers, Commanding Post Officer.

A true copy.

FREDERICK S. YOUNG,
First Lieutenant, Forty-fourth Infantry, U. S. Volunteers, Adjutant.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was mistaken, Mr. Chairman, when I left the impression that he was not at that time an officer. This refreshes my recollection. He was in his line of duty, was still an officer, and was changing from one point to another.

Mr. BARTLETT. I can see readily the justice of a claim where an officer would be charged up with supplies for government use which he would have to answer to the Government when they were lost through no fault of his, or destroyed accidentally by fire or by the elements; that he ought not to be required to pay the Government and not be reimbursed for them: but this looks to be a stretch of the rule of equity and good conscience to make the Government liable for the officer's uniform and private property which were being transported, and lost by no fault of the Government.

Mr. OVERSTREET. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. BARTLETT. Certainly.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would like to ask the gentleman if there has not been allowed very many times for the loss of property in the Southwest growing out of the civil war, damages where the schedule of items or the inventory of the property would cover quite as many personal pieces of property as this item?

Mr. BARTLETT. I don't know; but that is entirely upon a different theory. The occasion to which the gentleman alludes is where they were loyal citizens of the United States.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But this man was an officer of the Government.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that; but this has no analogy to the loss of provisions and supplies furnished to the Federal Army by loyal citizens during the war. I have no disposition to resist the proper payment to this officer for property that he held as an officer of the Government, such as commissary supplies, of which he had charge and for which a deduction would be made from his salary, because he had to account to the Government for them.

I think it is fair in a loss like that, as, for instance, if a postmaster should have his till robbed by a burglar and then be compelled to pay the Government, the Government could afford to reimburse him; but as for having this officer paid by the Government for the loss of his private property because of an unavoidable accident, the cause of which was the elements, and for which the Government is not responsible, it looks to me like stretching the rule too far.

Mr. GRAFF. The Quartermaster-General says that if—legislation for the relief of such claimants is contemplated, it is the opinion of this office that a general law similar to the above should be enacted rather than a special act in each case.

Mr. BARTLETT. Bad precedents make mighty bad law.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. Chairman, if I understand that, it is an argument against the bill rather than for it. It says that if such legislation as this is contemplated, then we ought to have a general law. As I glance over this list it strikes me as a pretty large list for a soldier to have over there in the Philippines. However, I do not question the amount, but here is the question that presents itself, and I think the Quartermaster-General is right: We provide by law, as I understand it now, that where a man loses his supplies and equipments, such as these, in war, he is recompensed for them. Am I right in respect to that?

Mr. GRAFF. No.

Mr. BURKETT. I understood the gentleman to so state a moment ago.

Mr. GRAFF. No: it is in times of peace.

Mr. BURKETT. Then I have got it backward.

Mr. GRAFF. The gentleman has it reversed. He is right with the exception of that correction.

Mr. BURKETT. Then in times of war they are not recompensed. I will simply ask the gentleman what the law is on the proposition?

Mr. GRAFF. I understand it to be the law that if this had been in time of peace he would have been recompensed under existing law.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. If it had been in time of peace, then the law would have warranted the Quartermaster-General in making the payment.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But being in time of war that law is suspended.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Therefore it requires Congressional action.

Mr. BURKETT. Then it is just the other way around from my statement.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. It seems to me that a thing of this kind is more liable to occur in time of war than in time of peace. This can not be the only case where a man has lost his equipment in war. Why should this case be singled out and a special act passed for him? If you do not do as the quartermaster recommends, make it a general law. I am not so certain that it would not be a good law which would provide that if a man goes into war and loses all his equipments he should be recompensed, inasmuch as [illegible] Why pass a special bill for this case when it will not [illegible]

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, the answer to that would be, because this is the case before us. We have no authority to report a general law on the subject.

Mr. BURKETT. But so long as Congress does not pass a general law to take care of all of them, why should we come in and pick out this special case and take care of a man here and a man there? There were some others on that boat, were there not?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. And some others lost their property?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Are there bills for their relief also?

Mr. GRAFF. I think not. At least they are not pending. I understand he was the ranking officer, whose equipments were on the boat.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The equipments were chargeable to him?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. Does this bill contemplate that he will pay the others for what they lost?

Mr. GRAFF. The supplies were chargeable to him.

Mr. OVERSTREET. That is what I meant.

Mr. BURKETT. This bill is not to pay him for any general supplies?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. BURKETT. The bill is only to pay him for his own private property.

Here, on page 13 of the report, I find a list of certain property, stated to have belonged to Second Lieut. Fred. L. Gengler privately. Has a bill been filed for him?

Mr. GRAFF. I think not.

Mr. BURKETT. Now, I do not know why we should pass a bill for the relief of one officer and not for another having equal claim.

Mr. MADDOX. There are thousands of others with just as good claims as this man.

Mr. BURKETT. I do not doubt it.

Mr. GRAFF. I want to correct my answer to the gentleman. That list on page 13 is not a list of the personal effects of Second Lieut. Fred. L. Gengler; but is a statement of articles purchased by Captain Anderson—commissary stores—which are covered by this bill. That list is entitled——

List of commissary stores bought of Second Lieut. Fred L. Gengler, Forty-fourth Infantry, United States Volunteers, and being commissary of subsistence, [illegible] by Capt. Frank L. Anderson, Forty-fourth Infantry, United States Volunteers, from March 21 to April 15, 1900, inclusive.

This list of purchases was made out for the guidance of the War Department.

Mr. BURKETT. Is that included in the amount on the bill?

Mr. GRAFF. Yes, sir.

Mr. BURKETT. What is the amount on the bill?

Several MEMBERS. Seven hundred and ninety-eight dollars.

Mr. BURKETT. Well, it seems to me here is a bill which for some reason or other, either for the sake of the precedent or otherwise, is picked out for action of the House, when, so far as we can understand, it does not differ from thousands of other cases. If we are to pass this one bill, it simply means that we are going to open up a flood gate for such claims. I am not certain but that a general law on this subject would be proper. I am not certain but that an officer who in time of war, while acting on orders, loses his property should be recompensed. I am certain that if he should be recompensed in time of peace that he should be in time of war; but I do not believe it is proper for Congress to take up and pass special bills to pay certain claims of this kind while leaving hundreds of thousands of others unpaid.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Mr. Chairman, all the bills submitted to this House by the Committee on Claims are based upon reasons such as the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT] has just given as reasons for not passing this bill; in other words, they are in the form of individual claims, which do not come within the general law authorizing the payment by officers of the Government. Take, for instance, the case of a lost check, a check payable by the Government. There is a law authorizing the payment of such checks where they do not exceed $2,500. But there are occasionally cases where checks exceed that amount and where the parties must come to Congress for relief. It might be said that that law on the subject of reimbursement of lost checks ought to be changed. I am not controverting any such contention. It might possibly be better that the law should be changed, but nevertheless the law in its present form is on the statute books.

There are claims pending before the Committee on War Claims of this House for various amounts to reimburse losses incurred during the civil war by southern people who were loyal to the Government. It might be claimed that there should be a general law authorizing payments in such cases. I am not controverting any such contention. Nevertheless under the existing law such parties must come here with their individual claims and ask relief at the hands of Congress.

The claimant in the present case was an officer of the Government, a commissary officer, having in his possession supplies for which he had personally paid—not paid for by the Government, because in that case he of course would not be entitled to recompense. But in addition to these articles which were charged up to him and which he paid for there was certain private property in his possession and which he had a right to. For such payments under existing law authority would rest in the Government to make payment upon proper showing; but during war that particular law is suspended, and therefore he is compelled to come to Congress for personal relief.

He was not only an officer of the Government, but he was under orders from his superior officer to make this particular change of location. He made it in the best way he could in that country by means of a boat, which, like my friend from Georgia, I am unable either to pronounce by name or to define. But nevertheless, he adopted the best method that was possible at the time and under the conditions then existing. That boat, by reason of the elements, was capsized and his property was lost. Under the law he has no other course to pursue for relief than the method he has adopted. He makes his statement and inventories by item of property which he has lost. There has been no contest, either at the Department or in the committee, of the claims, either as to the facts concerning the items of his property or as to their value.

The whole difficulty at the Department has been that the condition of war at the time of the loss suspended the only law which would enable them to make payment. They, I understand, admit all the facts, and the only recourse is to ask Congress for this relief, and that relief consists in the payment of the amount of money which merely equals, and no more, the particular items of property which he at the time had the right and was entitled to possess. Now, my friend from Nebraska says he is inclined to think that a general law would be wise to cover this condition. The difficulty is, the general law does not exist, and this man must come by a special act to get relief.

Mr. BARTLETT. I see that they say it was in time of war that this loss was sustained.

Mr. OVERSTREET. It was the Philippine war.

Mr. BARTLETT. Well?

Mr. OVERSTREET. And so construed by the Department; and the statute was suspended.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman has looked over this bill?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I can not recollect it; I do not remember it. This gentleman lives in my district. He is a gentleman of good reputation. There is no question about the facts.

Mr. BARTLETT. I have no question about the facts. The only question is whether the Government ought to pay for the loss of personal effects of an officer in time of war.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The point is just this. If the statute which authorizes the payment by the Department in time of peace were in force there would be no question as to the payment by the Department; but the statute being suspended by an act of hostilities, which the Department assumes to be a state of war, forces the man to come to Congress for relief.

Mr. BARTLETT. I stated to the gentleman that I did not see any injustice. On the contrary, I see great propriety and justice in paying this officer for the commissary supplies, and as he calls it——

Mr. OVERSTREET. All the supplies he paid for; whatever he had been required to pay for out of his salary that had been given to him for the purpose of using for this detachment.

Mr. BURKETT. Does the gentleman think that an officer in the time of war should be running around, or that every officer ought to be carrying about $800 worth of personal property, containing a lot of slippers and patent-leather shoes and things of that kind?

Mr. BARTLETT. Have you examined this list, containing such articles as one bottle of shampoo; one bottle of bay rum, imported; bottle of witch hazel; bottle of Rubifoam, and a great many canes of various kinds?

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman will understand that these supplies will be found in the possession of other commissary officers, and he purchased only upon requisition.

Mr. BARTLETT. I understand that.

Mr. OVERSTREET. For it is a fact—and I understand it to be so recognized by the Department—that these supplies were properly in his possession, and had been actually paid for by him out of his salary, except for his purely personal effects there, and there ought to be no question about allowing it.

Mr. MADDOX. Will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. MADDOX. Have you read the affidavit of Thomas E. O'Brien?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not remember. It has been some weeks since I looked over the evidence.

Mr. MADDOX. I think you ought to read it, and I think the House ought to hear it read, and a number of other affidavits, because it appears that the lockers of all the privates went overboard at the same time. Now, is there any claim for them here?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I do not know. The gentleman will appreciate this, that if there is any man entitled to just as much relief he has not asked it. The fact that he has not asked it in this bill would not be a proper argument against the bill.

Mr. MADDOX. My idea is that under the law he is not entitled to it; and if entitled to it under the law, then certainly these privates who lost their property too are entitled to the same relief.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I am not questioning that. But Captain Anderson should not be prevented from recovering the amount because of the loss of other people's property.

Mr. MADDOX. I understand that. When you have that affidavit read in connection with Captain Anderson's loss, it shows the inconsistency, and illustrates the fact that a man who can have the power and political influence to introduce a bill to recover for his private property can get it, while almost the whole of the other troops lost everything they had, too, and nobody is speaking for them, and they do not recover.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman will understand that Captain Anderson, being a resident of my city, called my attention to the fact, and I introduced the bill. It did not take any political influence to do that. I hardly think the gentleman will assume that all bills introduced in Congress are for a political purpose.

Mr. MADDOX. I did not mean to say that. What I do say is that he had influence to call your attention to it, and that you introduced the bill.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I was sufficiently approachable that he could get me to see the justice of the claim and introduce a bill.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, who is going to take care of the privates generally?

Mr. OVERSTREET. If they lived in my district I would endeavor to protect their interests.

Mr. MADDOX. Oh, but they may live in yours and mine.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Certainly.

Mr. MADDOX. They live throughout all over the country.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Perhaps.

Mr. MADDOX. Now, that is not according to law——

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, it is directly according to law.

Mr. MADDOX. Oh, no.

Mr. OVERSTREET. He has the right to ask for the recompense of his individual loss; otherwise he would have no status, either before the Department or before Congress.

Mr. MADDOX. There is another thing about this. It says that the "letter from the War Department reporting not adversely on the claim." That is a little singular language in this report, "reporting not adversely." Well, what did he report?

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is given in the letter, is it not?

Mr. MADDOX. I think not.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think that is a letter of the Quartermaster-General that was read by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. MADDOX (reading)—

Letter from the War Department reporting not adversely to the claim.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Oh, the situation is just this, briefly, like any other private claim——

Mr. MADDOX. Now, let me read this affidavit for the information of the gentlemen around here.

Mr. OVERSTREET. How long is it? I have no objection to your reading it.

Mr. MADDOX (reading)—

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned authority, Sergt. Thomas E. O'Brien, Company C, Forty-fourth Infantry, United States Volunteers, who, being duly sworn according to law, deposes and says: "On April 26, 1899, I was stationed with my company, under Capt. James L. Anderson, at Bacolgyan, Bohol, P. I. We had been informed by Captain Anderson that we were to change station to Jagna, Bohol; that the company would remain overland, carrying four days' rations, and that the commissary and personal property and other stores would be sent by boat, and that upon my return we were to take charge of the loading. The boat commenced loading, and the next morning I began to load, rafting the stores out to the boat, as we had no small boats to use. On board the boat I found a stock of commissary goods which Q. M. Sergt. Albert Tirey informed me was one month's ration for the detachment, which had been turned to him and placed on the boat." Pag-asanan, Bohol, April 15, 1899. I mention the items, extra ordnance, quartermaster's supplies, extra rations, field desks, and a box of blank supplies. The receipts for these and many personal effects in about the order named, but had to stop work at 10 o'clock on account of the high wind and rough water.

Now, another affidavit over here is that this soldier did not accompany the boat, but marched with the private soldiers, and over here we have the affidavit of another soldier who tells how the boat was capsized and everything lost, so you see that carried with it the entire company's property, and there is nobody claiming pay except Captain Anderson, while every private soldier lost everything he had.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am not questioning the possibility of loss of property by other individuals at this same accident, but nevertheless it means that Captain Anderson was a commissary officer, making purchases of supplies under direction of his superiors. He was in a distant clime, where it was entirely proper that he should purchase supplies for a considerable period of time. These supplies were in his possession, both under authority of law and under authority of his superiors. He had paid for them, he was transporting them under orders, and in order to facilitate the transportation properly dispatched part of the property by water while he and his men made an overland trip. A gale capsized the boat and the property was lost.

Now, I do not know the possibility of the loss of property belonging to other individuals. There may be a great many individuals in the country entitled to separate claims, but if gentlemen vote down this bill, refusing to make this payment, that will not help the other men, as this man is before the House, properly so, asking for compensation of loss of property he bought for the Government and paid for himself.

Mr. BARTLETT. Right there may I call the gentleman's attention to one thing?

Mr. OVERSTREET. Yes.

Mr. BARTLETT. I know you state that, and I was under that impression myself. Of this $798 there is an item which I suppose was embraced in the amount, "memorandums, notes, letters, and valuable papers, $200." Of the $798 carried by this bill now, $200 is for "memorandums, notes, letters, and valuable papers?" Does the gentleman think——

Mr. OVERSTREET. It is not my understanding that that item is carried in the appropriation in the bill, because, if you will observe, the items in the schedule exceed in amount the allowance which the bill carries. That is my understanding.

Mr. BARTLETT. The bill carries $798.28, and this item is——

Mr. OVERSTREET. But there is another schedule over there.

Mr. BARTLETT. Eighty-eight dollars and ninety-five cents.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The chairman of the committee is in a better position to tell the gentleman what, if any, items are omitted than I am.

Mr. BARTLETT. The gentleman is mistaken in that, because this report shows that $88.95 is added to this in order to make $798.28.

Mr. OVERSTREET. Then I did not know it.

Mr. BARTLETT. So that the $200, according to the report of the committee, putting together both schedules of lost property and $200 for loss of valuable papers, forms a part of the $798.28.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I only know this, that whatever the property was its value has not been questioned by the Department, and the entire account would have been paid but for the fact that this law authorizing such payments was suspended at that time, and, like any other personal claim, is obliged to come to Congress.

Mr. BURKETT. The gentleman would not insist, would he, that we should pay $200 for memorandum and valuable papers?

Mr. OVERSTREET. I would be glad to ask the chairman of the committee to answer the gentleman from Georgia concerning this item, and ask him to state if every item in the inventory was allowed in the appropriation. The gentleman from Georgia calls attention to the item of "memorandum, notes, letters, and valuable papers, $200." I have stated to him that I did not know what the committee did about that. I do know that the man ought to have payment for his loss.

Mr. BARTLETT. That may be true, but it does not seem to me that he should be entitled to $200 for memorandum and notes and letters.

Mr. GRAFF. The total amount of the bill is $798.28.

Mr. OVERSTREET. But the gentleman from Georgia wants to know whether or not included in that is the item of $200 for notes, letters, memorandum, and valuable papers.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not think it is, because subtracting the $200 from the total of the list found in the report under the head of Capt. James L. Anderson's personal property would leave $597.78; adding to that the total of $88.95——

Mr. BURKETT. But you have added that in to make up the $797.78.

Mr. OVERSTREET. The gentleman is right.

Mr. GRAFF. I think the amount of the bill ought to be reduced by taking out the $200.

Mr. OVERSTREET. I think so, too. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to deduct $200 from what the appropriation calls for. I move to amend, Mr. Chairman, by striking out the word "seven." In line 6 of the bill, and inserting the word "five."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the word "seven" and insert the word "five;" so that it will read: "$597.78."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN F. WESTON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2696) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John F. Weston the sum of $244.00, etc.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby, authorized and directed to pay out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to John F. Weston, late in charge of the Government transportation office at Fort Custer, Montana, being the amount of his expenses while in charge of the transportation of supplies, stores, and troops from Tongue River, Wyoming, to Fort Custer, Mont., as captain and commissary of subsistence United States Army.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

N. S. PALMER, JR., & CO.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 334) for the relief of N. S. Palmer, jr., & Co.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay to N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., the sum of $63,620.59, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full of their claim for damages and losses incurred in the construction of the engines for the Maine, that being the amount recommended to be paid by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, this is a large claim, and I think we ought to have an explanation of it.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I will say that last session of Congress we reported the bill and passed it through the House, which provided that the claim should be referred to the Secretary of the Navy for adjudication, and subsequent to the passage of that bill the Secretary of the Navy reported the actual amount of damages and recommended the passage of the act. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BEALL].

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Does the gentleman from New York desire further explanation?

Mr. PERKINS. I would like an explanation.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the statement of the chairman of the committee is correct. At the last session of the Congress the House passed a bill directing that the Secretary of the Navy audit this claim and report to Congress the amount that was justly due. The bill went to the Senate. In the meanwhile the committee on the Senate side had requested certain information from the Navy Department, and this information was supplied, and so, instead of passing the bill as it came from the House asking for auditing the claim, the Senate passed a bill making the direct appropriation. The bill came back to the House, was referred to the committee just about the close of the session, and consequently no further action was had in the House upon the bill.

This firm of Palmer & Co. in 1889 contracted with the United States Government to furnish the machinery and appurtenances for the battle ship Maine. Under that contract they were given two years and six months for the completion of this machinery, which would have carried them to October, 1891, and it was further stipulated that the erection should be completed within one year after that time, or by October 3, 1892.

The Government itself was having constructed the hull of this boat. At the time this company was required to have the machinery completed, the Government had not completed its part of the contract, and while this company had the machinery and everything required by their contract ready for installation, it was impossible for them to complete their contract because of the delay upon the part of the Government.

Instead of the boat being completed by October 3, 1892, as a matter of fact, because of this continued delay on the part of the Government, due in part to its inability to procure the necessary armor for the boat, it was not completed until 1895, and during these three years this company was subjected to a very considerable expense by reason of this delay. This matter was referred, at the request of the Senate, to the Secretary of the Navy for information. The Secretary of the Navy referred the matter to one of the bureaus of the Navy Department, the Bureau of Engineering, I believe it was, and that Bureau made a report. That Bureau recommended the payment of the amount that is specified in this bill. In fact, it recommended the payment of an additional amount giving whatever sum might have been paid for insurance, but no such item is embraced within this bill. The Secretary of the Navy says this:

The bureaus, in a joint report, find that the claimants are justly entitled to [illegible] "Having [illegible] this report of the two bureaus the undersigned [illegible] in the exercise of the business, [illegible] by them of the amount to which said company is entitled."

In other words, this claim has been submitted to the Navy Department and has received the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, that approval being based upon the report made by certain bureaus of that Department for the amount that is incorporated in the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON of Tennessee. What Secretary of the Navy made that report, may I ask?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. W. H. Moody, Secretary of the Navy. This claim was originally presented first to the Department for something like $96,000, I think, but under this auditing of the Navy Department the amount of $63,620.59 was arrived at as a just and fair and conservative estimate of what this company was reasonably entitled to by reason of the delay of the Government to perform its part of the contract with the company.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I think perhaps his elaboration of the case is satisfactory to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, if I may be allowed, I would like to say that the principal item in this bill is for the sum of $43,750 out of a total of $63,620.59, under what is called "item 5:"

5. The [illegible] of a general special contract of this nature causes an [illegible] by the maintenance of an [illegible] part of this force as was necessary to maintain during the delay caused by the Government.

Now, as I understand it, this machinery was actually made and delivered on board of this vessel, the [illegible] dock, waiting for a long time—several years—for armor plate; I think it was two years and one month. The machinery was [illegible] on the dock. One item of loss claimed is the interest on deferred payments, which I think is a very proper item.

Then there is the item of insurance; but there is no definite information before the Secretary of the Navy as to whether the property was insured or not, and that, therefore, is not included. I think if they actually paid it out it would have been a proper item, but why it is necessary for the Government to pay 10 per cent of the contract price for the delay caused while this machinery was on board the vessel at the dock in order to make up for the extra superintendents and foremen and draftsmen and experts, etc., which this firm had in its office, doing their business, I am not able to see. Let us examine the method of arriving at that sum. I do not think the Bureau is justified in arriving at any such conclusion. I think that ought to be tried in court. I read from the report:

Item 5—Extra general expense.—It may be assumed for purposes of this case that the general expenses of the claimant during the period which would have been incurred by the contractors under their contract if performed in the ordinary course of time, or two and one-half years, would have properly amounted to 10 percent of the contract price, viz, $78,500, and that these expenses would be increased in proportion to the extension of the time over which the contract actually extended by delays on the part of the Government. This extension, therefore, would be considered to be in the date on which the engines were in process of the preliminary completion of the vessel after October 3, 1892, to that date or two years and one month. The extension was from October 3, 1892, to that date or two years and one month.

On this basis the expense would be $78,500 × $\frac{27}{24}$ = $48,750.

Total, $63,620.59.

To which should be added any cost for insurance incurred from October 3, 1892, to November 1, 1894, except that for the trial trip.

Now, I confess that while a boy I used to be a good deal of a mathematician, but that equation stumps me. They conclude that they are entitled to $48,750, about two-thirds of the total sum—$63,620.59—to which would be added any cost for insurance incurred from October, 1892, to October, 1894. It seems to me that this is the most proper case in the world to go to the Court of Claims, and that the Navy Department and these bureaus did not have all the facts before them from which they could make an accurate statement of what ought to be done. I can not get it through my comprehension why they should multiply 78,500 by the fraction of $\frac{27}{24}$ divided by $\frac{24}{24}$, which equals $48,750, and there you are, and that therefore they should have an appropriation of that $48,750 plus the interest and plus the time for the care of the machinery when it was on board of the vessel and at the dock—a proper allowance—and plus the insurance, if this firm thought best to bring in evidence of insurance.

If they were getting this fractional business—this compound-fraction equation business—into the matter, which works out $48,500, I could see how they could forego the little item of insurance for three years and a half; but what process these gentlemen use in arriving at this conclusion and what facts they have to justify it I am unable to find in the report.

Mr. BURLESON. Is it not a fact that a similar claim was allowed in the case of the Texas?

Mr. PAYNE. I am not alluding particularly to the exact nature of the claim for damages in this case. These parties when they took their checks took the precaution to have their receipt in such a form that they should not be precluded from coming to Congress for further compensation. They gave the Government notice. I might not object to the proposed allowance in this case if the facts were all before us; but we have not here the facts by means of which we can arrive at the amount properly to be allowed.

This seems to me an extremely good case to go to the Court of Claims, and I see no reason why it should not. The Secretary of the Navy in his report says that it is a good case to go to the Court of Claims. He says:

Undoubtedly the best method of settling the amounts due the contractors on these several grounds would be to refer the case to the Court of Claims, where they can be [illegible] and [illegible] by the Department to its letter of November 8, 1897, and as stated [illegible] has elapsed already since the engines were justly entitled to [illegible] parts the writer is of the opinion that a definite recommendation should be made to enable the Department and Congress to act without the delay and expense to both parties to the case, which would be further incurred by reference to the court.

Notwithstanding that, or rather on the strength of that, these gentlemen of the Bureau bring to us here this compound-fractional equation. Why they do it, or how they do it, or how they figure it out, I am not able to understand. I wish some gentleman would explain how they arrive at their conclusion that the amount paid as damages should be just $48,500.

Mr. BURLESON. They do it by adopting the same basis of calculation as was adopted in the case of the Texas.

Mr. PAYNE. Supposing that to be so, will the gentleman inform this House how it is that this machinery, having been removed from the shops of these gentlemen and placed on board the United States vessel or on the dock and waiting there for this extension of time—why they should receive any damages for expenses in running their shop, which, presumably, was occupied at the time upon other business, because these men did not need a big shop in which to do a machinery business amounting to $78,500 for the Government? Why should they be allowed anything on that account? And why is this the proper amount to be allowed? I am not satisfied as to that. Let the case go to the Court of Claims. If these gentlemen can establish their claim there, I will cheerfully vote to pay it; but I agree with the Bureau that this is a very proper case to go to that court, and notwithstanding the delay which has occurred I say it ought to go there.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this report from the Secretary of the Navy demonstrates that he arrives at this amount by specific calculation. Now, I do not know that it would specially aid the gentleman from New York if the Secretary of the Navy had gone into details and run out all the additions and subtractions and multiplications and divisions—all the items that he took into consideration in arriving at this amount. He is the head of a great Department of our Government having charge of matters of this kind. He is supposed to have full knowledge relating to them. He was a Member of this House for many years, serving on the Committee on Appropriations. He is in every way qualified to pass judgment on this kind of a case; and he presents to this Congress a statement that this is a fair and reasonable award to this company for the damages suffered. Now, how can any Member of this House be in a position to pass upon this question more reasonably, from a better position, in a better way, than the Secretary of the Navy?

The gentleman from New York says, "Send the case to the Court of Claims." Suppose it were sent there; the court in determining the amount due would in all probability depend upon the estimate of the Navy Department. That is the best evidence that they would be able to secure—the best basis upon which they could render a judgment—the estimate of men who are specially skilled in such matters.

And, after all, when the Court of Claims had passed upon the question, having consumed two or three years in doing so, thereby keeping these people out of what they are justly entitled to for that length of time, the case would come back here in just the same shape exactly in which we have it now, with an award based upon the estimate of the Secretary of the Navy.

The Secretary of the Navy indorses the statement that "because of the length of time and other considerations" the better way would be for Congress simply to act upon the proposition.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman kindly inform me why these gentlemen, having completed this machinery and put it on board the vessel, tied at the dock at the time, made delivery as far as they could, having removed it from their shops, and having received damages from the deferred payments and damages in the nature of superintendence of the machinery while it was in the vessel while it was in the dock, all of which would be proper, why should they go further and receive any sum for maintaining their shop where this machinery was originally built and where, presumably (and there is no evidence here to the contrary), it was necessary to maintain their shop to build the machinery for other customers than the Government of the United States? Why should they receive any damages, and especially $43,000? What is there in the report to show it?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Now, the gentleman from New York is incorrect when he says this amount is allowed simply for the care and supervision of their shops. I do not think there is anything in the report to show that $43,000 is allowed for care of the shops.

Mr. PAYNE. Read item 5.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. It represents "general expenses," and under the peculiar facts of this case you can not estimate in a definite, certain kind of way this expense; you must approximate it.

Mr. PAYNE. Will not the gentleman read item 5, on page 3?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. What part of it?

Mr. PAYNE. Toward the bottom. The figure 5 in parentheses.

Mr. BEALL of Texas (reading)—

"(5) The performance of a large and special contract of this nature causes any contractor a large increase in general expense by the maintenance of an extra office force (clerks and draftsmen, expert's fees, and superintendent's cost of labor, and the claimants are justly entitled to recover for such period thus lost as it was necessary to maintain during the period of delay caused by the Government."

There is no pretense that this item of $43,000 refers to expenses for the whole of this clerical and other force.

Mr. PAYNE. Why not?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Only that part of it caused by this delay.

Mr. PAYNE. It does not appear what the total expenses there were or what was charged to this contract or to show whether they were for the maintenance of this force and during the period of the delay. The machinery was delivered. The Government had it, and it had been on board the Government vessel for two years and a month. Now, then, as to the necessity of keeping up this extra force during that two years, if it appeared it had been kept up in this case, I am satisfied they must have had it for other business, and for the Government voluntarily to come in here and pay them an indefinite or a definite amount on an indefinite calculation for the maintenance of this force—and it did not even appear that it cost them anything extra to maintain such force—it certainly does appear there was no necessity to maintain the force after the machinery had been delivered on board the Government vessel for which they should charge $43,000.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Is the gentleman willing to assume that the Secretary of the Navy will recommend $43,000 for this purpose without there being some evidence before him showing that this was a reasonable estimate of the expenditure? The Secretary of the Navy had certainly the necessary data before him from which to determine what would be reasonable.

Mr. PAYNE. "The gentleman" is willing to say of the Secretary of the Navy that there is no man having a higher regard for him as a personal friend or as a man than has "the gentleman from New York." But when the Secretary of the Navy is acting upon a report originating in his Bureau of Construction in the Navy Department he may have indorsed this in that way, and his attention might not have been called to this. If it had, I do not think he would have indorsed such a recommendation.

Mr. BURLESON. Now, if the gentleman will permit me, the Secretary of the Navy, considering the very objection urged by the gentleman from New York, uses this language:

"But as such a long time has elapsed already since the contractors were justly entitled to compensation, the bureaus are of the opinion that a definite recommendation should be made to enable the Department and Congress to get at the facts and expense to both parties to the case when a vessel be further incurred by reference to the court."

Mr. PAYNE. That is not the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. BURLESON. The Secretary of the Navy sets that forth in his report, and approves it.

Mr. PAYNE. No; it is the Bureau that recommends what the gentleman says.

Mr. BURLESON. The Secretary of the Navy sets it forth in his report.

Mr. PAYNE. He afterwards approves that. The Bureau proposes this, and the Secretary approves this as the basis proposed, and the Secretary sends this gentleman with his recommendations to Congress.

Mr. BURLESON. Will the gentleman permit me, is it not a fact that this case is on all fours with the Texas ship?

Mr. PAYNE. I will say to the gentleman there are so many of these cases, and not being interested in any particular one—

Mr. BURLESON. I am not interested, either.

Mr. PAYNE (continuing). I can not remember now the case of the Texas. I only take these cases as they come up, one at a time, and very likely the case of the Texas may have been the same and on all fours, and may not have attracted the attention of the "gentleman from New York," as this case seems to have attracted it, and this possibly may not have attracted the attention of the Secretary of the Navy when he came to examine it. No gentleman here seems to be able to furnish the committee the basis upon which this large claim of $43,000 was allowed, two-thirds of this entire claim, and therefore I suggest these gentlemen may possibly recover it all if we send this case to the Court of Claims.

Why, we have established a court to adjust all these matters, and let these gentlemen come in with the insurance, if they have any, and perhaps there will be a bigger claim against the United States and it may be just, and let it be passed upon by the Court of Claims. Then we can easily appropriate the money; we will have to do it, and it will go in the deficiency appropriation bill, and they will not be delayed a great while in getting this interest, and if they be entitled to $43,000, as appears here from this statement, they may be able to show it to the Court of Claims. Let them go there. Why not? What objection can there be to it?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the report of the Secretary of the Navy shows that they are justly entitled to it now without waiting an indefinite length of time which will be required to go through the Court of Claims. Now, so far as I am concerned, I have no interest in it directly or indirectly. It does not relate to anyone in my section of the country. As I understand it to-day, this company is located in the city of New York, but if from the United States is justly due them the sum of $43,000, as the Secretary of the Navy says it is due them, it ought to be paid, and it ought to be paid now. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask the House for just one minute about this. This question is exceedingly simple. I do not know anything about the gentlemen in this case and I do not care. There is not a man in this House who does not know that there can be no claim but honest and fair for which somebody can not find some precedent. The question is whether this bill is right. Now, the report is signed by the Secretary of the Navy, for whom we all have the greatest respect, but there is not a man in this House who does not know that these reports are prepared by the bureau of some subordinate, who certainly is not the House of Representatives of the United States, and to him we have no right to transfer our responsibilities. The gentleman from Texas says there is evidence of this claim. The trouble is on the face of this report. On the face of this report it is stated that there is not one whit of legal evidence. If this claim goes to the Court of Claims it is not, as my friend from Texas suggests, to be passed upon by estimates of bureau chiefs, but by evidence of the claimants as to what expenses they were put to by the delay of the Government.

Now, the report shows what? Do they give any evidence? Not one word. Section 5 says "it may be assumed," not it is proven, but "it may be assumed for the purposes of this case that the general expenses would have been increased 10 per cent." Now, as my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] has said, that is certainly a most violent assumption. Why the expenses of the main office should be increased 10 per cent because some goods which they had delivered had not yet been paid for no lawyer can say. They might be entitled to interest if they were not paid promptly, but when they come to the assumption that the expenses of the business were increased 10 per cent there is no one word of legal evidence upon which it rests. Now, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that when the report itself says they assume an item of $43,000 and ask you to pay it because some chief of bureau sees fit to make that assumption without evidence, we ought to send it, as the gentleman from New York suggests, to the Court of Claims, where this claim can be proved as every claim should be proved, not by assumption, but by legal evidence. That is what we ought to have before we vote to pay out the Government's money.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, would it be in order to offer a resolution sending this claim to the Court of Claims? I ask this because——

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the motion I made a moment ago.

Mr. PAYNE. Your motion does not cut off an amendment, my friend.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion the resolution would not be in order.

Mr. PAYNE. Then I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting:

"That the claim of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co., referred to the Court of Claims by the act of March 3, 1903, be and the same is hereby referred back to the Secretary of the Navy, for him to audit and report to Congress his conclusions in accordance therewith."

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this amendment is the same as the substitute and that the gentleman can not do indirectly what he can not do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"That the bill (S. 33) entitled 'A bill for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co.,' pending in the Senate of the United States, at the first session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, be and the same is hereby referred back to the Secretary of the Navy, for him to audit and report to Congress his conclusions in accordance therewith."

Mr. BEALL of Texas. Now, Mr. Chairman, I renew the point of order that that is substantially the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York a moment ago and that he can not do indirectly what he can not do directly.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. PAYNE. No, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to be heard on the point of order. I am offering an amendment in good faith and trying to get the case to the Court of Claims. I observe that in the last Congress a bill was introduced and passed through the House, I think, referring it to the Court of Claims. It went to the Senate, and they struck out all after the enacting clause and made a direct appropriation. This bill proposes to make a direct appropriation, and I ask that it be sent to the Court of Claims.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The bill passed by the House, Mr. Chairman, did not refer this case to the Court of Claims, but it simply referred it to the Department for auditing, and by the time it reached the Senate the report from the Department had reached there, and consequently they passed the bill making a direct appropriation.

Mr. GRAFF. The House bill provided that the claim should be referred to the Secretary of the Navy, for him to audit and report his conclusions to Congress. That report has been made without such legislation, and it seems, therefore, unnecessary to pass any such bill.

Mr. BEALL of Texas. I insist on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment is the same as the substitute, and is not germane to the matter contained in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York provides for sending the whole matter to the Court of Claims for adjudication. The Chair is of the opinion that the point of order against the amendment is well taken. The Chair bases his judgment upon a decision made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] [laughter] in the second session of the Fifty-fifth Congress, where a bill was pending referring a claim to the Court of Claims and an amendment was offered providing for the payment of the claim outright, and the gentleman from New York, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole, held that the amendment was not germane and sustained the point of order. Upon that precedent the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I concur with the ruling of the Chair. [Laughter.] Now I move an amendment which will be in order, and that is to strike out the words "sixty-three thousand six hundred and twenty dollars and fifty-nine cents" and insert in lieu thereof "$20,000." I reduce the amount by $43,620.59. I thought I would not quibble about a few cents in the matter. The amount added for that unwarranted expense is $43,750, and I have simply taken out $43,720.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out in line 5 the words "sixty-three thousand six hundred and twenty" and insert the words "twenty thousand."

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I care to say anything in support of this bill, but, being a member of the committee, I do feel that in justice to the committee I ought to be heard for a moment. What reason can there be assigned why this item of $43,000 should be stricken out of this bill? The gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] moved that it be stricken out without any evidence at all to sustain his motion. There isn't as much evidence here as the Secretary of the Navy had before him for the purpose of determining the amount that should be allowed for this item. Without any evidence whatever the gentleman moves to strike out this amount.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like to ask the gentleman from Kansas what evidence there is that it should be in?

Mr. BEALL of Texas. The report of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. MILLER. I want to suggest that every Member of the House has the highest confidence in the Secretary of the Navy, and when I meet a problem of mathematics that I am not able to master, I am willing to refer it to some one in whom I have confidence and who is able to solve it. This went to the Secretary of the Navy for his determination, and he referred it to the bureaus of his Department, that are full of men competent to pass upon every question in reference to the construction of naval vessels. They all know the amount of cost necessary in order that vessels may be constructed in accordance with the contracts with the Government, and the Secretary of the Navy receives a report from the chiefs of the bureaus, and he not only concurs with the men who have passed upon this question, but in addition he says that in this case, in effect, that a great act of injustice will be done if this case is sent to the Court of Claims. Why? Because for years these people have been kept out of the money justly due them and wholly on account of the fault of the Government, and the officers of the Government in the Navy Department admit that in their report. Here is another case, a case of the Texas, on all fours with the case before us. The Navy Department reported to the House exactly as they report in this case, with the same information before them, with the same arithmetical calculation as to the amount that ought to be allowed by reason of the increased force necessary to keep in the shop these men for the final carrying out of their contract with the Government.

It will not do to say that these people were not put to any unnecessary expense. Let us see whether they were or not. I call attention to the fact that this boat was not completed. It is true that by October 3, 1892, at the time it should have been completed as required by the contract, they had completed and erected on board of the vessel the main engines, boilers, and auxiliaries, but they did not have the hydraulic machinery in place which was necessary to turn the turrets upon that vessel. They had to keep that in their navy-yard. They had to have it guarded and protected. They had to keep the entire force in the office necessary to complete their contract. There is no evidence here to show that they were building other vessels at that time, none whatever, and are we to guess that they were building other vessels in order that we may keep these people from getting pay for the vessel that had been constructed?

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not a pretty fair guess that they were building other vessels, when they were in that business?

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman asks me to guess. I guess it was a pretty good guess for the Secretary of the Navy to say that the evidence before him showed that these people were entitled to $43,750, the loss that they sustained through the conduct of the Government of the United States.

Mr. PERKINS. As a lawyer the gentleman does not think that damages are fixed by guessing, does he?

Mr. MILLER. As a lawyer I do not think that damages are fixed by guessing, but by evidence. What was the evidence that fixed the loss sustained by the contractors for the Texas and that was adopted by the Members of this House, and I expect by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PERKINS], as well as the gentleman from Kansas? I say that we ought to treat these people the same as we treated them. Why send this case to the Court of Claims and pay the people that sustained the loss by reason of the construction of the Texas? Five or six years have passed away and this money is justly due these people. Why send it to the Court of Claims and let it be in that court for a period of years and compel them to pay out large sums of money for attorney fees?

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman forgotten that the Chair ruled out that amendment?

Mr. MILLER. That amendment seems to have been ruled out, but I am now speaking on the question of passing on this bill now and reporting it to the House with a favorable recommendation. I simply say that when the recommendation made by the Secretary of the Navy is clearly and conclusively supported by all that is said in this case in reference to the construction of this vessel and the loss sustained by these people we ought to report the claim to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I understand that the Chair has ruled out the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] providing that this bill should be sent to the Court of Claims. These people certainly have a right somewhere, and if they have no opportunity of going to the Court of Claims, then Congress ought to settle that right. We have some responsibilities to perform in this House, and this is not among the agreeable ones. Day after day we listen to complaints made that Congress declines to act and mete out justice as between the Government and people interested—such justice as they might get in a court of justice. There is money owing to these people. We determined that fact in the Committee on Claims. We said the best we could do for both the Government and the claimants and sent the bill to the highest authority. That was the Secretary of the Navy. He made a report, which we have here.

We all remember the Secretary when he was a Member of this House, and it is a pleasure to remember him as he was here. Always observing the greatest care to see that square, even justice was done in every case; and while perhaps there may be other men employed in high official positions for whose opinions we have not the same respect as we have for the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy, because we do not know them as we know him, the mere fact that we know that he is a prudent, careful man induced us to approve his report when it reached us. There should be some tribunal somewhere, at some time in the near future, to which these people may appeal; and if this bill, by subsequent legislation, is sent to the Court of Claims, the court must take the only evidence that we had, and that is the evidence that is shown in this report—the evidence furnished by the Navy Department. I submit to the committee that, inasmuch as under the ruling of the Chair the case can not be sent to the Court of Claims, we ought to accept the evidence submitted and recommend this bill favorably.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word. It is not a pleasant thing to stand here in the House of Representatives and oppose claims brought here by individual Members representing their constituents. They have a right to bring them in, and they have a right to be heard. We ought to accord to these claimants full hearings and ample satisfaction against the United States for all that may be due them. There is no question about that. But, Mr. Chairman, there is another side of the story. We represent not only the claimants, but we represent the people of the United States, who have no other hearing in this House than that which is given to their representatives here assembled. They have a right to have the Treasury of the United States protected.

We are engaged in a great work. We are building a great navy. It is a navy that will cost hundreds of millions of dollars, even if the original contracts made by the Navy Department under the authority of Congress are carried, and no extra expense is paid for delay. But it is inevitable that there should be delay in the construction of every vessel that we build. Either the man who furnishes the machinery is behind time, or the man who builds the hull is behind time, or the man who furnishes the armor plate is behind time. True, we put into the contracts a stipulation that any one of these contractors, if he gets behind, shall reimburse the United States for the damages incurred on account of his failure to carry out his contract.

But everybody knows that this damage claim is never enforced against these contractors; and it is never enforced because Congress does not require that it shall be. But, on the other hand, if one of these men is behind time it delays the delivery of other work for these vessels, as in this case. The delay here was on the part of those whose contract was to furnish the armor plate. The hull was built; the machinery was ready. The machinery was delivered on board the vessel, so far as it could be done, and when it could not be delivered on board the vessel it was delivered on the dock, as I understand, within the time prescribed by the contract. But the contract provided for a test; and the Government could not get a test until the armor plate had been placed on the vessel and the vessel made ready to go to sea. So the Government was not at fault. The contractor for the armor plate was at fault. He has never been required to pay anything to the Government for all this delay.

We have paid some pretty large bills in the past for this very sort of thing; we shall have to pay them in the future. Hence Congress should guard carefully these contracts—should guard carefully against these attempts to bring upon the Treasury of the United States claims for damages—should sift all such claims carefully, and before paying them should be absolutely convinced that they are just.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman explain how this committee could have done better than it has done?

Mr. PAYNE. I think the committee ought to send all these people to the Court of Claims. Let the Government and the claimant appear there and present their evidence, and let the Court of Claims decide.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. What other evidence could be presented there than we have here?

Mr. PAYNE. What is the evidence here? This Bureau says that it believes 10 per cent would be a fair estimate for these extraordinary experts, etc., that were required on account of this machinery. The Bureau therefore concludes that 10 per cent for three and a half years would be right, and then, by some inexplicable process of reasoning, they say that if the time be extended the percentage must be increased in proportion to the time of such extension. Hence they bring here this proposition in mathematics—this case stated in equations.

Why, Mr. Chairman, if 10 per cent would be $7,350 for one year, then for two years it would be $14,700, and for the extra month it would be one-twelfth of $7,350—about $600. We can understand that sort of figuring. That reaches down to our intellects. And these gentlemen of high scientific attainments seem to be able to figure out the matter so that common men—common mathematicians like you and I—might understand how they reach their results.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURLESON. I move to close all debate on the section and all pending amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PAYNE, it was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now upon laying the bill aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The question having been put.

The CHAIRMAN. The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. PAYNE. I guess we had better have a division.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes [illegible], noes 8.

So the bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JOHN H. M'LAUGHLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 199) for the relief of John H. M'Laughlin.

The bill was read, as follows:

[illegible] That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, [illegible] and two-thirds [illegible] be [illegible] the sum of [illegible] dollars [illegible] said John H. M'Laughlin [illegible] the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] the [illegible] of the United States [illegible] said John H. M'Laughlin through all these years, and the Committee on Claims, feeling that the right of recovery was clear, as established in the Court of Claims, thinking that it was not a species of work that required great genius, but still that it was a work that was valuable to the Government, and that he ought to have compensation commensurate with its importance and with the work which it took to complete it, therefore recommended the cutting the claim down from $15,000 to $2,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. What did the Court of Claims find?

Mr. GRAFF. The Court of Claims found $1,000 or $1,200; it was somewhere [illegible]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I think it was $1,800.

Mr. GRAFF. And based that finding upon the fact of the actual amount of time employed by him in getting up this table at the rate of compensation that he was receiving from the Government in the performance of his duty as an officer. In other words, they measured the compensation in the performance of this work done out of office hours at the same rate that he was receiving in salary as a clerk in that Department of the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. The Court of Claims found as a matter of fact that the tables were worth $20,000, but as a matter of law the Government did not do anything about it.

Mr. GRAFF. My remembrance is—I have not the report of the Court of Claims with me—but, as I remember, they reported in favor of a compensation in the sum of either a thousand or twelve hundred dollars.

Mr. JOHNSON. Does not the man who got up the tables say himself that he got them up to expedite and lighten his own labors when he was an officer of the Treasury?

Mr. GRAFF. I suppose that may have been his purpose in getting up the tables—that it was for the purpose of lightening his own labors—but that would not lessen the value of the work to the Government. He performed this work out of hours. That has been clearly established, and there is no question of the liability of the Government for services performed out of hours when it is accepted by the Government.

Mr. JOHNSON. Did not the Secretary of the Treasury, who had the tables printed in book form, pay this man $500 for the manuscript?

Mr. GRAFF. I do not know that he did.

Mr. JOHNSON. The man says so himself.

Mr. GRAFF. I know that the committee went into this subject very thoroughly. We have had at least three or four thorough hearings upon the subject since I have been a member of the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the gentleman ever seen the book?

Mr. GRAFF. I have.

Mr. PAYNE. How extensive a book is it?

Mr. GRAFF. It is on the same order as an interest book.

Mr. PAYNE. It contains salaries all the way from one day up to sixteen days at different rates?

Mr. GRAFF. It is quite an extensive book. It is composed of a number of pages, tables, and estimates for various times at various salaries.

Mr. PAYNE. Certainly from $600 up to $2,000, a table varying from one to two hundred dollars between the tables, and that would make a dozen pages, one salary to a page; and then it runs from one day up to sixteen days, which is the period for which the men are paid.

Mr. GRAFF. I do not think I could make it plain to the gentleman from New York, because the gentleman from New York admitted a little while ago that he did not know anything about compound fractions.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken about that. I said I didn't know anything about the method of proving facts by compound fractions which were assumed. But I could get up such a table as this is. I am competent for that perfectly, and I don't see why anybody else could not. I do not see why anybody, at an expense of $500 worth of time, could not take all the salaries paid by the Government and get up tables for them.

Mr. GRAFF. It is in use now by the Government——

Mr. PAYNE. Yes; and if the Secretary of the Treasury, when he got the manuscript, paid $500 for it, I can not see why we should now pay this man an additional $3,000.

Mr. JOHNSON. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the statement at the bottom of page 3 of the report:

> The Secretary of the Treasury ordered the work printed, made it the authority for all future payments of salaries, and awarded [illegible] for its use. After its publication I was surprised and disappointed to learn that the Secretary had misunderstood the terms of the agreement and refused to allow me to dispose of the work to other Departments.

It seems that he was going to sell it to the other Departments. The fact is that when the Secretary ordered the tables printed, he paid him $500 for the manuscript.

Mr. GRAFF. That is a reasonable conclusion on his part.

The sum paid was insignificant, and that the tables were of value is shown by the fact that the Government has [illegible] since $500 [illegible] expended for the purpose of making the tables contained. When, in addition to this, it is known that I paid to Mr. G. H. Andrews [illegible] for clerical assistance and for the reimbursement on his part of an interest in the book——

Mr. PAYNE. Did Andrews help get up the book?

Mr. GRAFF. I suppose he helped perform some of the mechanical labor.

Mr. PAYNE. He afterwards transferred his interest in the book?

Mr. GRAFF. No; Sharretts paid him $250 for the service which he rendered to him.

Mr. PAYNE. And took his interest in the book?

Mr. GRAFF. Well, yes.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman just read it.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes; I did not understand the gentleman's question.

Mr. PAYNE. Is there anything to show whether Andrews was a partner in this concern?

Mr. GRAFF. No; and I do not suppose it makes any difference, either.

Mr. PAYNE. I was trying to get at the value of the services. If Andrews was willing to sell his [illegible] for $250 afterwards, then $500 would seem to be the value of the work.

Mr. GRAFF. But he did not suppose that every Department of this Government was going to have the right to use these tables when he simply gave the Secretary of the Treasury the manuscript to use in one Department.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not know why he should not have supposed it; he had no copyright or anything of that kind.

Mr. GRAFF. The Government all the time has recognized that it was his labor that produced the work.

Mr. PAYNE. He did this work in order to lighten his own work in the Department.

Mr. GRAFF. I don't know whether he did or not.

Mr. PAYNE. Has he credited the Government anything for lightening his labor in the Department?

Mr. GRAFF. It did not lighten his labors.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. What is the man's condition now?

Mr. GRAFF. The man is dead. I did not know the gentleman. I know some of his sons. I know one of them who lives in Maryland, and I know something about the history of the case.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. I think that that would be the best thing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York to strike out the enacting clause.

The question was taken, and the motion was disagreed to.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on agreeing to the amendments recommended by the committee.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

LELIA G. CAYCE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11178) for the relief of Miss Lelia G. Casey.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Miss Lelia G. Casey, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $2,000, being the amount disallowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department, and charged against the accounts of the said Lelia G. Casey, late collector of customs for the port of San Francisco, March 4, 1905.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

> In the title change the word "Casey" to "Cayce."
>
> In line 5, strike out the word "Casey" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Cayce."
>
> In line 6, change the word "duty" to "penalty."
>
> In line 6, change the word "March" to "May."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAFF] to give us some information about this bill.

Mr. GRAFF. I think I can satisfy the gentleman by reading a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, which will enlighten him. That letter is as follows:

> TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
> Washington, February 9, 1904.
>
> SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt, by reference, of bill H. R. 11178, [illegible] relief of Miss Lelia G. Casey.
>
> The records of the Department show that Miss Lelia G. Cayce arrived at the port of San Francisco from [illegible] on May 28, 1903; that she had with her certain articles which were not declared and which were seized for violation of sections 2497 and 2499 of the Revised Statutes. The Department however concluded, after a careful examination of the matter, that Miss Cayce did not intend to defraud the revenue, and directed the collector on October 5, 1903, to release the property without further payment, and at the same time in> formed him that as the penalty, or treble the value provided in section 2899, ante, had been paid and covered into the Treasury it could not be refunded. The Department, therefore, perceives no objection to a favorable consideration of the measure presented in her behalf.

>
> Permit me to invite your attention to three errors in the bill, namely: "[illegible]" should be "duty," the word "duty" should be "penalty," and the [illegible] "May 28," instead of "March [illegible]."
>
> Respectfully,
>
> L. M. SHAW, Secretary.
>
> The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON CLAIMS,
> House of Representatives.

Mr. PAYNE. This bill simply refunds her the extra duty.

Mr. GRAFF. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. I think that is a very proper measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HEIRS OF JOHN A. DOLAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2010) for the relief of the heirs of John A. Dolan.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the heirs-at-law of John A. Dolan, late corporal, Company C, Twenty-seventh Regiment United States Volunteer Infantry, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the amount of pay, including that which would have been due said person for pay, commutation of rations, and clothing in the service accrued from the date of his capture by the Philippine insurgents to the date of his death in [illegible].

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BOUTELL].

Mr. BOUTELL. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to take any of the time of this committee which might be devoted to the favorable consideration of other bills on this Calendar. This bill is a type of a class of measures that consume much of the time of this House which ought to be devoted to legislation of another kind. This is due to the present condition of the general law. Such a claim as this ought to be adjusted and paid by the proper Executive Department of the Government. The beneficiaries in this bill are the heirs of John A. Dolan. John A. Dolan was a brave and faithful soldier in the United States Army from my district. In 1900 he was with his regiment in the Philippines. His time of enlistment expired in January of that year. He reenlisted for service in the Philippine insurrection.

On the 29th of January, 1900, while with his regiment, he was engaged in a skirmish, and at the close of the skirmish Corpl. John A. Dolan was reported missing. He was carried as missing on the ranks of his company for some time and finally recorded as dead. The amount due the soldier was paid to his father, his legal representative, up to the 29th of January, 1900. Subsequent investigations that were made by the War Department discovered the fact that this soldier did not die on the 29th of January, 1900, but was carried into captivity, and languished and died from disease while in captivity in October, 1900. These facts were discovered nearly a year thereafter. His body was identified and returned for burial in his native land. The father thereupon communicated with the Treasury Department, requesting that the amount of compensation and commutation due to the boy from January 29 to the date of his death be paid to him. The matter came before the Comptroller of the Treasury. He decided that, it having once been determined that the boy died on the 29th of January, 1900, he could not reverse this ruling, even to conform with the facts ascertained and reported by the War Department. On account of this technicality the legal heirs of this deceased soldier had to come before Congress for the collection of this little claim of $269, as audited by the Acting Paymaster-General, the payment of which is recommended by the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation?

The question was taken, and the bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

G. H. DEAREN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11387) for the relief of G. H. Dearen.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to G. H. Dearen, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $247.50, in payment of meals, lodgings, and horse feed furnished to C. A. Kaye while a storekeeper-gauger in the Internal-Revenue Service of the United States in the fifth internal-revenue district of Kentucky.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have some explanation of this bill.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I think I can give the information that the gentleman desires.

Mr. GRAFF. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, this bill provides for the payment of $247.50 to G. H. Dearen, of Taylor County, Ky., on an account made with him by a man named Kaye, who was engaged in the Internal-Revenue Service in the fifth district of Kentucky. It is for board and lodging for himself and board for his horse, furnished to C. A. Kaye, a storekeeper-gauger, while he stayed with Dearen. Kaye made out and certified the claim to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for reimbursement, and at the same time made out a number of other claims. He collected about $8,600 from the Treasury of the United States upon claims, some of which he justly owed, and when he received the money he failed to pay it over to the several parties to whom it was due. The Government found out about his defalcation and was about to prosecute him when, by reason of a compromise, he and his friends paid the whole sum to the Treasurer of the United States instead of paying this claimant and other claimants. The collector of internal revenue for the fifth Kentucky district recommended that $8,600 or thereabouts be accepted as a compromise and that the whole of this sum be paid to the Treasury of the United States, less the $247.50, which he recommended to be paid to this man G. H. Dearen. But through some oversight on the part of the Federal officials the whole sum was paid into the Treasury. There is a full statement from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue explaining the facts just as I have stated them.

I move that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

JULIUS A. KAISER.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10891) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The bill was read, as follows:

> Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Julius A. Kaiser the sum of $3,758.45, being the amount disallowed by the accounting officers for difference between net pay of a second assistant engineer and retired pay of a first assistant engineer from October 13, 1868, to July 8, 1878, while on the active list of officers of the Navy.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman——

[Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Well, Mr. Chairman, if gentlemen want to vote, I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. PAYNE. This bill is certainly venerable by reason of its age. I notice that the claim, or supposed claim, accrued some years ago. Now, I should like to hear a statement from the gentleman from Pennsylvania or to hear the report read; I am not particular which.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. I shall be glad to answer any questions put by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let the report be read.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, in 1868 Julius Kaiser held the rank of second assistant engineer in the United States Navy, and as such was stationed somewhere in the East, in the neighborhood of China or Japan. According to the records of the Navy Department he was at that time entitled to promotion to the grade of first assistant engineer. But contrary to the rules and customs of the Department he was kept in the East for more than five years without the Department giving him the chance to take his examination for promotion. In 1873 he was ordered home. On the return voyage, during a storm, while he was in the performance of his duty, he was thrown upon the engines of the ship and was badly crippled, so that when he arrived in the United States he presented a sorry, dilapidated appearance. When he was ordered before the doctors to be examined for promotion they immediately said, and properly said, "You can not be promoted, because you have a practically helpless arm."

For years Kaiser made an attempt to obtain from Congress the redress which he considered was his right. There was no power in the Department to give him the promotion which he would have had in 1868, and therefore the whole subject was referred to Congress.

Without undertaking to designate each of the Congresses in which a bill for his relief was passed through one House or the other, I will say that gentlemen interested in this subject will, by looking at the report, find that in several Congresses a bill was passed at one end of the Capitol or the other for the relief of this crippled man, the object being to place him on the retired list, where he would have gone if he had been examined and promoted, as he was entitled, before this accident happened. Thus the claim of this worthy man with a splendid record was recognized by one House or the other at different times. It was not until last year that the bill for his relief passed both Houses and was signed by the President.

I once made an effort to secure recognition in this House for the passage of the bill by unanimous consent. Mr. BAILEY of Texas, now senator BAILEY, objected, though he afterwards said to me that he did not know the facts of the case and suggested that I make another effort to be recognized.

When Mr. Kaiser was promoted by act of Congress to the grade of first assistant engineer, it was discovered that the bill, which had been drawn by an admiral of the Navy, provided for his retirement as of 1905; consequently he was placed on the retired list as of that date.

Mr. BINGHAM. That was the bill passed last year?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAFF. That was five years before he returned home?

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Yes, sir.

Under the circumstances the accounting officers properly said: "This man can not receive pay from two sources; he can not be on two lists; he has been paid for five years on the active list; this bill places him on the retired list, and we have nothing to do but to deduct from his pay as a first assistant engineer on the retired list the money which we have overpaid him as an active officer in the Navy"—just what Congress did not intend should be done.

Consequently this bill was introduced to make right what really appears to be a wrong. Kaiser earned his money and the money was paid him. It is now being deducted from his pay by the Department officials, because they have no authority to do otherwise. This subject was referred to the Auditor of the Navy Department, and a letter was written to General BINGHAM, who was interested in this claim because of his knowledge of Mr. Kaiser, being General BINGHAM's constituent; and without reading the letter all the way through, the Auditor of the Navy Department says:

As requested by Mr. BINGHAM, I beg to inclose a draft of a bill [illegible] in the matter. The papers relating to the case are herewith returned.

[Cries of "Vote!"]

I move that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

AMERICAN REGISTER FOR THE STEAMER BEAUMONT.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Navigation is hereby authorized and directed to cause the foreign-built steamer [illegible], owned by a citizen of the United States, to be registered as a vessel of the United States, under the name of "Beaumont," whenever it shall be shown to the Commissioner of Navigation that the exchange and the repairs made in United States shipyards have amounted to more than three times the price paid for the wreck, exclusive of salvage.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after the word "Navigation," in lines 7 and 8, and insert the following: "on proof being made that the repairs made in the United States, together with the charges have amounted to more than three times the price paid for the wreck, exclusive of salvage, to her foreign owners."

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Michigan to allow this bill to go over until the gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD] is present. He has been called away from the city and can not possibly be here to-day. As the gentleman knows, the minority of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has submitted quite an elaborate report of fourteen pages on this subject, covering the general proposition. The gentleman from Maine drafted the report, and those of us who are here are not conversant with the full details of it, and for that reason I would ask the gentleman to allow the bill to go over until Mr. LITTLEFIELD can be here.

Mr. FORDNEY. I wish to say, in answer to the gentleman from Minnesota, that I personally notified the gentleman from Maine that I was going to take this bill up to-day or at the first opportunity. He was here last evening at a very late hour—when the House adjourned—and knew that it was coming up to-day. The gentleman from Minnesota is here, and if this bill goes over it can only be considered on claims day, which will carry it over until next month. I am very anxious to get this bill through the House if possible, if I can get a favorable vote here, so that it can be acted on by the Senate; and I decline, in fact, to have the matter go over until another day. If the gentleman from Minnesota wishes to control the time for the opposition, and represent the minority in the argument upon the bill I am quite willing.

I do not care to make many remarks, except to state to the House what the bill is for, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota or any other person who wishes to oppose the measure.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I simply desire to reserve time to discuss this bill on behalf of the minority.

Mr. FORDNEY. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that this bill was introduced at the last session of Congress, passed this House by an almost unanimous vote, went to the Senate, and received a favorable report from the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, but too late in the session to receive consideration in the Senate, it being the last week of the session. Therefore the bill failed.

The bill has been before the House ever since the beginning of the December session and was put on the Calendar here two weeks ago. It provides for granting an American register to a foreign-built steamship. Let me say for the benefit of gentlemen present that according to the law as it now stands if a wreck occurs in American waters there would have been no need of special legislation. The law provides that vessels wrecked within American territory and repaired in American shipyards so that when the boat is ready for service again three-quarters of her cost has been repairs in American shipyards on the rescued boat from her wrecked condition, are entitled to register under the law.

It so happened that this boat was wrecked just outside of American waters, in the waters of Nova Scotia. She was a brand new steel steamer, only afloat for about ten months before she was wrecked. She was abandoned to the underwriters and pronounced a hopeless wreck by the Nova Scotia and Canadian wreckers; but an American wrecker, from the State of Michigan, went to inspect the boat, and after a time he contracted with the underwriters to rescue the boat. He was to deliver her safe in the port of Halifax for the consideration of $50,000, understanding that the wreck would sell for at public auction. The boat was rescued by one of the greatest feats of salvaging ever performed in rescuing a boat, blasting out channels in solid rock so as to float to float her, and she was delivered safe in port at Halifax. Then Mr. Reed, the wrecker, discovered there was a flaw in his contract which did not compel the owners of the wreck to sell her promptly and pay him.

They were not ready nor willing to sell her promptly. Mr. Reid was a poor man, and therefore needed the money. He sent for the present owner of that ship, a neighbor, to come to his relief and help him financially. Mr. Gilchrist went to Halifax, went to the underwriters, and insisted that they settle with this man Reid. They declined to settle until they got good and ready. However, they were forced by Mr. Gilchrist, the present owner, to settle with Mr. Reid. Mr. Gilchrist purchased the boat from the underwriters for the sum of $40,000, assuming the charge of the wrecker, $51,000; paid Mr. Reid the $50,000 paid him for delivering the boat in Philadelphia at Cramp & Sons' shipyard. There she has been repaired, so that to-day the account stands on Mr. Gilchrist's book, including the $50,000 paid to the underwriters for the wreck, the sum of $303,000. Mr. Gilchrist states, however, that there is yet to be spent some $24,000 to complete the repairs on this boat.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman how much did this boat cost originally?

Mr. FORDNEY. I really do not know. I will say that I had a letter from a gentleman the other day from San Francisco—a steamboat man—telling me he could build a duplicate boat in England for $130,000. She was built in England. When she was abandoned by her owners, let me say for the benefit of gentlemen present, she lost her English registry; especially when she was transferred to an American citizen she lost her English registry. She is no longer a vessel without a flag. In order to get that boat back under the English flag the present owner, an American citizen, must transfer her to an English citizen, and to retain the ownership by some string in an underhand way must be held in the way of a trustee or mortgage; but mind you, gentlemen, if she is transferred to an English citizen and taken under the English flag the officers and seamen, officers and crew, aboard that ship must be employed under the English flag. No American citizen can be employed.

If you give this boat American registry to-day licensed officers must be American citizens, consequently every man on board this ship must receive American wages and therefore must be an American citizen, because no licensed officer, it is a well-settled fact, will sail with foreigners unless the foreigner gets the same pay that is paid to American sailors under the American flag; therefore it will be absolutely necessary that all employees on board of the ship, if you give her the American registry, will be American citizens. Otherwise you shut out any American citizen from employment on board of that ship, notwithstanding the fact that the ownership of it is in an American citizen.

The gentleman from Maine [Mr. LITTLEFIELD], I may say, who has led the opposition to this boat, sets up the claim that it is a menace to the American shipbuilding interests of this country and the shipowners of this country. I want to say this, that in the opposition that came before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries there came one George S. Dearborn, president of the American-Hawaiian Steamship Company, likewise representatives of Arthur Sewall & Co., of Bath, Me. I have here affidavits and certified copies of records that Arthur Sewall & Co. and George S. Dearborn in 1889 purchased a steel bark in the Bay of San Francisco, repaired her in an American shipyard in San Francisco, and asked and obtained an American registry for that boat on the 4th of February, 1890. They paid $55,000 for the wreck.

I have the affidavit of the gentleman who superintended the repairs of that boat that the repairs cost but $37,000. Arthur Sewall & Co. and Mr. Dearborn are here protesting against an American registry for this ship, when they have one to-day in their company for which they obtained an American registry, and the bill went through this House without any report on it. If there had been a report showing that there had been only $37,000 spent in repairs, whereby the wreck cost $55,000, could you get it through this House to-day, gentlemen? If so, what merit is there in this bill when this gentleman paid $50,000 for the wreck, and has spent $158,000 in rescuing her and repairing her in American shipyards, and has yet to spend from thirty-five to sixty thousand dollars to complete her repairs, owing to the kind of repairs yet to be completed. I will add here the majority report on this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

The Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the British steamship Mara, beg leave to report as follows:

[illegible]

The committee held several public hearings on this and similar cases. Shipping interests were represented for and against the passage of special bills authorizing the granting of registers in this class of cases, so that the subject was fully heard and considered. In several instances committees which in the last Congress favored the granting of a register for a particular vessel now favor amending existing laws. Your committee are impressed by the fact that the opposition of the shipping interests is influenced largely by their pecuniary interest in a particular case. As a general rule, shipyards have had in hand the repairing of one of these wrecks before their particular case. The repair yards are practically a unit in indorsing the passage of bills of this class of bill.

Some of the opponents of these bills appear to have a most erroneous idea as to the number of vessels that have been admitted under authority of special acts of Congress, and displayed a misapprehension of the whole subject of Congressional action in this connection. Section 4136, Revised Statutes, was enacted in 1866 and provides that whenever a foreign vessel which has been wrecked in United States waters is purchased by a citizen of the United States and repaired by such citizen in a port of the United States to an extent that of her total cost three-fourths thereof is represented in repairs, she shall be admitted to United States registry.

Notwithstanding the enactment of this act in 1866, R. S., the Congress refused to follow the spirit of this law in a number of cases. Hence where it has been shown that some of our citizens has purchased a wrecked vessel and repaired her as provided in the above act, and that the owner had to the registry of the vessel when she had the wreck took place evidence of instead of these two Houses have passed a special act waiving the constitutional requirement as to the payment of wrecks, knowing that our shipbuilding and salvage interests have received the same benefit as though the wreck had occurred under our flag. In this connection the following extract from the Attorney-General's opinion of September 29, 1881, written by the Hon. William H. Taft, then Solicitor General and now Secretary of War, defining the intention of section 4136, is to point:

[illegible]

The general intention of section 4136 was to give to wrecked vessels which were purchased and repaired in the United States the same privileges that vessels were given if wholly built within the United States. In all such cases there was to be an American shipbuilding and it was evidently considered by Congress that the encouraging of repairs of a vessel was to be encouraged as well as the building of a vessel outright.

Some of the opponents of these bills would make it appear that the vessels of foreign class admitted by special acts constitute a large percentage of our merchant marine. In the past five years Congress has removed the jurisdiction over in the following cases only:

	Gross tonnage.
Steamer Enterprise	2,[illegible]
Steamer Lotta	434
Steamer Wilmot	381
Steamer [illegible]	1,[illegible]
Barge Davidson	959
Total	5,556

In addition to these an act was passed providing for registry for the bark [illegible], but she was excluded from the coastwise trade, so that [illegible] on the present consideration.

Thus it be seriously contended that these four cases admitted in five years only [illegible] who is represented every vessel was any menace to our merchant marine.

The cases now discussed must not be confused with vessels admitted at the request of the War and Navy Departments for the Government's use as [illegible] with the vessels admitted by reason of our annexation [illegible] Hawaii.

In the past twenty years Congress has passed seventy-seven of these special [illegible] for the American marine. The total tonnage [illegible] vessels, including [illegible] as well as steamships. This would average less than [illegible] a month. In the meantime of change the vessels [illegible] during the early part of this period have [illegible] been lost or have [illegible] to the coastwise trade and few remain in service.

Twenty years is the average [illegible] a vessel. Hence the vessels admitted by special acts more than twenty years ago must be assumed to be [illegible] of exhaustion. Of the seventy-seven admitted during the past twenty years an examination of the list of merchant shipping shows not less than one-third of the number so admitted are now home on the bed. It will be seen that no [illegible] have operations [illegible] of these vessels [illegible] vessels in certain cases of merit has worked any hardship to American shipping interests.

The Commissioner of Navigation has no objection to the passage of this bill.

As this case shows that all of the requirements of the general law (sec. 4136, Rev. Stat.) and have been complied with, hence this vessel can obtain her United States register, with the [illegible] has been prevented in a American [illegible] waters. Your committee believe that this should be removed, following the precedents established by the committee extending back for years past. Your committee report back H. R. 4570 with the following amendments in the [illegible]

Strike out all after the word "Navigation," in lines 7 and 8 and insert the following in lieu thereof: "that the repairs made in the United States, together with the charges, have amounted to more than three times the price paid for the wreck, exclusive of salvage, to her foreign owners."

A precedent by Congress to grant American registry to this steamer (now owned by an American citizen) in lieu of her without a flag. "Increase our merchant marine and put under the American flag more boats and citizens." Therefore [illegible] Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, this is with great regret that I feel compelled to oppose the bill so ably advocated by my friend from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY]. We have stood together at times in the past, and I very much dislike to differ with him now. I have not investigated the particular facts of the various cases, I was not on the subcommittee which heard the testimony on these bills, and I was not present when the final vote was taken on them, so that I do not pretend to be conversant with all the facts and details of this bill. But I was opposed during the last Congress and am opposed now to the general principle of admitting these foreign vessels to an American registry. Since 1817 it has been the policy of this Government through all Administrations, Republican and Democratic, to confine the coastwise trade of this country to American vessels built in this country by our own people, owned by American capital, built and sailed under the American flag.

Now, this is a departure from that rule, and there never was a time in the history of our country since that law was passed when it was more unsafe and impolitic to do that than now. At the present time our shipbuilding interest is in a condition of sorry decadence. For nearly two years there has not been one single order for new foreign tonnage placed with American shipyards. The only business that there is in American shipyards to-day is the building of coastwise vessels, and there are not very many of them. Thousands of shipwrights are out of employment because the vessels are not being built, and this bill proposes to take the bread out of the mouths of these men by putting a vessel built in foreign lands to take the place of one built in this country.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. In a few moments I will yield to the gentleman from Michigan. As I said, I oppose it because it is injuring the shipbuilding interests of this country.

Now, I believe that one of the best possible methods of our national defense, one that contributes as much to our national welfare and our commercial and maritime welfare, is the maintenance of the shipyards of this country. Away back in 1793 the patron god of the Democracy, Thomas Jefferson, while Secretary of State, made an elaborate report in which he took the position that it was necessary for the national defense that we build up our national merchant marine, and that we maintain shipyards in this country capable of turning out vessels under the American flag and artisans capable of doing the work in building these vessels.

I believe that Jefferson stated a truth that should be heeded now. I believe that it should be one of the things that this House should do, to enact some legislation that would tend to the upbuilding of the shipyards and the upbuilding of the merchant marine of this country.

I have been a member of the Committee on the Merchant Marine for two Congresses, with some of the gentlemen on that side of the Chamber. While a member of the committee I voted against the last ship-subsidy bill that passed the Senate. I voted against it because I believed it did not tend to build up the merchant marine of the country, because it would not be efficient in sustaining the shipyards of the country commensurate with its cost. I do not believe, as a rule, in the principle of subsidies. I believe it should only be a last resort, and yet I find that some gentlemen who stood with me then and voted against the subsidy are ready to vote for this bill, which puts more than $100,000 into the pockets of the owner of this vessel.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If you want to do anything for the coastwise trade to increase our merchant marine, why not put a premium on the enterprise of such men as Mr. Gilchrist, who in the last three years has built and floated 100 vessels at his own expense? [Applause.]

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am very glad to encourage that kind of a patriotic American citizen, and it is for the reason that I believe in encouraging that class of citizens that I oppose the passage of this bill. I believe this vessel should be built in American yards, by American workmen, and should fly the American flag. I will tell you why.

This vessel, according to the report, has cost practically $200,000. The letter from Cramp, who is rebuilding this ship, says it will cost $75,000 in his yards. It cost $[illegible] previously to buy the ship, salve it, and put it into the Cramps' yard. It will cost about $[illegible] or $40,000 more to refit it. Suppose it does, that it is rebuilt at a cost of $275,000. You have a vessel of 3,700 tons that would cost $[illegible] if built by American workmen. For that reason I am opposed to taking the bread, to the extent of more than $100,000, out of the mouths of the American workmen by the passage of bills like these.

Mr. M. MORRAN. Where does the gentleman get the authority for his statement that it would cost $400,000 to build such a ship as this?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I take it from the testimony before the committee.

Mr. McMORRAN. It is well known that vessels of that size and capacity are being built every year in the interior yards at a cost of from two hundred and twenty-five to two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am taking the testimony that was given before the committee. As I said before, I was not there when the testimony was taken.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Mr. Cramp said he never examined it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. On page 73 of the hearings I find the testimony of Mr. Samuel M. Knox, secretary and treasurer of the New York Shipbuilding Company, one of the largest yards in the United States, at Camden, in the State of New Jersey. He states that a vessel of that kind would cost $400,000. In another place in the hearings—I have not the page—it was stated that a vessel like this could be duplicated on the Lakes for $250,000. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is immaterial for the purposes of this argument whether it costs $250,000 or $400,000. It does not make any difference the amount it costs less than the original cost of a similar new vessel in American yards. We legislate something into the pockets of this man by passing this bill. We legislate something out of the mouths of American workmen when we pass this bill. I am not in favor of any kind of a bill that legislates something into the pockets of anybody [illegible].

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin and Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I understand the gentleman from Minnesota to just say that if we pass this bill we legislate something out of the pockets of American workmen.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; I so said.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That presupposes, does it not, that a $400,000 ship would have been built?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It presupposes this——

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment, and then the gentleman can answer both questions together. As I understand the proposition of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] it is this, that this man Gilchrist has given about $150,000, and possibly $200,000, to American workmen already.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; and a ship like this would give three times as much to American workmen.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There is not anything to show that another ship would have been built in the place of this ship and that the American workingman would have built it.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. This time is mine, Mr. Chairman, and the gentleman, if he has a speech to make, must make it in his own time.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit a question right there?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. First let me answer that. Not too many at once. As to that, Mr. Chairman, for nearly a hundred years it has been the law of this country that the coastwise trade of this country should be confined to American vessels. Now, if we wish to change the law and admit foreign vessels to do coastwise business, let us do it and give everybody a chance. As long as the law stands as it does, any foreign-built vessel that comes in here displaces an equal amount of American tonnage capable of doing the same work. That can not be controverted by anybody. It is true that there are thousands of tons of American tonnage to-day laid up in the harbors of New York, Brooklyn, and San Francisco.

It is probably true that thousands of tons of American tonnage, costing $100 a ton, are laid up because they can not compete with the cheaper built foreign tonnage, just like this applicant for your bounty. I am opposed to foreign built ships. We can not compete with the cheaper built foreign ships such as this is with vessels built entirely in this country.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. This ship in February, 1902, was an English ship, wrecked in the open sea off the coast of Nova Scotia. She was raised by an American, who now owns her. He can not get a registry under the British law, and you will not give him one under the American law. What will he do with his ship?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. As I said, Mr. Chairman, I greatly regret the condition of affairs.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Would you have him sink it in the sea?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I greatly regret this condition. No one regrets it more than I, and if this were the only one, if it did not constitute a precedent, I might not object, but I find that the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has reported out five different bills identical with this, aggregating 13,571 tons, which will cost in purchasing and repairing about $550,000. To build those same vessels in American yards would cost a million and a quarter of dollars.

Now, I am opposed to giving those five foreign-built vessels American registers, and thus giving $700,000 of profits to the men who happen to buy and speculate in those ships, and taking practically an equal amount away from American labor and capital. If we are to go into that sort of business, I am ready to vote in favor of a free-ship law.

Mr. THAYER. As I understand, the gentleman is opposed more directly to this bill because it infringes upon the principle upon which we have been going since 1852, of keeping the coastwise trade for ourselves.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. 1817, not 1852.

Mr. THAYER. I understood since 1852.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No, sir; 1817.

Mr. THAYER. Has it not been the policy since that time, and I think I am correct as to it being 1852, to admit to registration these vessels when wrecked in American waters, when the repairs amount to a given proportion of the value of the vessel—I believe three-quarters of the value—to be admitted to register here? Now, if this vessel had gone down a few miles nearer the American shore, would we not, following the gentleman's statement of the principle which he says has prevailed since 1817, would we not have been obliged to admit her to registration?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I am very glad to give the gentleman the information he seeks.

In 1817 an act was passed providing that all the coastwise trade of the United States should be confined to American vessels. In 1852, as the gentleman states, there was an act passed providing that foreign-built vessels wrecked in American waters, when rebuilt here, the repairs equaling three-fourths of the total cost of the vessel, should be entitled to American registry. Now, I approve that kind of legislation because it is a general law. It gives everybody an equal chance. Every man knows that he has exactly the same rights as every other man. But now I want to inform the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THAYER] that this bill does not come within that act in two particulars.

First, it was not wrecked in American waters; second, three-fourths of the total cost was not paid in American shipyards upon the vessel.

Mr. THAYER. According to the gentleman's own estimate far more than the original value was paid, if you take the estimate of the men who did the repairs.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; the gentleman is entirely mistaken. The very language of the bill shows that this vessel could not come within the scope of the law, because it provides that the repairs, together with the salvage, shall amount to three-fourths of the original value.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I know the gentleman does not want to misstate the facts.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly not.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The Commissioner of Navigation says that this vessel does come within the provisions of the statute, except for the fact that it was wrecked outside the 3-mile limit.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think the gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I am quoting from the report.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I did not happen to be present when the testimony was taken; but I am yet able to read, and the testimony as printed shows clearly that the value of this vessel was, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. FORDNEY] stated, $230,000 or $240,000. So that there has been paid in the way of repairs less than $100,000 for work done in American shipyards—only about one-half instead of three-fourths of the required proportion.

Mr. DUNWELL. As I understand, the gentleman has stated that all these five vessels together have cost but $570,000, and that that fact alone places in the pockets of the men who purchased them three-quarters of a million.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. About that.

Mr. DUNWELL. I should like to ask the gentleman whether he does not believe that these vessels, taking into account the salvage and the repairs, are equal in value to new ships?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. DUNWELL. Then how is it possible for the difference between the cost of new ships and of these ships to go into the pockets of the men who purchase them?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I contend that these ships can do the work of ships which would cost a million and a quarter of dollars, because there is a smaller investment in these ships, a smaller interest account, and they can do the work cheaper. For that reason I maintain that as long as these 13,000 tons of foreign vessels fly the American flag in our coastwise trade 13,000 tons of new vessels will not be built, and for that reason I object to the bill.

Mr. DUNWELL. Could they have been built if these ships had not been purchased?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do not know. I will state this, however, that if these vessels are admitted, then there are now and will be 13,000 tons of American-built vessels lying idle at the docks rotting, because they can not compete with the cheaper, foreign-built ships, and as long as these are idle no new ships will be projected or built, employing our labor or our capital. I do maintain that, and the gentleman can not controvert it.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. The gentleman stated that the bill included salvage. Will you not also state what Attorney-General Crittenden, in his opinion, states—that every dollar spent in rescuing a ship that was in a wrecked condition until placed upon the water for service is rightfully rescue and repair?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I do not know, and I do not care about that; but if the gentleman thinks it necessary to amend the bill to include salvage in the total expense, so that it might appear to come within the statutory general rule, he certainly did not rely entirely on that opinion or any except to get his ship admitted.

But that is not the point at all. My opposition is to special legislation changing the law as it has stood for nearly a century on the statute books, during all Administrations—Republican and Democratic Administrations. I am opposed to giving these men by special act more than half a million of dollars. I do not know how much. The testimony shows. I have not read it carefully; but it is to the owners of these 13,000 tons foreign-built vessels more than half a million of dollars. I am opposed to that.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Would not the gentleman be better pleased to see this vessel on the rocks of Nova Scotia?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I would rather see some vessel constructed in American shipyards and see that amount spent among American workmen.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Every dollar of repairs was spent in an American shipyard.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. In building ships of the same tonnage, which would cost three times as much, would give employment to three times as many men, provide three times as many wages, encourage our capital, and provide for the national defense, and that is the Republican way of doing business. I am opposed to this kind of private subsidy to anybody. [Cries of "Vote!"] I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY].

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take but a few minutes. The matter has been well covered by the gentleman who has just spoken; but I wish to call attention to one or two points brought out by questions asked. The question has been asked, I think, by the gentleman from Wisconsin and some other gentlemen, whether or not, if this vessel was not admitted, an American vessel would be constructed that would take its place. I wish to answer that by calling particular attention to the evidence brought out in the testimony in regard to this very vessel. It was brought up by the gentleman who has this bill in charge. It developed in the testimony that some gentleman from the Pacific Coast had an idea that if this vessel had an American register that he would buy it, but that not being true, that he then had a vessel constructed in an American yard by American labor instead, practically the same kind of a vessel, costing $350,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him, I will say that there is nothing in the record, I assure the gentleman, to show that that remark was made. I had not made that remark to him. I did not state that he built a ship at an American shipyard simply because he could not buy this.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That I did not intend to say.

Mr. FORDNEY. Nor it does not appear that he is paying $350,000 for a ship building. I think there is nothing on record or was presented that shows what he is paying and what size ship he was building.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. All I have to say to that is that I have the evidence presented before the committee.

Mr. FORDNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will state that it is not in the evidence.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The evidence was that a vessel of this kind would cost $350,000 or $400,000.

Mr. FORDNEY. That comes from the men who are opposing the bill. The gentleman who is building that boat that you refer to wrote me a few days ago, and I have his letter at my office, in which he said that he could get a boat built in England of 6,000 tons at $120,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Suppose that is true; then a new boat would only cost about one-fourth more. There would still be one-fourth lost to American shipbuilding yards and to American labor.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him another question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. Let me say that Mr. Gilchrist, the owner of this vessel, has in the last three years built twenty-four new steel ships, of an aggregate of 158,000 tons.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That is true; but when Mr. Gilchrist went to get this boat he knew that he was taking his chances, and he knew that he could not get an American register for the vessel except by special bill.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Was he not showing pretty good American pluck in doing it? [Applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will tell you what he was doing. He was speculating upon what could be done in the way of a special bill.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I will tell you what he was doing. He was giving encouragement to genius. He was helping a man who thought he could blast away the rock upon which that ship was thrown by the storm, and then encouraged him with his money to undertake the task. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. But when the gentleman was doing that he was taking the opportunity of making money at the expense of the legitimate shipbuilding interests of this country. That was the opportunity that he took, and he was simply speculating. He knew well when he wanted to buy that ship that he had no right under the law to an American register. He was simply taking his chances.

Mr. FORDNEY. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. FORDNEY. Is not evidence on file and presented to that committee that Mr. Gilchrist went over to help his neighbor, who was financially embarrassed, and that he had no intention of buying the boat, simply bought in this boat to relieve his neighbor, and wanted to dispose of it, and offered to sell it, and the best bid he could get for it or received is $150,000, notwithstanding that he has $[illegible] invested?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. That was his testimony, but another man said he called his attention to it as a good investment. Now, it is not necessary to take up any time in arguing as to what was the testimony——

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Does the gentleman criticise Mr. Gilchrist for his enterprise? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have only a few more remarks to make. I just want to call the attention of this House to a little incident that occurred here a short time ago when I asked that the Pacific coast shipbuilding industry have the advantage of 4 per cent, and it was opposed here upon the floor upon the theory that it was granting a special privilege to a certain class upon the Pacific coast to give that advantage of 4 per cent. Now, I am looking forward with pleasurable anticipation to see how these same gentlemen are going to give an advantage to these particular men of 50 per cent in each one of these cases. It shows that you are giving special privileges not open to a general class, but giving special privileges to these men who speculate in these wrecks an advantage of 50 per cent; in other words, you are going to put into competition in the coastwise trade of this country tonnage amounting to $1,200,000 which only cost $[illegible],000. That is what you are going to do. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. METCALF. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. You make the statement here that in each one of these five cases the owners of these ships are getting an advantage of 50 per cent.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Taking them as a whole; that may not be true of each individual case.

Mr. METCALF. In the case of the ship Pyrenees, which is now in the harbor of San Francisco Bay, she has cost 95 per cent of her original cost.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I made that statement taking the five together—that is, taking them all together there is an advantage of 50 per cent. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill be closed and a favorable recommendation made.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, is that motion in order? I am in sympathy with closing the debate, but you can not close general debate that way in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. FORDNEY. Well, say close the debate in ten minutes. [Cries of "Close now!"]

Mr. PAYNE. I am making the point of order against the motion.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I move that debate be closed upon this bill and amendment.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the bill and amendment be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. Then I withdraw my motion.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

EUGENE PATENAUDE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4573) for the relief of Eugene Patenaude.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay to Eugene Patenaude, of Colchester, Chittenden County, Vt., the sum of $1,000, in full for injuries sustained by him by reason of his being shot and wounded while on the 15th day of November, 1900, at said Colchester, by a stray bullet fired by an unknown member of Eleventh Regiment United States Cavalry while at target practice.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

In line 5, after the word "of," strike out the words "one thousand" and insert "five hundred."

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, this case involves the following facts: The cavalry fort of Ethan Allen, which is located near Burlington, has a target-practice ground near the Winooski River. At that point they have mannikins set up, and members of the cavalry troop ride around and practice target fire. At the time referred to in this report Mr. Patenaude was employed as a farm laborer on a farm on the opposite side of the Winooski River. During the target practice, which was conducted by the officer in charge, one of the members of the troop, whose name is not known, took poor aim and fired his revolver across the river. The bullet struck Mr. Patenaude and gave him a very severe wound. If I remember rightly the bullet passed through his lung. He was immediately removed by the United States authorities to the hospital at the fort and was cared for for some six weeks.

Before that time he was able to earn his living as a farm laborer. He has been able to do very little since, and he is now practically disabled, and this bill provides for the payment to him of the small sum of $500. He will have to be supported very largely during the remainder of his life by charity, as he has no means and has had no means for years except the money he could earn by manual labor. I move, therefore, that the bill be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bills to the House.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask the gentleman from Illinois to withdraw that motion for the present. There is a very small bill on the Calendar that is intended to refund out of the Treasury money that it was conceded was improperly taken from one of our citizens. It is a small amount, and the Secretary of the Treasury concedes that the money was improperly exacted by the authorities without warrant of law, and the money is now in the Treasury and ought to be repaid. I ask the gentleman, in view of these circumstances, to withdraw his motion.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Chairman, in view of the late hour I do not see how I can withdraw the motion.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I desire to be heard, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion is not debatable.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I call for a division.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CANNON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, reported that that committee had had under consideration various bills on the Private Calendar, and had directed him to report the bill (H. R. 9981) for the relief of Darwin S. Hall with the recommendation that it lie on the table; that it had directed him to report many other bills, some with and some without amendment, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to, and that the bills do pass.

DARWIN S. HALL.

The bill (H. R. 9981) for the relief of Darwin S. Hall, reported by the Committee of the Whole, was considered, and the recommendation of the committee that it lie on the table was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS WITH AMENDMENTS.

The following House bills with amendments, reported by the Committee of the Whole House, were severally considered, the amendments agreed to, the bills ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, were accordingly engrossed and read a third time, and passed:

H. R. 3256. A bill directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass.;

H. R. 6987. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Elizabeth Cushing (title amended);

H. R. 10511. A bill for the relief of the estate of Mary Keating;

H. R. 8505. A bill for the relief of the heirs of Cyrus D. Hottenstein, deceased (title amended);

H. R. 10688. A bill for the relief of Johann A. Killian;

H. R. 6921. A bill for the relief of the estate of Mary P. Gilmore;

H. R. 10925. A bill directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.;

H. R. 7190. A bill for the relief of the Bank of North Wilkesboro;

H. R. 3393. A bill for the relief of the Columbia Brewing Company, of Shenandoah, Pa.;

H. R. 2193. A bill for the relief of David Tweed;

H. R. 4687. A bill authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay James L. Anderson the sum of $798.28 (title amended);

H. R. 199. A bill for the relief of John H. McLaughlin;

H. R. 10516. A bill for the relief of Edward J. Farrell;

H. R. 6984. A bill for the relief of Kate R. Sharretts and Edward A. Sharretts, administrators of George E. W. Sharretts;

H. R. 11178. A bill for the relief of Miss Lelia G. Casey (title amended); and

H. R. 4573. A bill for the relief of Eugene Patenaude.

The following House bills without amendment, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally considered, ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, were read the third time, and passed:

H. R. 2009. A bill for the relief of estate of Sven J. Johnson;

H. R. 10058. A bill for the relief of Kirby Thomas;

H. R. 7535. A bill for the relief of Jacob Swigert, late deputy collector seventh Kentucky district;

H. R. 7718. A bill for the relief of the estate of Artemus E. Gibson;

H. R. 2591. A bill for the relief of W. S. Feland, late deputy collector second Kentucky district;

H. R. 11928. A bill for the relief of James T. Kilbreth, George R. Bidwell, and Nevada N. Stranahan, as collectors of customs for the district and port of New York;

H. R. 4407. A bill authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the expenses of contestant in the contest entitled "Koonce against Grady;"

H. R. 9457. A bill for the relief of Alexander S. Rosenthal;

H. R. 2010. A bill for the relief of the heirs of John A. Dolan;

H. R. 11337. A bill for the relief of G. H. Dearen; and

H. R. 10891. A bill for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser.

The following Senate bills, reported from the Committee of the Whole House without amendment, were severally considered, were ordered to be read a third time, were read the third time, and passed:

S. 833. An act for the relief of Joseph M. Simms, captain, United States Revenue-Cutter Service (retired);

S. 255. An act for the relief of the Farmers and Mechanics' National Bank, Philadelphia, Pa.;

S. [illegible]. An act for the relief of Darwin S. Hall;

S. 2696. An act authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay John F. Weston the sum of $241.60, etc.; and

S. 334. An act for the relief of N. F. Palmer, jr., & Co.

During the consideration of the foregoing bills, when the bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont was reached, the following took place:

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the final passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. By unanimous consent, the bill will be withdrawn for the present. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Minnesota, with a view to disposing of the other bills, if there is objection to having the bill laid aside until the other bills are disposed of?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I have no objection, Mr. Speaker.

At the conclusion of the passage of the bills,

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the last bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on the final passage of the bill and amendments.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the previous question be ordered on the bill and amendments to its final passage. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were considered, and agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and was read the third time.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that we let this go over until to-morrow morning until after the reading of the Journal, the previous question having been ordered.

Mr. FORDNEY. Mr. Speaker, I do not think the gentleman from Minnesota will make the point of no quorum if the yeas and nays are ordered. But if we can have the right of way to-morrow, I have no objection to letting it go over.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

Mr. GRAFF. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I ask unanimous consent that the RECORD may show that a motion has been made to reconsider the votes by which the various bills have been passed and that that motion do lie upon the table.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. STEVENS] demands the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were refused, only five gentlemen rising.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. FORDNEY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

PRIVATE PENSION BILLS.

Mr. GIBSON submitted the following reports and statements from committees of conference, to be printed in the RECORD under the rule.

The reports and statements are as follows:

WILLIAM W. JACKSON.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill S. 1543, "An act granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same.

HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MILLER,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Statement in the case of S. 1543, granting an increase of pension to William W. Jackson.

This House originally passed the bill at $[illegible] per month, but was amended by the Senate to $[illegible] per month. The result of the conference is that the Senate receded from its amendment, and your conferees recommend that the bill pass at $24 per month, as it was amended by the House.

HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MILLER,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

JANE I. LONG.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 3274) granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long, have met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows: That the House recede.

HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MILLER,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.
P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Statement in the case of S. 3274, granting an increase of pension to Jane I. Long.

This bill passed the Senate at $[illegible] per month, but was amended in the House to $[illegible] per month. The House receded from its amendment, with the understanding that the bill pass at $[illegible] per month. The action of the Senate was agreed to.

HENRY R. GIBSON,
ROBERT W. MILLER,
C. A. SULLOWAY,
Managers on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 1969. An act to authorize the conveyance to the town of Winthrop, Mass., for perpetual use as a public road, of a certain tract of land; and

H. R. 10136. An act authorizing bail in criminal cases upon appeal in the courts of Indian Territory.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 2323. An act relating to ceded lands on the Fort Hall Indian Reservation; and

S. 3317. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to grant right of way for pipe lines through Indian lands.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4769. An act validating certain conveyances of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and the Northern Pacific Railway Company—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 556. An act granting an increase of pension to William Stall—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 883. An act granting a pension to Ephraim L. Herriott—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 3919. An act granting a pension to Florence E. Foster—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3825. An act granting an increase of pension to Anna H. Lyman—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3810. An act granting an increase of pension to Virginia B. Mullan—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3651. An act granting an increase of pension to Mildred S. Ogden—to the Committee on Pensions.

S. 3149. An act granting an increase of pension to Charles Bowring—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

S. 623. An act for the relief of Henry O. Bassett, heir of Henry Opeman Bassett, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 7559. An act granting a pension to Caroline Hurley;
H. R. 8771. An act granting a pension to Walter F. Horner;
H. R. 7712. An act granting a pension to Emma Crosier;
H. R. 7248. An act granting a pension to Robert H. Cooke;
H. R. 880. An act granting a pension to Caroline S. Winn;
H. R. 9835. An act granting a pension to Maggie Fitzpatrick;
H. R. 4540. An act granting a pension to Amanda Skinner;
H. R. 9061. An act granting a pension to Nettie A. Buell;
H. R. 9127. An act granting a pension to Moses Schuman;
H. R. 10741. An act granting a pension to Mary Tate;
H. R. 9791. An act granting a pension to Abram Claypool;
H. R. 5580. An act granting a pension to Celia C. Owen;
H. R. 7382. An act granting a pension to Ellen A. Harmon;
H. R. 5610. An act granting a pension to Annie Dorfner;
H. R. 8924. An act granting a pension to Georgia A. Whitehead;
H. R. 8648. An act granting a pension to Shadrach D. Bardin;
H. R. 7063. An act granting a pension to Ellen F. Lynch;
H. R. 5342. An act granting a pension to Jane E. Sutfin;
H. R. 8185. An act granting a pension to Herman Lemmerman;
H. R. 9739. An act granting a pension to Lizzie M. Worster;
H. R. 9683. An act granting a pension to Henry Austin;
H. R. 5030. An act granting a pension to William H. Mount;
H. R. 11345. An act granting a pension to Joseph H. Huie;
H. R. 8922. An act granting a pension to Martha E. Nolen;
H. R. 7368. An act granting a pension to Annie G. Norwood;
H. R. 4750. An act granting a pension to William J. Jackson;
H. R. 4392. An act granting a pension to Abbie E. Webster;
H. R. 4624. An act granting a pension to Isabella Phelps;
H. R. 5749. An act granting a pension to James B. Combs;
H. R. 10068. An act granting a pension to Marceline P. Hamilton;
H. R. 9921. An act granting a pension to Virginia Boyd; and
H. R. 8343. An act granting a pension to Annie P. Erving, formerly Cilla Zerbe.

SALE AND LEASING OF INDIAN LANDS.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House joint resolution 118, authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use $5,000 of the amount appropriated by the act approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22), for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory, which I will send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use the sum of $5,000 of the amount appropriated "for the purpose of placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, $15,000," by the act entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes," approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22), in the payment for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, the passage of this resolution is requested by the honorable Secretary of the Interior, and the following letter from him gives full information in regard to the matter:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 25, 1905.

SIR: The act of Congress approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22) entitled "An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes," contains (p. 23) the following item: "Five Civilized Tribes: For the purpose of placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, $15,000."

Deficiency estimates contained in Document No. 260, House of Representatives, Fifty-eighth Congress, second session (p. 29), has the following item: "Removal of intruders, Five Civilized Tribes: For the purpose of removing intruders and placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, under the act of May 27, 1902 (32 Stat., 259, sec. 1), $15,000."

The footnote calls attention to letter marked "No. 2 in Appendix C." Said Appendix C is a letter from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, dated December 4, 1903, transmitting the urgent deficiency estimate for the Indian service, together with a letter of the United States Indian inspector for Indian Territory, dated October 9, 1903, wherein he recommends an appropriation of $10,000 "deemed necessary to carry on the work of removing intruders, placing Indian citizens in possession of their allotments, the leasing and sale of Creek lands, and the leasing of Cherokee lands."

At the end of the inspector's letter is a note recommending an appropriation of $15,000, instead of $10,000 first reported, which two items make said item of $15,000, for which an appropriation was made by said act of February 18, 1904. In making up said estimate it is not stated that any portion thereof is to be used in the payment of expenses for the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands under existing regulations.

On December 31, 1903, I had the honor to call the attention of the chairman of your committee to said omission and to request that the item be amended so as to read:

"For the purpose of removing intruders, placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, for the leasing and sale of Creek lands and leasing of Cherokee lands, Indian Territory."

Attention was also called to a like omission in House Document No. 112 (p. 217), Fifty-eighth Congress, second session, making an appropriation for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek and the leasing of Cherokee lands.

A copy of said letter of December 31, 1903, is inclosed herewith.

In order to carry out the provisions of law and the regulations of the Department, which have been proved by experience to be for the best interests of the Indians, it will be absolutely necessary that funds be appropriated to enable the Department to make the sales and leases as expeditiously as possible.

I have the honor, therefore, to transmit herewith draft of a joint resolution which reads as follows:

"Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use so much of the amount appropriated by the act approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22), as may be necessary for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands in Indian Territory.

"Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to use so much as may be necessary of the amount appropriated 'for the purpose of placing allottees in unrestricted possession of their allotments, $15,000,' by the act entitled 'An act making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1904, and for prior years, and for other purposes,' approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22), in the payment for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory."

If said resolution be enacted it will accomplish the purpose desired, and I earnestly recommend its immediate passage in order that the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands may not be suspended for want of ability to use the funds already appropriated in the item above referred to.

Respectfully, E. A. HITCHCOCK, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN OF THE COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House joint resolution which the Clerk has just reported? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the House joint resolution.

The question was taken; and the resolution ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was accordingly read [illegible]rd time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS, a motion to reconsi[illegible] last vote was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, reference of House Document 572 was changed from the Committee on Appropriations to the Committee on Claims.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. MARTIN, indefinitely, on account of important business.

ADJOURNMENT.

Then, on motion of Mr. PAYNE (at 5 o'clock and 4 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock m.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. TOWNSEND, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10424) to provide for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near Council Bluffs, Iowa, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1528); which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2382) providing for the resurvey of certain townships in Routt and Rio Blanco counties, in the State of Colorado, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1529); which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 569) granting an increase of pension to Jesse B. Nurse, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1423); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2971) granting a pension to Amelia Walsh, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1424); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2960) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Horning, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1425); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2952) granting an increase of pension to William J. P. Buck, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1426); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2946) granting an increase of pension to Joshua Day, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1427); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2938) granting an increase of pension to James L. Ackley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1428); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2937) granting an increase of pension to Julius Bodenstab, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1429); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2894) granting a pension to Clara G. Garretson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1430); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2872) granting an increase of pension to Albert Schemerhorn, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1431); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2871) granting an increase of pension to Justin M. Cooper, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1432); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2857) granting an increase of pension to Onne H. Ropka, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1433); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2690) granting an increase of pension to James Garry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1434); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2661) granting an increase of pension to John H. Klingler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1435); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2655) granting an increase of pension to Isaac Zellers, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1436); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2348) granting an increase of pension to Hamilton S. Gillespie, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1437); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2330) granting an increase of pension to Samuel H. Legrow, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1438); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2058) granting an increase of pension to Jacob A. Roof, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1439); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2029) granting an increase of pension to Peter P. Dobozy, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1440); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1899) granting an increase of pension to Thompson Warren, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1441); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1764) granting an increase of pension to John Shehan, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1442); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1667) granting a pension to Stalnaker Marteney, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1443); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1436) granting an increase of pension to Thomas P. Wentworth, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1444); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1423) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Murry, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1445); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1394) granting an increase of pension to Lewis M. Webster, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1446); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 1388) granting an increase of pension to Orson H. Sawtelle, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1447); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 827) granting an increase of pension to Elias S. Gibson, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1448); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 783) granting an increase of pension to William McGee, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1449); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 454) granting an increase of pension to Rinaldo M. Griswold, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1450); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 450) granting an increase of pension to George H. Sutherland, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1451); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 447) granting an increase of pension to David H. George, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1452); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 358) granting an increase of pension to Phebe A. Ford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1453); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 336) granting an increase of pension to William Lechleidner, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1454); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 305) granting an increase of pension to John R. Evans, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1455); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 140) granting an increase of pension to Daniel B. Bailey, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1456); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4349) granting an increase of pension to Laura Ann Seaton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1457); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4371) granting a pension to Alison Clifton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1458); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4454) granting an increase of pension to John Seiler, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1459); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4455) granting an increase of pension to Ansel J. Busby, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1460); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4317) granting an increase of pension to Sarah L. Augur, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1461); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4254) granting an increase of pension to William H. Collingwood, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1462); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4237) granting a pension to Hannah Small Wiggin, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1463); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3979) granting an increase of pension to Sterling L. Parker, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1464); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3978) granting an increase of pension to George W. Howard, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1465); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3977) granting an increase of pension to Luther S. Baker, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1466); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3946) granting an increase of pension to Jesse Bright, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1467); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3936) granting an increase of pension to Sylvania S. Cheney, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1468); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3896) granting an increase of pension to Richard F. Nugent, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1469); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3878) granting an increase of pension to George Coffman, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1470); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3893) granting an increase of pension to George T. Edwards, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1471); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3827) granting an increase of pension to Norman B. Davenport, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1472); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3774) granting an increase of pension to John C. Felton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1473); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3771) granting an increase of pension to Virginia C. Spencer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1474); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3727) granting an increase of pension to Eli Headley, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1475); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3544) granting an increase of pension to George W. Phillips, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1476); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3535) granting an increase of pension to John Walton, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1477); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3523) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Butz, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1478); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3519) granting a pension to Ruby A. Sirdivant, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1479); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3500) granting an increase of pension to Orrin L. Mann, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1480); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3499) granting an increase of pension to Samuel E. Lookingbill, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1481); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3491) granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Howe, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1482); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3457) granting an increase of pension to Marcellus M. Parker, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1483); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3394) granting an increase of pension to Joseph B. Crawford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1484); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3377) granting an increase of pension to John M. Tyree, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1485); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 3201) granting an increase of pension to James I. Shafer, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1486); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 4132) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Cameron, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1487); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11939) granting an increase of pension to

C. C. Fisher, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1488); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12202) granting an increase of pension to John Baughman, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1489); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11711) granting an increase of pension to Jerome J. Hinds, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1490); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11692) granting a pension to Mary J. Neely, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1491); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11562) granting an increase of pension to Lucretia Davis, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1492); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10997) granting a pension to Mary McGill, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1493); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10988) granting an increase of pension to August Graf, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1494); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10932) granting a pension to Eliza Woolard, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1495); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10839) granting an increase of pension to John Conrad Dirschner, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1496); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10651) granting a pension to Katherine M. Laurence, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1497); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10626) granting a pension to Mary J. Conant, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1498); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10045) granting an increase of pension George Sluyter, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1499); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9929) granting an increase of pension to Frederick K. Bryan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1500); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9905) granting an increase of pension to Peter Sullivan, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1501); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9812) to increase the pension of Henry N. McLane, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1502); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9602) granting an increase of pension to Reuben Nightingale, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1503); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 9564) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Cowles, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1504); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6425) granting a pension to Daniel Walker, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1505); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5681) granting an increase of pension to Philip H. Whyrich, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1506); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5261) granting a pension to Julia M. Oakley, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1507); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4949) granting an increase of pension to George Bixler, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1508); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. FULLER, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4892) granting a pension to Elias Veatch, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1509); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4565) granting a pension to Carrie Keefer, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1510); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 4120) granting an increase of pension to Henry R. Guss, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1511); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 8713) granting an increase of pension to Elam Allen, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1512); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 725) granting an increase of pension to Alexander M. Ballou, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1513); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7474) granting an increase of pension to Fannie C. Morey, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1514); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6976) granting an increase of pension to Jane Wheeler, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1515); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. LUCKING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6966) granting an increase of pension to Roxana S. Ker, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1516); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 6940) granting an increase of pension to Susannah O. Wardrop, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1517); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOLLIDAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 3171) granting an increase of pension to G. N. Crawford, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1518); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 1267) granting an increase of pension to D. Miller Gordon, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1519); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. BRADLEY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 744) granting an increase of pension to George W. Dawes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1520); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GIBSON, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 7) granting a pension to George D. Boyd, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1521); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13283) granting an increase of pension to William York, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1522); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SNOOK, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13263) granting a pension to Caroline E. Pratt, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1523); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. SULLOWAY, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 13230) granting a pension to Amos T. Richardson, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1524); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 12544) granting an increase of pension to Edward Hayford, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1525); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. CALDERHEAD, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 885) granting a pension to Sarah A. Gillham, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1526); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. HOWELL of Utah, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 10558) referring the claim of Hannah S. Crane and others to the Court of Claims, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1527); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. WACHTER, from the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 5392) to provide an American register for the steamer Brooklyn, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1530); which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of bills of the following titles; which were thereupon referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 8083) granting a pension to Mary Ellen Clark—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 13346) granting an increase of pension to Joel J. Addison—Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PATTERSON of North Carolina: A bill (H. R. 13624) authorizing a public building at Fayetteville, N. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13625) to establish a fish-hatching and fish station in the State of North Carolina—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. JENKINS: A bill (H. R. 13626) to amend an act approved August 13, 1894, entitled "An act for the protection of persons furnishing materials and labor for the construction of public works"—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DANIELS: A bill (H. R. 13627) for legalizing the diversion and appropriation of water from the Colorado River for irrigation purposes—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

By Mr. McLACHLAN: A bill (H. R. 13628) to amend section 2 of an act approved June 15, 1880, relating to public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. MARTIN: A bill (H. R. 13629) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon at Lead, in the State of South Dakota—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. RHEA: A bill (H. R. 13630) for the erection of a public building at Bowling Green, Ky.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LACEY: A bill (H. R. 13631) to provide for the entry of agricultural lands within forest reserves—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13632) to provide for the disposal of timber on public lands chiefly valuable for timber, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13633) to regulate the disposal of public lands released and excluded from public forest reservations, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. WILEY of Alabama: A bill (H. R. 13634) to provide for a United States reform school, near Camden, Wilcox County, Ala., and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. WILSON of Arizona: A bill (H. R. 13635) to authorize the construction of a custom-house at Nogales, Ariz.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. LORIMER: A resolution (H. Res. 244) authorizing and directing the Committee on Appropriations to provide in the general deficiency appropriation bill for the payment of certain sums of money to P. L. Coultry for services rendered—to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. AIKEN: A bill (H. R. 13636) granting a pension to George S. Noland—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BEALL of Texas: A bill (H. R. 13637) for the relief of Fred Blank, of Waxahachie, Tex.—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: A bill (H. R. 13638) granting an increase of pension to George W. Allen—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BONYNGE: A bill (H. R. 13639) to extend the term of patent No. 359590—to the Committee on Patents.

By Mr. BOUTELL: A bill (H. R. 13640) granting an increase of pension to Eugene Hepp—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13641) granting an increase of pension to Jerome P. Bates—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BREAZEALE: A bill (H. R. 13642) to confirm to the heirs of Lucretia Williams the title to one square league of land in the State of Louisiana—to the Committee on Private Land Claims.

By Mr. BROWN of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 13643) granting an increase of pension to Joseph Welsh—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: A bill (H. R. 13644) granting an increase of pension to Henry Boynton—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 13645) granting an increase of pension to George W. Brawner—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FITZGERALD: A bill (H. R. 13646) to correct the military record of Simon W. Larkin—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: A bill (H. R. 13647) for the relief of Brig. Gen. Thomas M. Anderson, United States Army, retired—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON: A bill (H. R. 13648) granting a pension to Charlotte S. Dunning—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HAMLIN: A bill (H. R. 13649) granting a pension to Jane D. Goss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington: A bill (H. R. 13650) granting an increase of pension to William J. Caldwell—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUNTER: A bill (H. R. 13651) granting a pension to Amelia Strain—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LAMB: A bill (H. R. 13652) for the relief of the heirs of Alfred R. Buffin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LITTLE: A bill (H. R. 13653) for the relief of C. L. Lynch, of the Cherokee Nation, Indian Territory—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. McGUIRE: A bill (H. R. 13654) granting an increase of pension to Thomas H. Soward—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: A bill (H. R. 13655) granting an increase of pension to Hannah Hill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 13656) granting an increase of pension to Mary W. Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PALMER: A bill (H. R. 13657) granting an increase of pension to Francis F. Rogers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: A bill (H. R. 13658) granting an increase of pension to Henry Smith—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PEARRE: A bill (H. R. 13659) granting an increase of pension to Jacob Keplinger—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. POWERS of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13660) to authorize the President of the United States to appoint John Gibbon captain and quartermaster in the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13661) granting a pension to Edith F. Morrison—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. STANLEY: A bill (H. R. 13662) for the relief of A. T. Hayden—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13663) for the relief of the estate of William Kelley—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13664) for the relief of F. L. Hall—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13665) for the relief of Thomas Drake—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13666) for the relief of Nancy Gates—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also a bill (H. R. 13667) granting an increase of pension to Curtis A. Brashear—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13668) granting an increase of pension to A. R. Shacklett—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TALBOTT: A bill (H. R. 13669) granting a pension to Mary E. Wyse—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DOVENER: A bill (H. R. 13670) for the relief of John W. Davis—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER: Petition of citizens of New York, N. Y., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. ADAMSON: Memorial of Eben Watkins, of the Atlanta Federation of Trades, relative to increasing the capacity of the Naval Gun Factory—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, resolution of the La Grange Board of Trade, relative to improving the channel through outer bar of Brunswick, Ga.—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

Also, petition of pastor and board of stewards of the First Methodist Church South, of Lagrange, Ga., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of the Georgia Industrial Association, relative to the Gompers-Mitchell anti-injunction bill and sundry other bills—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. AIKEN: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 13517, for the relief of James H. Ambler—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of Elmer Jones and 24 others, of Pittsburg, Pa., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of Philadelphia Board of Trade, relative to American merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, petition of citizens of Philadelphia, against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BYRD: Memorial of the Mississippi Choctaws, praying for an extension of time within which their right to remove to the Choctaw country may be permitted—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. CANDLER: Petition of H. L. Whitfield, F. M. Henry, and others, of Jackson, Miss., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CLARK (by request): Petition of residents of Hermann, Mo., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Pennsylvania: Petition of the Methodist Episcopal Church of Point Marion, Pa., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin: Resolution of Watertown (Wis.) Council, No. 247, Order of United Commercial Travelers, in favor of bill H. R. 4489—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolution of Wisconsin State Board of Agriculture, in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CURTIS: Resolution of Leavenworth Circle, No. 8, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of Rev. F. C. Hill and others, of Brown County, Kans., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DAYTON: Petition of A. J. Bartlett and 12 other voters, Harry C. Scott and 38 other voters, S. N. McLane and 29 other voters, and F. M. A. Lawson and 32 other voters, all of Elkins, W. Va., for the passage of the Hepburn bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DIXON: Papers to accompany bill H. R. 11972, to authorize the Ox Bow Power Company, of South Dakota, to construct a dam across the Missouri River—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, papers to accompany bill H. R. 11990, for the payment to Henry B. Davis of balance due him for surveying public lands—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. DOVENER: Fifteen petitions representing 491 voters of West Virginia, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of Robert W. Koon and 104 others, of West Virginia, in favor of bill H. R. 13368, to pension army teamsters—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bill to correct military record of Levi Burdine—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, paper to accompany bill granting an increase of pension to John E. Fries—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, paper to accompany bill granting a pension to Abner G. Robinson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FULLER: Resolution of the Illinois Farmers' Institute, in favor of an appropriation for farmers' institute work—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GRANGER: Petitions of the Edwards Prohibition Alliance, the Rhode Island Temperance League, and Herbert E. Sherman and 6 others, of Providence, R. I., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, resolutions of the Rhode Island Poultry Association: West Kingston Grange, No. 10; Cumberland Grange, No. 2, and Portsmouth Grange, No. 29, Patrons of Husbandry, in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Rocky Hill Grange, No. 27; Nonquit Grange, No. 31; Davisville Grange, No. 8; Washington County Pomona Grange, No. 2; Hope Valley Grange, No. 7; Kickemint Grange, No. 24, and Roger Williams Grange, No. 19, Patrons of Husbandry, and Newport (R. I.) Horticultural Society, in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of Border Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, No. 3, in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of John A. Logan Circle, No. 1, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, Providence, R. I., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, resolution of Olneyville Business Men's Association, in favor of the Brownlow good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of Lime Rock (R. I.) Grange, No. 22, and Aquidneck Grange, No. 30, Patrons of Husbandry, and the Rhode Island Horticultural Society, in favor of bill H. R. 8678—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HAMLIN: Paper to accompany bill to pension Jane D. Goss—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of B. S. Leavenworth and 20 others, of Howard County, Mo., in favor of good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. HEDGE: Petition of E. H. Albright and 46 others, of Danville, Iowa, in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. FREDERICK LANDIS: Petition of W. R. Owens and 46 others, of Parker, Ind., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LITTLE: Papers to accompany claim of Benjamin F. Moore—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany claim of Mary Bailey—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany claim of Francis M. Pearce—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers to accompany claim of Catharine C. Cox—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. LITTLEFIELD: Resolution of Wilson Post, No. 17, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Maine, in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MILLER: Petition of Garfield Circle, No. 22, Ladies of the Grand Army of the Republic, of Emporia, Kans., in favor of a service-pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MOON of Tennessee: Papers to accompany bill granting a pension to Martha J. Humberd—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, papers to accompany bill granting an increase of pension to Marion A. Carlile—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MORRELL: Two petitions of citizens of Philadelphia, against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. NEEDHAM: Petition of George T. Meeker and 73 others, of Hollister, Cal., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PADGETT: Papers to accompany bill granting increase of pension to Mary W. Martin—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PAYNE: Petition of patrons of rural free delivery of Geneva, N. Y., in favor of increasing salary of rural mail carriers—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. PORTER: Petition of citizens of Pittsburg, Pa., against passage of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, petition of the National League of Commission Merchants of the United States, in favor of a bill defining the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana: Petition of Joseph Bogenscheretz and others, of Fort Wayne Union, No. 44, I. S. L. L., of Fort Wayne, Ind., relative to a reduction of internal-revenue taxation on whisky to 90 cents a gallon—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SMALL: Petitions of Thomas E. Peden and 28 others, of Azden, N. C., and A. Ward and 40 others, of Bethel, N. C., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SMITH of Texas: Petition of J. J. Martin and 35 others, of Cisco, Tex., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SNOOK: Petition of John W. Hoskinson and others, of rural route No. 1, Montpelier, Ohio, favoring an increase of salary for rural carriers and also the parcels-post bill—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. SPERRY: Resolution of the selectmen of the town of Southington, Conn., favoring the passage of a good-roads bill—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of Elm City Lodge, No. 61, Brotherhood of Boiler Makers and Iron-ship Builders, of New Haven, Conn., for the establishment of a commission to upbuild the merchant marine—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

Also, resolutions of citizens of Middletown, Conn., protesting against the passage of bill (H. R. 7033) relative to further regulations of power boats—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. STERLING: Petition of the Presbyterian Church of Cooksville, Ill., in favor of the Hepburn-Dolliver bill—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SULZER: Resolutions of the Trades and Labor Assembly and Building Trades Council, of Aurora, Ill., to reestablish a separate and nonpartisan Department of Labor—to the Committee on Labor.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, March 9, 1904.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD EVERETT HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. FAIRBANKS, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Journal will stand approved. The Chair hears none.

FRENCH SPOLIATION CLAIMS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law, in lieu of former findings withdrawn, filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel schooner Hope, Ephraim Hutchins or Abel Nutt, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting the conclusions of fact and of law and the opinion of the court filed under the act of January 20, 1885, in the French spoliation claims set out in the findings by the court relating to the vessel ship Tom, John Bailey, master; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1487) creating an additional land office in the State of North Dakota; and

A bill (S. 4387) to authorize the Chicago, St. Louis and New Orleans Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Gilbertsville, Ky.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 199) for the relief of John H. McLaughlin;

A bill (H. R. 2009) for the relief of the estate of Sven J. Johnson;

A bill (H. R. 2010) for the relief of the heirs of John A. Dolan;

A bill (H. R. 2193) for the relief of David Tweed;

A bill (H. R. 2591) for the relief of W. S. Feland, late deputy collector, second Kentucky district;

A bill (H. R. 3256) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn by Thomas J. Hobbs, disbursing clerk, in favor of Crane & Co., of Dalton, Mass.;

A bill (H. R. 3393) for the relief of the Columbian Brewing Company, of Shenandoah, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 4407) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to defray the expenses of contestant in the contest entitled "Koonce against Grady;"

A bill (H. R. 4570) to provide an American register for the steamer Beaumont;

A bill (H. R. 4573) for the relief of Eugene Patenaude;

A bill (H. R. 4637) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to James L. Anderson the sum of $598.28;

A bill (H. R. 6921) for the relief of the estate of Mary P. Gilmore;

A bill (H. R. 6937) for the relief of the estate of Elizabeth S. Cushing;

A bill (H. R. 6984) for the relief of Kate R. Sharretts and Edward A. Sharretts, administrators of George E. W. Sharretts;

A bill (H. R. 7190) for the relief of the Bank of North Wilkesboro;

A bill (H. R. 7535) for the relief of Jacob Swigert, late deputy collector, seventh Kentucky district;

A bill (H. R. 7718) for the relief of the estate of Artemus E. Gibson;

A bill (H. R. 8505) for the relief of the estate of Cyrus D. Hottenstein, deceased;

A bill (H. R. 9457) for the relief of Alexander S. Rosenthal;

A bill (H. R. 10058) for the relief of Kirby Thomas;

A bill (H. R. 10511) for the relief of the estate of Mary Keating;

A bill (H. R. 10516) for the relief of Edward J. Farrell;

A bill (H. R. 10688) for the relief of Johann A. Killian;

A bill (H. R. 10891) for the relief of Julius A. Kaiser;

A bill (H. R. 10925) directing the issue of a check in lieu of a lost check drawn in favor of the Pittsburg Shear, Knife and Machine Company, now the Heppenstall Forge and Knife Company, of Pittsburg, Pa.;

A bill (H. R. 11178) for the relief of Miss Lelia G. Cayce;

A bill (H. R. 11337) for the relief of G. H. Dearen;

A bill (H. R. 11928) for the relief of James T. Kilbreth, George R. Bidwell, and Nevada N. Stranahan, as collectors of customs for the district and port of New York; and

A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 118) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to use $5,000 of the amount appropriated by the act approved February 18, 1904 (Public No. 22), for clerical work and labor connected with the sale and leasing of Creek lands and the leasing of Cherokee lands in the Indian Territory.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CULLOM presented petitions of sundry citizens of Cedarville, Colfax, Houston, Foosland, Sullivan, and Loami; of the congregation of the United Brethren Church of Bureau County, and of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Edgar, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the congregation of the First Congregational Church of Nashua, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of George C. Hale, of Boscawen, N. H., and a petition of sundry citizens of Concord, N. H., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the salary of rural free-delivery mail carriers; which were referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. QUAY presented a petition of Local Post No. 625, Department of Pennsylvania, Grand Army of the Republic, of Homestead, Pa., praying for the enactment of a service-pension law; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of the Philadelphia Maritime Exchange, of Philadelphia, Pa., praying that an appropriation be made for the completion of the easterly shore arm breakwater at Point Judith, R. I.; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.